Usually the passengers on the Peru trains considered Malott Park an oasis in the desert of common railroad stations. Its windows overflowed with flowers; the platform was as clean as milk white sand; even the flag—for it was a flag and not a telegraph station—spread a scarlet square enriched with needle-work; and no one could be really surprised to see a pretty girl in eye-glasses step out to receive express packages and the mail bags. The Indiana woods grew quite up to the walls of her castle. Behind it rose a hill, and behind the hill's shoulder rose a church, and the tops of white slabs just picked themselves out between grass and sky. Whatever might be below the hill—village or nested farm-houses—the traveler could only conjecture.

But the facts of a sunny summer landscape are not the facts of the same landscape storm-ridden and overcast by a dark November night.

On such a night the platform looked like a bubbling lake, and the lighted station suggested a little Mississippi steamer wedged in among foliage. There was no lightning, but there was a mighty trampling of the rain's feet through woods, and sheets of water flapped against the north bound train the one instant it stopped to hiss and glare.

The station-keeper came out covered to her eyes in a rubber-cloak; but she need not have damped the sole of her shoe, for her born knights and pages manned the train. From express messenger to newsboy they willfully did her work while the bell rang; and seized on slippery railings as the train began to glide away, vanishing in the storm, and leaving only two glow-worm eyes of red in their wake.

She saw there was a woman entering her door, and followed the walking bundle with some anxiety.

"There isn't any fire in the waiting-room," she exclaimed. "I don't keep it till this time in the evening unless there are passengers. Come in here, please."

The station-keeper threw open to her charge such a scene as should melt any woman's heart, and made it gush approvingly through the thickest wrappings. This was a girl's parlor, lighted through porcelain, bordered on every side by blooming plants, the floor covered with a fleece of warm carpet which the passenger noticed looked thoroughly well dusted. Curtains shut out the night; a piano stood open. There was a cushioned arm-chair by the stove, and a small sofa drawn to the table. Upon the table supper was partly spread; some rolls and some butter; a white jar of malmalade; the bowl of sugar-lumps; cream in a silver shell pitcher. The desk of the station-keeper was at one side of the room under a window; here lay some reports she had been writing out, and one leaf hung down, showing her name, square and large, Camilla Morgan.

She left her own wet water-proof spread to dry in the waiting-room, and hospitably offered to take her guest's wraps.

"I suppose you were expecting friends to meet you," she said, receiving a camel's-hair shawl and a furred dolman upon her arm, and waiting in vain for the bonnet and ancient lace veil.

The passenger, who stood there, a stout lady in black silk and hemstitched linen, rich and somber, instead of replying, took some tablets and a pencil which hung at her watch-guard and wrote. She had a dark red skin. There was one upright groove between her eyebrows, which deepened as she wrote. She then handed her tablets to the station-keeper, who read: "Please repeat what you said in writing."

"Mercy," exclaimed Camilla Morgan. "Is she deaf and dumb?" And compassionately she wrote: "I suppose you are expecting friends to meet you here."

"My son," said the passenger, upon the tablets, "will come for me in about an hour."

"Well, then," responded the station-keeper, in the same silent way, "you can have supper with me before he comes. I always wait until eight o'clock for my supper," she began to say aloud, but hastened to translate into visible language, "because this is the last train except a local freight, and that I do not have to trouble myself about. I eat alone so much I shall be glad of company."

Her passenger received the tablets, and wrote sedately: "I shall be happy to accept your invitation."

She then sat down with her bonnet on and her veil cast back, removing her gloves while she watched Camilla making tea and taking baked potatoes from the oven of the complicated stove, which showed an open fire between bars, and yet seemed full of kettle holes, drums and secret panels.

Camilla swished about with housewifely fervor, adding to her board a loaf of cake, canned meat and three pickled peaches from a cupboard in the wall. Then indicating with a sweep of her hand the chair opposite her own which she wished the passenger to take, she brought the tea-pot from the stove, and they sat down with proper formality.

"How many?" inquired Camilla, tapping the bowl with her sugar-tongs and holding up three fingers as a suggestion.

In reply the passenger held up two fingers, insisting by gestures that three lumps were more sweetening than she could bear. She was therefore helped to two, her hostess murmuring aloud, in unconscious soliloquy: "She looks as if she'd never used enough."

Boughs slashed against the windows, and the storm rattled and roared down the rafters. Within, silence must have been blank had not sounds broken out at intervals in several keys; now quavering, now shrill, and now full-voiced.

"Yes, yes," responded Camilla to each piping.

She examined her guest with speculative eye-glasses and turned her head toward a corner of the room. Finally she made a sudden rush, and came back to the table with bashful undulations to set beside her plate a minute wire cage containing three black field crickets.

"I hope you'll excuse me," she petitioned to the passenger. "I always feed them when I eat. They'd miss it."

If the passenger has made use of common speech, some explosive would have accompanied the expression of her countenance. She looked as if she longed to shout: "A cage of crickets! Who ever saw such a ridiculous thing!"

"She doesn't like it,' said Camilla, aloud. "Well, she's not such very lively company herself that she need grudge me my crickets. Cheep, Jasper! Cu-r-rt, Tommy! Here, Dinkum, your muvver will give you the first crumb—you're the baby. Bless um old lives of 'em! Needn't be 'cared at old cross lady; it's only your g'an'-muvver come to visit you. Sing for your suppers, children. Che-e-ep!"

But, instead of singing, the children grabbed their suppers, and in the manner peculiar to them began to stow portions of it within their glittering black cases. The time had been when they refused to eat beneath her eye, lugging their crumbs out of sight, or refusing morsels altogether. She felt it a great privilege, therefore, to hang over the cage and bring her glasses to bear upon their movements, and to regulate their manners by inserting a teaspoon handle between the wires of the cage to rap Jasper on the back. He was a large cricket, and wished to take all the supplies behind his own legs, and probably to issue such rations as he saw fit to his companions. He sprung from the spoon handle, and came down in a corner of the cage, lifting his long antennæ like two interrogation points, and making his three tail bristles express petrified astonishment.

The passenger, drinking tea and eating with the relish of a healthy appetite, kept a penetrating gaze upon Camilla.

"She doesn't like to see me feeding the beasts raw meat with my naked hands," ruminated Camilla aloud, "and some folks consider that the finest part of my circus. Dinkum, it's a bad night out-doors. If you lived there now, you'd have to wedge under a stone, and your poor knees would just clatter together with the cold. Tommy, have you torn the ruffle of your brown petticoat? Your muvver wouldn't mind it or scold you if she could sew you up another. But these suits have to last you all winter, and I don't want to see you frayed round the edges and out at the elbows. Oh, now that you turn, I see it isn't torn a bit. Beg Tommy's pardon. Oh, I beg your pardon, too!" she exclaimed to her passenger, as that lady presented her with the tablets. Upon these was written: "You must be very lonely here."

Camilla took her own pencil from her pocket and indited, for reply: "Because I play with crickets?"

The passenger took the tablets, shook her head, and set down: "Because you are too young and pretty to live by yourself."

"Cheep," piped up Jasper while his muvver read this statement, shading her face with her hand.

She then wrote back: "I have only lived by myself a few months. The crickets are lots of company. I found them over in the grave-yard. They lived by a certain head-board, and when the weather became frosty I brought them home. May be you noticed me talking to them and myself. I always talked out loud, and it is an idiotic habit, which please excuse."

The passenger nodded her grave head over this, but still insisted, with a rapid hand: "It is not a fit thing for a young girl to be keeping a railroad station, and living alone in the building."

"Queek!" piped Tommy, giving himself a flirt to meet Camilla's fixed gaze, while he worked his knobbed horns backward and forward as if the situation had long been one of deep concern to him.

Camilla's pencil replied with dash: "There may be two opinions about that."

"Certainly," was granted by the gold pencil.

Soothed by this admission, Camilla's pencil then placidly enough continued: "I don't have to apologize to anybody, and the neighbors about here all know me. But you are a stranger, and it seems queer to you. Mother is buried just the other side of the hill. She had to be taken care of when we lost our home, and the President of this road was so kind to us! He was papa's friend. He gave me this position, and always takes an interest in my having my reports right, and I can keep it as long as I please. We brought what furniture we had left to this place, and he built more rooms. That's my room where I put your things. The other was mother's. It was the best chance I had, and she never suffered want, as she might have done if I had tried something else."

Delivering up the tablets at this point, she laid her head down beside her plate, secretly passed her fist beneath both eyes, and looked up quite self-controlled. While her guest was reading and replying, she inquired, on the back of an envelope,

"Won't you have some more tea?"

The passenger waved her thanks and refusal.

"Or cake, or anything?" bulletined Camilla.

The passenger repeated her signals and handed back the tablets, whereon was expressed her opinion: "You ought to have a good husband."

The following silent conversation then took place, while tree limbs creaked outside, and the eaves overflowed in cataracts.

Camilla began it, flushing hotly.

"Perhaps you are a traveling agent for good husbands?"

"I am."

"Cheep!" spoke out Jasper, in a tone like shrill astonishment.

"Then perhaps I can buy one of you by sample. That's practical and business-like. But I don't want one who is ruled by his mother."

"Why do you object to the mother? He would make a very poor husband if he had never been ruled by his mother. You have had a sweetheart and quarreled with him."

"Creak!" uttered Tommy, making a galvanic spring toward the mind-reading guest.

"Oh, no; he quarreled with me—and everything concerning me. He wasn't in harmony with my environments. He was rich and high-minded."

"Don't you think girls are very foolish and headstrong about their independence in these days?"

"No, ma'am, I don't."

"Isn't it a waste for you to be sweeping out this railroad station when you might be making his home happy?"

"His mother can make his home happy."

"May be not. May be his heart is so set on you that her strict government avails nothing. May be, in fact, he governs his mother with his wishes, instead of his mother governing him."

"I hope he does. I'd rather he'd tyrannize over her than over me."

"Cheet!" broke out Dinkum, in honest reproach.

"So he has other faults?"

"Oh, yes. For one thing his name's Smith."

The passenger uttered that sound which is best described as a snort, and wrote rapidly in retort: "And a very good name it is. You will find it in every honorable position. So you don't want him at all?"

"No: you may keep him."

"Cheep!" uttered the three crickets in concert, as if they had actually read every stroke of the pencils.

"Hush, children!" exclaimed Camilla: "what do you know about lovers and trouble? She'll let me alone now; and unless you blab all I've told you here by ourselves she'll never guess what a dreadful thinking I keep up."

"So you are determined not to have Mr. Smith?" the tablet conversation went on.

"Positively." As Camilla wrote she felt a shiver running between her shoulders. All the leaves of her familiar woods must be weighted with water, and the hoary moss-cups and reaching roots lost in frozen rain. If it were always late spring, budding, promising, stimulating one's own blood, life would not look so melancholy and long.

"Perhaps the objectionable mother who rules Mr. Smith may drop off some day."

"I don't think she will. She looks so healthy."

"Have you ever seen her?"

"I have seen her picture."

"What was she like?"

"She looked very much like you."

"Surely not like me! Remember I am only the crickets' gran'muvver, who has come to visit them, and not such very lively company that I can count on not being called cross."

"I knew it all the time!" exclaimed Camilla, aloud. "And you only did it to hear what I said to myself!"

"Confessed," said the elder lady, making her voice heard for the first time, and a low, solid, pleasant voice it was, evidently trained through many years to control and make the most of itself.

"And you said he was coming here in an hour. It can't be to see me. I haven't anything different to say."

"He sent me ahead to make peace," continued the elder lady, "because it appears to you that I began the war. My dear child, you have no son. When you have you may be exacting in the matter of his marriage. I have my odd impulses, as the way in which I came here proves; but usually sober conviction rules me. My sober conviction in this case is that my son is determined to have you, and you and I will have to make the best of it. Don't you think you can take me as a mother-in-law."

Camilla extended her hands around the cage of crickets, drew her fingers across the wires, but said nothing.

"I did not know what a nice little woman you were," said the elder lady, looking at her watch, "nor what a poor substitute you have for a family in that cage of crickets."

"They are perfectly tame and loving," burst out Camilla

"So is my son. Poor lonely little girl! My heart ached the moment I came in here. I was a lonely woman myself once."

Camilla pressed her palm and fingers against her eyes.

"You sha'n't make me cry," she uttered, defiantly. "I'm not a crying woman, if I only keep the flood-gates shut."

"I am a crying woman," said the elder woman, taking out her handkerchief, and turning dark about the eyes. "And I came here to have a good sob over your bereavements and my own old folly."

She arose from her chair, came over and knelt by Camilla, and the two clasped each other in an embrace, and made the room resonant with sounds the crickets might have been amazed to hear, had not several solos of the same kind been delivered in that room before.

"There! that's enough," exclaimed Camilla, rubbing her wet eyeglasses. "If I don't shut up now, I shall be hysterical for a week."

"And you'll just let the past go, my dear, and accept his offer—and his mother?"

"Your nose is real red," said Camilla. "How does mine look?"

"Pink," replied the passenger, getting up and smiling.

While she shook down her dress folds, and while Camilla carefully rubbed her own cheeks, and laughed at the microscopic concern which she saw expressed by the faces of the crickets, a locomotive's scream came through the woods, and the pounding of a heavy train made the rails beside the platform tingle.

"There he is now," said the elder lady, complacently.

"Not on this train?"

"This must be the train he was to follow on. Isn't it from the south?"

"Of course it is. There goes the head light flashing past the window. Mercy! Why did you let him come?"

"Haven't I convinced you it was impossible to prevent him, my dear."

"I don't know what I'm saying—I don't know what I'm doing. Hadn't I better put some more tea to steep?"

"That's a housewifely thought, but it isn't necessary. He had his tea before I left him, but he didn't eat anything."

Camilla remained clutching her tea-pot handle, and gazing through her glasses while the train thundered past, each set of wheels playing the same tune upon the joints of the rails, car after car.

"Oh, it's gone by!" she breathed, setting the tea-pot down with a dispirited gesture. She saw the last red lights showing like dim rubies through her curtains.

Both women listened. The practiced ear of the station-keeper knew that the train was making a siding, that it stopped while the switch was turned, that the thunder which followed was bumper crashing against bumper as the train began to back. Its hissing and grinding, and the extra for which it must be making way, passed entirely out of her mind, however, when the possible comer knocked at her outside door. The broad eaves sheltered him, and if he stood over his boot soles in rain water he could not feel half as dreadfully as she did.

His mother kindly took the lamp and went to the door. Camilla did not know whether or not they exchanged any words. The coming lamp light pushed darkness back from her and the crickets, and as darkness receded, he approached, just as if he was a rising sun.

He must have said the first word, for she burned all over and turned half-way around in her chair. Had not that cage of crickets taken the meeting under their own patronage? But they encouraged the young gentleman as he stepped over the threshold, and piped up to him out of the silence, "Co-o-ort!"
—M. H. Catherwood, in Harper's Bazar.

Summer Weeds.

There is a great deal of uncertainty in the minds of ladies who are suddenly called upon to assume mourning attire as to the resources in this direction for comfortable Summer wear. Indeed, what is called "deep" mourning—that is, mourning which involves the depths of darkest wool and double English crape—can not be made agreeable wear with the thermometer in the eighties and nineties; but there is for those who have passed the crape season a variety of lovely mourning fabrics; and so fine and choice are they in shade, texture, finish and in the character of their designs—for nothing pronounced is tolerated in mourning—that many ladies who prefer black for general wear at all seasons buy at a mourning store for the sake of obtaining the general and unobtrusive qualities which characterize mourning materials. Twenty-five or thirty years ago certain houses which made mourning a specialty were among the best known in New York City. Their fashions were regularly chronicled, and the fine spun gradations and customs they made an effort to introduce were the cause of so much ridicule that it doubtless had something to do with discrediting the whole system. At that time jet, as an oramental addition to the resources of the designer and modiste, was confined to mourning, and purple, violet, mauve and white, in conjunction with black, were all mourning at its different stages, as distinctly as black itself. But gradually jet and the modest gray and neutral shades became absorbed in the swift current of ever-changing fashion, and mourning proper was compelled to relinquish the most of its accessories, and rely upon the depth and unity of its belongings for the recognition of its character and office. Mourning to-day therefore is more limited in its scope and more costly because more refined and distinctive in its characteristics. It addresses itself to a more restricted class, for the majority can not carry out the requirements of modern mourning toilets, or sacrifice the wardrobe which they already possess.

In fine wools the favorite materials are a lovely quality of nun's veiling in two grades, both pure wool and very fine, but one smoother than the other. "Camels hair grenadine is a fine open worked wool that makes up in conjunction with silk surah, gros-gain, or armure, and is durable as pretty and lady-like. The width of these materials averages forty-four inches and the cost is one dollar per yard. This is a sufficiently low price; but to be effective as mourning they must be made up over plain foulard, which is also one dollar per yard and only twenty-seven inches wide; and they must be trimmed with the finest knife pleating of the material itself, as this is the only trimming which is permitted, with the exception of the interior pleatings of crepe lisse, which may show a line of white inside the black. A secondary quality of camel's hair grenadines has a speckle of white silk running through it, which lightens it somewhat, but it also lowers the tone and renders it less elegant, as well as less adapted to the strictures of present requirements.

The silks show much diversity within their quiet range, and are so good in shade and pure in texture that they are always desirable, in or out of mourning. Lighter than Armure, which is a favorite with older women, are the surahs, the plain and figured foulards, the black pongees, and the sewing-silk, or "Armure" grenadines. The surah makes, perhaps, the most youthful of summer mourning dresses, and is so light in weight as to be very pleasant wear; for unlike the grenadines, either in silk or wool, it needs no lining and can be made up of itself, if a very cool dress is needed, without any intermediary. It must, of course, be trimmed with itself in knife plaitings, folds or plaitings; and there is, indeed, nothing else that looks so well. The silk grenadines of best qualities are much more expensive. They range from $1.50 to $3.00 per yard, and must necessarily be made over silk so that the cost is enhanced. Then they are narrow, and a plaitings of the same must be used for trimming, the whole cost is brought up to a somewhat alarming height; but the dress always looks so distinguished, though so quiet, and is good through and through, down to the last thread. Some very good brocaded silks are shown in gray upon black, the gray being in outline and used as shading in the formation of the designs which exhibit generally oval or cone-shaped patterns, or pear-shaped, with leaves. For morning wear, the Scotch ginghams in gray and white and black and white checks are in great demand this season, the finish, when a dressy finish is required, being plain black ribbon bows, the style of making being simple and depending upon tucking or folds cross-cut for its effects. The muslins are revived in gray and black upon white, and show some lovely shaded patterns which many ladies admire and purchase, who are not in mourning. There are dull beaded trimmings and ornaments which are used sparingly, principally upon bonnets, when crape is left off; but there is an entire absence of lace and all bright or glossy fabrics or trimmings for a year or longer if the wearer chooses. It very often happens that elderly ladies suffer one loss after another until the habit of wearing black or gray fabrics become established and they never again can take up colors. In such cases the gentleness and refinement of high-class mourning materials have a great charm for them.—Jennie June.

—In Syracuse, N. Y., there is a family in which there are two boys of exactly the same height—thirty-seven inches—notwithstanding one is nine and the other nineteen years old. The younger is a mathematical phenomenon; the elder is exceedingly fat, and passes most of his time in sleep.—Syracuse Journal.

Light Under the Ocean.

A submarine electric lamp has just been constructed at Greenrock, Scotland, which promises to help reveal many of the mysteries heretofore associated with the bottom of the sea. The Tilly is the name of the vessel that carries this lamp. Its machinery will supply an electric current for a 15,000 candle-power lamp, which is to be lowered into the sea for ten fathoms to help the fisherman of Batavia to manage their drift-nets.

The lamp is enclosed in a flint-glass cylinder nine and one-half inches in diameter. The appearance of the light around the submerged lamp was very remarkable, and the effect marvelously beautiful. It is believed in time that the coasts of all the principal countries will be examined, and mapped out by aid of submarine electric lamps. This will not only be a help to the fishermen, but will render navigation safer, as well as aid the scientists in their explorations of nature.—Demorest's Monthly.

A Slight Mistake.

A gentleman on East Fourth street found a ragged tramp sitting on his front steps eating his lunch. "Here! What are you doing there?" he shouted. "Partaking of a slight lunch. Will you join me?" the tramp politely responded. "No; I don't want any of your villainous feed." "That's so; it is pretty tough kind of fodder. I just got it out of your kitchen. Your wife must be doing her own cooking now." "What's that, you infernal hound?" exclaimed the angry man, starting toward the tramp, still sitting quietly on the step. "Don't get excited, sir; dont get excited; think a minute. Aren't you mistaken in calling me a hound?" "No, I'm not; and I'll ——" "But, my dear sir, you are mistaken; I am no hound. I'm a setter." The gentleman gazed at the tramp in admiration and left him to finish his lunch.—Merchant Traveler.

She is Simply Immense.

George had been holding his girl on his lap for over two hours, and as she weighed 190 odd pounds he was feeling a little bit tired, but he was too much of a gentleman to tell her so.

"George, dear," she murmered softly, "are you having a pleasant call?"

"Delightful, darling," he responded faintly.

"And you are not sorry that we are to be married so soon?"

"No, indeed!"

"And you think I am a real nice girl?" she continued lovingly.

"Nice girl!" repeated George, enthusiastically. "Nice girl doesn't begin to express it. I think you are an immense girl."—N. Y. Star.

She Gave Him Her Hand.

"What makes your cheeks so red, Crimsy?" asked young Yeast of his friend, who had just entered the club rather late in the evening.

"Well, I just came from Miss Fussanfeather's," said the young blood addressed.

"Ah, I see! And you asked the young lady for her hand?"

"Yes; you've struck it."

"And she refused?"

"No she did not refuse. That's where the trouble comes in."

"You mean to say she gave you her hand in marriage?"

"Well, not exactly in marriage, my dear fellow; but she gave it to me across the face!"—Yonkers Statesman.

The One Thing Lacking.

The monk does not always cease to be a man. The members of an ornithological congress that was lately held at Vienna visited, with their wives, the wealthy Benedictine monastery at Melk on the Donau. The spacious cloisters, rich dining-hall, well filled library, scientific collections, gardens, park, the lovely view and a generous collation raised their admiration to the utmost. As they left an enthusiastic lady said to one of the younger monks: "You are in Heaven here." He was equal to the occasion. "We should be," he replied, "but that we lack the angels."—London Truth.

—In 1877 Thomas Carraher, of San Francisco, deserted his wife, who came to Brooklyn to live. Recently the store opposite her dwelling was filled with a new stock of goods, and when it was opened Mrs. Carraher was surprised to fine that Mr. Carraher was the enterprising merchant. He was also surprised when she put in an appearance and perfectly astounded him when she had him arrested for desertion.—Brooklyn Eagle.

—There is yet another danger, less apparent and striking than accidents—that in making hurtful toil of what should be healthful recreation, many a diversion seeker returns jaded rather than refreshed, and with perhaps the seeds of disease from the imprudence. Even the excursionists for a day, who might be braced up by a change of scene, in trying to crowd a month's amusement into ten or twelve hours, defeat themselves.—Philadelphia Ledger.

THE MARKETS.

CINCINNATI, June 30, 1884.

LIVE STOCK—Cattle—Common	$2 50	@ 3 50
Choice butchers	4 75	@ 5 75
HOGS—Common	4 25	@ 4 75
Good packers	4 85	@ 5 25
SHEEP—Good to choice	4 00	@ 4 75
FLOUR—Family	4 50	@ 5 00
GRAIN—Wheat—Longberry red		@ 1 02
No. 2 red		@ 90
Corn—No. 2 mixed		@ 55
Oats—No. 2 mixed	33½	@ 33½
Rye—No. 2		@ 64
HAY—Timothy No. 1	11 00	@ 12 00
HEMP—Double dressed		@ 8 50
PROVISIONS—Pork—Mess	15 50	@ 15 75
Lard—Prime steam		@ 7 00
BUTTER—Fancy Dairy	12	@ 14
Prime Creamery	15	@ 19
FRUIT AND VEGETABLES—
Potatoes, new, per barrel	2 00	@ 2 25
Apples, prime, per barrel	2 50	@ 3 50
NEW YORK.
FLOUR—State and Western	$3 75	@ 3 20
Good to choice	3 65	@ 6 50
GRAIN—Wheat—No. 2 Chicago		@ 94½
No. 2 red	97¼	@ 98¾
Corn—No. 2 mixed	59	@ 60
Oats—mixed	35	@ 37
PORK—Mess		@ 17 00
LARD—Western steam		@ 7 65
CHICAGO.
FLOUR—State and Western	$3 50	@ 4 35
GRAIN—Wheat—No. 2 red	85	@ 86
No. 2 Chicago Spring	85½	@ 85¾
Corn—No. 2	51½	@ 52¾
Oats—No. 2		@ 30½
Rye		@ 62½
PORK—Mess	16 99	@ 17 00
LARD—Steam	7 10	@ 7 20
BALTIMORE.
FLOUR—Family	$4 50	@ 5 75
GRAIN—Wheat—No 2	96	@ 96½
Corn—mixed		@ 56
Oats—mixed	36	@ 38
PROVISIONS—Pork—Mess		@ 17 75
Lard—Refined		@ 9¼
INDIANAPOLIS.
WHEAT—No. 2 red	$	@ 91
CORN—mixed		@ 51
OATS—mixed		@ 32¼
LOUISVILLE.
FLOUR—A No. 1	$4 15	@ 4 25
GRAIN—Wheat—No. 2 red	95	@ 1 00
Corn—mixed		@ 57
Oats—mixed		@ 35
PORK—mess		@ 16 50
LARD—steam		@ 9¾

A SPECIAL from Waltham, Mass., says that 1,500 Watches are now made daily at Waltham, and they are better in quality and lower in price than ever before.

THE man who is most given to counting chickens before they are hatched is the agent for a patent incubator.—Lowell Courier.

MEDICAL TESTIMONY.

BURLINGTON, VT., December 17, 1883.
I desire to call attention to the great relief to be derived from ALLCOCK'S POROUS PLASTERS, in chronic bowel troubles, enlargements of the liver, and the painful condition of the spleen in malaria. No local agent can exceed their efficacy in absorbent and anodyne properties.
WM. B. BELTER, M. D.

MONTCLAIR, N. J., December 18, 1883.
It affords me great pleasure to recommend ALLCOCK'S POROUS PLASTERS and BRANDRETH'S VEGETABLE PILLS as agents possessing great healing efficacy. The world-wide fame of these remedies is such as to render it almost superfluous to add a word of commendation from the medical faculty to increase their reputation.
WM. P. STRICTLAND, M. D., LL. D.

341 EAST TWENTY-SECOND ST., NEW YORK CITY, December 18, 1883.
I have found ALLCOCK'S POROUS PLASTERS very useful in those special diseases of women where anæmia is the cause of so much local pain and disturbance. Their combination is an excellent one, the best yet made to my knowledge, and have always been found reliable.
A. W. LESSER, A. M., M. D.

95 JACKSON ST., BROOKLYN, N. Y., December 17, 1883.
Being familiar with the stimulating, healing and anodyne properties of ALLCOCK'S POROUS PLASTERS, I commend them as a most valuable agent in the class of diseases for which they are intended. The stimulating action when worn over the gastric region, materially aids in restoring strength and energy to digestion and the consequent building up of tissue and restoring tone to the general system.
H. ARMGARDT, M. D.

Twenty-five Per Cent. Stronger than any Other Butter Color.

BURLINGTON, VT., May 3d, 1883.
I hereby certify that I have examined the Butter Color prepared by Wells, Richardson & Co., and that the same is free from alkali or any other substance injurious to health; that I have compared it with some of the best of the other Butter Colors in the market and find it to be more than twenty-five per cent. stronger in color than the best of the others.
I am satisfied that it is not liable to become rancid, or in any way to injure the butter. I have examined it after two months' free exposure to the air in a place liable to large changes of temperature, and found no trace of rancidity, while other kinds similarly exposed became rancid.
A. H. SABIN,
Prof. Chemistry, University of Vermont.

WHY is a great bore like a tree? Both appear best when leaving.

"MR. BROOKS, near Albany, was hopelessly afflicted with Cancer. It had eaten through his nose into his mouth and throat. The time of his death was only a question of a very short time. He prayed for death, his suffering was so great. S. S. S. has had a wonderful effect on him. His improvement is so great that we all feel sure of his being perfectly cured in time."
W. H. GILBERT, Albany, Ga.

NOT what its cracked up to be—An ancient egg.

Skinny Men. "Wells' Health Renewer" restores health and vigor, cures Dyspepsia, $1.

A GOOD many "amusements" are bores; but fishing is reel fun.—The Judge.

PAPILLON Blood Cure cures all diseases originating in any impairment of the blood, as Fits of Epilepsy, Anæmia, Sick Headache, and Female Weaknesses.

PAR excellence—a good father.—The Judge.

THAT wonderful catholicon known as Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound has given the lady a world-wide reputation for doing good. It is a living spring of health and strength.

WHEN the iron enters a man's soul it should nerve him to greater effort. Iron is very strengthening.—Philadelphia Call.

"Mother Swan's Worm Syrup," for feverishness, worms, constipation, tasteless. 25c.

THE court room—The front parlor.—The Dial.

"Rough on Coughs," 15c., at Druggists. Complete cure Coughs, Hoarseness, Sore Throat.

THE gate that turns with the tide—The delegate.—N. Y. Journal.

WHOOPING Cough, that dreadful affliction, will be relieved at once with Papillon Cough Cure.

A GREAT waste of effort—The child that cries for an hour never gets it.

"Buchu-paiba." Quick, complete cure, all annoying Kidney and Urinary Diseases, $1.

A "DROLL dog" is a wag with a funny tale.—Pittsburgh Chronicle.

Glenn's Sulphur Soap
Is simply without parallel for wholesomeness, and in its purifying effects.

MAN was made to mourn, but some mourn more'n others.—N. O. Picayune.

"Rough on Corns." 15c. Ask for it. Complete cure, hard or soft corns, warts, bunions.

ANY man can make money—go.—Whitehall Times.

PISO'S CURE for Consumption does not dry up a cough; it removes the cause.

ST. JACOBS OIL
TRADE MARK

THE GREAT GERMAN REMEDY FOR PAIN.
CURES
Rheumatism, Neuralgia, Sciatica
Lumbago, Backache, Headache, Toothache, Sore Throat, Swellings, Sprains, Bruises, Burns, Scalds, Frost Bites,
And All Other BODILY PAINS and ACHES.
Sold by Druggists and Dealers everywhere. Fifty Cents a bottle. Directions in 11 Languages.
THE CHARLES A. VOGELER CO.,
(Successors to A. VOGELER & CO.) Baltimore, Md., U. S. A.

5,000 AGENTS WANTED!! DOUBLE QUICK!!!
To sell the First Authentic Biographies of
BLAINE AND LOGAN
By H. J. RAMSDELL, Blaine's personal friend and preference as author. The People demand this work, because the most Reliable, Complete, Interesting and Richly Illustrated. It contains nearly 600 pp. fine steel portraits. Sketches of former Presidents, Decision Laws, Statistics, etc. Will be first out, sell fastest and pay biggest profits. Beware of unreliable catchpenny books. For the best book and best terms, write at once to HUBBARD BROS., Cincinnati, Ohio.
P. S.—Outfits are ready. Send 50c. for one and save time.

PISO'S CURE FOR CONSUMPTION
CURES WHERE ALL ELSE FAILS. Best Cough Syrup. Tastes good. Use in time. Sold by druggists.
25 CTS. 25 CTS.

WANTED—Agents for the Authorized Official Campaign BOOK, BLAINE AND LOGAN. Profusely illustrated with Steel and Wood Engravings. Outfit only 50cts. Book sells for $2. For every 10 copies ordered, will give as premium a complete Gazetteer of the U. S. PEOPLE'S PUB. CO., Chicago.

Advertising Cheats!!!

"It has become so common to begin an article, in an elegant, interesting style.

"Then run it into some advertisement that we avoid all such,

"And simply call attention to the merits of Hop Bitters in as plain, honest terms as possible,

"To induce people

"To give them one trial, which so proves their value that they will never use anything else."

"THE REMEDY so favorably noticed in all the papers,

Religious and secular, is

"Having a large sale, and is supplanting all other medicines.

"There is no denying the virtues of the Hop plant, and the proprietors of Hop Bitters have shown great shrewdness and ability * * *

"In compounding a medicine whose virtues are so palpable to every one's observation."

Did She Die?

"No!

"She lingered and suffered along, pining away all the time for years,"

"The doctors doing her no good;"

"And at last was cured by this Hop Bitters the papers say so much about."

"Indeed! Indeed!"

"How thankful we should be for that medicine."

A Daughter's Misery.

"Eleven years our daughter suffered on a bed of misery,

"From a complication of kidney, liver, rheumatic trouble and Nervous debility,

"Under the care of the best physicians,

"Who gave her disease various names,

"But no relief,

"And now she is restored to us in good health by as simple a remedy as Hop Bitters, that she had shunned for years before using it."—THE PARENTS.

Father is Getting Well.

"My daughters say:

"How much better father is since he used Hop Bitters."

"He is getting well after his long suffering from a disease declared incurable."

"And we are so glad that he used your Bitters."—A LADY of Utica, N. Y.

☞ None genuine without a bunch of green Hops on the white label. Shun all the vile poisonous stuff with "Hop" or "Hops" in their name.

KIDNEY-WORT
DOES WONDERFUL CURES OF KIDNEY DISEASES AND LIVER COMPLAINTS,
Why?
Because it acts on the LIVER, BOWELS and KIDNEYS at the same time.
Because it cleanses the system of the poisonous humors that develope in Kidney and Urinary Diseases, Biliousness, Jaundice, Constipation, Piles, or in Rheumatism, Neuralgia, Nervous Disorders and all Female Complaints.
☞ SOLID PROOF OF THIS.
IT WILL SURELY CURE
CONSTIPATION, PILES, and RHEUMATISM,
By causing FREE ACTION of all the organs and functions, thereby
CLEANSING the BLOOD
restoring the normal power to throw off disease.
THOUSANDS OF CASES of the worst forms of these terrible diseases have been quickly relieved, and in a short time
PERFECTLY CURED.
PRICE, $1. LIQUID OR DRY, SOLD BY DRUGGISTS.
Dry can be sent by mail.
WELLS, RICHARDSON & Co., Burlington, Vt.
Send stamp for Diary Almanac for 1884.
KIDNEY-WORT

PAPILLON
"A CINCINNATI DRUGGIST REPORTS."
Mr. Ferd. Zuenkeler, Druggist, No. 686 Vine Street, Cincinnati, O., writes under date April 7th, 1884, I have obtained four additional verbal testimonials for "The Big Four" Peerless Papillon Remedies, from my customers. Mr. Louis Gratersays, "Papillon Blood Cure works like a charm." Geo. C. Hasenfels, of Bethlehem suburb, says: "Papillon Blood Cure is a great relief to him, and is glad that he has at last found something that will do him good." Miss C. E. Reishark, No. 303 McMicken Avenue, praises Papillon Skin Cure very highly. She has used three bottles. Mr. Adam Kieler, cor. 3rd and Martin Sts., has used two bottles of Papillon Catarrh Cure, and says, "he is positive it will cure him if he keeps it up," which he says, "I will do." Mr. Reule, of whom I wrote in my last letter, said to me this evening that your "Papillon Catarrh Cure is a good remedy, because he has given it a fair trial and has obtained most excellent results therefrom."

"NOTHING LIKE IT FOR RHEUMATISM."
Mrs. Rilla Stevens, No. 303½ South Dearborn Street says that she used Papillon Skin Cure for Inflammatory Rheumatism, with the happiest results. It reduced the inflammation and swelling, and relieved the intense pain in less than two hours; she cordially recommends it to all rheumatic sufferers. It is applied by rubbing the joints and affected parts with the remedy for some moments, the pain ceased almost instantly.

IT IS NOT
A CURE ALL, but as a tonic and health renewer, and for Blood and Skin Diseases, and troubles dependent on impure or impoverished blood, Swift's Specific is without a rival.
"My baby six months old broke out with some kind of skin humor, and after being treated five months by my family physician, was given up to die. The druggist recommended Swift's Specific, and the result was as gratifying as it was miraculous. My child soon got well, all traces of the disease is gone, and he is as fat as a pig."
J. J. KIRKLAND,
Minden, Rusk County, Texas.
Our Treatise on Blood and Skin Diseases mailed free to applicants.
THE SWIFT SPECIFIC CO.,
Drawer 3, Atlanta, Ga.
N. Y. Office, 159 W. 23d St., between 6th and 7th Aves.; Philadelphia Office, 1205 Chestnut St.

EGGLESTON'S SENSIBLE TRUSS
THIS NEW ELASTIC TRUSS
Has a Pad different from all others, is cup shape, with Self-Adjusting Ball in center, adapts itself to all positions of the body, while the ball in the cup presses back the intestines just as a person does with the finger. With light pressure the Hernia is held securely day and night, and a radical cure certain. It is easy, durable and cheap. Sent by mail. Circulars free. EGGLESTON TRUSS CO., 69 Dearborn St., Chicago, Ill.

CANCER INSTITUTE.
AURORA ILL.
Established, 1872; Incorporated, 1880. For the Cure of Cancers, Tumors, Ulcers, Scrofula and SKIN DISEASES, without the use of knife or LOSS OF BLOOD, and little pain. For INFORMATION, CIRCULARS AND REFERENCES, address DR. F. L. POND, Aurora, Kane Co., Ill.

"THE BEST IS CHEAPEST."
ENGINES, Horse Powers THRESHERS SAW-MILLS, Clover Hullers
(Suited to all sections.) Write for FREE Illus. Pamphlet and Prices to The Aultman & Taylor Co., Mansfield, Ohio.

PILES "Anakesis" gives instant relief, and is an infallible cure for Piles. Price $1 from druggists, or sent prepaid by mail. Samples free. Ad. "ANAKESIS," Makers, Box 2416, New York.

$65 A MONTH and board for 3 live Young Men or Ladies in each county, to take orders for the LIVES OF BLAINE AND LOGAN. Address P. W. ZIEGLER & CO., Philadelphia, Pa.

EASILY CURED. BOOK FREE. OPIUM HABIT. DR. J. C. HOFFMAN, JEFFERSON, WISCONSIN.

HAIR Wholesale and retail. Send for price-list. Goods sent C. O. D. Wigs made to order. E. BURNHAM, 71 State Street, Chicago.

EDUCATIONAL.

YALE LAW SCHOOL. 6 Professors, 10 Instructors. Fall term commences September 25th. For circular address PROF. FRANCIS WAYLAND, Yale College, New Haven, Conn.

GRAND RIVER INSTITUTE, Austinburg, O. 53 years of great success. Academic, Normal, Music, Comm'l and Telegraph Dep'ts. Board and tuition, $45 per 3 mos. Write to Principal.

LEARN TELEGRAPHY, or SHORT-HAND and TYPE-WRITING HERE. Situations furnished. Address VALENTINE BROS., Janesville, Wis.

A. N. K.—E. 985

BLAINE & LOGAN. Best Steel Portraits, 8x10, 15c. each; $5 per 100, by mail. Agents wanted. G.E. Perine, Pub'r, 121 Nassau St., N.Y.

BOONE COUNTY RECORDER.

VOLUME IX. BURLINGTON, KY., WEDNESDAY, JULY 9, 1884. NUMBER 36.

TOPICS OF THE DAY.

EX-SENATOR SHARON is one of the largest landholders in Washington.

THIS year promises to be a year of plenty so far as farm products are concerned.

SOME of the Eastern publishers have been detected in bringing out and advertising as new books old books with new names.

YOUNG men who desire their sweethearts to stick to them, will be delighted to know that glue now enters largely into the composition of ice cream.

THE anti-Chinese law, which is supposed to add another barrier to the intrusion of the Asiatics on our sacred soil, has passed the Senate.

THE reduction of the public debt last month was about $9,000,000; for the year ending June 30, near $101,000,000, or $36,000,000 less than last year.

THE appearance of the cholera in France moves the Springfield (Mass.) Union to warn every man to put his house in order, also his cellar and backyard.

NEW YORK, according to its new City Directory, containing 300,029 names, representing, on the usual estimate of five persons for each name, a total population of 1,500,145.

GUITEAU'S sister, Mrs. Scoville, is canvassing Pennsylvania selling pictures, her object being, she says, to raise money to prosecute her brother's murderers.

CROPS in parts of Canada are suffering from drouth. Grain is heading out on stunted stocks. In some places in North Frontenac the grain has not come out of the ground.

A GREAT many people who could not go to Europe and did not intend to, can now say that they contemplated a tour but the cholera scared them off. It's one of the ill winds.

THE Pequot Indians, numbering less than a hundred, live in a condition of semi-civilization on a plot of one thousand acres of land, set apart for them, near Stonington, Conn.

FROM mere curiosity, 500 women looked through a well-furnished San Francisco house that was for rent, and separately talked to the miserable real estate agent about taking it.

WATER seems to be still plenty in Pennsylvania, but there is no telling what the result might be if the wells being sunk in that State will persist in throwing up oil and natural gas.

A NEW YORK paper calls for an invention to enable one to tell "whether a beggar in charge of a consumptive dog is really deaf and dumb, or merely speechless from a sense of business."

A NUMBER of Chinese farmers in Merced County, Cal., have begun to cultivate the opium-yielding poppy. As they are making a success of it, it is likely that others will follow in their steps.

TURKEYS were turned loose among the grasshoppers near White Rock, Cal., a few days ago, and the hoppers proved too many for them, a number of the fowls dying from making too hearty a meal.

ACCORDING to the statistics of the census of China, recently obtained from the Imperial office in Pekin, the actual population of the Chinese Empire is 280,000,000—a considerable falling off from the popular estimate, which put it at nearly double these figures.

AS SENOR CASTELLO assures that Spain will not sell Cuba, and as Mr. Foster, the American Minister, says the United States has no desire to acquire it, it may be considered as settled that the gem of the Antilles will continue to sparkle in the Spanish crown.

Two boys living near Beloit scared a poor old uncle, lately from the East, nearly to death, by making him believe that a cyclone was coming. They got him into the cave cellar and smashed barrels and glass against the door. When taken out the old man's hair had turned white.

A correspondent of the Lancet says that Dr. Weir, Health Officer of Bombay, found in the well water used by certain cholera patients the so-called cholera bacillus discovered by Professor Koch. Dr. Balfour, who was present, drank at once a quantity of the water, much against Dr. Weir's wishes. But Dr. Balfour was not in the least disturbed by the cholera bacillus, and Dr. Weir can hardly say whether or not he is pleased with the result of the experiment.

SINCE 1870 experiments have been made in this country with several varieties of apples imported from Russia. It is interesting to note how different some of the apples appear in color, flavor, and keeping qualities when grown in Washington and when grown as far north as Vermont. One variety which in Vermont was found to be a good winter apple was over-ripe and soft at Washington in August, and could not be kept until winter.

PANIC AT TOULON.

Increased Number of Deaths There and at Marseilles.

Oxygen, the New Cure for Cholera, Not a Perfect Success.

LONDON, July 5.—The thermometer in Toulon to-day registered 95° in the shade, and the city presents a most monrnful appearance. Almost all the inhabitants whose circumstances enable them to live elsewhere have left the city, and the number of those who have thus fled from the pestilence is estimated at three-fourths of the entire population. The people who remain are of the poorer classes who have no means to go elsewhere, and their condition is pitiable. There is no employment for mechanics, and no trade for shopkeepers. With the exception of the dealings in actual necessities of life, trade is at a standstill, and many tradesmen have been ruined. Five of them have committed suicide during the present week. Many public officials have deserted their posts, and the people demand their dismissal, on the ground that their desertion tends still further to disorganize the community and invite anarchy and pillage.

MARSEILLES, July 5.—There was one death here from cholera last night.

TOULON, July 5.—There have been seven deaths here from cholera since last night. The oxygen cure has proved unsatisfactory in results.

MARSEILLES, July 5.—EVENING.—Twelve deaths from cholera during the twenty-four hours ended at eight this evening. The heat is excessive.

TOULON, July 5.—EVENING.—Four deaths from cholera since ten this morning. One on the transport Shamrock, 130 cases in hospital and sixteen in a dangerous condition

THE CHOLERA.

It is Thought the Disease Has Reached its Highest Point.

TOULON, July 4.—Dr. Koch, member of the German Cholera Committee, and head of the Cholera Commission, who has offered his services to the French Government to ascertain the character of the epidemic, has arrived here. Dr. Borel, navel physician, died to-day from cholera. It is thought the disease has now reached its highest point. There were seven deaths to-day.

LONDON, July 4.—The Government has protested against English vessels arriving at Spanish ports being quarantined.

PARIS, July 4.—There were no deaths from cholera at Marseilles last night. There were five at Toulon.

GENEVA, July 4.—Passengers from Toulon and Marseilles are disinfected at the railway stations.

MEXICO, July 4.—The Gulf coast is quarantined against France on account of cholera.

LISBON, July 4.—Portugal has declared quarantine against all English vessels.

MADRID, July 4.—All vessels arriving from Morocco are quarantined.

A Sheep Creates a Sensation.

WASHINGTON, July 4.—The naturalists of the Smithsonian Institute are quite excited over the presence of a live, big horn mountain sheep in their midst, for, owing to the great difficulty of capturing this hardy mountaineer and keeping him alive, when captured, no animal of this species has ever before been seen east of the Missouri River. This specimen is in fine, healthy condition at present, as are all the animals, but it is not likely to live long in captivity. It has already distinguished itself by clearing a fence ten feet high at a single bound. It has for a companion a genuine hybrid, or cross between itself and domestic sheep, covered with a mixture of wool and hair, but more strongly resembling its male parent from the mountains than the domestic species. Mr. Hornaday, the Chief Taxidermist of the National Museum, has secured permission to photograph the animals, and Mr. Sniellie, the Smithsonian photographer, will be engaged to-day in taking a number of instantaneous views of the two mountain sheep for use in mounting specimens of the same kind to display at the New Orleans Exposition.

A Bad Boy's Legacy.

PHILADELPHIA, July 5.—In May last Judge Penrose, of the Orphan's Court, filed an adjudication of account as trustee of the estate of Mary L. Davidson, deceased. It appears that some time prior to her death Miss Davidson, after conversing with her sisters, said she would set aside $10,000 additional to Richard A. Carden, providing he behaved himself and was a good boy. Carden had been adopted and cared for by the Misses Davidson since he was three years old. He had also been amply provided for in the will. Carden's subsequent conduct was such that the payment of the additional $10,000 was resisted, and exceptions to the adjudication were filed by Carden. Judge Hanna, of the Orphans' Court, filed an opinion to-day, declaring the exceptions to the former adjudication well taken.

Destructive Storm in Indiana.

CRAWFORDSVILLE, IND., July 5.—Another wind-storm struck this city last night. There was a perfect deluge of water, and great damage done to crops. The lightning struck several houses, trees and barns in the city, completely destroying one barn by fire. Just north of the city there was a strip of country in which all the fences, trees, several barns and one house were blown down. The wheat that was shocked in the fields was scattered everywhere. The damage estimated on farms is $5,000. Two large trees were blown across the Louisville, New Albany and Chicago Railroad track, two miles north of this city. The south-bound night express [illegible] into them. The engine was dropped from the track. Conductor Cox, who was with the train, regards the affair as a miraculous escape from serious injury to all on board.

Vessel Ashore.

NEW YORK, July 5.—The steamship Gulf of Vincent, from Calcutta, is ashore at Long Beach, Long Island. The crew and passengers (forty people) were saved by the life-saving crew. The vessel will probably be lost. The cargo is linseed.

FOREIGN LANDS.

The President of Panama Impeached and Deposed—The Langson Garrison Given Three Days to Surrender Before Attack.

LONDON, July 4.—A conflict took place between Jews and Armenians at Tiflis, Southern Russia. Cossacks restored order.

LONDON, July 4.—The Shanghai correspondent of the Times telegraphs that war is threatened between France and China. An influential party in China is investigating it. Prominent officials, such as Tso Tsung Tang, Peng Yu Sin and Marquis Tseng, are resolved to repudiate the recent Franco-Chinese negotiations.

HONG KONG, July 4—The French allowed the Langson garrison three days to surrender before attacked. The officers of the garrison replied that they had no orders to surrender. The French officers taken prisoners are well treated.

PANAMA, July 4.—The Superior Court of Panama has impeached Cervera, President of the State of Panama, for bribery, and named General Ruiz, Second Vice President, President. Cervera refuses to leave the Presidential Residence. He is surrounded by about one hundred friends, armed, and has fifty police armed with Remington rifles. President Ruiz demanded the building through Ibanez, commandant of the Panama garrison. Ibenez has 700 well armed men. An English man-of-war is expected on the station within forty-eight hours. French and American interests are wholly unprotected. There is some fear of the repetition of the revolution of 1879, which would be very disastrous for the canal company.

Fatal Tornado in Nebraska.

OMAHA, July 4.—A severe wind-storm visited Eastern Nebraska. Two soldiers on their way from the city to the fort, were struck by a falling tree, and one, Henry Gardner, killed. The other, private Wamestoff, had both legs broken. Numerous fences and trees were blown down. At Fremont, forty miles west, the Court-house and Enos Hotel were unroofed, Kittle's large warehouse demolished and a number of other buildings damaged. Samuel Anderson dropped dead from fright. At Stuart, a school-house was blown down and other buildings injured. A small boy was blown nearly half a mile, but was unhurt. The storm did considerable damage wherever it touched.

The Trouble in the Choctaw Nation.

FT. SMITH, ARK., July 5.—The Choctaw troubles, which originated in the refusal of certain property-owners to pay the permit tax, have assumed a serious attitude. Milo Hoyt, a prominent Choctaw trader, has been out-lawed and driven into the Cherokee Nation, where he has a gang of about thirty men, mostly desperate characters, who have rallied to his support. Fifty Choctaw militiamen are called out, and Cherokee authority is asked to co-operate with the militia in effecting the arrest of Hoyt's gang. Warrants are issued for the arrest of Hoyt, for burning the Choctaw Court-house. A fight is daily expected.

Bad Accident on a Race Course.

BUTTE MONT., July 5.—A terrible accident occurred here yesterday at the race course. Five hundred people were on the grand stand, when the roof fell in and the foundation gave away, precipitating the people a distance of twenty feet to the ground below. One boy was killed and a dozen others seriously wounded. Two of them are not expected to live. Mayor Owetry, in trying to prop up the wreck, was struck by timber and fearfully cut on the head. Great consternation prevailed, women fainting and children crying. Several limbs were broken and many otherwise seriously injured.

Pensions Granted.

WASHINGTON, July 4.—A bill was passed by the United States Senate to-day granting a pension to the widow of General Ord. Also, a bill increasing the pension of General Frank P. Blair's widow. The Senate also passed a bill authorizing the President to appoint General Averill to the position of Colonel in the army, and then place him on the retired list with that rank.

Six Victims of a Railway Accident.

CUNNINGHAM, MO., July 4.—Six bodies were taken out to-day from the wreck on the Cunningham and Burlington road, where the train went through the bridge Saturday night last. It was given out at that time that no lives were lost. The scene of the wreck was surrounded by a big crowd of people, and there was much excitement. It is supposed other bodies are still buried under the cars.

Brave Kate Shelly.

BOONE, IOWA, July 4.—The gold medal authorised by the State of Iowa at the Nineteenth General Assembly was to-day presented to brave Kate Shelly at Ogden. In the absence of Governor Sherman, Mr. Wetker Given, his private secretary, made the presentation speech which was responded to on behalf of Kate Shelly by Prof. John F. Curran, of Angus. There was a large crowd in attendance.

Miners Celebrating the Fourth.

DENVER, July 4.—The Fourth was quite generally celebrated throughout this State. The most notable event occurred at Swan City, a small mining camp. The miners, not being supplied with fireworks, proceeded to celebrate by placing giant powder under the postoffice. After the explosion Uncle Sam's establishment was found to have vanished. Luckily no one was injured.

Congo Advices.

LONDON, July 5.—Dispatches from St. Paul De Loanda, on the west coast of Africa, mention reports that Stanley has sailed for England, and that the commander of Portuguese war vessels ascended the Congo and annulled the treaties that Stanley concluded with the natives, which granted to the African International Association sovereignty over territory that had been declared neutral.

The Ontario Bush Fires.

KINGSTON, ONT., July 25.—The bush fires back of Kingston continue. Great damage to farm property. A fire is raging on the line of the Kingston and Pembroke Railway. Rain is now falling. Men at Clarendon Station have been fighting the fire for a week. It is thought the danger is now over. The finest timber at Boulton's mill burned. The falling of trees was heard in all directions.

A REVIEW

Of What Has Been Done in Congress the Past Seven Months.

A List of Measures That Have Passed Both Houses and Been Signed by the President.

WASHINGTON, July 6.—The following measures have been passed by both Houses of Congress during the session and were signed by the President, in addition to the regular annual appropriation bills and River and Harbor bills: Bills to reduce the rate of postage on newspaper and periodical publications to second class, when sent by others than the publisher or news agent, to one cent for each four ounces; to provide a civil government for Alaska; to extend the duration of Court Commissioners of Alabama claims until December, 1885; to prevent and punish counterfeiting in the United States of bonds or other securities of foreign countries; to grant fifteen days' leave of absence, with pay, in each year to letter carriers; to authorize the Secretary of War to offer a reward of $25,000 for the rescue of the Greeley Arctic exploring party; to establish a Bureau of Labor Statistics; to make all public roads and highways post-roads; to authorize Legislatures of the States of Illinois, Arkansas, Louisiana and Tennessee to sell or lease certain land appropriated for school purposes; to remove certain burdens from the American merchant marine, commonly known as the Dingley Shipping Bill; to establish a bureau of animal industry to prevent the exportation of diseased cattle and provide for the suppression and extirpation of pleuro-pneumonia and other contagious diseases among domestic animals; to make it a felony for any person to personate any officer or employe of the United States acting under authority of the United States or any department thereof; to repeal the test oath act of 1862; to authorize the fitting out of an expedition for the relief of Lieutenant Greeley and party in the Arctic Seas; to limit the time in which prosecutions may be begun against persons for violations of internal revenue laws to three years; to relieve from the charge of desertion certain soldiers of the late war who, after having served faithfully until the close of the war, left their command without leave; to provide for the location in a State west of the Mississippi River a branch Home for volunteer soldiers of the late war and for soldiers of the Mexican war and the war of 1812, whose disabilities were not incurred in service against the United States; to provide for the disposal of abandoned and useless military reservations; to reorganize a corps of Judge Advocates of the Army; to establish a bureau of navigation in the Treasury Department. The following measures have been incorporated in the regular appropriation bills and become laws: To appoint a commission to visit several countries in Central and South America to collect information as to the best mode of securing more intimate international and commercial relations between these countries and the United States; to provide that hereafter all estimates of appropriations and estimates of deficiencies in appropriations intended for the consideration of Congress shall be transmitted to Congress through the Secretary of the Treasury, and in no other manner; to provide that the number of Deputy Collectors of Internal Revenue, Gaugers, Store-keepers, and clerks employed in the Internal Revenue service shall not be increased; to create a board of Pension Appeals, to be appointed by the Secretary of the Interior; to provide for the appointment of a scientific commission which may in the name of the United States Government conduct the National Conference of Electricians in Philadelphia in the autumn of 1884; to authorize the President, in case of threatened or actual epidemic, to use the unexpended balance of appropriation not to exceed $100,000 in aid of State and local boards, or otherwise in his discretion, in preventing and suppressing the spread of the same, and maintaining quarantine at points of danger; to permit the admission to the Government Hospitals for insane of inmates of the Soldiers' Homes who are now or may hereafter become insane; to provide that it shall not be lawful for the head of any executive department, or any bureau, branch or office of the Government, to cause to be printed, nor for the Public Printer to print any document or matter of any kind whatsoever, except that which is authorized by law as necessary to administer the public business, nor for any bureau officer to embrace in his annual or other report to be printed any matter not directly pertaining to the duties of his office as prescribed by law; to provide for the appointment of a Missouri River Commission, with powers and duties similar to those of the Mississippi River Commission; to appropriate $3,750,000 to pay the rebate tax on tobacco.

CONGRESSIONAL PROCEEDINGS.

ON THE 4th the Senate further insisted on its amendments to the deficiency bill, and reappointed the same committee of conference. The resolution of Mr. Miller was agreed to, directing the Committee on Indian Affairs to extend its inquiry in the investigation, as to the condition of the Indians of California.

In the House, the conference report on the bill to consolidate the Bureau of Military Justice and Corps of Judge Advocates was agreed to. A motion in regard to the amendment making an appropriation to reimburse ex-President Hayes the amount paid for the expenses of the commission appointed to go to Louisiana in 1877 was rejected. Mr. Willis presented the conference report on the River and Harbor Appropriation Bill, which was agreed to. The bill now appropriates $13,809,-700.

On the 5th, both houses wrestled with the conference reports all day and during the whole of the night without reaching an agreement, But little other business was transacted.

IN the Senate, on the 6th, the bill making temporary provisions for the naval service was amended and passed. The Senate amendment to the Diplomatic and Consular Bill was receded from and the bill passed. The Senate went into executive session and soon adjourned.

IN the House the conference report on the general deficiency bill was agreed to, which appropriates $6,296,616.

—A pleasant little story is related by a correspondent of an English agricultural journal. A few evenings back a constable at East Retford observed seven worn-out horses proceeding to the station from the direction of Doncaster. A cart accompanied them in which were the carcasses of three dead horses. It was mentioned by a man who was with them, that the whole lot were consigned to Hertford, where they were to be converted into meat pies for the London market. One of the animals could only breathe through a tube fixed in its throat.

THE COMMONWEALTH.

Louisville Leaf Tobacco Market.

The market for dark and heavy tobaccos opened with a wire edge on it, and regie styles, both lugs and leaf, marked in the first half of the week the highest prices of the year; but subsequently the demand was slackened, and prices have eased off somewhat. Regie strategy is, of course, the controlling factor, and this spurt and relapse are somewhat mystifying those who are fond of conundrums. Prices are not fully sustained, either of those or other tobaccos of the old types, the difference being a bid or so, and so small as to be a very slender indication of any change in temper or value. Some Clarksville tobaccos of the better grade sold this week at prices lower than were paid about six weeks ago, but low and medium grades are higher. There have been considerable sales of partly dried Green-river tobacco, which have indicated no important variation, though the tone has exhibited only moderate activity. Burley tobaccos did somewhat better early in the week, but latterly were quiet and irregular, and those types were a trifle lower for grades between the high and the low. The settlement of the tax question has had no preceptible effect, as yet, in stimulating manufactures, though it is anticipated that an improved demand for goods will materialise in July, and from this some improvement in the demand for leaf may result. We quote full weight packages of new-crop sound tobacco as follows:

	Dark and Heavy.	Burley.
Trash	$6 50 @ 6 75	$6 00 @ 7 50
Common lugs	7 00 @ 7 25	7 00 @ 8 00
Medium lugs	7 50 @ 7 75	8 00 @ 9 00
Good lugs	8 00 @ 8 50	10 00 @11 00
Common leaf	8 00 @ 8 50	10 00 @11 00
Medium leaf	8 75 @ 9 50	12 00 @16 00
Good leaf	10 00 @11 00	17 00 @20 00
Fine and fancy leaf	12 00 @16 00	....

Miscellaneous Items.

THE little five-year-old son of Richard M. Hedges, living two miles east of Cynthiana, went over to the house of a neighbor, Deering Veitch, a few days ago, and while playing at the well fell over into it, catching by the bucket and pulling it down with him. Holding fast to the bucket and chain he sustained himself in the water and screamed for help. After awhile his cries were heard, and Mr. Veitch running to the well saw the little fellow clinging strongly to the chain, attempted to draw him up by the windlass. When within a few feet of the top the little boy's strength failed, and letting go his hold he fell back into the water. The bucket was immediately let down again. He again seized hold and was drawn up once more to about the same distance, when his strength gave out a second time, and he fell back again as before. The bucket was again lowered, and the poor little victim seized it a third time, and was drawn up as before, but only to fall back again the third time to rise no more. During these efforts at his rescue the cries of the poor little fellow for his mother, who had been sent for and who was frantically witnessing his struggles, were heart-rending in the extreme. The body was soon afterward recovered, but life was extinct.

DURING a picnic in the yard of the colored Catholic Church, Louisville, on the Fourth, about twenty negroes became so noisy that Private Officer John Higgins went to the scene, and upon interfering was pounced on by the crowd, who beat him over the head unmercifully. While this was going on Thomas Higgins rushed to his brother's rescue, when the negroes drew their pistols and a regular fusilade began, during which Thomas Higgins received a dangerous wound high up in the left side.

MISS LIZZIE COX, fifty-four years of age, died at Maysville. She was quite wealthy and made the following bequests: $500 to the foreign and domestic missions of the Northern Presbyterian Church; $500 to the mission work of the Lutheran Presbyterian Church; $500 to the Danville Theological Seminary, and after the death of her two brothers, $2,000 to the same institution.

ADJUTANT GENERAL CASTLEMAN proposes to uniform the whole State guard anew, the only cost to the men being $7.50 each, to be taken from pay that will be due them for inspection, etc. The camp at Louisville in August is intended to be a real camp of instruction.

J. H. COLE, claiming to be a Chicago book agent, has been arrested at Bowling Green, for burglary. Part of the stolen property was found on his person.

MAYSVILLE proposes to manufacture fine cut and plug tobacco, thereby giving employment to eight hundred hands.

DOCTOR HIRSCHBERG, the husband of ten wives, is in jail at Louisville.

A FIRE at Ludlow, the other night, destroyed Harding & Dorman's grocery store, W. H. Wessell's dwelling and Mrs. Mery Weim's dwelling.

AT Louisville Mr. Bradford Dunham has resigned as general manager of the Louisville & Nashville Railroad. Mr. J. T. Harahan, general superintendent of the Southern Division, has been appointed to succeed Mr. Dunham.

IN a quarrel at Fort Jefferson, a few days since, a man named Styce stabbed John Hammons in the left side, over the heart, inflicting a dangerous wound. Hammons shot Styce dead.

THE other afternoon Sam Wright, an old colored landmark, about eighty years of age, was found dead in a garden at Mt. Sterling, where he had been working. When found he was standing slighly leaning against the fence, with his hoe by his side. The Coroner's jury concluded he came to his death from heart disease.

AT the Sulphur Well, at Lowell, about eight miles southwest of Nicholasville the other night, Green Bailey, colored, was shot in the back of the head and cut to the heart by Humphrey and Will Best, brothers, who were drunk.

THERE was a surprise, but pleasant, wedding at the residence of Mr. Walter Cleary, Covington, on the evening of the Fourth. The contracting parties were John T. Sullivan, jun., and Miss Clara E. McCollough, of Eastern avenue, Cincinnati. The parents of the twain had no notice of the ceremony until after the nuptial knot was tied.

WILLIAM WEBER, while firing off a cannon on the 4th at the corner of Williamson and Monmouth streets, Newport, had his eyes terribly [illegible] by the premature explosion of the gun. It is feared that he will lose the sight of them.

MISS MINNIE GEARE, of Newport, was frightfully burned in the face by the premature discharge of fireworks on the Fourth.

THE hod-carriers of Maysville dropped their hods the other days and broke for the harvest fields. Two dollars a day and roast beef was a temptation they could not resist.

The Nobility to the Front.

Take the Cabinet. Of the five Secretaries of State three are Earls one is the eldest son of a Duke; the head of the race of the fifth, Sir William Harcourt, as he himself recently reminded us, is Lord Vernon. The Lord Chancellor, the Lord President of the Council, the Lord Lieutenant of Ireland, the First Lord of the Admiralty, are all noblemen. Thus, then, out of the fourteen places in the Cabinet nine are filled by the representatives of 500 peers, while five only are filled by the representatives of the 35,000,000 which constitute the population of the United Kingdom. But we should be asked to look somewhat more closely at the personnel of those who are charged with administrative responsibilities in comparatively subordinate positions. The Secretary of the Treasury, Lord Richard Grosvenor, is a Duke's brother. The Under Secretary of State for War, Lord Morley, is an Earl. The Under Secretaries for Foreign Affairs and for Colonial Affairs are respectively sons of a Marquis and an Earl. The Surveyor of Ordnance is the son of a Viscount; the Secretary of the Local Government Board is the nephew of one Duke and the cousin of another. The Paymaster-General is Lord Wolverton, Lord Carington is the Captain of the Gentlemen-at-Arms and Lord Monson the Captain of the Yeomen of the Guard. Again, of the political officers of whom, in addition to peeresses and ladies of the Bedchamber, the Queen's household is composed, the Duke of Westminster, almost, if not quite, the wealthiest man in England, receives £[illegible],500 a year as Master of the Horse, and the Earl of Cork £1,500 a year as Master of the Buckhounds. Lord Kenmare has £2,000 a year as Lord Chamberlain; while Lord Dalhousie, Lord Torrington, Lord Methuen, Lord Ribblesdale, Lord Sudeley, Lord Wrottesley, Lord Sandhurst, to say nothing of a host of intimate relations of peers, occupy posts of dignity and emolument. Finally Lord Sydney, an Earl, receives £2,000 a year, and Breadalbane, an extremely rich man, has a salary of £900 a year. Nor should we be allowed to confine ourselves to the domestic Government of the empire. Additional confirmation, we should be told, will be found of the view here taken if we look abroad. The Viceroy of India is a Marquis, so is the Governor General of Canada, and so, till the other day, was the Governor-General of Victoria, now replaced by the husband of Lord Clarendon's niece. The destinies of Ceylon are presided over by the son of a peer, and the Queen's representative in the capital of New South Wales is Lord Augustus Loftus, the brother of a Marquis. Of our five chief Ambassadors, three—Lord Lyons, Lord Ampthill and Lord Dufferin—are peers, while of the remaining two one is a near relation of a Marquis and the other a son of Lord Scarborough. Of the sixteen English Ministers below the ambassadorial dignity, in foreign capitals, four are the sons of peers. When it is necessary to dispatch a diplomatist to Cairo on a special mission the man we select for the post is a cousin of Lord Northbrook. But there is no need to analyze the composition of our diplomatic corps and colonial service more closely. It would be comprehensively, and not incorrectly, asserted that there will be found in every part of it the same disproportion between the representatives of the House of Lords and the people at large.—Fortnightly Review

No Kisses Allowed.

It was at the Northwestern Railway Depot the other day when a number of young ladies stepped out of a passenger car that had just arrived and were ardently received by a long line of waiting kinsfolk, lovers and friends. They were all young and pretty, but they shook hands with their people in the most melancholy and subdued fashion, and I noticed that some of them even gave a too impulsive friend a little push, as if to ward off an unwelcome embrace. But this was a case when

"The eyes speak most when the lips move not."

And some of the fair young things were evidently just ready to cry. They were "sweet girl graduates in their golden hair," and they dared not kiss their friends on meeting them at the depot, because it was against the rules of the school; too public, not a proper place. Now isn't that positively awful."

"How do you stand it?" asked a Chicago friend of a seminary girl.

"Oh, we don't live in depots," she said, with a merry twinkle of her eye, "and when we get home we just make up for lost time."

"So do we," chimed in one girl who had a blonde lover with her, "don't we, George?"

"I should blush," said George, and he did.

"You see they won't allow us to kiss up there," said the prettiest girl in the crowd; "think it demoralizes the brakemen and conductors and passengers. We don't care much when it's only ourselves we have to practice on, but when it comes to visitors, it's pretty hard."

"Don't we make it up, though, when we get home," echoed another of the crowd; "we just kiss and kiss again! Oh, my!"

This piece of scholastic severity is only equaled by the stir which has recently been made in this city over a two-hours' session in one of the public schools on the sentiment of love as defined in Longfellow's Evangeline. The superintendent of the school came to their defense, and the irate tax-payers who feared they were being defrauded in their educational rights, were soothed again. It reminds me of the time Charles Wyndham first played his elegant parlor comedies in Chicago—"Caste," "School" and others that will never be forgotten. Well, if my memory serves me right, one of the questions in "School" is: "What is love?" and the various definitions that are given by big and little girls are very amusing and entertaining. To find such salad freshness among the parallelograms and hypothenuses is refreshing, even if it is not educational in a book sense.—Chicago Cor. Detroit Free Press.

SCIENCE AND INDUSTRY.

—New Mexico will produce a larger crop of grain, vegetables and fruit this year than was ever before known in its history.—Chicago Times.

—Fine writing on glazed paper will give one or two fair copies without calling in the assistance of a press or water if use is made of a writing solution of three parts of good, jet-black ink, and one part of gelatine.—N. Y. News.

—Colonel L. O. Gillespie, of California, has leased 400 acres of land which will all be planted in watermelons this season. It will be the biggest melon patch in the world.—San Francisco Chronicle.

—The planting of cocoanut orchards is beginning to be a regular industry in the Fiji and some other of the South Sea Islands. The trees are planted about twenty feet apart and after three years can be left to themselves In the eighth year they begin to bear fruit.

—The latest triumph in science is said to be muscle-reading. It is claimed that any exertion of the mind produces a muscular contraction, and by placing himself in immediate contact with the person, the muscle-reader can tell what such person is thinking about.—Chicago Inter-Ocean.

—It is stated that John Porter, an engineer on the Michigan Central Road, has been offered $[illegible],000 for his patent on an attachment to a steam cylinder which condenses the waste from the steam cock on starting the engine, thereby averting that hissing noise which is so disagreeable to the ear and such a terror to horses.—Detroit Post.

—The Pharmaceutical Journal says that in Canada honey is extracted from the comb by a centrifugal machine and the comb replaced: the bees, when in good condition, will fill it again in four days. After two seasons' use the comb is melted into "foundation comb," upon which the bees quickly put the finishing touches. Canadian wax is practically out of the market; the supply is principally obtained from Africa.

—The pail and tub industry of Keene, N. H., consumes more timber than all others carried on in Cheshire County. There are forty pail factories, making 100,000 pails a year, consuming 450 cords of sapling, which gives a product of 4,000,000 pails from 18,000 cords of pine. The twenty tub and bucket lathes use a proportionately large quantity, and as great quantities of staves are sawed and sold for use outside the county, is is probable that 30,000 cords of sapling pines are cut every year. Besides much hardwood that is cut for manufacturing purposes, a vast quantity is used for fuel.—Boston Post.

—Geologists are now claiming that the Rocky Mountains have been raised to their present height by the action of heat under them, while in parts where the earth is cooling most rapidly it is sinking. Off the coast of Florida the coast survey operations have brought up from the bottom of the deep sea the remains of animals that lived ages upon ages ago in the bottoms of rivers or upon land. The evidence that they were not washed out to sea was abundant. In the English channel, hundreds of feet deep, were found rich stores of mammoth ivory. The animals had died where the remains were found long before there was any water there.

PITH AND POINT.

—"The bicycle hauls no coal," exclaims an anti bicycle exchange. This is indeed an age of startling discoveries. —Boston Statesman.

—The papers are publishing the fact that a brass band gave a concert for the benefit of the flood sufferers, but before the band had finished the first tune the sufferers jumped right back into the water.—Bismarck Tribune.

—Very true.—

"Come wife," said Will, "I pray you devote
Just half a minute to mend this coat,
Which a nail has chanced to rend."
"'Tis ten o'clock," said the drowsy mate.
"I know," said Will, "it's rather late,
But it's never too late to mend!"

—A very absent-minded individual, being upset from a boat in the river, sank twice before he remembered that he could swim. He fortunately remembered it just before he sank the last and third time. A great invention is memory!

—The Burlington Free Press remarks: "Deafness, it is said, can be cured by sudden surprise. If the patient is a woman, inform her on a slip of paper that she is homely." It would be safer to send the slip of paper in by a messenger boy.—N. Y. Graphic —Little Freddie was talking to his grandma, who was something of a skeptic. "Grandma, do you belong to the Presbyterian Church?" "No." "To the Baptist?" "No." "To any church?" "No." "Well, grandma, don't you think it's about time to get in somewhere?"—Lawrence American.

—We learn from a foreign correspondent that "Zoan's Necropolis has been found." It appears to have been lost nearly 2,000 years. Mr. Zoan would have probably found his lost Necropolis much earlier if he had advertised it in the columns of a daily paper and offered a suitable reward.—Norristown Herald.

—"Your beau seems to be an athletic-looking youth, Mary," said a fond Somerville papa to his blooming daughter "Oh, yes," she replied, with a blush, "he's the short-stop of the Peltem nine." "Ah, indeed; but he's not much of a player, I reckon." "Why do you think so?" "Because he stays till midnight nearly every time he comes to see you. As a 'short-stop' I should be inclined to regard him as a failure." —Somerville Journal.

—What is my opinion of poverty? It is a hundred-dollar bill cut in two in the middle and both ends lost. What is my opinion of patience? It is the axle grease which makes the wheels of association run smoothly. What is my opinion of homœopathy? It is imagination done up in little pills and powders. What is my opinion of retribution? It is a gun that kicks a man's brains out when he shoots an offender. What is my opinion of a loud-mouthed man? He is a Fourth of July cannon loaded with wind.—Merchant Traveler.

THE RECORDER.

RIDDELL & HALL,
Proprietors.

WEDNESDAY, JULY 9. 1884.

We are authorized to announce
J. Q. WARD,
of Harrison county, as a candidate for Judge of the Superior Court, from the 3rd Superior Court district, to fill the vacancy caused by the death of Judge Reid. Subject to the action of the Democratic party.

We are authorized to announce
Hon. BENJ. D. LACY,
of Bath county, a candidate for Judge of the Superior Court, from the third Superior Court district, to fill the vacancy caused by the death of Judge Reid. Subject to the action of the Democratic party.

We are authorized to announce
DR. JAMES S. BROWN,
of Warsaw, as a candidate for the State Senate, from this, the 23d Senatorial District, subject to the action of the Democratic party.

We are authorized to announce
H. J. FOSTER
as a candidate for County Superintendent of schools at the August election.

THE President makers are at Chicago this week.

THE RECORDER is now printed on Wednesday morning.

KENTUCKY wants more education and loss concealed weapons.

THE Democratic camp meeting is in session in Chicago this week.

OHIO, West Virginia and Iowa will elect State officers in October.

G. G. HUGHES took the Farmers Insurance Company in out of the weather, Monday.

THE Boston Globe kept up the fight for Butler's nomination till the last ditch was reached.

THE Owen Democrat takes the bakery and the cook in the snake story business this season.

THE printers on the Courier-Journal unionized that office the other day by a few hours strike.

THE annual camp meeting now in progress at Camp Stevenson, Grant county, will continue till the 17th.

THE Chicago convention is in session, but a great paper like the RECORDER can not wait for the result of such a small affair.

THE Ohio penitentiary is a paying institution in which nobody wants any stock. It cleared over two thousand dollars last month.

NUMEROUS Democrats have sworn within the last few days by the eternals that they will not support Butler should he be nominated.

THE Louisiana legislature evidently believe in the "ring," and promptly knocked out of time a bill to prohibit prize-fighting in that State.

MR. BLAINE contemplates a visit to Louisville in a few days. He has relatives there. It is a good time for him to hunt up his relatives.

NEAL, the last of the Ashland murderers, will get the ears of the Court of Appeals again, consequently he will not be hung on the 18th inst., as per his last sentence.

BEN BUTLER and his friends would be paralized with surprise, were the Chicago convention, by any hook or crook, nominate him for president. It would also partially paralize the Democratic party.

DON'T forget that next Saturday at 1 o'clock p. m., is the time, and the Court-house in Burlington the place, for holding the convention to nominate delegates to the district convention at Maysville.

THE newspaper correspondents who convened at Chicago in advance of the National Convention, had nearly every candidate and probable candidate nominated about twice before the delegates arrived at the scene of action.

NEW ORLEANS wants the quarantine system abolished, and the legislature to make an appropriation for the purpose of putting in operation some sanitary plan, whereby her commerce will not be so seriously effected as by the forty days quarantine.

THE Aurora Fair will be held the first week in next month, and will be unusually attractive this year. An array of liberal special premiums is advertised, and no doubt they will prove a big card for the Fair. On Thursday a [illegible] of brass bands will compete for a special premium John M. Moody, who has acquired almost a national reputation as a ringmaster at country Fairs, will be on hand again, and will look particularly to the comfort and enjoyment of the Kentucky cousins.

IF a person was to form his opinion of the candidates for Governor in Indiana, from reading the political papers of the two parties, he would conclude that they are two of the meanest men in the State. It seems that, according to their opponents, they are guilty of the vilest acts in the category of meanness.

THE Transcript wants the people of Lexington to go out and kick themselves because they made no effort to secure the district convention which meets at Maysville on the 17th inst. Possibly Lexington was afraid the convention would tarry with her too long as did the convention at Winchester. We understand the distilleries in Central Kentucky have shut down.

THE Attorney-General's decision that the new school law revokes all the certificates granted and in existence under the old law does not produce a great degree of satisfaction among the teachers, and especially among those who hold certificates of recent date. Under the new law certificates are first, second and third class, the last two of which can be granted to the same applicant but twice.

WE have known Mr. Lacy all our life, and know him to be eminently qualified for the office he seeks. His integrity, ability and courage to do right has never been questioned. Mr Lacy graduated in the law department of Yale when the distinguished Greenleaf and Story were professors, and graduated with distinguished honors. Mr. Lacy was born in Mason county, removed to Owensville in 1845 and began the practice of law in partnership with Hon. A. Trumbo. He was a soldier in the Mexican war and afterwards appointed Commonwealth's Attorney in this district and held that office up to the adoption of the new constitution, when he became a candidate before the people for the same office and was elected for a term of six years. He was elected to the legislature as a Democrat in 1865, and while there voted for the repeal of the odious expatriation laws In every position to which Mr. Lacy has been called he illustrated the Jeffersonian qualification. We can say to the Democratic voters of the district that in the person of Mr. Lacy, Bath county offers us a candidate, a man of ability and spotless integrity, a man who can not be intimidated in the discharge of his sworn duty, but who has the moral courage to do right and the physical courage to defend that action; and if he is nominated and elected, he will be an ornament to the bench, and will reflect honor upon the people.—Owingsville Outlook.

The Master Commissioner made the following sales Monday:

House and lot in Burlington, owned by A. C. Porter and wife, to James M. Barlow—$500.

27 acres below Taylorport, belonging to Peter Urton, to Wesley Quick—$330,80

7½ acres of the Joshua Barlow tract on Garrison, to J. C. Terrill—$187 50.

35 acres of the R. W. Cooper tract at Bullittsville, to James T. Grant—$2,000

73½ acres of same tract to W. W. Gaines $2,500.

County Court.

Exceptions to settlement of N. B Stephens' committee, sustained.

Richard Clements appointed guardian for Sidney Clements.

Chris Barlow's exceptions to viewers' report overruled, and his damages assessed by the Court at $20.

Elizabeth Buchanan adjudged an imbecill, and S. J. Ewalt appointed her committee.

Eliz. Davis' will probated, and S. J. Ewalt appointed administrator.

A petition filed and a vote ordered to be taken on the local option question in the Beaver district.

Petersburg.

The wheat crop will yield quite well this season.

Stott Bros. and Jackson are unloading a barge of coal.

The tobacco crop looks very promising in this section.

Born—To John Sandford and wife on the 4th inst., a boy.

Mat Sebree, of Cincinnati, visited his friends here last week.

Captain Fenton has purchased a fine Alderney cow—pedigreed.

T. W. Wade and wife returned last week from Newport News.

J. E. Terrill sold his bay gelding to John Blackburn for a nice sum.

We had a nice rain last Thursday night, which was very much needed.

Blaine and Logan will not carry Kentucky if they are popular with some men.

New potatoes, beans, peas and cucumbers are the principal vegetables in this locality.

Several of the boys attended the amusements in Aurora and Lawrenceburg on the 4th.

There is a large quantity of sand and gravel boated from here to Cincinnati every season.

Dr. W. H. Terrill contemplates spending next winter in Florida for the benefit of his health.

E. Y. Chapin attended the picnic at Manchester, Indiana, on the 4th. It might have been Lawrenceburg.

There is a buzzard in these parts wearing a sheep bell. It was seen on the farm of Captain Randall, last week.

B. F. Blythe is the most patriotic man in town, he being the only one who had [illegible] unfurled to the wind on the 4th.

Bill M[illegible] has a pet crow that can almost talk. It visits the groceries and stores daily, begging for something to eat.

John F. Tilley graduated at the Lawrenceburg high school, last Friday, in a very creditable manner, receiving 97 per cent.

The Smith boys are catching some very nice fish. They caught two channel cats, last week, that weighed 110 pounds. The head of one weighed 14 pounds.

Florence

Hon. Harry Baker had a severe attack of neuralgia on the fourth, which deprived us of some good company Glad to hear he is better now.

A. G. Winston, attorney, was over Saturday to defend the town in an action of Conner Yager vs. Town of Florence. The plaintiff having just returned from the fishing excursion his petition was too slippery to stick.

O. H. Conrad had the misfortune to loose his fine gray mare last week, on the mail route from Florence to Burlington. The death is supposed to have been caused by the hauling of the instructions of the Town Council of Florence to their attorney in Burlington.

We havn't much matter for the paper this week unless we could write up the little gossip that is going the rounds of belles and beaux, of flirtations and engagements, all of which would be hard to get in shape for the printer, and might get a "bend" put on the correspondent; so we'll just wait for something more tangible to turn up.

We have been blessed with some refreshing showers since our last communication, which were so much wished for and needed by the farmers and gardners in our neighborhood, for their potato and tobacco crops. The growers of the latter commodity have taken advantage of the good season and finished setting and replanting. All vegetation has taken on a thrifty appearance and the outlook for a bountiful harvest is encouraging.

The farmers are so busy at home in their crops, and there is so little travel just now, that our place seems to have lost its vitality so far as visitors are concerned, but the usual trade at the shops in repairing reapers and mowers and rakes is going on, and the farmers slip in at night and buy their groceries. Of course if we badly need company, we have a good reserve of constitutional setters and chronic politicians to fall back on, so we manage to keep up our spirits.

The glorious fourth has passed by with us without any particular demonstrations. The usual amount of firecrackers and torpedoes were exploded and we notice one dwelling that flaunted the stars and stripes from cellar to attic. Dr. A. Sayre hung out a yellow flag made from the cover of a sugar-cured ham. We don't know whether it indicated that he had ham and yellow-legged chicken on which to entertain his friends, or the place to have your broken bones and blackened eyes cared for. The former would suit us best.

About the only excitement we had was the starting of a fishing party for the forks of Gunpowder and vicinity to celebrate the fourth, and also to show their prowess in the piscatorial ring. The company was composed as follows: Dr. Rice, of Florence, Dr. Allen, of Covington; T. L. Swetnam, merchant, Conner Yager, attorney, Corlis Corwin, carriage maker, Ben Fernedling, carpenter, and Jessie Corwin, jr., chaplin. Equipments: 1 covered wagon, 2 tarpaulins, 7 rubber coats, numerous poles, reels, minnow buckets, &c.; also a superior article of "bass draps" furnished by Dr. Allen. The party was provisioned with boiled ham and a lot of breakfast bacon, sugar, coffee, bread and various little etcs., including some Florence "bass draps," enough in all for a week's campaign. The company returned the second night about 9 o'clock, and reported splendid luck. About 50 large fish, 7 soft shell turtles, 14 fly-up-the-creek, 20 squirrels and a mint of mineralogical discoveries. We noticed the party on their arrival here and it reminded us of a detachment of Kirby Smith's army in its retreat from the raid on Cincinnati. It was so quiet. We don't know how much provision was returned, but was informed that the "bass draps" gave out.

REPORT OF THE CONDITION
OF THE
Farmers & Traders National Bank
AT COVINGTON,
In the State of Kentucky, at the close of business, June 30, 1884.

RESOURCES.
Loans and discounts		$509,718 91
U.S. Bonds to secure circulation 4 per cent		50,000 00
Furniture and Fixtures		4,668 91
Premiums paid on Bonds to secure circulation	$10,437 50
Less am't previously charged to profit and loss	2,437 50	8,000 00
Due from approved reserved agents	$80,481 08
Due from banks and bankers	21,839 82
5 per cent. fund with U.S. Treasurer	2 250 00
Cash on hand	41,158 78	148,729 68
		$781,117 50
LIABILITIES.
Capital stock paid in		$300,000 00
Surplus fund	$6,000 00
Undivided profits	17,485 41	23,485 41
Circulation		45,000 00
Fund to pay tax on circulation		222 30
Due individual depositors	385,434 94
Due banks & bank's	26,974 85	412,409 79
		$781,117 50
Undivided profits remaining January 1, 1884		$14,480 40
Gross earnings, for 6 months ending June 30, 1884		19,897 20
		$34,377 70
DISPOSED OF AS FOLLOWS:
Current expenses	$5,669 60
Tax on circulation	222 30
Dividend No. 3 of 3 per cent	9,000 00
Credited to surplus fund	2,000 00
Balance to undivided profits	17,485 41	$34,377 70

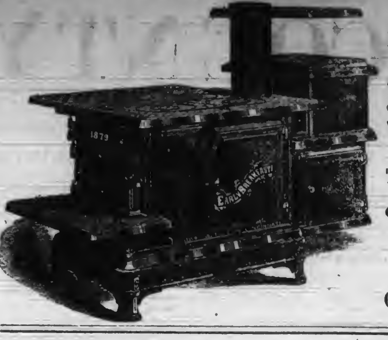
J. L. SANDFORD, Cashire.

FOR SALE.

A good dwelling house with 2 acres of ground, the property of Edward Fowler, deceased. Inquire of C. A. FOWLER.

For Sale.

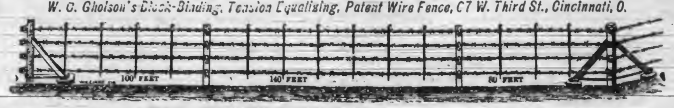
A good frame dwelling house of four rooms and all necessary out-buildings, with half acre lot, in the town of Bellevue, Ky., on the Ohio river. Inquire or address,
JOHN DECK, Grant P. O.,
Boone County, Ky.



NOTICE.

The heirs of Maria Beemon, deceased, are hereby notified that I will be in Burlington the first Monday in each month, (County Court day) to pay them their distributable shares of said decedent's estate.
JONAS ROUSE, Adm'r.

For Sale!



75 high grade sheep, 65 ewes, remainder yearling bucks, all cross of Oxford and Southdown, also the lambs of this season. Will sell worth the money. They are sound and all right. Will divide them to suit buyer. W. D. KIRTLEY, Bullittsville, Ky.

THE NAME "EARLY BREAKFAST,"

Has become so familiar to the people of BOONE AND KENTON COUNTIES, AS THE LEADING Cook Stove
of the age, that further mention is unnecessary.
W. H. & J. M. McClung,
are the sole agents for this stove.
They also do all kinds of Job Work
—SUCH AS—
GUTTERS,
TIN ROOFING,
REPAIRING STOVES, &c.
No. 537 Madison Street,
COVINGTON, - - KY.
Second Door below Sixth Street.

W. C. Gholson's Block-Binding, Tension Equalizing, Patent Wire Fence, 67 W. Third St., Cincinnati, O.

As special Agent for the Gholson Fencing Company, for Boone County, I am prepared to build their patent fence at any time. This is the cheapest and best fence in use. It needs no talking up, as it is fast selling itself wherever it is introduced. Any number of wires can be used.
28-1y-84. G. C. GRADDY, Bullittsville, Ky.

The second addition of Spring Suitings has just been received.

H. F. BLASE,
540 Madison Street
COVINGTON, - - - - KY

Large assortment of Men's, Youths', Boys' & Children's Ready-made Clothi'g.

At Colter's,
CLOTHING DEPARTMENT,
RISING SUN, IND.

BARGAINS! BARGAINS!!

Are piling up in heaps and stacks. OVER SIX HUNDRED Men's, Boys' and Children's Suits just added to our immense stock at a sacrificing Price, and Two Hundred Overcoats in another lot. Now is the time to buy Overcoats. We will offer a $6 drab Melton Overcoat (fine goods,) at $2 50, and others up to $10. You can actually save one-half by buying Overcoats now.

SUITS,

We offer a line of all Wool Suits at $5 to $13; the $5 all Wool Suit is actually worth $11. 65 Sack Suits at $6. Over 300 Nice Suits at $7, positively worth $12; over twenty kinds. Over 300 Suits best English Worsted at $10 to $15. See our elegant line of Brag Suits that we offer at $16. Instead of getting a Suit made to order, come and see our $19 suits.

Knee Pant Suits

Over Five Hundred Knee Pants Suits, all grades and prices. At $1 50 we offer a good, strong and respectable suit, and up to $2, $2 50, $3, $4 and $5 for extra Nice Suits.

HTAS,

We claim to have one of the largest Hat trades in Southeastern Indiana, both in Men's and Ladies' wear. Actually over Eight Thousand Hats in Stock, from 5c up to $5,

Trunks

In Trunks we have THE Stock, commencing at 65 cents and ranging to Eight Dollars.

Wm. Colter,
Shoe & Clothing Department,
Rising Sun, Ind.

FOR SALE.

Three fresh milch cows, at a reasonable price, all well broke and good milkers. Also, 1 road wagon with good bed, two second hand buggies, 1 iron safe, key lock, fireproof, Hall's patent—cost $125 when new, will sell for $40. Address
M. F. CRIGLER, Hebron, Ky.

FOR SALE.

Two tracks of land containing 400 acres, in Campbell county, Ky., 18 miles from Newport, at $30 per acre, ¼ cash, the balance in 1, 2 and 3 years with interest from date of sale on deferred payments. Will sell in 50 acre tracts if desired, the land is partly improved and the balance in good timber and well watered. For particulars address M. F. CRIGLER, Hebron, Ky.

A. M. ACRA,
—DEALER IN—
HARNESS SADDLES.

Fine and Cheap Buggy Harness.
BURLINGTON, KY.
I also have a full stock of BUGGY WHIPS, LAP DUSTERS, ANKLE BOOTS and TROTTING BALLS and everything else usually kept in a first-class harness shop.

REPAIRING A SPECIALTY.
Give Me A Call.

A. L. Brown,

THE HATTER,
Cor. Pike and Washington Streets
COVINGTON, - - KY.
Has always on hand a large variety of Men's, Boys' and Children's Hats, and prices GUARANTEED to be as low as the lowest.
Gents' Furnishing Goods a Specialty.

L. KUPPERSCHMID,
—42 WALNUT STREET,—
Lawrenceburg, - - Ind.
Always keeps on hand a large assortment of WATCHES, CLOCKS, JEWELRY, &c. Repairing Watches and Clocks a specialty, Also, agent for the Rockford Watch Company.
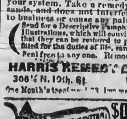
Which manufactures the finest movements made, and they are used by all railroad men.
—Give Me a Call—

Good Pay for Agents. $100 to $200 per mo. made selling our Grand New History Famous and Decisive Battles of the World Write to J. C. McCurdy & Co., Cincinnati, O.

CONNER YAGER
Attorney and Counselor at Law.
FLORENCE, - KENTUCKY

LUMBER.
Goe. M. Bedinger & Co.,
Erlang r, - - Ky.
We keep constantly on hand all kinds of Lumber, Laths and Shingles. Also Builder's supplies of all kinds.
—Come and see Us.—
may 9-tf



GOLD for the working class. Send 10c for postage, and we will mail you free, a royal, valuable box of sample goods that will put you in the way of making more money in a few days than you ever thought possible at any business. Capital not required. We will start you. You can work part the time only. The work universally adapted to both sexes, young and old. You can easily earn from 50 cents to $5 every evening. That all who want work may test the business, we make this unparalleled offer; to all who are not well satisfied we will send $1 to pay for the trouble of writing us. Full particulars, directions, etc., sent free. Fortunes will be made by those who give their whole time to the work. Great success absolutely sure. Don't delay, start now. Address STINSON & Co., Portland, Maine.

$66 a week at home. $5 outfit free. Pay absolutely sure. No risk. Capital not required. If you want business at which persons of either sex young or old, can make great pay all the time they work, with absolute certainty, write for particulars to H. HALLET & Co., Portland, Maine.

A PRIZE Send six cents for postage, and receive free, a costly box of goods which will help you to more money right away than anything else in this world. All of either sex, succeed from the first hour. The broad road to fortune opens before the workers, absolutely sure. At once address, TRUE & Co., Augusta, Maine.

AGENTS wanted for The Lives of all the Presidents of the U. S. The largest handsomest, best book ever sold for more than twice our price. The best selling book in America. Immense profits to agents. All intelligent people want it. Any one can become a successful agent. Terms free HALLET BOOK Co., Portland, Maine.

VIGOROUS HEALTH [illegible]
THE PASTILLE CURE FOR NERVOUS DEBILITY. TRADE MARK
TESTED FOR 5 YEARS
by use in thousands of cases. Founded on scientific medical principles. It has been growing in favor and reputation while its numerous competitors have ingloriously failed. The direct application of this remedy to the seat of the disease makes its specific influence felt without delay. The natural functions of the human organism is restored. The animating elements of life which have been wasted are given back. The buoyant energy of the brain and muscular system renders the patient cheerful; he gains strength with rapidity.
NERVOUS DEBILITY, organic weakness, numerous obscure diseases, baffling the skill of best physicians, result for youthful indiscretion, too free indulgence, and over brain work.
Do not temporize while such enemies hold your system. Take a remedy that has cured thousands, and does not interfere with attention to business or cause any pain or inconvenience.
Send for a Descriptive Pamphlet giving Anatomical Illustrations, which will convince the most skeptical that they can be restored to perfect manhood, and fitted for the duties of life, same as if never affected. Sent free to any one. Remedy sold ONLY by the
HARRIS REMEDY CO., MFG. CHEMISTS,
306½ N. 10th St. ST. LOUIS, MO.
One Month's treatment $3. Two months $5. three [illegible]

$9 WILL BUY ONE ALL RIGHT Self-feed, STRAW & HAY CUTTER.
The knife is Steel, and tempered, and is fastened to lever with three bolts, and can be easily taken off to sharpen. The length of cut is regulated by the lever to which the knife is bolted. The higher the lever is raised, the longer it will cut. All are warranted. Send for circular, which will be mailed FREE.
NEWARK MACHINE CO., Newark, O.

W. J. RICE,
CARPENTER & BUILDER,
BULLITSVILLE, KY.
Is prepared Raise or Move
EITHER LOG or FRAME BUILDINGS
On Short Notice,
And at the Lowest Possible Figures.
33-tf Your orders respectfully solicited

INCORPORATED UNDER THE LAWS OF MISSOURI.
CENTRAL MEDICAL & SURGICAL INSTITUTE
OF ST. LOUIS, MO.
SUCCESSORS TO DR. BUTTS' DISPENSARY. OFFICE & ROOMS, No. 920 LOCUST ST.
CHAS. L. LaBARGE, M.D., Pres't & Physician in Charge.
NELSON CHESMAN, Treas. & Business Manager.
This Institute has ample facilities and an experienced Faculty. While it succeeds to a large business, which has been established for years, it will aim to extend its medical and surgical practice, giving skillful and scientific treatment to CHRONIC DISEASES of the Head, Spine, Lungs and Air Passages, Heart, Liver, Stomach and Bowels, Rheumatism, Dyspepsia, Consumption and Asthma.
BLOOD IMPURITIES, Inherited or caused by impure association, Scrofula, Fever Sores, Ulcers, etc.
DEFORMITIES of the Limbs, Spinal Curvature, Wry-Neck, Diseases of the Joints, Piles, Fistula, Rupture, etc.
WEAKNESS and wasting diseases in old and young men, also all diseases of the genito-urinary organs.
FEMALE Irregularities and weaknesses, causing pain in the back or side, etc.
Personal interviews with patients are always preferred. Those unable to visit the Institute will be furnished with blank lists of questions that will aid them in making a full statement of their cases and if not requiring a surgical operation they can be successfully treated by correspondence, and medicines sent by mail or express. To enable us to send proper list of questions applicants should give a brief statement of their trouble.
The Treasurer of the corporation is of Nelson Chesman & Co., Advertising Agents, and refers to the publisher of this or any other newspaper in the United States or Canada regarding responsibility.
Consultation at Office or by mail free and invited

HARTER'S IRON TONIC
FACTS REGARDING Dr. Harter's Iron Tonic.
It will purify and enrich the BLOOD, regulate the LIVER and KIDNEYS, and RESTORE THE HEALTH and VIGOR of YOUTH! [illegible] diseases requiring a certain and efficient TONIC, especially Dyspepsia, Want of Appetite, Indigestion, Lack of Strength, etc., [illegible] with immediate and wonderful [illegible] muscles and nerves receive new [illegible] the mind and supplies Brain Power.
LADIES suffering from all [illegible] peculiar to their sex will find in DR. HARTER'S IRON TONIC a safe and speedy cure. It gives a clear and healthy complexion. The strongest testimony to the value of DR. HARTER'S IRON TONIC is that frequent attempts at counterfeiting have only added to the popularity of the original. If you earnestly desire health do not experiment—get the ORIGINAL AND BEST.
Send your address to The Dr. Harter Med Co., St. Louis, Mo., for our "DREAM BOOK." Full of strange and useful information, free.
DR. HARTER'S IRON TONIC IS FOR SALE BY ALL DRUGGISTS AND DEALERS EVERYWHERE.

TUTT'S PILLS
TORPID BOWELS, DISORDERED LIVER, and MALARIA.
From these sources arise three-fourths of the diseases of the human race. These symptoms indicate their existence: Loss of Appetite, Bowels costive, Sick Headache, fullness after eating, aversion to exertion of body or mind, Eructation of food, Irritability of temper, Low spirits, A feeling of having neglected some duty, Dizziness, Fluttering at the Heart, Dots before the eyes, highly colored Urine, CONSTIPATION, and demand the use of a remedy that acts directly on the Liver. As a Liver medicine TUTT'S PILLS have no equal. Their action on the Kidneys and Skin is also prompt; removing all impurities through these three "scavengers of the system," producing appetite, sound digestion, regular stools, a clear skin and a vigorous body. TUTT'S PILLS cause no nausea or griping nor interfere with daily work and are a perfect
ANTIDOTE TO MALARIA.
Sold everywhere, 25c. Office, 44 Murray St., N.Y.

TUTT'S HAIR DYE.
GRAY HAIR OR WHISKERS changed instantly to a GLOSSY BLACK by a single application of this DYE. Sold by Druggists, or sent by express on receipt of $1.
Office, 44 Murray Street, New York.
TUTT'S MANUAL OF USEFUL RECEIPTS FREE.

For A Business Education Attend the
Commercial College
Of Kentucky University, Lexington, Ky.
Students can begin any week-day in the year. No vacation. Time to complete the Full Diploma Business Course about 10 weeks. Average Total Cost, including Tuition, Set of Books and Board in a family, $90. Telegraphy a specialty. Literary Course free. Ladies received. 5,000 successful graduates. Over 500 pupils last year from 14 to 45 years of age, from 22 States. [illegible] Special course for Teachers and Business Men. [illegible] Diploma presented to its graduates. This beautiful city is noted for healthfulness and society, and is on leading Railroads. Full Session begins Sept. 8th. For circulars and full particulars, address its President, WILBUR R. SMITH, Lexington, Ky.

TESTED BY TIME.
STRONG'S PECTORAL PILLS
IN SUCCESSFUL USE FOR HALF A CENTURY.
The best Remedy for Coughs, Colds, Dyspepsia and Rheumatism. Insure Healthy Appetite, Good Digestion, Regularity of the Bowels. A precious boon to delicate females, soothing and bracing the nervous system, and giving vigor and health to every fibre of the body. Sold by Druggists For Pamphlets, etc., address C. E. HULL & CO. 18 Cedar St., N.Y. City.

FOUND AT LAST.
THE ANIMAL SAFE GUARD.
Patent applied for. Absolute cure for all breachy stock. Simple and safe appliance; always at hand. No Rope, no Yoke, no pole used to injure stock. No animal will jump a fence when this is used. Send One Dollar for Farm-right and full instruction. Address
C. F. BROSEKE, Justice of the Peace, Falmouth, Ky.

WRIGHT'S INDIAN VEGETABLE PILLS FOR THE LIVER
And all Bilious Complaints
Safe to take, being purely vegetable; no griping. Price 25 cts. All Druggists.

SANITARIUM, Riverside, Cal. The dry climate cures Nose, Throat, Lungs. [illegible]

MARRIAGE AND HEALTH GUIDE. 260 pp. Illustrated.
All that the doubtful or curious or thoughtful want to know. Cloth and gilt [illegible] 60 cts. paper 25c. [illegible] Guide, 111 pp. [illegible] money or [illegible]
DR. WHITTIER, 302 RACE ST., CINCINNATI, O.
The great specialist, Nervous Debility, Impediments to Marriage, Consultation and Pamphlet free.

FREE! RELIABLE SELF-CURE.
A favorite prescription of one of the most noted and successful specialists in the U.S. (now retired) for the cure of Nervous Debility, Lost Manhood, Weakness and Decay. Sent in plain sealed envelope free. Druggists can fill it.
Address DR. WARD & CO., Louisiana, Mo.

PISO'S CURE FOR CONSUMPTION
CURES WHERE ALL ELSE FAILS. Best Cough Syrup. Tastes good. Use in time. Sold by druggists. 25 CTS.

KENTUCKY UNIVERSITY,
LEXINGTON, KY.
Three Colleges—Arts, Bible and Commercial. College of Arts has two courses, Classical and Scientific, with twelve professors and teachers; fees, $18 per session of nine months. College of the Bible, no tuition fees. Students of the College of the Bible have access without charge to the classes of the College of Arts, and those of the College of Arts to the classes of the College of the Bible. Session opens the Second Monday in September. For catalogues, address CHAS. LOUIS LOOS, President of the University, or ROBT. GRAHAM, President of the College of the Bible.

OPIUM and WHISKY HABITS cured at home without pain. Book of particulars sent Free. B. M. WOOLLEY, M. D., Atlanta, Ga.

Local News.

A CALL.

Pursuant to the direction of the district committee of this Superior Court District, a mass meeting of the Democracy of this county is hereby called to meet in the Court-house in Burlington, on the 12th inst., at 1 o'clock p. m., to select delegates to the district convention which will meet in Maysville, July 17th, 1881. J. G. FURNISH, Chm'n. Co. Ex.-Com

The days groweth shorter, now.

Corn has grown rapidly the last week.

The temperature took a tumble Saturday night.

We are glad to learn that Mr. Owen Minor is able to be up again.

The fourth of July did nothing in Burlington in the interest of surgery.

College commencements turned an army of book agents loose in the land.

Dr. Bange, one of the Fishing Club's brightest jewels fourth-of-Julyed in the city.

Destroy Burlington's shade trees and the first hot week would depopulate the town.

The mercury has been experiencing the ups and downs of this world the last week.

Robt. Gaines, son of B. W. Gaines, of Slater, Missouri takes unto himself a wife this week.

Joshua Rice is having the capacity of his large barn increased by raising the building several feet.

John Reed, of Florence, purchased a nice cart for his business. We are glad to see such evidence of success.

Mrs. Laura Blythe celebrated the 4th by giving a croquet party which was attended by several Burlington ladies.

The first two or three evening trips last week the mail sack contained, letters, 0; papers and other periodicals, 0.

Last Thursday Frank Saddler caught in his sein at the head of Piatt's bar above Lawrenceburg, a sixty pound cat fish.

Uncle Feelden Rouse built a neat little house last fall, and in the last few weeks has added to his improvments by building a barn.

W. J. Rice has invented a hay elevator composed of ropes and pulleys, which for convenience and simplicity, can not be surpassed.

The County Clerk and the County Attorney hied themselves off to the city on the fourth, where patriotic spirits were numerous.

Harrison Hawkins, an old bachelor of Kenton county, who owns a considerable body of land adjoining Burlington, died one day last week.

The Carrollton Democrat says Logan Gaines, an ex-Boone county man living near that town, has a field of wheat that will make 30 bushels to the acre.

The latest dvices from Flickertown are to the effect that W. T. Smith contemplates starting a creamery, and is buying Alderney cows for the business.

Our local tobacco merchants continue to ship tobacco, and there is no immediate danger of a financial dissolution overtaking them because thereof.

Messrs. J. W. Calvert, G. G. Hughes, Mrs. F. Riddell and Mr. H. J. Foster and wife, of this place, united with the Bellevue Christian church by letter last Sunday.

Mr. Conrad had the misfortune of losing one of his horses last Thursday on his afternoon trip to Erlanger. The animal dropped dead in the harness near Bailey's gate.

Monday week Robert O. Ryle had 22 sheep killed by a stroke of lightning. The sheep were under a beech tree and no trace of the electric current could be discovered about the tree.

The farmers had good weather in which to save their small grain, but some of them, in their haste to commence cutting, began before the wheat was as ripe as it should have been.

We understand that the Petersburg croquetists want the scalp of ye local. We hereby affirm (we never swear) that we will never take another as good player as the professor to their town.

It does not take the p. m., 24 hours to distribute the evening mail. The Louisville dailies now get here on the day of publication. Heretofore they have been one day behind all the time.

A buss load of Knights of Pythias, of Rising Sun, passed through town Sunday, en route to Chas. Parsons'. There are very flattering prospects for a lodge of that order to be organized here at an early date.

Coroner Murat, of Constance, held an inquest on a colored floater at that place, the other day, supposed to be Lewis Hiens, who fell off of the W. P. Thompson, while in an altercation with another roustabout.

The display of patriotism on the 4th, in Burlington, was confined to the small boys, whose patriotic acts consisted in burning a large bonfire and the discharge of many shooting-crackers. Bonfires and shooting crackers are Burlington's only stock in the celebration line.

Henry Klassner, of Constance, died of apoplexy, last Friday. He ate a hearty dinner, went to his shop and was smoking his pipe when stricken. He was carried to his house on a cot and lived about three hours. Mr. Klassner was an industrious and popular man who will be greatly missed in the Constance community.

Jas. H. Hodges, of East Bend, while assisting to raise a barn for Omer Kirtley last week, got one of his thumbs mashed off. It was done so quickly that he did not discover his loss till his attention was called to it by another man who discovered his hand bleeding badly.

Remember that next Saturday at 1 p. m., the Democrats meet in mass meeting in the Court-house in Burlington for the purpose of selecting delegates to attend the convention in Maysville, on the 17th inst., to nominate a candidate for Judge of the Superior Court.

The day has come when to leave the grave of the departed one unmarked by a neat stone, is not suffered by even those in the most ordinary walks of life, and all can be pleased in both design and price by Huschart & Co., of Lawrenceburg, Ind. John Beall, of Hebron, is their agent.

Captain Bradley's new boat arrived here last week and began her regular trips between Rising Sun and Lawrenceburgh. She is a handsome model propeller, named the Chas L. Grant; is 65 feet long, 12 feet beam and 5 feet depth of hold. She has a beautiful cabin, fore and aft, handsomely fitted up and will seat about 100 passengers. She made her first regular trip up last Thursday afternoon, when we had the pleasure of inspecting her, and is now making two trips daily over her route. She was built at Mason City W. Va., and cost Capt. Bradley $4,200.—Aurora Independent

The R. H. & G. T. R. Company had not raised money enough to build the road, and another soliciting committee was at work last week, the first day's work being a good one, several additional shares being subscribed. If the people who are directly interested in the construction of the proposed road allow the scheme to be abandoned this time, it will be hard ever again to find any set of men having nerve enough to attempt to build the road. A point should be strained by the subscribers to raise the necessary funds, and push to completion the work now so far advanced. "There is no excellence without great labor," and the labor performed in behalf of that road will be liberally rewarded.

At a meeting of the Fishing Club the other evening, a proposition to buy 100 jugs for the use of the club, was submitted. A member wanted to be informed as to whether the jugs were to be full; another suggested that half of them be full; another, that all of them be half full; another, that only one be full. These propositions caused a long and heated discussion, and were finally disposed of by the club's deciding to purchase "contents" in such quantities as each excursion demanded. A committee was appointed to buy the jugs and report at the next meeting.

The meeting adopted the following whereas and resolve and then adjourned:

Whereas, it has been reported to members of this club that Fedding Crisler hooked a bass in Gunpowder Creek, the other day, somewhat smaller than a cow, which said fish broke his line, therefore be it

Resolved, that said Crisler be cited to appear before this club to show cause why he does not use better lines.

A. W. Smith sends us a copy of the Sanford Journal of the 26th ult., from which we cull the following:

Florida needs better hotels.

Grass widows are as plentiful as huckleberries.

Esde Hawkins, in a fit of jealousy, shot and killed Will Clark, an engineer.

A life insurance agent wrote policies to the extent of $120,000 in Sanford last month.

There is reason to believe that crime may become epidemic in South Florida, if it is not promptly and effectually dealt with. Recent events would indicate that it is contagious.

After telling how a man named Houston, while out on a deer hunt, was bitten by a rattle snake, the Journal says: "He at once called for help and fortunately Mr. J. P. Loyd, section master, who was having some work done near, heard and responded to his call. By the time Mr. Loyd reached him Mr. Houston's leg below the knee was swollen to twice its usual size and he was suffering great pain. Mr. Loyd bound a ligature around the leg above the knee and then boarded his hand car to come to Alapha for a doctor. Dr. Togle was soon found and hastened to the scene of suffering. When he reached Mr. Houston's side, wonderful to relate he was found sweetly sleeping and the swelling almost gone from his leg. Around him were lying dead near a half bushel of mosquitoes, who had drawn the poison from him. The gentlemen, in great surprise, aroused Mr. Houston, who, barring a little weakness from the loss of blood, was as well as he ever was."

Personal Mentions.

[If you have friends from a distance visiting you or expect to be away from home on business or pleasure, let us have the item for this column.]

Mrs. S. P. Tilley is the guest of her sister, Mrs. J. F. Blythe.

Mrs. Susie G. Parrish and husband are guests of Mrs. B. K. Sleet.

Dr. W. H. Blanton, of Union, was the guest of Dr. Furnish, Sunday.

Mr. Isaac Bailey entertained several of his Georgetown friends Sunday.

J. M. Kirtley and J. L. Stephens, of Covington, attended court Monday.

Judge James O'Hara, Chas. H. Fisk, and T. B. Wise, of Covington, attended court Monday.

Mrs. Harriet Stephens, of Richwood, and her daughter, Mrs. Kate Frazier, of Florida, were the guests of H. P. Stephens and wife, last Friday.

The crowd in town, Monday, was small, but nevertheless there was considerable electioneering done by the friends of the respective candidates for Superior Judge.

Being imbued with patriotism last Friday morning, the Recorder force "struck out" for Rising Sun, at which place flaming posters had announced the celebration of the glorious day in modern style. The cities along the route, Bellevue and her neighbor, McVille, had apparently suspended business, and some of their citizens undertaken to assist their Hoosier neighbors to celebrate. We found Rising Sun had ushered in the day with the roar of the cannon and a parade of the Earthquakes, the latter of which was greatly enjoyed by the large crowd which assembled at an early hour in the morning.

The day's programme was carried out to the letter and the exercises in the woods were truly entertaining to those present. The woods in which the orators were corraled was dense, and rendered the heat, which about the middle of the day was oppressive in the city less effective, and made the occasion very pleasant.

It was about 3 p. m., when the dancing commenced in the Court-house yard where a platform was erected, and notwithstanding the elevation of the mercury, the amusement proved a very popular feature, and was enjoyed by many hundreds of persons, as witnesses, who have long since passed that point in life where their path diverged from such pleasures. Burlington seemed to have captured one end of the platform and Blythe, Westbay and Foster were swinging the Indiana belles with an easy grace that indicated that Kentucky boys are able to make full hands at Hoosier picnics. In fact there was a large Corncracker element in the crowd, and it was making itself perfectly at home among its neighbors, who were glad to have them present and partake of the pleasures of the occasion.

Up to the time we took our departure good order had prevailed and everybody was enjoying themselves, and had it not been for the uncertainty of the weather in the morning Rising Sun could no more than have furnished standing room for the people that would have been present.

NOTES.

The Burlington quartette had its share of the fun.

Colter's dry goods store was doing an immense business.

The Boone county colored delegation had so much patriotism aboard that the members staggered beneath their loads.

Saloons are required to close up in Rising Sun on holidays, but the law is enforced only at the front door.

Banner Hall, editor of the Local, devoted the day to a single patriotic act, building a paper balloon, which was to ascend in the evening.

Kentucky Fairs.

Danville, August 5,—four days.
Cynthiana August 19—four days.
Lexington, August 26—five days.
Hopkinsville, Sept. 1—four days.
Bardstown, Sep. 2—four days.
Paris, September 2—five days.
Bowling Green, Sept. 3—four days.
Hartford, September 30—five days.
Uniontown, October 1—four days
Owensboro, October 8—four days.
Madisonville, October 22—four days.

NEIGHBORHOOD NEWS.

Scattersville.

News a little scarce.
Corn about all laid by.
The farmers are complaining of the wheat moulding in the shock.
Some of the Gainesville youngsters were visiting Jasper Mannin, Sunday.
Joseph Lane and family, and Robert Adams and wife were visiting John Rue, Sunday.
A large number of ladies from Burlington were visiting Mrs. O. P. Conner, one day last week.
Again our old friend, Mr. Sebree says he has the boss crop of tobacco, or at least will have.
Last Sunday there were ten members of the Lawrenceburg Lodge of Knights of Pythias, over to see their brother, Charles H. Parson, who was kicked by a horse some time ago.
Chas. Parson and wife are happy its a girl, and weighs 9 pounds, and its named—Oh, we don't know,—[A good healthy name, Charley.—Eds.]

Florence X-Roads.

Corn is doing well since the rain.
The wheat harvest about through.
The fourth passed off quietly at this place.
and some of the grain is moulding in the shock.
There are fine prospects for a large yield of oats.
Mrs. James Tanner and John Popham are very sick.
Charley Crigler is the proprietor of a new buggy since Saturday.
Last Sunday about 20 of Dutton Tanner's friends dined and croqueted with him.
Tobacco is growing finely. Samuel Conrad claims to have the finest in this section.
Last week Captain Thomas Swetnam and others, of Florence, made a raid on Gunpowder with hooks and lines—don't know what luck.
Some days since, Jacob Tanner lost his gold watch, and thought it had been stolen. Imagine his pleasant surprise when, a few days after, it was discovered in a bundle of drygoods he had bought.

Hebron.

F. A. Crigler has built a fine barn.
The oats harvest will commence this week.
Harrison Clore has 80 acres of meadow to cut.
There will be church at Hebron next Sunday.
Jameson Aylor has 100 acres of harvest this season.
Our Sunday-school was largely attended last Sabbath.
This locality enjoyed a fine and much needed rain on the 5th.
There is more work and fewer hands in this neighborhood at present than ever before known.
Wheat was cut in good order, and the meadows are now ready for the mowers. Tobacco has got a bad start.
The picnic at La Grace Grove was a grand success. 350 persons attended the picnic, 175 the hop.
The plans for a Sunday-school reunion, to be held by the Hebron and Hopeful churches, are being laid.
Alfred Gaines passed through this place on the 3d with 1,400 lambs, the finest lot that was ever driven through here or from this section.

Bullittsville.

S. G. Gaines has returned home.
Judge Lacy is making a favorable impression with our people.
Erastus Randall has erected a handsome and commodious barn.
Temp Graves and Wm. Gaines have talked of merchandising here.
Chas. Gaines has gone to Saline Co., Missouri, where his wife is sick with fever.
Considerable complaint is being made in regard to the wheat damaging in the shock.
Miss Lou Kendall is visiting relatives at Louisville. An aching void is occasioned thereby.
Rev. Howe preaches here next Sunday morning and evening.—Subject in the morning, "The Trinity."
Mont Balsly has sold Clay Chief to his brother Irwin, who intends moving to Kansas this fall. We regret loosing so enterprising a young man.
The charming belles, Misses Minnie Smith and Dora Goodridge, visited Ida Stephens Saturday and Sunday. They were accompanied by the popular beau, Bud Goodridge.

Big Bone Springs.

Some of Covington and Rising Sun's beauty and chivalry took in the refreshing atmosphere of the Springs on the fourth.
Mosby Johnson, who has been attending school over in Indiana, is at home spending vacation. Many of the fair sex are glad of it. It mos-be so you know.
Our Bruisers will cross bats with the Speedwells on their grounds near Gunpowder Creek next Saturday. All things favorable an interesting game of ball is expected.
Our county candidates are "kinder" backward about mixing with the voters. They should move down among the people and make a few brilliant propositions upon which they feel convicted as important and popular, so they may know how to handle them on election day.
The voters in the Beaver precinct are going to vote on local option at the August election. The real beauty and benefits of local option can not be fully realized in the Hamilton precinct till the monster tyrant, Al K. Hall, is downed at Beaver, hence the Springs say go it my refined and cultured op.
Crops in this community are showing up handsomely since the fine showers of last week. Harvesting is about all done and those having wheat are expecting a large yield. Good, cheap bread maketh the heart of a nation 'stremely happy. BILL LLOYD.
The Fourth was more than usually observed here, and in a great measure the pleasures and success of that day are attributable to the components of our base ball fraternity. Plenty of substantial and excellent grub was spread on the grounds free to all, and inspiring refreshments were just convenient enough to be pleasant. The celebrated Black String Band was on hand and the afternoon was pleasantly spent by the sprightly youngsters, tripping the light fantastic toe. All in all, it was a day never to be forgotten by those who hold fast to the memories of a double distilled and highly charged Fourth of July.

ELECTION NOTICE.

An election will be held in each voting precinct in Boone county, Kentucky on Monday the 4th day of August, 1884, for the following offices: Judge of the Superior Court for the Third Superior Court District to serve for the unexpired term of Judge Richard Reed, deceased. Sheriff of Boone county, Constable in each district, and one Justice of the Peace in Florence district. J. R. CLUTTERBUCK, S. B. C.
July 7th, 1884.

TIME CARD OF THE

MAYFLOWER.

LEAVES PETERSBURG
For Lawrenceburg at 6¼ A. M.; 9½ A. M, and 11½ A. M., at 2 P. M., and at 4½ P. M.
LEAVES LAWRENCEBURG
For Petersburg and Aurora at 8 A. M., 10 A. M. and 12 M.; at 2½ P. M. and 5 P. M.
LEAVES PETERSBURG
For Aurora at 8½ A. M., 10½ A. M.; at 1 P. M. and 8 P. M.
LEAVES AURORA
For Petersburg and Lawrenceburg at 9 A. M., 11 A. M.; 1½ P. M. and 4 P. M.
ELIHU ALDEN, Master.

HANOVER COLLEGE,
Fifty-second year begins Sept. 10. Classical and scientific courses, with Preparatory Department. Open to both sexes. No saloons. Expenses small. On the Ohio, near Madison. For catalogue address President FISHER, Hanover Jefferson County, Indiana.

SCIENCE-HILL
An English & Classical school for girls.
FOUNDED 1825 BY MRS. TEVIS.
Aims to give its pupils elements of a complete education. Faculty selected from best Eastern Colleges. Terms reasonable. Send for catalogue. W. T. Poynter, D. D., Principal, Shelbyville, Ky.

City Flouring Mills
RISING SUN, INDIANA.
FLOUR EXCHANGED FOR WHEAT OR CASH. THE HIGHEST MARKET PRICE PAID FOR GOOD WHEAT.
J. W. Talbot.
mar7-t28

THE COMPLETE HOME. Agents Wanted for this beautiful book. New edition.—New bindings.—New illustrations from new designs. Superbly gotten up. Same low price. Adapted to all classes. Sells at sight. Agents doing big work. EXCELLENT TERMS. The handsomest prospectus ever issued. Apply now. [illegible] GARRETSON & Co., Lexington, Kentucky.—Also other grand new books and Bibles.

County Directory.

OFFICERS.

Assessor—G. M. Riley.
County Surveyor—W. E. Vest.
School Commissioner—D. M. Snyder.
Coroner.—Dr. A. A. Murat, Constance.

COURTS.

CIRCUIT COURT meets the 2d Monday in April and first Monday in October, P. U. Major, Judge; W. L. Riddell, Clerk A. G. DeJarnette, Commonwealths Attorney; W. L. Riddell, Trustee Jury Fund.

COUNTY COURT meets the first Monday in every month. L. H. Dills, Judge; S. W. Tolin, County Attorney. M. T. Garnett, Clerk; J. R. Clutterbuck, Sheriff, T. W. Finch and W. T. Germann, Deputy Sheriffs.

QUARTERLY COURT meets the first Monday in March, June, September and December. The officers of the County Court preside.

COURT OF CLAIMS meets the first Monday in November.

MAGISTRATES' COURTS are held in March, June, September and December, as follows:

Bellevue—M. B. Green, first Saturday, and T. H. Sutton, third Monday. J. M. Moody, Constable.

Burlington—E. H. Baker, Thursday after first Monday, and Oscar Gaines, fourth Monday. R. H. Sandford, Constable.

Carlton A. G. McConnell, Wednesday after second Monday, and B. H. Ryle, Saturday after third Monday. Walter Ryle, Constable.

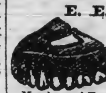
Petersburg—Jos. Hensley, Wednesday after first Monday, and L. A. Loder fourth Saturday. Geo. Comer, Constable.

Beever—W. M. Rouse, Friday after the third Monday, and

Union—M. C. Norman, Thursday after third Monday, and H. Bannister, Thursday after second Monday. A. D. Riley, Constable.

Hamilton—F. M. Howlett, Tuesday after second Monday; W. W. Garnett, Wednesday after third Monday. R. L. Roberts Constable.

Walton—T. F. Carley, second Friday. S. T. Johnson, Tuesday after second Friday. W. C. Moxley, Constable.



ROBERT B. REED
Attorney at Law.
OFFICE AT - UNION, KY

H. C. CHAMBERS,
AUCTIONEER
FLORENCE, - - - KENTUCKY.

F. RIDDELL. H. P. STEPHENS.
RIDDELL and STEPHENS,
ATTORNEYS at LAW
BURLINGTON, KY.
Office over Dudley Rouse's Store.

W. E. VEST,
COUNTY SURVEYOR
WALTON, KY.
Is prepared to do all kinds of surveying. All orders sent him through the mail to Walton, will receive his prompt attention.

E. E. IGOE,

Resident Dentist,
Rising Sun, Ind.
WITH
J. P. Ulrey.
Monday and Tuesday at Rising Sun. Ind.

DR. A. B. HARRY AN

RESIDENT DENTIST.
Aurora, Indiana.
(Office Over Postoffice)
With J P. ULREY.
Dr. ULREY'S days, Wednesday and Saturday. Office open at all hours. 8-1y

J. J. Landram. G. G. Hughes.
LANDRAM & HUGHES,
ATTORNEYS at LAW.
Will practice in the Boone Circuit Cour and the Court of Appeals. Prompt attention given to Collections, on application t G. G. Hughes, Burlington, Ky.

S. W. TOLIN,
ATTORNEY AT LAW
BURLINGTON, - - Y
Office in Court-house on 2d floor.
Will manage litigation in any of the Courts of the State, contracts and other legal instruments drawn up at reasonable rates. Aprompt an studious attention given to business intrusted to my care. A trial solicited. 12-1y

AURORA MARBLE AND GRANITE WORKS, Aurora, Ind
Will have constantly on hand
Marble and Granite Monuments,
Italian & American Headstones, &c.
I am ready to do all kinds of Stone Work on short notice and at low prices Hoping to receive the patronage of Boone County, I am respectfully,
F. W. KASSEBAUM.

INSURE AT HOME
The Farmers' Mutual Fire
INSURANCE COMPANY
Of Boone County
Is now completely organized and receiving applications for insurance.
Its Rates are Lower
Than those of any other Company, and it gives the farmers of Boone County a
HITHERTO UNKNOWN ADVANTAGE
In keeping their property insured.
EVERY FARMER IN THE COUNTY
should take a policy at once.

J. A. GAINES, President, Burlington, Ky.	J. H. WALTON, Secretary, Constance, Ky.

R. RANDALL, Treasury.
DIRECTORS.
LEGRAN GAINES, A. J. UTZ.
JNO. STEPHENS.

OSCAR GAINES, Agent.	C. L. CRISLER, Assessor.

DRY GOODS, NOTIONS,
OIL CLOTHS AND CARPETS,
Window Shades
AND WALL Paper,
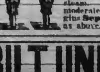
We will now offer to the public the most fearful
SLAUGHTERING PRICES,
Ever known in the annals of the Dry Goods Trade.
Choice Array of Summer Styles,
AT THE MOST WONDERFUL PRICES EVER KNOWN.
Ladies' Combination Suits, 25c, per yard and upward.
100 pieces Black and Colored Cashmeres, 25c. and 33 1-3c. per yard.
Large lots Black and Colored Nun's Veilings, 16 to 25 cents per yard.
200 pieces Black and White Figured French Lawns, 18, 20 and 25 c. per yard.
Also a large line of Summer Brocade and Gros Grain Silk at low prices, everything pertaining to a well regulated Dry Goods trade.
COLTER, POWELL & OWNBY,
DRY GOODS DEPARTMENT.
Rising Sun, Ind.

R. S. CRISLER,
Burlington, Ky.
WAGON MAKER AND
—MANUFACTURER OF—
ROAD WAGONS, SPRING WAGONS, HARROWS, PLOWS, WHEEL BARROWS
AND ALL KINDS OF WOOD WORK.
Also the Manufacturer of W. M. Conner's Patent Right Hay Conveyor
Saws Filed & Sharpened.
Please call and examine my prices before calling elsewhere.

JAMES S. WAYNE, President. JNO. L. SANDFORD, Cashier
CAPITAL $300,000.
FARMERS AND TRADERS
NATIONAL BANK.
Covington, Kentucky.
DIRECTORS.
James S. Wayne, J. S. Matson, M. C. Motch, J. H. Mersman, Sam Hind, J. L. Sandford, E. J. Hickey, L. H Dills, E. J. Green, F. P. Helm, L. C. Stephens.
The general operations of banking transacted upon the most favorable terms, collections made on all points in the United States.
The Business and Accounts of Farmers are Especially Solicited by this Bank.



UNDERTKAING.

We keep Constantly on Hand all sizes of
Burial Cases and Caskets.
And having just received a beautiful
NEW HEARSE,
Which can be had at a reasonable price when desired.
PRICES GUARANTEED LESS THAN CITY PRICES
DAVIS BROS., - - HEBRON, KY.

CENTRAL UNIVERSITY,
COLLEGE OF PHILOSOPHY, LETTERS, AND SCIENCE, RICHMOND, KY.
Next Session will open Wednesday, September 3d, 1884.
ADVANTAGES.—A FULL FACULTY of able and experienced instructors. Comprehensive course of study and thorough instruction. Completeness of buildings and apparatus.
Social Influences.—The community is distinguished for its refined culture and hospitality, and young men find homes in the BEST families. Not a Saloon in the city.
Healthfulness of Location.—Richmond is at an elevation of more than 500 feet above the Ohio river, and free from all malarial influences.
Accessibility.—Richmond is the geographical centre of the State, in the heart of the Blue Grass region, and is within a few hours, by rail, of Louisville, Cincinnati, Knoxville and Chattanooga.
Moderate Expenses.—Board in the New Memorial Hall, lighted by gas and heated by steam—an elegant, comfortable home—$150 per annum for everything except washing, and in the best families from $3 to $4 per week. Total necessary expenses for the ten months, from $150 to $250.
For full information and catalogue, apply to L. H. BLANTON, D. D., Chancellor.

KENTUCKY MILITARY INSTITUTE.

At Farmdale P. O., Franklin Co., Ky., six miles from Frankfort. Has the most healthful and beautiful location in the State. Lit by gas as well as heated by steam. A full and able College Faculty. Expenses as moderate as any first-class college. Fortieth year begins September 1st. For catalogue, etc., address as above. COL. R. D. ALLEN, Supt.

VANDERBILT UNIVERSITY, NASHVILLE, TENN.
Cost of grounds, buildings and apparatus, $500,000. Productive Endowment, $700,000. Six Departments. Tuition in Literary and Scientific Department, [illegible] Theological, free. Special attention [illegible] Engineering. Session opens September [illegible] For Catalogue (FREE) Send to [illegible]

THE RECORDER.

BURLINGTON, KENTUCKY.

"ONLY COUSINS, DON'T YOU SEE?"

[illegible]
Like a sister? Yes, no doubt.
[illegible]
No one thinks it dangerous;
[illegible]
Row or ride or read together.
Wander where we will alone,
[illegible]
Charming cousin, in your eyes
[illegible]
Cousin, she must be like you,
And the one who comes the nearest
To yourself will be the dearest;
Type of what my love must be,
Cousin, what if you are she?
—Chambers' Journal.

THE LOG HUT OF CLAPHAM.

Of all the suburbs south of the Thames, Clapham has the appearance of the most homogeneous prosperity. Its ways are broad and open, its houses substantial and well kept. An air of comfortable competence is to be found in its quietest nooks, while the splendor of city riches shines on its most conspicuous estates and roads and terraces. The common is its glory, the crown of its affluence. To live on Clapham Common means an obliging banker, efficient servants, gallant horses, and no more personal knowledge of bankruptcy than a Kaffir has of catheticism.

Of all the houses on Clapham Common the most spacious is the Log Hut. It stands with four fair walls against the four lights of heaven. The exterior aspect is large and free; responsible without pretentiousness; comfortable within sordidness; liberal without prodigality.

The interior more than confirms the outward promise. In summer it is full of subdued sunlight, and open to the wandering perfumes of the garden beyond. It is still without being hushed. The silence seems always either brooding over music fled or awaiting melody. Sounds which abroad strike harsh upon the ear come mingled with a murmur of leaves, and are no more than the stray, full-bodied notes of an incomplete tune.

In winter huge fires blaze for welcome. The silver shines, the pictures gleam, the drapery grows mellow, the [illegible] the warmth, the ceiling throws down the glow of the ruddy light. Soft chairs and couches woo the stranger to repose, and importune him to delay.

The master of this house, Mr. William Bayliss, had just reached that period of life when, fortune having favored him, and he being untroubled by any later growth of ambition, he was little disposed for new enterprise, and made up his mind to live what might be yet given to him of life in all the peacefulness of moderate use. He was sixty years of age.

Mr. Bayliss was a man of rather more than middle height. His figure was [illegible] than forty years ago. He had large, kindly blue eyes, a broad, unwrinkled forehead, and, save where a fringe of gray hair ran round the lower part of his head, he was quite bald. He did not wear whiskers, beard or mustache. In youth he had been good looking. In age he had a singularly gracious, benevolent face.

Mrs. Bayliss, five years his junior, and married to him thirty years ago, reflected many of the leading characteristics of his expression. She had been his good wife all that time. She believed there was no better man than he in all the world.

To this good couple one daughter had been born. Kate was her name. And now this day, in the middle of leafy June, Kate was to be married. She was to marry Edward Mayne, the choice of her own heart, the only sweetheart of her girlhood, and the suitor who had won the love and respect of her father and mother.

Kate was twenty-two, tall and lithe, had dark eyes and a round, red cheek, and red lips and dark brown hair, with here and there flaws of lighter brown that made rich gold of the sunlight. She smiled oftener than laughed, but when she did laugh there was such a tone of exquisite enjoyment that people paused to listen as we hush our rude voices when unawares we are startled by the lark.

Edward Mayne was a jovial, light-hearted fellow; tall too, flat-chested, lightly built, and lithe, with animal spirits enough for a parish, good heart enough for a country, and as much good sense as you would like to see in any one handsome, dashing young fellow of seven-and-twenty. Although he had not been up to this an all blameless, he was, as every one said who knew him well, of the best kind of raw material from which the best kind of Englishman is made.

When all the oratorical formalities of the breakfast had been complied with, and yet an hour was to spare before the bride and bridegroom set out upon their honeymoon, the master of the house rose and said:

"I have a little time before the young people leave to tell a little story, which has been a blameless secret between my wife and me for many a year. Some of you are old friends, yet I think the memory of none of you reaches back to the circumstance which caused me to call this house the Log Hut.

"It has been my good fortune—good fortune for which I am ever grateful to Heaven—that, having begun life with a modest education and no fortune, I save a road toward the close of my [illegible] comfort; nay, [illegible]

"I began life in the city of London in the office of a large timber firm. At [illegible] until I was [illegible] upon twenty was occupied in the ordinary routine of the counting-house. I never cared much for desk work, and I was glad of the opportunity of leaving my desk and taking a position in our great timber-yard. Here [illegible] physical [illegible] in which [illegible] judgment [illegible] the office. [illegible]

"Marston & Co. bought and sold wood of all kinds—Swedish, North American, West Indian, British African. I quickly became master of my business. I liked it, and liking in my business is more than half the battle. I need not go into technical detail; it will be enough if I say that when I reached five and twenty years of age I was one of the best judges of logs in London. To those who know nothing of the business it may seem that little or no skill is required in selecting timber. But when we come to consider the wide difference of prices of fancy wood of the same kind the value of an expert will appear.

"At this time I had a salary which will appear, while sufficient to keep a bachelor in a homely way, was altogether inadequate to the support of a family. But"—here he leaned with a pleasant, gentle courtesy toward his wife—"I had made up my mind who my wife should be if ever I married. Out of my small salary I was able to lay by a little money. We used to call this her dowry"—here he bowed again in the direction of his wife—"for she was an orphan, alone in the world, and kept herself on her slender earnings as a schoolmistress.

"Three or four sons of members of the firm were in the business, so that I, being without capital, had little or no chance of ever attaining to a partnership. There were, of course, men with much larger salaries than my own, but they were older by twenty years, and waiting for dead men's shoes is bad work. I plainly saw that marriage was for me out of the question as long as I staid with Marston & Co. Accordingly, when I was about six-and-twenty, and had saved close upon a hundred pounds, I went to the head of the firm and explained my case. I told him I felt, so far as the business and the treatment I received went, perfectly satisfied, but that I was anxious to push my fortune so that I might settle in life. Old Mr. Marston was extremely kind. He told me that they were greatly pleased with me, and that they would do anything in reason than let me go, but that certain infrangible conditions of promotion existed, that I could not be put over the heads of my seniors, and that although he was willing to increase my salary to the utmost limit—consistent with my services—he could not on any account overstep the limit. I explained that the increase he offered would not meet my views, and that I had determined to leave as soon as a substitute for me was supplied.

"Mr. Marston then asked me what I proposed doing. I remember as though it was but yesterday, the mixture of pride and humiliation I felt when I told him that I intended starting in business for myself.

"'May I ask,' he said, 'what business you purpose starting in?'

"'Something the same as I have been at,' I said, feeling still more uncomfortable.

"'Oh!' he cried, with a smile, 'you are going to be a rival of ours?'

"'No, no,' I hastened to say. 'I intend buying and selling on commission, and I wish to know, sir, if I may count on you as one of my patrons.'

"'You may count on me,' said he, cordially, 'doing all for you I may fairly do. Young Bayliss,' he added, gravely, 'if you want a hundred or two you have but to say the word. You can pay me back just as you please.'

"I thanked him most sincerely, and told him that for my present purposes I wanted little or no capital, except just what would keep me going until I had got my scheme into operation.

"'And,' said he, 'may I ask what exactly is your scheme?'

"'Well, sir,' I said, 'I imagine I am a good judge of fancy logs—'

"'So they tell me, so they tell me,' said he, 'and that is the reason we are sorry to lose you.'

"'And my notion is, that if I go about here and there I may be able to find logs which the owners want to sell and which my judgment tells me are good value for the money asked. And, sir, when I asked you to help me with your patronage I meant that, would you buy upon my judgment and so put the commission for the sale in my way?'

"'A very good idea for you, indeed,' said the old man. 'A very good notion, indeed. I understand you have made no mistakes up to this, and I have no doubt that we shall be able to do a good deal with you. Of course, you know all things of that kind must be done through Mr. Watkins, the master of the yard.'

"'I have already spoken to Mr. Watkins, sir, and he says that, with your permission, he will be glad to help me.'

"In a month I left Marston & Co., and found myself free to do as I pleased, and with about £80 in my pocket. It so happened that the first day of my liberty, and the first day of the Easter vacation, were the same. I thought that, after ten years close application to business, I owed myself a little holiday, and therefore I went to Jane and told her I had determined to do nothing until the vacation was over. I often look back to those first days of independence, and think that in them began the great happiness and prosperity which has seemed to increase hour by hour, ever since.

"When Jane's school reopened I went to work with all the vigor of hope and determination. For the first year I was moderately successful. I sold to Mr. Marston several pieces which turned out to his satisfaction, but at the end of the twelve months my financial position had not improved. I had made no more money than if I had remained in the yard. I felt sobered but not discouraged. I was seven-and-twenty, Jane two-and-twenty, and I thought it time we married, but I could not conscientiously ask her to share my small and now uncertain income, and I had determined from the beginning that she should give up school teaching when she became my wife.

"At this time the art of veneering was, perhaps, at its height, and for the benefit of any one here who knows nothing of that art I may say it is simply that of covering what I may call base wood with what I may call precious wood. Logs of mahogany, walnut, satinwood, rosewood, and so on, are cut into thin leaves about the eighth of an inch thick, and glued down on base wood. In the process of cutting half the wood is lost; but supposing an inch thickness is required, you can have, at the expense of a quarter of an inch of mahogany and seven-eighths of an inch of common wood what seems to be inch mahogany. Quarter of an inch and seven-eighths of an inch would be, of course, an inch and an eighth, but the odd eighth flies from the circular saw in mahogany sawdust.

"It was in selecting logs which might be profitably cut into veneer I attracted attention at Marston's yard. It was on my judgment in this matter I started in life on my own account. My plan was simple. I wandered from place to place, from sale to sale, from yard to yard, spying out likely-looking pieces and bringing news of them to manufacturers.

"In the course of my wanderings I naturally came into contact with men employed in nearly every wholesale timber-yard in London. Among these was a working man named John Fraser, who had always struck me as one possessed of a shrewd knowledge of timber. As with me, he could give me no reason for the conclusions at which he arrived. He simply said: 'I like it' or 'I don't,' 'Buy it' or 'Let it alone,' 'I think it will turn out well,' or 'I am sure it is no good.'

"I cannot explain how it was, but I felt drawn toward this man Fraser, and whenever I went to where he was employed I made it a point to meet him and have a chat. It will not seem like boasting on my part if I say I was a better judge of logs than he. It is the simple truth. In my experience he rarely hesitated, but on some occasions he would decline to give an opinion any way, merely saying the thing was beyond him.

"One wet, dull, miserable forenoon in February I went into the yard where Fraser was employed. I had nothing to do that day. I knew no fresh consignment had reached that yard since my last visit. I felt depressed, discouraged. The present year had not opened even as well for me as the former one. I began to think Jane and I would have, indeed, very long to wait before we could start, ever so modestly, our little home. I found Fraser sitting idly on some square Quebec timber. Because of his judgment in logs Fraser was allowed great latitude in laziness. In fact, he was retained almost wholly for the purpose of appraising uncut wood. He was in a peculiarly morose and taciturn humor, I could get nothing out of him but negatives. It was not a nice day. There was no news. Nothing had arrived since I was here last. It did not seem as if the seasons were now as they had been long ago. Two large timber firms had not been able to pay their way and were bankrupt. There was no knowing but that [illegible] was in a bad way. It was now pretty sure that the end of the world could not be far off. He had no faith in his own judgment of logs, and he began to doubt mine.

"At last, he said to me, I know there isn't a better judge of stuff in the rough than you, although you are a young man, but wait till you come to my years and may be you'll fancy your opinion less.

"'Perhaps I may,' said I; 'but so far as I have gone I have never made a very bad guess yet.'

"'Aye, aye, aye—youth is ever overbold. When I was your age may be I too thought I couldn't be taken in. But 'tis wonderful how we lose courage as we grow old. You give an opinion twice as readily as I who have had five times your experience. Tell me,' he cried with sudden animation, 'were you ever downright beaten by a log yet?'

"'Never,' I answered, with a laugh. 'I daresay I have not been long enough at the business.'

"'Would you like to be beaten?' he said, getting up, and infusing what was for him a great deal of animation into his movements.

"'If you've got anything in stock you think will beat me,' I said, 'let me see it.'

"'Come,' he said defiantly, and without another word he led the way to a remote corner of the yard where I had never been before.

"I followed in silence. In a couple of minutes we stood opposite a piece of mahogany.

"'Eighteen feet by three feet, by three feet,' he said. What do you make of it?'

"I looked long and narrowly. There was absolutely no indication of promise in the wood, and yet I felt an uneasy desire to come by that log in some way or another. Not only was there no appearance of promise, but it looked uncouth, ungainly, and certainly a superficial glance would induce any average buyer to pass it over. However it was, the longer I looked the less I liked to leave it there. Something drew me toward it, but whether it was the fascination of attraction or the fascination of repulsion which chained me to the spot, I could not decide.

"Do you know the price they are asking for it?' I said.

"'Three hundred,' he answered laconically.

"'I'll go and see Mr. Watkins about it.'

"'Yes,' he said, in a jealous tone. 'But what do you think of it?'

"'I really don't know,' I said, in perplexity.

"'Ha, ha, ha!' he laughed in triumph, 'I told you I'd show you something beyond you. Why that log has been in stock these six years, and no one will look at it.'

"'I'll bring Mr. Watkins this very day,' I answered, and in a few minutes was out of the yard.

"That afternoon the manager of Marston & Co. and I went back to Fraser.

"'Well,' said the manager, 'Bayliss, I thought you had some gumption until now. Why, it wouldn't pay for the saw. I wouldn't take a gift of it. I wouldn't pay the carriage of it to our place. It's a regular weed.'

"I own I was greatly discouraged, but I was more disturbed than discouraged. I could not get out of my mind that there was some secret hidden in that log. I lay awake half the night thinking of it. When I slept I dreamed that Marston & Co. bought it on my recommendation, that it turned out badly, and that my old employers told me they would have nothing further to do with me, and bade me good-bye forever. Next morning, when I awoke, I was still more unsettled in my mind than I had been the previous evening. I need not say that I attached no importance to my dream. But still my dream helped me to one determination. I resolved not to urge the purchase of the mahogany upon Marston & Co. Then, after long and careful thought, I made up my mind as to the course I should adopt. I went to the city and sought my old employer. I said to him:

"'When I was leaving you, sir, more than a year ago, you were kind enough to say you would lend me 100 or 200 pounds, if I wanted it, to start me in business. If you have the same confidence in me now as you had then, I would feel very much obliged to you indeed for the loan of the money.'

"The old man pushed his spectacles up on his forehead, and looked at me for a moment in silence. 'Bayliss, I have just the same confidence in you as ever. You can have the money with pleasure.' Then readjusting his spectacles, he continued: 'To show how much I trust you I will not even ask you what you intend doing with the money. Wait a moment.' He took out a check-book, filled a check up for £200, and handed it to me.

"My eyes were filled with tears of gratitude at the kindly act of this good old man, and for a moment or two I could not trust myself to speak. As soon as I was somewhat sure of the steadiness of my voice I said, 'I cannot thank you sufficiently, sir. I will not try. I hope you may never be sorry for this, and I hope you may never be ashamed of me.'

"'I am sure I shall not, my dear Bayliss; I am sure I shall not,' he said, with generous good nature.

"'It is only fair, sir, that I should now tell you,' I said, 'that I want this money for my first speculation. I intend buying a log with it and some of my own savings.'

"'Ah!' he laughed, 'I told you it would come to your rivaling us in the end. Now that you have told me so much, tell me a little more. Why are not we to buy this log?'

"'Because, sir, it is the only one in my experience I ever was doubtful about, and I could not think of allowing you, after all your kindness to me, to run any risk. And now, sir, I have to ask you for an additional favor. Will you allow that log to be cut for me in your yard?'

"Mr. Marston said he would be happy to do so, and I went away with a sense of heavy responsibility and gratitude too deep for words.

"That day I bought the unpromising piece of timber for £265, and the next day it was in Marston's yard, in front of the great circular eighteen foot saw.

"Watkins could scarcely restrain his laughter, and I really believe that, but for the sake of old friendship, he would have treated me with open scorn. But at the bottom of his rough nature there was a good deal of kindliness which he took great care to conceal. So that after the first surprise at my purchase he tried rather to encourage than depress me, and said that perhaps the log would not prove so badly as he had supposed. 'And you know,' he said, 'in any case we shall be able to let you have at least half your money for the stuff when it is cut up. However queer it may turn out, we can either work it up ourselves or sell it.'

"At last the great saw was started, and Watkins and I stood by to watch the result. The first and second leaf came off, and discovered nothing but a dark center line running down the whole length. The third showed a thickening and blurring of this line. The fourth was broader, and still more blurred. The same characteristic appeared increased in the fifth. The sixth and seventh revealed the markings broadening and assuming something like a definite shape. At the eighth the grain took a sharper outline. We were now two inches into the wood.

"'Two sixty-five you gave for it,' said Watkins. 'Come, I don't like to see you loose your money. That is, half it, I mean. I'll give you 200 for the log.'

"I shook my head and said, 'No. Go on.' I felt excited. My misgivings were fading away, and I began to have a tremulous anticipation of triumph. We went on for another inch. Now there could be no doubt. A regular pattern was gradually unfolding itself.

"'I'll give you three hundred for it,' said Watkins.

"'No,' I cried. 'I'll keep my luck, good or bad.'

"At that time, I felt my future was in the balance. If, as we went on, the pattern now indicated increased, the leaves would be worth a small fortune. As it was, and supposing the pattern did not develop, the wood was of much more value than the money I had given for it.

"At this point some one called Watkins away, and he did not return until six inches had been cut into leaves. I was now in a state of tumultuous excitement. Not only had what I may call the design expanded and taken sharper outline, but there could be no longer any doubt that the baulk was, in my regard, a benignant freak of nature. For it revealed what, in lieu of any other way of expressing it, I may call a decorative treatment of the acanthus leaf. This appeared in about three-fourths of the entire length of the grain, beginning about an eighth from one end and ending about an eighth from the other.

"'What do you think of it now?' I cried triumphantly to Watkins.

"'It's wonderful,' he said. 'It's the finest thing of the kind I ever saw. Come, I'll give you twice what you paid. What do you say? It isn't every day you get a chance of making £265 on one transaction.'

"'I'll keep my luck,' I cried, 'I'll keep it, however it may turn out.'

"'Watkins once more went away. I was in too great a fever of excitement to heed his action, but afterward I learned he then sent a messenger for Mr. Marston. In a short time the old man came briskly into the yard.

"'So, young Bayliss,' he said, 'I hear you have had a wonderful stroke of luck with the log. Oh!' he cried, enthusiastically, 'it's a beauty! Upon my life, it's a beauty! Will you sell it as it stands.'

"I shook my head. 'Mr Watkins has been good enough,' I answered, 'to offer me five hundred and thirty, double what I gave for it, but I'd rather not take the money, sir, if you don't mind.'

"'Pooh!' cried the old man, 'I'll make it seven hundred and fifty. Eh? Will you take seven hundred and fifty?'

"By this time we had got a third through; and leaf by leaf the pattern had grown in diameter and richness of design. For a moment I wavered. Here was a chance of making £485 without any risk whatever. Yet still I was loth to part with that log. I said to myself, after a moment's struggle: 'Sink or swim, I will keep it.' Then aloud: 'As soon as it is all cut you shall have it, if you like, at what you may consider a fair price.'

"I will not trouble you with any further details beyond telling you that cutting after cutting added to the value of my purchase, and that by the time the great saw passed through that wood finally Mr. Marston had said to me: 'It is worth every penny of fifteen hundred pounds, and you can have fifteen hundred pounds for it, if that will satisfy you.'

"I closed with the old man there and then, hurried out of the yard, and, taking a cab, drove straight with the news to Jane.

"That was the beginning of my good fortune. The next and greatest good luck that came to me was my wife. Since we were married we have prospered beyond my most ardent hope of the olden time. I have always regarded that mahogany log as the basis of my fortune, the foundation of my success. It has helped me to the building of this house, which out of gratitude to it I have called the Log Hut. You may have observed that among the presents which kind friends have poured in upon Kate, my daughter, on this occasion, there was none from me. I have kept this story until now in order to give point to my wedding gift. The carriage is at the door, but before the young people set out, accompanied by the good wishes of all, I think it only right they should know that the present I intend for them upon the occasion of their marriage is the Log Hut of Clapham."—Cornhill Magazine.

—A girl advertises for "general housework or waiting." She is evidently one of those who has "learned to labor and to wait."—Philadelphia Call.

HOME AND FARM.

—Cream cures sunburn on some complexions, lemon juice is best on others and cold water suits still others best.—Albany Journal.

—Look out for the weeds; they come like a thief in the night. You can kill a thousand when but a day old, easier than one when half grown.

—When you are about to make a corn-starch pudding, melt a lump of butter in the pudding kettle or pan, before putting the pudding into it. There will then be no danger of the milk becoming scorched, with ordinary care, at least.—Troy Times.

—White lead and linseed oil mixed as for paint is claimed to be an excellent remedy for bruises, abrasions and harness galls of any kind. Always wash the wounds clean with soap and water before using the mixture, which is best applied by the use of a common paint brush.

—Hop Tea: Take two ounces of hops and pour over them one quart of boiling water; let it stand ten minutes; then set it to the fire, and just bring it to the boil; then strain and bottle it for use; a wine-glass to be taken every morning fasting. This will create an appetite and strengthen the digestive organs.—Toledo Blade.

—Marble Cake: Light part—One cup of sugar, one-half cup of butter, one-half cup of sweet milk, two and one-quarter cups of flour, whites of four eggs, two teaspoonfuls of baking powder. Dark part—One cup of brown sugar, one-half cup of molasses, one-half cup of butter, one cup of sweet milk, yolks of four eggs, two and one-half cups of flour, two teaspoonfuls of baking powder. Bake in one pan.—The Household.

—It will interest housekeepers to know that oil marks on papered walls against which thoughtless persons have laid their heads may be removed by making a paste of water and pipe-clay or fuller's earth, and laying on the surface without rubbing it on, else the pattern of the paper may be injured. Leave the paste on all night. In the morning it may be brushed off and the spot will have disappeared.—Chicago Herald.

—It has for a long time been known that the color of growing flowers can be altered by simply mixing a little dyestuff with the mold in the flower-pot. No one, however, has hitherto thought of changing the color of flowers when cut. A distinguished botanist has found that by simply soaking the stems of cut flowers in a weak dye solution their color can be altered at will without the perfume or richness being destroyed.—Exchange.

—W. D. B[illegible], in the Indiana Farmer, reminds farmers that it is not a good plan to sow seed grown upon the home farm for many years in succession. A farmer living on a sandy loam should endeavor, he says, to exchange seed with one who lives on a clay soil, and vice versa. He can give no satisfactory explanation of the practice or why it benefits, but says that experience, that best of teachers, proves his position.

Ventilating Sick Rooms.

An infant, as soon as born needs pure air more than food. And equally true is it, that the sick, exhausted by disease, need pure and fresh air. The sick need special care and many other things to which we refer in a laconic way, so that mothers, daughters and nurses may keep them constantly in view, when called to watch and benefit the sick. Always keep the air of the sick room fresh and pure and its temperature as uniform as is possible. The degree of temperature is of less importance than its uniformity. Opening the window so as to create a draft when the sick one happens to be warm and perspiring is not wise, nor safe. If they must be opened and a strong draft of air be allowed to come it must check the perspiration, that is moistening the skin, and a large amount of harm must be induced. The sick-room should be so ventilated that foul air may be constantly flowing out and pure air be as constantly flowing in. We know no better way of doing this than that of raising the lower sash four inches and fully fitting the open space with a half inch board, neatly fitting between the shoulders of the window frame. By this plan, the outer air will be continuously coming in between the upper portion of the lower sash and the lower portion of the upper. This arrangement will compel the outer air to pass in and up, and strike the ceiling of the room, lessen the draft and somewhat warm the air as it enters and passes up and down. As simple and efficient as this mode of ventilating sick rooms, living rooms, or school rooms is, a large per cent. of parents neglect it and compel their children to breathe vitiated air, or expose them to full blasts of cold outer air. A substitute is an open fire place to draw the vitiated air away, if some means are adopted by which fresh air may flow in.

In cold, or chilly and damp seasons of the year, an open fire-place may answer every purpose. At any rate, every room in every house, occupied by the well or ill, should have an open fire-place to ventilate. Fresh air may be allowed to enter in various ways, but usually windows are so loose that the outer air will freely enter and drive the vitiated air away. What we insist upon as absolutely necessary to health, is that fresh air should be constantly entering those rooms that are occupied by the sick, and that fresh and chilly air should not blow directly upon the sick. A less efficient means of preventing this, is to hang a shawl or blanket over an ordinary clothes horse and place it in such a way that the air can not strike the patient. These directions may seem to be of trivial notice, and still every spring and autumn and winter ever give illustrations of the fact that neglecting the proper ventilation of sick rooms increases the amount of sickness and the per centage of mortality. If fresh air confers new life upon the strong and healthy, it is of special value to the exhausted and sick. The latter must be content with the reduced condition of the vital powers. They need the oxygen of fresh air that yields the aid of sustaining respiration.

The mother or nurse, then, can not be too studious in ventilating the rooms of those who are entrusted to her charge. We have often entered a sick room, supposed to be sweet and clean, but we found as we entered from the outer air that the inner air was neither sweet nor clean. This sad condition conduced largely to render the sick child much more feeble and exhausted, than it need have been and cut off many chances of the ultimate recovery.

We hope that those who have the care of the sick may not forget, that the fire-place in a sick room should always be kept open, as no cheaper and better ventilation has yet been found than the chimney of an open fire-place, especially if the room demands the generation of heat. A fire in a room increases the draft and purifies the air.

The Staked Plains.

The Staked Plains of New Mexico and Northwestern Texas have been but little understood by civilized man until within the past few years. They have been regarded as barren waste, worthless to all intents and purposes for any use whatever. But as the van of civilization crowds its way or takes its course in the direction of the crimson-tinted sky of the Occident, more is learned of this heretofore unoccupied domain, which has an area larger than the whole State of New York. These plains begin in New Mexico and extend far into the interior of Texas, and are lined on the south by the Pecos and on the north by Red River, and are of the shape of the letter V. They are covered the entire year with a thick coat of buffalo grass, very short but exceedingly nutritious, affording excellent pasturage for every class of stock. Heretofore water was supposed to be out of the question upon these plains, but exploration has revealed considerable quantities in lagunas or surface lakes, while well-boring in many places has been attended with satisfactory results—notwithstanding the fact that General John Pope twenty-eight years ago expended two million of the people's money experimenting on these same plains for artesian water.

The Quakers of Ohio seem to fancy the Staked Plains (so called from the fact that about two hundred years ago Jesuit Fathers in passing from east to west, after losing a small party of explorers who perished with thirst, crossed from the Yellow House Canyon to the Pecos, one hundred and fifty miles, and drove stakes at convenient distances lest they too should become bewildered, lose their way and perish), and have started a colony thereon in Crosby County, where for three years they have quite successfully cultivated corn, [illegible], millet, etc.

In the [illegible]

Hon. R. C. Payne, City Alderman, Brisbane, Queensland, Australia, writes: "I have been a great sufferer with rheumatism for years and have tried every known remedy, including galvanic batteries and Turkish Baths. Finally I tried St. Jacobs Oil the great pain-cure and can positively say it gave me instantaneous relief. It puts all other remedies in the shade."

An Ohio newspaper speaks of a man being bruised by the "emphatic gesture of a mule."—Chicago Tribune.

Higher Prices for Butter.

All dairymen who use Wells, Richardson & Co.'s Improved Butter Color, agree that it increases the value of butter several cents a pound. It is pure and harmless, convenient for instant use, has no taste or odor, and gives a clear, golden richness to the butter. It is the very best butter color obtainable, and is not expensive. In every State in the Union the demand for it is increasing.

The fly period has arrived. Compositors should bear this in mind and closely observe.

Lots of People

get billious, have heavy headaches, mouth foul, yellow eyes, &c., all the direct result of impure blood which can be thoroughly cleansed, renewed and enriched with Kidney-Wort. It acts at the same time on the Kidneys, Liver and Bowels and has more real virtue in a package than can be found in any other remedy for the same class of diseases.

The thinnest thing is thought to be a milk-dealer riding on a railroad whose stock is watered.

The surprising success of Mrs. Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound for the several diseases peculiar to women forcibly illustrates the importance of her beneficent discovery and the fact that she knows how to make the most of it.—Dr. Haskell.

In all men's mouths—tongues.—Merchant Traveler.

"$10,000 would not purchase from me what Swift's Specific has done for me. It cured me of Rheumatism caused by malaria."
ARCHIE THOMAS, Springfield, Tenn.

Never laugh at a man with a pug nose; you never know what may turn up.

During the season for mosquitoes and other stinging insects, and of poisoned plants, if your skin is impure, a bite will swell and fester unless you apply Papillon Skin Cure. A single application will neutralize the poison.

Bound over for a new trial—Last year's spring suit.—Boston Times.

Keep in the Fashion. The Diamond Dyes always do more than they claim to do. Color over that old dress. It will look like new. They are warranted. 10c. at druggists. Wells, Richardson & Co., Burlington, Vt.

The parson at the wedding is the right man in the rite place.

Glenn's Sulphur Soap merits the sanction accorded by physicians. Hill's Hair Dye, black or brown, 50c.

There is always something of a haze around our military academies.

Papillon Catarrh Cure is recommended by members of the Hay Fever Association of New England.

Frightful Crash—a printing office towel.—The Judge.

The short, hacking cough, which leads to Consumption, is cured by Piso's Cure.

What the girls are not apt to object to—Sunday males.

If afflicted with Sore Eyes, use Dr. Isaac Thompson's Eye Water. Druggists sell it. 25c.

THE MARKETS.

CINCINNATI, July 7, 1884.

LIVE STOCK—Cattle—Common $3 00 @ 3 50
Choice butchers [illegible]
HOGS—Common [illegible]
Good packers [illegible]
SHEEP—Good to choice [illegible]
FLOUR—Family [illegible]
GRAIN—Wheat—Longberry red [illegible]
No. 2 red [illegible]
Corn—No. 2 mixed [illegible]
Oats—No. 2 mixed [illegible]
Rye—No. 2 [illegible]
HAY—Timothy No. 1 [illegible]
HEMP—Double dressed [illegible]
PROVISIONS—Pork—Mess [illegible]
Lard—Prime steam [illegible]
BUTTER—Fancy Dairy [illegible]
Prime Creamery [illegible]
FRUIT AND VEGETABLES.
Potatoes, new, per barrel [illegible]
Apples, prime, per barrel [illegible]

NEW YORK.
FLOUR—State and Western [illegible]
Good to choice [illegible]
GRAIN—Wheat—No. 2 Chicago [illegible]
No. 2 red [illegible]
Corn—No. 2 mixed [illegible]
Oats—mixed [illegible]
PORK—Mess [illegible]
LARD—Western steam [illegible]

CHICAGO.
FLOUR—State and Western [illegible]
GRAIN—Wheat—No. 2 red [illegible]
No. 2 Chicago Spring [illegible]
Corn—No. 2 [illegible]
Oats—No. 2 [illegible]
Rye [illegible]
PORK—Mess [illegible]
LARD—Steam [illegible]

BALTIMORE.
FLOUR—Family [illegible]
GRAIN—Wheat—No. 2 [illegible]
Corn—mixed [illegible]
Oats—mixed [illegible]
PROVISIONS—Pork—Mess [illegible]
Lard—Refined [illegible]

INDIANAPOLIS.
WHEAT—No. 2 red [illegible]
CORN—mixed [illegible]
OATS—mixed [illegible]

LOUISVILLE.
FLOUR—A No. 1 [illegible]
GRAIN—Wheat—No. 2 red [illegible]
Corn—mixed [illegible]
Oats—mixed [illegible]
PORK—mess [illegible]
LARD—steam [illegible]

CURE OF CHRONIC COSTIVENESS.

BULLY BUENO MILLS, ARIZONA TER., January 14, 1884.

For the last two years I have been greatly troubled with costiveness, often ten or twelve days elapsing without any movement of my bowels. I spent [illegible] many remedies, but none with success, until I tried your Vegetable Pills, taking three pills and increasing one each night until I took nine, then decreasing one each night. Since then my bowels have been regular each day, and my headaches have left me, and I feel like another man—which is entirely owing to your pills—and I would not be without them in this new country. A. M. HEATH.

Impurity of Blood, however generated, is always present in the body when pain is felt; it spreads and ferments wherever a weak spot or low vitality exists.

BRANDRETH'S PILLS are the one great and unfailing remedy, because they take hold and expel only what is hurtful; so when sick, have pain, dizziness, rheumatism, colds, or costiveness, take from three to five, and if they do not operate in four hours or so, take three or four more. They cleanse the bowels and circulation from all impurities of the blood, and often save life. BRANDRETH'S PILLS preserve the vigor of youth, and for a long period keep off the debility of age.

Sold in every drug and medicine store, with plain printed directions for use.

Many a young lady has had an arrow escape from the string of a bad beau.

PAPILLON

"AFTER SUFFERING FOUR YEARS."

I have used the Papillon Skin Cure for my ulcerated sore leg. It has entirely healed and is free from pain. I have been recommending it to several persons here, and they are trying it. I will take great pleasure in recommending it, for I can safely do so. I suffered with my leg for four years, and tried a great number of remedies that gave me no relief. Your medicine cured me. I cheerfully give you permission to publish this if you wish. Thanking you for such a medicine, I am, MRS. M. LAROSE.

Covington, Ky., April 5, 1884.

"A CASE OF ECZEMA."

I have been afflicted for about three years with Eczema. I think I had a good doctor; he did all he could for me, until he was discouraged and let me go. I have tried several remedies which did me no good. I have used your Papillon Skin Cure for four months and must have got cured. [illegible] JULIA CALLOW, 13 Grant Street, Cleveland, O.

P WITH P

May mean "Poisoned with Potash." This is the case with hundreds who have been taking treatment for Syphilis. [illegible] Swift's Specific is a vegetable remedy [illegible]

[illegible] GEO. O. WELLMAN, Jr., [illegible], Mass.

Treatise on Blood and Skin Diseases mailed free to applicants. SWIFT SPECIFIC CO., Drawer 3, Atlanta, Ga.

N. Y. Office, 159 W. 23d St., bet. 6th and 7th Aves. Philadelphia Office, 1205 Chestnut St.

LYDIA E. PINKHAM'S VEGETABLE COMPOUND IS A POSITIVE CURE FOR all those Painful Complaints and Weaknesses so common to our best FEMALE POPULATION. [illegible]

PILES ITCHING PILES. Symptoms—Moisture, intense itching, [illegible] SWAYNE'S OINTMENT [illegible]

SKIN DISEASES [illegible]

A $65 SEWING MACHINE For $18.00. [illegible] CHICAGO SCALE CO., Chicago.

U.S. STANDARD 5 TON WAGON SCALES, JONES OF BINGHAMTON $60 and [illegible]

PISO'S CURE FOR CONSUMPTION CURES WHERE ALL ELSE FAILS. [illegible]

LIVER "ST. BERNARD VEGETABLE PILLS." The Best Cure for Liver and Bilious complaints, Costiveness, [illegible]

WANTED Agents for the Authorized Official Campaign Book, BLAINE AND LOGAN. [illegible]

"THE BEST IS CHEAPEST." ENGINES, THRESHERS SAW-MILLS, Horse Powers, Clover Hullers [illegible]

GUNS Shot Guns, Revolvers, Rifles, etc. [illegible]

$40 PAYS for a Life Scholarship in the [illegible] BUSINESS COLLEGE [illegible]

NO [illegible]

HAIR [illegible]

$250 A MONTH. Agents Wanted. [illegible] JAY BRONSON, DETROIT, MICH.

BLAINE & LOGAN. Best Steel Portraits, [illegible]

EDUCATIONAL.

TEACHERS wanting positions to teach [illegible]

CHICAGO MUSICAL COLLEGE. CENTRAL MUSIC HALL. DR. F. ZIEGFELD, PRESIDENT. [illegible]

A. N. K.—E. 986

WHEN WRITING TO ADVERTISERS please say you saw the advertisement in this paper.

BOONE COUNTY RECORDER.

VOLUME IX. BURLINGTON, KY., WEDNESDAY, JULY 16, 1884. NUMBER 37.

THE PLAGUE.

Cholera Panic Increasing and Parisians Becoming Alarmed.

One Hundred and Twenty Thousand People Have Fled From Marseilles.

LONDON, July 12.—It is estimated that one hundred and twenty thousand people have left Marseilles since the outbreak, and the distress consequent upon such an abnormal exodus from that city and Toulon, particularly in the outlying districts, which depended almost solely for existence on their urban trade, is pitiful. It is now feared that a similar panic in Paris is imminent, many of the wealthier families having already made arrangements to depart at the first sign of the disease.

MARSEILLES, July 12.—Thirty deaths from cholera h[illegible] evening, and eight between nine o'cl[illegible] The panic is extreme. The railway stations were crowded early this morning with fugitives who fought for tickets, which the agents could not issue fast enough. There were sixty-five deaths here from cholera in the past twenty-four hours.

TOULON, July 12.—Seventeen deaths from cholera last evening.

Five deaths from cholera since 10 this morning. Isolated cases of cholera are reported among Toulonese refugees at at Laseyne and Pignans.

PARIS, July 12.—The newspapers declare the cases of cholera reported yesterday to be sporadic.

LYONS, July 12.—One death from cholera here to-day.

PARIS, July 11.—It is reported that there is a case of cholera at Auteuil, a suburb of Paris. The Intransigeant says the case is Asiatic.

MARSEILLES, July 11.—Nineteen deaths last evening, and twelve between nine o'clock to-day. The number of cholera deaths in the past twenty-four hours was seventy-four.

TOULON, July 11.—Three deaths from cholera last evening.

THE WRONG SIGNAL OUT,

And Human Life Pays the Penalty of Carelessness.

WASHINGTON, July 12.—About half-past eight o'clock this evening, as Train No. 7, from Martinsburg, W. Va., due at Washington at 8:12 p. m., was entering the city on a "Y" switch, it collided with Train No. 12, west-bound from Baltimore, and due at Washington at 8:30. Train No. 7 was twenty-four minutes late, but the other train was on time. The west-bound train was shown a white light when a red light should have been shown to detain it until the other train had safely passed the switch. Michael Riley, engineer of the Martinsburg train, was killed, and his fireman, Solomon Fegler, badly injured. The engineer and fireman of the other train escaped with slight injuries. No one else was killed. The injured were as follows: David Drill, Pittsburg; express agent, badly injured in the legs; James Gallaher, Pittsburg, legs broken; R. A. Tucker, Washington, slightly injured. Baggagemaster H. E. Carter was hurt internally. The wreck of the rolling stock was complete, and it seemed almost a miracle that so few persons were injured. The engines were locked together, and a passenger car completely covered them. The loss to the company is heavy.

YOUTHFUL DEPRAVITY.

A Youngster of Thirteen Fatally Wounds Another of Six.

PITTSBURG, July 12.—This afternoon Joseph Seidenstricker, aged thirteen, shot and mortally wounded Curly Eshenbaugh, a little fellow only six years old. Young Eshenbaugh, who was an inmate of the Episcopal Home for Children, was with an old lady and several other children, playing in the orchard connected with the house, when Seidenstricker, with three other boys, entered the grounds. Seidenstricker was flourishing a revolver, and the old lady ordered him away. He retorted with an oath, adding: "I'll shoot some of you!" and, suiting the action to the words, fired twice. The first shot lodged in a tree, and the second took effect in Eshenbaugh's stomach. Seidenstricker and his companion then fled, and have not yet been captured. Eshenbaugh is still living, but death is momentarily expected. Young Seidenstricker was arrested at his home to-night. He admits the shooting, and says he threw the revolver in the river. Eshenbaugh is still alive, but sinking rapidly. Seidenstricker's family is highly respected, but the boy has been rather wayward.

Michigan Crops.

DETROIT, MICH., July 11.—For the July crop report the Secretary of State has received reports from 891 correspondents, representing six hundred and sixty townships. Two-thirds of the reports are from a corresponding number of townships in the southern four tiers of counties. The probable total yield of wheat in Michigan the present year will be 21,965,391 bushels. This estimate is based on the number of acres in wheat in May. From one to one and a half million bushels of the 1883 crop is yet in farmers' hands. Expressed in per cent. of the condition one year ago, corn is 118, oats 95, barley 97, clover meadows and pasture 88, timothy meadows and pastures 86, clover sowed this year 68. The condition of corn compared with the vitality and growth of average years is 92. Sixteen per cent. of the corn planted failed to grow. Apples promise 75 per cent., and peaches 26 per cent. of the average crop.

Convention of Mexican Veterans.

ST. LOUIS, July 11.—At a meeting of Mexican veterans here last night it was decided to hold an international convention of Mexican veterans in this city early in October next. The project meets the hearty approval of President-elect General Diaz, of Mexico, and other prominent Mexican Government officials, and they have promised to send fifty prominent veterans of the Mexican war to the convention. A committee was appointed to take charge of the matter and issue invitations and make all necessary preparations.

HEROIC EFFORT.

A Mother, Her Two Babes and Servant Burned to Death—Several Other Persons Fatally Injured.

BRADFORD, PA., July 11.—At an early hour this morning a fire was discovered in the bakery of Mrs. Reibley. It being a frame, it was soon a mass of flames. Thos. Clark, from Denver, Col., was stopping at the house, and was the first to discover their danger. He sprang out of the rear entrance with his coat and vest in his hand. He knew of the presence of the other lodgers in the building, and at once set about his work of rescue. He placed a ladder against the window of the second story, and, notwithstanding the seething flames which almost surrounded him, he caught hold of Mrs. Reibley's arm. The scene was a thrilling one. The fire was roaring upward and hissing out through the windows, presenting a perfect hell of flame, and seemingly defiant of the mad efforts of the heroic Clark to save human life. At this moment two women jumped out of a rear story window, and for a moment the crowd of spectators were paralysed, many turning their heads away from the appalling sight in an agony of fear and trembling. Just then the noble Clark succeeded in bringing to the window-sill the form of the woman blackened, bruised and bleeding. The cuticle of the arm of the unfortunate woman stripped off like a stocking and the brave man was obliged to take a new hold. Mrs. Reibley, with all the instincts of maternity, held back and struggled with her noble rescuer, as if she was determined to die with her babes, who at that time were burned to a crisp. At last Clark succeeded in getting Mrs. Reibley to the top of the ladder, and ready hands were there to help him in his daring and self-sacrificing deed of heroism. The poor woman was taken across the street, and laid upon the sidewalk, breathing her last. Mrs. Reibley's two children, aged two and six years, respectively, and a Sweedish servant girl, perished in the flames. The dead are Mrs. Reibley, Mary and Lizzie Reibley and [illegible]. John [illegible], a barber, who roomed in the house, was so terribly injured that he died to-night. Lena Garwitz, Mary Touhey and H. Garwick are badly burned. Miss Touhey leaped from a second-story window, breaking four ribs in the fall. Her injuries are probably fatal. Mrs. Garwitz also jumped, and received bad injuries. Her recovery is doubtful. Charles Reibley, the husband and father of the victims, was drowned two weeks ago, and, by the fire to-day, the entire family is swept from the face of the earth. The flames spread on both sides, and ten buildings were consumed.

WATERY GRAVES.

Three of the Crew of the Modoc Rowing Club, of St. Louis, Drowned.

ST. LOUIS, July 11.—About 7 o'clock this evening, as the four-oared shell of the Modoc Rowing Club, containing four rowers and a cockswain, was passing up the river, opposite the foot of Spruce street, it attempted to cross the bows of the ferryboat Mulliken, going in the same direction, and was run down, being struck amidship, and crushed. One of the crew went down with the shell. The other four sprang for the bow of the ferryboat, and clung to her guards, but before assistance could reach them two lost their hold and fell back into the river and were drowned. The names of the lost are Vincent Angelo, a somewhat noted amateur sprinter; J. B. Ross, insurance agent, and Henry Jasper, late of Quincy Ill. The two saved are W. B. Hazelton, jr., and Cockswain J. J. Miller.

HORRIBLE DEATH.

A Boiler Explosion Causes an Agonizing Death and Terrible Torture.

MILLFIELD, O., July 12.—A terrific boiler explosion occurred at Wolf's portable saw mill, six miles from here, yesterday, by which one man was instantly killed, and several others seriously, and perhaps fatally injured. The explosion occurred while all the men were near the mill and the building was entirely demolished. Barrack Wolf was hurled quite a distance and his body horribly mangled. He died almost instantly. Eugene Wolf was struck by the flying timbers and perhaps fatally hurt, while the boy, Blackburn was badly cut up, and Hawley Howard scalded almost to death by the steam.

BIG RAILROAD SUIT.

The New York Central Trust Company Sues Railroads for $10,000,000.

NEW YORK, July 12.—A suit has just been begun by the Central Trust Company against the West Shore & Ontario Terminal Company, the New York West Shore & Buffalo Railroad Company, the New York Ontario & Western Railroad Company and others, to foreclose a mortgage for $10,000,000 which was given by the West Shore & Ontario Terminal Company to the trust company to secure its bonds.

Ignominious Deaths.

FORT SMITH, ARK., July 11.—Three U. S. prisoners were executed here to-day for murders committed in Indian Territory—Thomas L. Thompson, a white man; John Davis, a full-blood Choctaw Indian, and Jack Woman-killer, alias "Galcatcher," a full-blood Cherokee. The drop fell at 12 o'clock, and all died without a struggle.

WARRENSBURG, MO., July 11.—Billy and Charley Hamilton were hung here to-day for the murder of Carl Steidle, a young German, who was killed by them in a brutal manner for his money last March.

COLFAX, LA., July 11.—Wilson Sanders, colored, was hanged to-day for the murder of Frank H. Page, white, a few months ago.

A Valuable Industrial Book.

WASHINGTON, July 12.—At the solicitation of some of the leading trade and industrial organizations of the country, the Secretary of State last winter directed the preparation of a circular letter, with the view of securing through consular officers, the fullest obtainable information concerning the condition of labor throughout the world, especially in Europe. Very full returns have been received from the Consuls everywhere, and are now in process of preparation in the Bureau of Statistics, and will soon be published.

State Claims Paid.

WASHINGTON, July 12.—The Treasury Department to-day paid the following claims for expenses incurred by the State Governments during the war of the rebellion: Ohio, $90,240; New York, $54,946; Michigan, $42,346; Massachusetts, $28,619.

A JAILER SHOT,

And a Negro Taken From the Jail By a Mob and Hanged.

Brave Conduct of the Official and His Wife and Son—Determined Work of a Body of Masked Lynchers.

OWENSBORO, KY., July 14.—A crowd of masked men came to the jail here at 2 o'clock this morning and demanded of Jailer Lucas the negro Dick May, who recently outraged Stella Keller. The jailer defended his prisoner bravely, confronting the mob with his revolver and refusing admittance to the jail, and it was not till after he had fallen mortally wounded by a bullet in his lungs from a gun in the hands of some one in the mob of lynchers that access was gained to the cells. An eye-witness says he saw one man fall, shot by Tom Lucas, and that he was placed on a horse and quickly carried off. After firing six shots from the porch the jailer was shot, the ball entering the right breast near the nipple. He was ca[illegible] still refusing to give up the keys. His wife took a pistol and tried to repel the mob, but they crowded up stairs and forced her to give up the cell keys. The outer door was battered down by a sledge-hammer. They then took May from his cell and hung him to the only available limb in the Court-house yard. They had ropes prepared for two other victims. The rope was a new one and the knot a regular hangman's knot. The jail premises are badly riddled with bullets. The jailer carried a lantern in his hand and afforded a good target for the mob. After hanging their victim the mob departed, leaving a number of masks about the jail premises. It is stated that among them were a number of negroes, and that a portion of them came from Indiana, opposite Owensboro, where the girl's father once lived. May was the third negro hung in the Court-house yard by a mob, and the fourth victim of the gallows in the county. The outrage of last night is universally condemned. There is great indignation among the citizens of Owensboro, and the end of the affair is not yet at hand.

PRECAUTIONARY MEASURES

Taken at Washington to Prevent the Importation of Cholera.

WASHINGTON, July 14.—Secretary Frelinghuysen to-day instructed by cable consular officers at London, Liverpool, Marseilles, Havre, Bordeaux, Bremen and Hamburg, to at once appoint competent physicians to inspect all vessels and passengers departing for the United States from the ports mentioned. The consular officers referred to are instructed to refuse clean bills of health in all cases except upon the recommendation of the sanitary inspector that such bills be given. The Consuls are instructed to report by cable any case of infectious or contagious disease known to exist on board the vessel at the time of her departure for the United States. It is probable that, under the authority conferred by the contagious disease clause of the Legislative Bill, medical examiners will be appointed as attaches of the American consulates at French ports infected with cholera, whose duty it will be to report principally upon the progress of the disease.

THE CHOLERA.

Its Terrible Ravages in France—A Riot Threatened by the Workingmen at Marseilles.

MARSEILLES, July 14.—The Workingmen's Commission has issued a red placard to unemployed workingmen, in which appear the words: "The action of the municipality has left us nothing but suicide or a hideous death from hunger or epidemic." Calls to arms are issued and excited meetings held, but as yet there has been no outbreak. Sixty-six deaths from cholera in this city in the past twenty-four hours ended at nine o'clock this evening.

TOULON, July 14.—Thirty-six deaths were officially reported yesterday. The Mayor has been attacked with cholera. Illumination in honor of the National fete is prohibited.

Natural Gas Wells.

PITTSBURG, July 14.—The Zimmerman well at Brushton, in the East End, struck gas this evening at the depth of six hundred feet. Four other wells are expected to reach the vein in a few days. It is reported oil was struck to-day at Coal Valley, fifteen miles south of the city, on the Monongahela River.

Postmasters Arrested.

CAMDEN, N. J., July 14.—Postmaster William T. Kailay, of Camden, N. J., was arrested this morning charged with embezzlement, and held in $3,000 bail for hearing on Monday. A warrant has also been issued to arrest Assistant Postmaster Jesse K. Mines, for embezzlement.

Buried By a Landslide.

PITTSBURG, July 14.—Seven Swedish tracklayers on the Allegheny Valley Railroad were buried under a landslide at the mouth of Clarion River to-day. Two were taken out dead and four others fatally injured.

Expensive Fire Extinguisher.

SAN JOSE, CAL., July 14.—A small mission town was almost totally destroyed by fire Sunday night. A church was saved by throwing claret wine over the building, the water being exhausted.

Three Men Killed.

ASHLAND, PENN., July 14.—Two sons of Thomas Lee, a farmer on Roaring Creek, and a man named Kohler were killed while saving stock from a barn fired by lightning.

—The Marine Band, that discourses our National music in Washington, originated on board the frigate Constitution, Commodore Hull, cruising in Mediterranean waters in 1845, and has always been largely composed of Italians.—N. Y. News

—They have lots of fun out in Colorado sliding down the sandy hills on shovels. A short time ago a man was engaged in this noble pastime and the shovel became so hot that his trousers took fire.—Chicago Herald.

THE COMMONWEALTH.

Louisville Leaf Tobacco Market.

The market has developed a decided accession of strength. Burley tobaccos have attracted a much more active competition between large manufacturers, and, especially in medium grades, have sold up $1@1.50 per 100 pounds, with occasional sale, showing an advance of $2 over recent prices. All other grades above common trash have been firmer and fractionally higher. Dark and heavy styles have displayed more activity in regie descriptions than any others, but the whole range is higher. The Italian contract, of course, forms the fulcrum of the present market for shipping styles. Lugs and leaf are 25@50c. higher. Redried Green River leaf has been more active. We quote full weight packages of new crop sound tobacco as follows:

	Dark and Heavy.	Burley.
Trash	$6 50 @ 6 75	$6 00 @ 7 50
Common lugs	7 00 @ 7 25	7 00 @ 8 00
Medium lugs	7 50 @ 7 75	8 00 @ 9 00
Good lugs	8 00 @ 8 50	10 00 @11 00
Common leaf	8 00 @ 8 50	10 00 @11 00
Medium leaf	8 75 @ 9 50	12 00 @16 00
Good leaf	10 00 @11 00	17 00 @20 00
Fine and fancy leaf	12 00 @16 00	22 00 @22 50

Miscellaneous Items.

DICK HENDERSON, colored, was taken from the Russellville jail by an armed mob and hanged. He was charged with shooting a young white boy, who is not seriously hurt.

GEO. AIKEN, who left Louisville a poor man eight years ago for the West, has returned wealthy, and is engaged in a search for his only child, whom he left in an orphan asylum, and who has since been given to some family and lost trace of.

CARSON BELL, the only son of Dr. Thomas S. Bell, of Louisville, died suddenly at a late hour, the other night at the Farmers' Home from chronic alcoholism.

COUNTY ASSESSOR GEO. W. LYTLE, of Bracken County, who left home some weeks ago, returned the other day, but disappeared early the next morning, and no trace of him can be found. His friends are alarmed for his safety, as he showed signs of insanity. Financial troubles are the cause of his mad freak.

WILLIAM COMBS, colored, charged with killing Albert Taylor, colored, at Maysville, had an examination, a few days ago, before Mayor January, and was discharged. The killing was the result of a quarrel over a game of craps. Combs was acquitted on the ground of self-defense.

AT Fulton Station, Willie Falk, two years old, swallowed a dose of morphine that had been prescribed for his mother, and died in an hour,

THE first new wheat of the season was received in Louisville on the 8th from Southern Kentucky. It was pronounced by all who saw it a splendid quality, with large plump grains, sound and clean. It was placed on market at ninety cents, but no buyer cared to take the risk.

THE following patents have been issued to Kentucky patentees recently: Gaston, James M., Louisville, tobacco mold. McCormick, John G., Louisville, car-starter. Weeks, Silas H., Russell, and J. J. Hassauer, Ironton, O., car-coupling.

WM. THOMPSON, a young man nineteen years of age, jumped from a train at Morehead, the other day, after his hat, and will lose his life from injuries received.

IN a difficulty at Hickman, the other day, Wm. Oakly was killed by W. E. Perry, jr.

IN an altercation between John McDonald, a reputable farmer, and Henry Defor, a laborer, at Sulphur, a few days since, the lie was passed, when both struck, McDonald with his fist and Defor with a barlow knife. McDonald was stabbed just below the right nipple, penetrating the lung. He is in a critical condition. Defor escaped from the Sheriff, and is still at large.

WILLIE DREW, a little colored boy, picked up a toy pistol in Louisville, the other day, and was painfully wounded on the side of the head by the discharge of the weapon.

THE work of repairing the old frame structure adjoining the St. Joseph Orphans' Asylum, which was burned down at Cold Springs recently, for the temporary accommodation of the children, has been commenced. Mr. James Walsh, of Covington, presented the Sisters with $300 to alleviate their present wants. He has also given $1,000 for the rebuilding of the asylum.

JOHN REISING was taken before Judge Shine, of the County Court, at Covington, a few days ago, on a writ of lunacy. It was brought out in the testimony that he suffered sunstroke about a year ago, and had been mentally unsound since that period, being in constant dread of being poisoned. It was adjudged that he be sent to the lunatic asylum at Lexington. Reising is fifty-two years old, and lives at Sandfordtown, where he has a small farm.

EDGAR ROSS, who deserted the regular army at St. Louis in 1870, and who has been confined in the Newport Barracks, Newport, for the past few weeks awaiting a trial for desertion, was released the other day by order of General Sheridan.

CHARLES MILLER, while performing some duty at a second-story window of the Kentucky National Bank, Louisville, fell to the pavement, a distance of forty feet. He was badly crushed about the head, and his injuries are fatal.

JACOB ZINSMEISTER, a man about forty-two years of age, residing on Marshall street, Louisville, died a few days ago from the effects a fishbone, which he swallowed some weeks ago. All efforts to dislodge the bone from the wind-pipe were futile, and it gradually worked its way down into the lungs, where it produced a disease resembling quick consumption. Zinsmeister leaves a wife and two children in indigent circumstances.

THE Democratic Convention, at Carlisle, instructed their delegates for J. Quincy Ward, of Cynthiana, for Judge of the Supreme Court.

COLONEL T. QUINN, United States Quartermaster's Agent, was seriously stabbed at Cynthiana, a few days ago, by Orie Lehus, a Deputy Revenue Collector, whom Quinn was investigating.

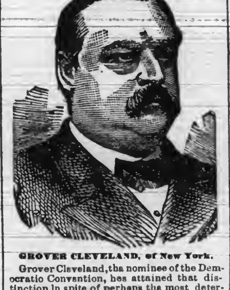
THE State Board of Equalization will be engaged a month or six weeks longer.

THE Democrats of Hart County have nominated I. A. Edwards for school Superintendent, and recommended Capt. H. C. Martin as a candidate for Congress.

MRS. J. H. BAKER, of Fayette County, made and sold in one month 225½ pounds of butter, besides forty-five pounds used in the family. The butter was sold on an average of thirty-five cents per pound.

EIGHTY-FIVE cents per bushel is the highest price offered for wheat in Madison County, with but few buyers. The farmers generally will hold for a higher price.

CLEVELAND !



New York Names the Democratic Candidate for President.

The Second Ballot Settles the Question.

THOS. A. HENDRICKS,

Of Indiana, the Nominee for Vice-President.

The Pro[illegible] Democratic National Convention—The Platform—National Committee, etc.

GROVER CLEVELAND, of New York.

Grover Cleveland, the nominee of the Democratic Convention, has attained that distinction in spite of perhaps the most determined opposition ever made to a candidate from his own State.

He was born in Caldwell, New Jersey, March 18, 1837. At eighteen years of age he arrived in Buffalo, as he describes it, "friendless, unknown and poor," and was received by his uncle, who gave him a situation as clerk to support him while studying law. After admission to the bar he was appointed assistant district attorney, and in 1868 elected sheriff, in which office he developed his powers as a reformer to the disgust of the rings. He was next called on to purify the Mayor's office, and did his work well and conscientiously, succeeding admirably. The same reason was given him to enter the canvass for Governor of New York, resulting in his triumphing over Folger by 200,000 majority, and now his work as a reformer meets national recognition in the fact that he is called upon by a great party to introduce similar reforms in the national administration.

THOMAS A. HENDRICKS, of Indiana.

First Days Proceedings.

CHICAGO, July 8.—The convention was called to order at 12:37 p. m., by Hon. Wm. H. Barnum, of Connecticut, Chairman of the Democratic National Committee. He said: "The Chair has the honor to present the Rev. Dr. Marquis, of Chicago, who will open the deliberations of this convention with prayer."

The Rev. Dr. Marquis addressed the Throne of Grace. He prayed for a blessing on this great assembly of a representive body; that they should be endowed plentifully with that wisdom which is first pure, then peaceable and gentle and easy to be entreated; that nothing should be done through strife or vain jealousy, but that they should be filled with that charity which is not puffed up, and does not behave itself unseemly. He prayed that their deliberations would be guided to such conclusions as would best promote the glory of God and the welfare of the nation.

At the conclusion of the prayer, Mr. Barnum nominated, by the unanimous vote of the National Committee, Hon. Richard Hubbard, of Texas, temporary chairman. A vote was taken and Mr. Hubbard elected. Mr. Hubbard on being conducted to the chair was received with vociferous applause. Mr. Hubbard addressed the convention at some length.

Frederick O. Prince, of Massachusets, was elected temporary Secretary, with the following assistants: E. L. Merrit, of Illinois; George O. Gutherie, of Pennsylvania; G. L. Johnston, of Iowa; Robert M. Bashford, of Wisconsin; Charles M. Valendingham, of Missouri; H. J. Lynn, of Tennessee; Michael D. Barret, of New Jersey. Reading clerks: T. O. Walker, of Iowa; Thomas S. Pettit, of Washington, D. C.; Nicholas H. Bell, of Missouri; James E. Morrison, of New York; H. L. Bryan, of Delaware. Official Stenographer, Edwin P. Dickerson, of New York; Sergeant-at-Arms, Richard J. Bright, of Indiana.

Mr. Smalley, of Vermont—I was instructed by the National Committee to make this report in the form of a resolution, the resolution which I will now send to the Chair. The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the rules of the last Democratic Convention govern this body until otherwise ordered, subject to the following modification:

That in voting for candidates for President and Vice President, no State shall be allowed to change its vote until the roll of the States has been called, and every State has cast its vote.

Mr. Grady, of New York—Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment to the resolution of the gentleman from New York:

"When the vote of a State as announced by the chairman of the delegation from such State is challenged by any member of the delegation, then the Secretary shall call the names of the individual delegates from the States, and their individual preferences as expressed shall be recorded as the vote of the State."

Mr. Grady's amendment caused a lengthy debate pro and con, after which the roll of States was called. The vote resulted as follows:

STATES.	Yeas	Nays	STATES.	Yeas	Nays
Alabama	15	5	Mississippi	18	..
Arkansas	..	51	Missouri	8	24
California	16	..	Nebraska	5	5
Colorado	4	2	Nevada	6	..
Connecticut	2	10	New H'pshire	..	8
Delaware	6	..	New Jersey	14	4
Florida	2	6	New York	72	..
Georgia	12	12	N. Carolina	10	12
Illinois	22	22	Ohio	25	21
Indiana	30	..	Oregon	..	6
Iowa	6	20	Pennsylvania	21	39
Kansas	3	15	Rhode Island	..	8
Kentucky	20	6	S. Carolina	3	14
Louisiana	..	16	Tennessee	17	7
Maine	2	10	Texas	12	10
Maryland	16	..	Vermont	..	8
Massachu'tts	21	7	Virginia	6	18
Michigan	12	10	W. Virginia	9	3
Minnesota	..	10	Wisconsin	5	17

The Chair—The Secretary will announce the result of the vote.

The Secretary—Total number of votes cast, 795; yeas, 350 nays, 455. [Great applause.]

The Chair—The question now recurs upon the adoption of the original resolution, the amendment being declared lost. The Clerk will proceed to call the roll of States as before.

Mr. Harrington, of Missouri—I move that the call of the roll be dispensed with.

Motion seconded and unanimously adopted.

A vote was then taken on Mr. Smalley's resolution, which carried.

The following committees were then elected: On Credentials, on Permanent Organization, and on Platform and Resolutions

The Convention then adjourned until 11 a. m. to-morrow.

Second Day.

CHICAGO, July 9.—The convention was opened with prayer by the Right Rev. Bishop McLaren, of the diocese of Chicago.

Mr. Jenkins, of Wisconsin, sent up a communication from the Committee on Resolutions, saying that the work of the committee would not be completed until to-morrow morning.

Mr. Cummings, of Massachusetts, offered a resolution instructing the Committee on Resolutions to give a hearing to the Committee of Irish National League in favor of excluding aliens from acquiring real estate in America.

Resolutions were also offered and referred without debate in favor of planks in the platform against the employment of convict labor; for the enforcement of the eight-hour law; against sumptuary laws, and declaring that the vote yesterday on Grady's amendment (as to the unit rule) was intended to apply only to States which had instructed their representatives to vote as a unit.

The Committee on Credentials reported as follows: "In Massachusetts, a contest appearing in the Twelfth Congressional District, your committee, after a full investigation of the facts, unanimously recommend that the parties, Joseph Callen, E. F. McLearned, A. L. Perry and George H. Blolock, be admitted to this convention, and that each shall be entitled to one-half vote. Your committee unanimously recommend that the delegates from the several Territories embraced in the call of the National Democratic Convention and the District of Columbia be admitted to the floor of this convention, participating in its deliberations, and that they be entitled to vote upon all questions. A motion to amend, excluding delegates from the Territories from voting was voted down and the report was adopted.

Resolutions were offered and referred for the reduction of taxation to a revenue basis; letting the National Democratic Committee select its Chairman from the Democracy of the whole Union, and declaring that it shall not be restricted in its choice of Chairman to the members of the committee; against polygamy; against the acquisition of large tracts of public lands by corporations; for reform in the civil service by making Postmasters elective; against the unit rule in future conventions; for a systematic reduction of tariff taxes; providing that in case of the death of candidates for President and Vice President the Chairman shall call together the convention again to fill the vacancy; for the repeal of all legislation which, under the Republican rule, had tended to pauperize labor; for a constitutional amendment making the Presidential term of office six years, and to limit the disposal of public lands to actual settlers in quantities not more than 160 acres each.

PERMANENT ORGANIZATION.

The report of the Committee on Permanent Organization was then made, the name of W. H. Vilas, of Wisconsin, being presented as President, with a list of Vice-Presidents (one from each State), and several Secretaries and assistants, and that the Secretaries and Clerks of the temporary organization be continued under the permanent organization.

The report was unanimously adopted and Mr. Hendricks, of Indiana, with five other gentlemen, were appointed a committee to escort Mr. Vilas to the chair, who made a neat speech.

A resolution to call the roll of States for nomination was offered.

A delegate from Missouri moved an adjournment till 11 a. m., to-morrow, as the Committee on Platform had until to-morrow to make its report. The motion to adjourn was lost.

A motion was made to lay on the table the resolution to go into nominations now. A vote was taken by States and resulted in the negative.

THOMAS F. BAYARD NOMINATED.

The call of States for nomination for President and Vice-President was then commenced. When the State of Delaware was called there was an immediate outbreak of cheers. After the outbreak had subsided Mr. George Gray, of Delaware, came to the platform and addressed the convention, nominating Thomas F. Bayard in a telling speech. The nomination was seconded by General Chas. E. Hooker.

JOSEPH E. M'DONALD NOMINATED.

The call of States proceeded, and when Indiana was reached Hon. Thomas A. Hendricks arose and in a lengthy and eloquent address presented the name of Joseph E. McDonald.

John C. Black, of Illinois, took the platform and made a strong speech, seconding the nomination of Mr. McDonald.

ALLEN G. THURMAN NOMINATED.

At its conclusion Spencer, of California, said: "When California was called it was stated that she had a candidate to present. At that moment the gentleman who was to present its candidate was temporarily absent, owing to sickness. He is now present. We would ask the privilege of allowing California to name its candidate."

The Chair—Hearing no objection the privilege will be granted. California is considered as called.

Mr. Spencer—The delegates have decided that the Hon. John W. Breckinridge shall present the name of its candidate.

The Chair—Gentlemen of the Convention: Hon. John W. Breckenridge, a son of the last Democratic Vice-President, who was not unjustly deprived of his office, will address the Convention as the representative of the State of California.

Mr. Breckinridge was received with hearty applause, and nominated Allen G. Thurman in the following speech:

MR. CHAIRMAN AND GENTLEMEN OF THE CONVENTION: By inadvertence California was passed in this Democratic Convention, but we desire to say to you when the ballots are cast next November she will never be passed by a Republican candidate. [Applause.] She has sent us here her representatives in few and simple words to present for consideration to the Democratic party a man who needs no eulogy at her hands, whose name is enshrined in the hearts of the whole American people. She has asked us to present for your consideration a man, who, if you nominate, we believe there is a settled conviction in the hearts of all, will be the next President of the United States. Such a selection is a sacred trust and a solemn responsibility. There never was in the history of the party a rarer or grander opportunity to make an appeal to the country. Let us present a man of whose integrity and devotion to principle there has never been a question; upon whose character or reputation there has never fallen a shadow or blot or stain; whose ability and learning shall be commensurate with the duties of the high office to which we would elevate him. Let us nominate such a one, place him side by side with his antithesis, the Plumed Knight of Maine, and simply say to the American people, "Behold the man." [Applause.]

Gentlemen of this convention, we of California believe we can confidently turn and say, "Behold the man—Allan G. Thurman, of Ohio." [Loud cheers and applause, several delegates rising in their seats and waving their hats.] Of all the honored and illustrious names which have been and shall be presented to this convention there are none which lie nearer to the great heart of the American people than that lofty and intrepid statesman who, for more than twenty years has been the boldest and ablest Democratic advocate of Democratic doctrine and Democratic principles. California did not send us here to waste our time in eulogy, but simply to present his name. One word more, and it is this: We are told sir and it is the only objection which has been raised against him—this man who, at the close of the war, when the echoes of the strife were still vibrating in the air, annihilated in the great State of Ohio a Republican majority of nearly forty thousand votes—we are told as the only objection to him that Ohio is an October State; and our reply is gentlemen, that this is not a State, but a National Convention, and we are here to select a national candidate. [Applause.]

By unanimous consent, General Durbin Ward, of Ohio, took the platform and seconded the nomination of Thurman. After speaking of Senator Thurman's long and honorable career, General Ward said:

GENTLEMEN: Ohio is the battle ground of this Presidential election, make what you will of it. [Laughter and applause.] You can win without it, but if you carry that State in October the battle is already won, and you need go no further. [Loud applause.] Mr. President and gentlemen of this convention, I come here with unstudied words, having had no opportunity whatever to make the least preparation. But when the Senator who served twelve years in the Congress of the United States—gentlemen, who was a great lawyer, a ripe jurist, when he entered that body, and while he was there without any disrespect to anybody else, whenever a stranger was called on to point out a great men on the floor of the Senate of the United States, he invariably pointed to Allen G. Thurman, who carried his red bandana handkerchief. [Loud laughter.]

Gentlemen, we are entering upon the battle. The war is on. We want no plumed knight, clad in holiday armor of tournament fighting for his fair lady's braid of hair. You want an Ajax with hemlet and spear to thunder along the line and deal death-giving blows to the foe whom we meet. [Applause.] Allen G. Thurman is that man in thought, in intellect, in courage, in statesmanship, in adherence to constitutional law, in defense of the rights of the masses, in defiance of the power of monopoly, in defiance of the corruptions of the age. Who to-day stands as the peer of Allen C. Thurman, unless it be that man who has passed away from the arena of politics—Mr. Tilden? [Applause.]

The Democracy has carried the State of Ohio in the last two annual elections, and with Thurman as the Presidential candidate it would carry it again next October. He was no callow politician, but was the colossal figure in the Democratic party. [Applause.]

JOHN G. CARLISLE NOMINATED.

James A. McKenzie, of Kentucky, next came to the platform, and in the name of a State which he said would give 50,000 majority to the Democratic nomination, nominated the present distinguished Speaker of the American House of Commons, John G. Carlisle.

When the State of Massachusetts was called, Mr. Abbott, of that State, arose and said "Massachusetts presents no name for nomination at this time."

GROVER CLEVELAND NOMINATED.

When New York was called Mr. Lockwood presented the name of Grover Cleveland in the following address:

MR. CHAIRMAN, AND GENTLEMEN OF THE CONVENTION: It is with no ordinary feeling, and with no ordinary feeling of responsibility, that I appear before this convention as a representative of the Democracy of the State of New York [applause] for the purpose of placing in nomination a gentleman from the State of New York as a candidate for the Presidency of the United States. This responsibility is made greater when I remember that the richest pages of American history have been made up from the records of Democratic Administrations. [Applause.] This responsibility is made still greater when I remember that the only blot in the political history done at Washington, an outrage upon the rights of the American people, was in 1876, and that that outrage and that injury to justice is still unavenged [applause]; and this responsibility is not lessened when I recall the fact that the gentleman whose name I shall present to you has been my political associate from my youth. Side by side have we marched to the tune of Democratic music; side by side have we studied the principles of Jefferson and Jackson, and love the faith in which we believe, and during all this time he has occupied a position comparatively as a private citizen, yet always true and always faithful to the Democratic principle.

No man has greater respect or admiration for the honored names which have been presented in the convention than myself; but, gentlemen, the world is moving, and moving rapidly. From the North to the South new men—men who have acted but little in politics—are coming to the front [applause], and to-day there are hundreds and thousands of young men in this country, men who are to cast their first vote, men who are independent in politics, and they are looking to this convention, praying silently that there shall be no mistake made here. They want to drive the Republican party from power. They want to cast their vote for a Democrat in whom they believe. [Applause.] These people know from the record of the gentleman whose name I shall present that Democracy with him means honest government, pure government, and protection of the rights of the people of every class and every condition.

A little more than three years ago I had the honor, at the City of Buffalo, to present the name of the same gentleman for the office of Mayor of that city. It was presented then for the same reason, for the same causes that we present it now. It was because the government of that city had become corrupt and had been debauched, and political integrity sat not in high places. The people looked for a man who would represent the contrary, and without hesitation they named Grover Cleveland as the man.

[At this point there was a wild burst of applause. Some of the New York delegation, practically the entire Wisconsin delegation, and some few scattering delegates stood up and made all the demonstrations possible in Cleveland's favor. As soon as the uproar subsided and comparative order was regained Mr. Lockwood continued.]

The result of that election and his holding that office was that in less than nine months the State of New York found herself in a position to want just such a candidate and for such a purpose, and when at the convention in 1882 his name was placed in nomination for the office of Governor of New York the same people, the same class of people, knew that that meant honest government; it meant pure government, and it was ratified by the people. [Cheers.]

And, gentlemen, now, after eighteen months' service there, the Democracy of the State of New York come to you to ask you to give to the country, to give to the independent and Democratic voters of the country, to give to the young men of the country, the new blood of the country, and present the name of Grover Cleveland as its standard-bearer for the next four years.

I shall indulge in no eulogy of Mr. Cleveland. I shall not attempt any further description of his political career. It is known. His Democracy is known. His statesmanship is known throughout the length and breadth of this land, and all I ask of this convention is to let no passion, no prejudice, influence their duty which they owe to the people of this country. Be not deceived, Grover Cleveland can give the Democratic party the thirty-six electoral votes of the State of New York on election day. He can, by his purity of character, by his purity of administration, by his fearless and undaunted courage to do right, bring to you more votes than anybody else.

Gentlemen of the Convention, but one word

[CONTINUED ON FOURTH PAGE.]

THE RECORDER.

WEDNESDAY, JULY 16. 1884.

We are authorized to announce
DR. JAMES S. BROWN,
of Warsaw, as a candidate for the State Senate, from this, the 23d Senatorial District, subject to the action of the Democratic party.

We are authorized to announce
I. J. DAUGHTERS
as a candidate for County Superintendent of Schools at the August election.

We are authorized to announce
H. J. FOSTER
as a candidate for County Superintendent of schools at the August election.

CALIFORNIA LETTER.

PASKEENTA, CAL., June 25, 1884.
To the Editors of the Recorder:

Believing that a few remarks concerning my visit to this State might be of interest to at least a few of your readers, I, therefore, communicate the following sketch:

Early Monday morning, the 9th inst., I left Slater, Missouri, and arrived at Kansas City same day, where I was kindly entertained by Messrs. Garnett till Tuesday night, when we took a train, the destination of which was San Francisco. As we rattled along through the suburbs of a slumbering city lighted by crescent wood and burning stars, I greatly admired the situation, yet my mind instinctively wandered back to the Old Kentucky shore.

On Wednesday we swept across the broad State of Kansas. For 300 miles or more, running along the Arkansas river, and as far as the eye can reach, so far is seen a vast, fertil belt of prairie land. Thousands of happy homes may be built in this now sparsely settled but productive tract of Western land. Ere the king of day had descended from his thrown and gone from view in the western horizen, we entered that State of universal gold renown. We saw but little of interest here, a few hills rising in the distance to break the monotony of a prairie, dotted here and there by a herdsman's tent, was the last scenery we saw in this young but thrifty State, Colorado.

Early the next morning, even before the first thin rays of light came stealing up the mountain side, all were aroused by the blowing and puffing of ponderous engines, which were drawing our train up a heavy grade near Raton, N. M. This place is 6,688 feet above sea level, which altitude made it sufficiently cool for overcoats and cloaks to be comfortable. The scenery here, as we saw it by moonlight, was picturesque indeed. High up, and often perpendicular, stratum upon stratum of earth and rock ascend, as if they would reach into the very stella dome. A few gorges, with shrubbery growing from their brinks, as though to bind up the gaping wounds of Old Earth, also add to the grandeur of this wild and mountainous land. Before noon we reached a more level and somewhat civilized country, where a few cattle and sheep were seen grazing. The antelope is often seen there.

The noted cattle ranch of Ingersoll & Co. is not far from this region. Las Vegas is the most important town in this section of the country. The buildings are small, many of them built of earth. The surrounding country is dry and sterile.

We next passed into the great cedar belt, and for hours' travel, valley, hill and mountain, form one vast cedar grove, some claim the largest in the world.

A few hours later we passed an old Mexican town, built of logs and earth, inhabited by beings filthy and poor. With an altitude of 6454 feet, the natives enjoy a pleasant summer never having such a thing as sunstroke, yet you remember this is far south of your country and others, whose people are so often seriously effected by excessive heat.

Just before reaching Rowe we crossed the Pecos river. Looking west from there snow, capped mountains were distinctly seen, an object of great delight to him who can appreciate the sublime in a landscape scene. We traveled some 20 miles when we came to the highest peak of the Glorieta Range; as the train stopped at a station here, a Boston artist photograped this mountain, clothed with the verdure of evergreen shrubs, although this the most beautiful elevation seen, with its even, sloping sides gradually tapering to a point, capped with cedar and pine, it was, certainly, no mean object.

All day we traveled through deep cuts, narrow passes, swept along over sandy plain, curved around the base of mountains, into the whose very bowels men dig for that precious metal—gold.

A little before night the train reached Albuquerque, a town of some 10,000 inhabitants, where we remained over night, since the road a few miles below was washed away by the high waters of the Rio Grande river. The next morning, at early dawn, we crossed the river, which was high, rapid and some two miles wide. Across the river is a small Indian village, houses built of earth as usual. Several squaws came on the train to sell articles of various kinds; men were lying, wrapped in their blankets, about their huts, lazily whiling the time away. Down the valley a few miles we saw some fine vineyards, orchards, gardens and a few fields of grain. The Mexican seems to have considerable industry, fencing off their land, irrigating where necessary and seemingly prosperous and happy. Before noon we passed over a dangerous place in the road, where the river ran against it with great force, often between the ties and at times even over the track. This was the condition of the road for over fifteen miles, the river being higher and more destructive than ever known before. In the afternoon, we traveled through what was once a great volcanic region. Vast beds of cooled lava were in view for many miles. A kind of wire grass, a shrub resembling sage, and a plant called by the natives soap-weed, is all the vegetation to be found in this district.

As we traveled on, beautiful lakes were seen a little distance ahead, but, lo! when neared, were transformed into sand. These we saw often during our trip. Every one has, of course, heard of these delusions on a desert.

While the train was stopping to take on a supply of water at a station by the name of Engle, I stepped off and while walking along through the depot, a young, stout, healthy-looking man, with bearded face and cowboys garb, took my hand and familiarly called my name. Gazing for a moment on his smiling face, I recognized an old friend in the person of Joe Wasson. He is running a ranch for ex-regent Bowman, of Kentucky. Think he is doing well, and perhaps will make a fortune, as many have done and are doing in cattle ranching.

At Rincon we crossed the Rio Grande for the third and last time. The country is quite sandy, and just before running into Deming, we were overtaken by a sand storm, which literally filled the air without, and ere the windows could be closed, the eyes of many passengers within. The scenery in Arizona, as one traveling on the A. T. & S. F. railway sees it, is rather monotonous. Deserts miles in width on either side, sand hills with undulatory appearance, barren mountains looming up in the far distance are sights beheld with interest at first, but soon the barrenness of the country, intense heat and flying sand create in the mind a feeling of disgust rather than admiration for this lonely and destitute portion of the U. S. We passed through the entire territory from east to west, and sincerely I believe more produce could be grown on 500 acres of choice land in Ky., than on the whole portion of the territory we saw, which must have been several hundred thousand acres.

There is one plant, the growth of which perhaps is nowhere excelled, the Cactus. It may seem strange to many of you to hear of Cactus from 15 to 20 feet high; nevertheless thousand of such are seen in Arizona. The camel was introduced there a number of years ago, but was not a success. The Burro is now largely the beast of burden.

At Ft. Yuma we laid over till Sunday afternoon, waiting for transfer by boat over the Colorado river, the railroad having been washed away by high water. The U. S. soldiers were removed from the fort about a year ago. The State Prison located there, contains some hundred prisoners, the most of whom are white men. This does not speak well for our race, when we remember that the number of Indians, Mexicans and Chinamen are largely in excess of our people in that community. It is amusing to hear the variety of languages spoken there, some four or five often in hearing at once. Would that some of our fair sex of Boone, who are advocates of bangs, could see the native squaws of Ft. Yuma. Her bangs bang anything in that line ever indulged in by the leaders of a style which certainly came from this heathen people. Of all human beings I have ever seen, the Indian is the most degraded. Noble red man indeed! Can he who is filthy, indolent and ignorant, be called noble? Half clad, wallowing in vermin and filth, they create at once a feeling of disgust and pity in the civilized mind.

Across the river, we soon entered the great Colorado Desert. Perhaps few of the people in Boone have any idea of the amount of desert land in this State. Almost the whole of the southern portion of the State is little fit for cultivation. Los Angelos and a few other counties of course excepted.

Los Angelos, "The city of the angels," is certainly a fine city. Fruits of a tropical clime are cheap and plentiful; flowers of the richest hue and trees of evergreen foliage are on ever hand. These combined with its excellent climate, make it a place fit for the gods.

From Los Angelos to Oakland, a distance of 400 miles, nothing of great interest is to be seen. At Oakland we took a steamer and soon anchored safely at the wharf at San Francisco. It takes but a short time for the large ferry steamer to cross the bay at any point. Taking a cable car I soon reached the Golden Gate Park which contains a thousand acres, one hundred of which are under cultivation. I will not attempt to picture to you this beautiful park with its gravel walks and drives, pools of sparkling water sweetened by the flowers growing on their very brink—withal a celestial spot where mortals come and rest a while for tasting the sweets of a bitter world.

A few miles travel on the cars—small steam cars for the occasion, and we beheld the waters of the great Pacific. Hundreds of families go daily to the Cliff House and there spend the day. A walk of a hundred yards or more and we are on the beach. Here the children love to play with the waves as they come rolling in from the deep and break upon the beach. In their sport they are at times nearly swept away by the tide. A few rods north of the beach and some 50 yards from shore, are several peaks of rocks lifted up between 40 and 50 feet out of water. On these are seen scores of that slimy animal, the sea lion. It is quite a sight to see them climb the sides of the rough edged rock and leap off into the angry waves below. These animals are, of course, protected by law or else they were soon shot by the curious visitors.

Ascending a few hundred yards over sand and rock, the summit of Telegraph Hill was reached. Up this hill throngs of people climbed in the month of July '79 to wave adieu to the ill fated Jeannette, commanded by Captain Cook in his unfortunate Artic Expedition. I can not imagine a point where one could behold a more sublime scene than there. The broad Ocean to the left, the Golden Gate with its sailing fleet in front, to the right and near, fine Land scape scenes—what grander sights could mortal wish? Among other sights of interest in San Francisco, the visitor should not fail to see Woodward's Garden, which is quite a place of resort for the pleasure seeker.

After spending a few days in that city and Oakland, I left for this county, which is in the northern part of the State. A few miles from Oakland our train was transported across an arm of the Bay by Soland, the largest steamer of local use on the coast. There are four railroad tracks on this huge vessel, which plows through the water with rapid speed. After spending a day or two at Red Bluff, the county seat of Tehama, I came to the residence of Mr. G. M. Snelling, of Saline county, Mo., with whom I yet remain. This is not far from the Coast Range, on the foot hills of which I have climbed to view the surrounding country Mt. Shasta, whose summit is capped with snow, is distinctly seen from here.

Wheat in this, the Sacrimento valley, is good, yet somewhat damaged by the late rains. Harvesting has begun in earnest—hands scarce and wages high.

This county is both a grain and fruit growing belt. Figs, almonds, pomegranates, peaches, apples and grapes are all growing well in Mr. Snelling's yard. Vegetables do not thrive unless near a creek or on irrigated land.

The Chinese cultivate their garden and peddle vegetables to the ranchers as farmers are called here.

No corn is grown in this county, except for garden use. Considerable barley is raised for hogs, cattle and horses. This is the time of year that all stock must be fed, for there is not a particle of grass. Where there is no grain the ground is as bare as your county roads.

There are many other things here about which I would like to write, but fearing the patience of the indulgent reader is already exhausted, I must refrain. Yours Truly,

T. O. GRAVES.

ALL the old bachelors will support Cleveland.

INDIANA is no longer a doubtful State in November.

IN Harrison county a negro man fell into a threshing machine and was literally ground to pieces.

THE New York business men don't consider that Cleveland's election will embarrass business in the least.

HON. ATTILLA COX represents Kentucky on the committee to inform Mr. Cleveland of his nomination.

KENTON county will send a contesting delegation to the Judicial Convention to day. Kenton generally has a row in her conventions.

HENDRICKS yields to the demands of his party, and yet while he would prefer the first place on the ticket, he will not shirk, but will make his influence felt in the canvass.

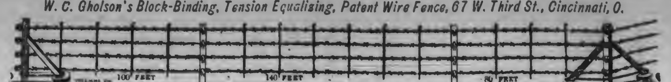
THE primaries last Saturday by no means settled the question as to who will be nominated at Maysville today. The friends of Judge O'Hara in this end of the district consider that Mr. Ward was instrumental in compassing his defeat in the last district convention, and are disposed to form a combination of the Lacy and Hallam men to avenge that wrong.

IT is a question with the School Commissioner as to whether an examination of teachers under his supervision, would be legal under the new law, and to avoid any complications that might arrise were he to issue any certificates he has decided to hold no examinations, leaving that business wholy for the Superintendent of Public Schools who will be elected the first Monday in next month. All teachers can be examined in August.

FOR SALE.

A good dwelling house with 2 acres of ground, the property of Edward Fowler, deceased. Inquire of C. A. FOWLER.

For Sale.



A good frame dwelling house of four rooms and all necessary out-buildings, with half acre lot, in the town of Bellevue, Ky., on the Ohio river. Inquire or address,
JOHN DECK, Grant P. O.,
Boone County, Ky.

NOTICE.

The heirs of Maria Rouse, deceased, are hereby notified that I will be in Burlington the first Monday in each month, (County Court day) to pay them their distributable shares of said decedent's estate.
JONAS ROUSE, Adm'r.

For Sale!

75 high grade sheep, 65 ewes, remainder yearling bucks, all cross of Oxford and Southdown, also the lambs of this season. Will sell worth the money. They are sound and all right. Will divide them to suit buyer. W. O. KIRTLEY, Bullittsville, Ky

W. C. Gholson's Block-Binding, Tension Equalizing, Patent Wire Fence, 67 W. Third St., Cincinnati, O.

As special Agent for the Gholson Fencing Company, for Boone County, I am prepared to build their patent fence at any time. This is the cheapest and best fence in use. It needs no talking up, as it is fast selling itself wherever it is introduced. Any number of wires can be used.

28-1y-84. G. C. GRADDY, Bullittsville, Ky.

The second addition of Spring Suitings has just been received.

H. F. BLASE,

540 Madison Street
COVINGTON, - - - - KY

Large assortment of Men's, Youths', Boys' & Children's Ready-made Clothi'g.

BARGAINS IN

Milline'y Goods!

ALL LADIES' HATS, BONNETS AND FEATHERS NOW LEFT OVER WILL BE SOLD AT

Less Than Half Price

(Original Price,) in order to close the season. Broad-Brim Hats, called the "Cartwheel," will be closed out at 30c. each; Large Bushy Tips, three in a bunch, 88c. a bunch, worth $1 75. All other Hats and Bonnets at the same great sacrifice.

MILLINERY DEPARTMENT,

at COLTER'S,

Rising Sun, Ind.

SOUTHERN

EXPOSITION

LOUISVILLE,

Opens August 16th. Closes October 25th, 1884.

15 ACRES UNDER ONE ROOF.

TWO CONCERTS EACH DAY

By Cappa's and Gilmore's, the most famous bands of the world.

Largest and Finest Display of Machinery in MOTION ever witnessed anywhere.

LOWEST RAILWAY RATES EVER GIVEN IN THE STATE.

ART BUILDINGS,

CONTAINING THE CHOICEST PICTURES IN AMERICA.

Ten works of Kentucky's great sculptor, Joel Hart, the best possible collection.
One hundred counties in Kentucky will make exhibits, displaying products which will demonstrate this State's tremendous capacities and future greatness. An occasion for Kentucky pride and glory—KENTUCKY TRIUMPHANT.

AN IMMENSE LIVE STOCK EXHIBITION

Presenting at one time in line over $1,000,000 worth of horses, comprising all the sires that have made Kentucky famous. The exhibit will surpass in extent the Royal Stock Show in London, and present to the visitor the grandest, completest, and most magnificent Stock exhibit the world has ever witnessed, and a sight that can not be duplicated in the world.

BENNETT H. YOUNG, President. J. M. WRIGHT, General Manager.

WM. COLTER,

—DEALER IN—

Clothing, Boots, Shoes, Hats, Caps, Millinery Goods, Cloaks, Etc.

JOB LOTS OF ABOVE A SPECIALTY,

We are just now devoting our entire energy to making preparations for the ensuing season, and can promise to call your attention to a stock of Boots and Shoes, Rubber Goods, Men's and Boys' Ready-Made Clothing, Ladies' Cloaks, and Wraps, Millinery Goods, Ribbons, Mens' Hats, Buck Gloves, &c., in which, for real solid and genuine Bargains, we challenge competition. We intend to lead the market in this section much more than we have ever done before, which we can at once prove to you at your first inspection. Have already bought over 500 Overcoats, over 300 Suits, 1,000 pairs of Gloves, over 70 cases Kip Boots, 16 cases Mens' Hats and Caps, all grades. And we are not asleep if it is hot. The above line of Goods is kept in the lower half and 2nd floor of our Mammoth House. We are slashing down prices on all Summer Goods now, as we do not carry any Goods over. Thanks for past favors. Respectfully,

Wm. COLTER, Rising Sun, Ind.

CENTRAL UNIVERSITY,

COLLEGE OF PHILOSOPHY, LETTERS, AND SCIENCE, RICHMOND, KY.

Next Session will open Wednesday, September 3d, 1884.

ADVANTAGES.—A FULL FACULTY of able and experienced instructors. Comprehensive course of study and thorough instruction. Completeness of buildings and apparatus.
Social Influence.—The community is distinguished for its refined culture and hospitality, and young men find homes in the BEST families. Not a Saloon in the city.
Healthfulness of Location.—Richmond is at an elevation of more than 500 feet above the Ohio river, and free from all malarial influences.
Accessibility.—Richmond is the geographical centre of the State, in the heart of the Blue Grass region, and is within a few hours, by rail, of Louisville, Cincinnati, Knoxville and Chattanooga.
Moderate Expenses.—Board in the New Memorial Hall, lighted by gas and heated by steam—an elegant, comfortable home—$110 per annum for everything except washing, and in the best families from $3 to $4 per week. Total necessary expenses for the ten months, from $150 to $240.
For full information and catalogue, apply to L. H. BLANTON, D. D., Chancellor.

ELECTION NOTICE.

An election will be held in each voting precinct in Boone county, Kentucky on Monday the 4th day of August, 1884, for the following offices: Judge of the Superior Court Third Superior Court District to serve for the unexpired term of Judge Richard Reed, deceased. Sheriff of Boone county. Constable in each district, and one Justice of the Peace in Florence district. J. R. CLUTTERBUCK, S. B. C.
July 7th, 1884.

THE COMPLETE HOME. ... W. H. GARRETSON & CO., Lexington, Kentucky. Also other great new books and Bibles.

HANOVER COLLEGE,

Fifty-second year begins Sept. 10. Classical and Scientific courses, with Preparatory Department. Open to both sexes. No saloons. Expenses small. On the Ohio, near Madison. For catalogue, address President FISHER, Hanover Jefferson County, Indiana.

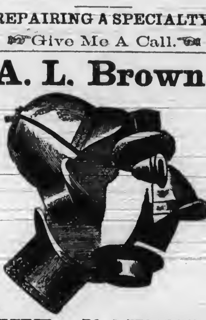
SCIENCE-HILL

An English & Classical school for girls.
FOUNDED 1825 BY MRS. TEVIS.

Aims to give its pupils elements of a complete education. Faculty selected from best Eastern Colleges. Terms reasonable. Send for catalogue. W. T. Poynter, D. D., Principal, Shelbyville, Ky.

A. M. ACRA,

HARNESS —DEALER IN— SADDLES.



Fine and Cheap Buggy Harness.
BURLINGTON, KY.

I also have a full stock of BUGGY WHIPS, LAP DUSTERS, ANKLE BOOTS and TROTTING BALLS and everything else usually kept in a first-class harness shop.

REPAIRING A SPECIALTY.

Give Me A Call.

A. L. Brown,

THE HATTER,

Cor. Pike and Washington Streets
COVINGTON, - - KY.

Has always on hand a large variety of Men's, Boys' and Children's Hats, and prices GUARANTEED to be as low as the lowest.

Gents' Furnishing Goods a Specialty.

GOLD for the working class. Send 10c for postage, and we will mail you free, a royal, valuable box of sample goods that will put you in the way of making more money in a few days than you ever thought possible at any business. Capital not required. We will start you. You can work part the time only. The work is universally adapted to both sexes, young and old. You can easily earn from 50 cents to $5 every evening. That all who want work may test the business, we make this unparalleled offer; to all who are not well satisfied we will send $1 to pay for the trouble of writing us. Full particulars, directions, etc., sent free. Fortunes will be made by those who give their whole time to the work. Great success absolutely sure. Don't delay. Start now. Address STINSON & Co., Portland, Maine.

$66 a week at home. $5 outfit free. Pay absolutely sure. No risk. Capital not required. If you want business at which persons of either sex, young or old, can make great pay all the time they work, with absolute certainty, write for particulars to H. HALLETT & Co., Portland, Maine.

A PRIZE Send six cents for postage, and receive free, a costly box of goods which will help you to more money right away than anything else in this world. All of either sex, succeed from the first hour. The broad road to fortune opens before the workers, absolutely sure. At once address, TRUE & Co., Augusta, Maine.

AGENTS wanted for The Lives of all the Presidents of the U. S. The largest handsomest, best book ever sold for more than twice our price. The best selling book in America. Immense profits to agents. All intelligent people want it. Any one can become a successful agent. Terms free. HALLET BOOK Co., Portland, Maine.

VIGOROUS HEALTH ... TESTED FOR 5 YEARS by use in thousands of cases. Founded on scientific medical principles, it has been growing in favor and reputation while its numerous competitors have invariably failed. The direct application of this remedy to the seat of the disease makes its specific influence felt without delay. The natural functions of the human organism are restored. The animating elements of life which have been wasted are given back. The buoyant energy of the brain and muscular system renders the patient cheerful; he gains strength with rapidity.
NERVOUS DEBILITY, organic weakness and numerous obscure diseases, baffling the skill of best physicians, result from youthful indiscretion, too free indulgence, and over brain work.
Do not temporize while such enemies lurk in your system. Take a remedy that has cured thousands, and does not interfere with attention to business or cause any pain or inconvenience.
Send for a Descriptive Pamphlet giving Anatomical Illustrations, which will convince the most sceptical that they can be restored to perfect manhood, and fitted for the duties of life, same as if never affected. Sent free to any one. Remedy sold ONLY by the
HARRIS REMEDY CO. MF'G. CHEMISTS.
306½ N. 10th St. ST. LOUIS, MO.

$1000 REWARD

For any machine hulling and cleaning fit for market as much Clover Seed in one DAY as the VICTOR

VICTOR ILLUSTRATED Pamphlet mailed FREE. NEWARK MACHINE CO. NEWARK, O.

W. J. RICE,
CARPENTER & BUILDER,
BULLITSVILLE, KY.

Is prepared Raise or Move EITHER LOG or FRAME BUILDINGS On Short Notice.

And at the Lowest Possible Figures.
38-tf Your orders respectfully solicited

INCORPORATED UNDER THE LAWS OF MISSOURI.

CENTRAL MEDICAL & SURGICAL INSTITUTE

OF ST. LOUIS, MO.

SUCCESSORS TO DR. BUTTS' DISPENSARY. OFFICE & ROOMS, No. 920 LOCUST ST.
CHAS. L. LaBARGE, M.D., Pres't & Physician in Charge.
NELSON CHESMAN, Treas. & Business Manager.

This Institute has ample facilities and an experienced Faculty. While it succeeds to a large business, which has been established for years, it will aim to extend its medical and surgical practice, giving skillful and scientific treatment to CHRONIC DISEASES of the Head, Spine, Lungs and Air Passages, Heart, Liver, Stomach and Bowels, Rheumatism, Dyspepsia, Consumption and Asthma.
BLOOD IMPURITIES, inherited or caused by impure association, Scrofula, Fever Sores, Ulcers, etc.
DEFORMITIES of the Limbs, Spinal Curvature, Wry-Neck, Diseases of the Joints, Piles, Fistula, Rupture, etc.
WEAKNESS and wasting diseases in old and young men, also all diseases of the genito-urinary organs.
FEMALE irregularities and weaknesses, causing pain in the back or side, etc.
Personal interviews with patients are always preferred. Those unable to visit the Institute will be furnished with blank lists of questions that will aid them in making a full statement of their cases and if not requiring a surgical operation they can be successfully treated by correspondence, and medicines sent by mail or express. To enable us to send proper list of questions applicants should give a brief statement of their trouble.
(The Treasurer of the corporation is of Nelson Chesman & Co., Advertising Agents, and refers to the publisher of this or any other newspaper in the United States or Canadas regarding responsibility.)
Consultation at Office or by mail free and invited

HARTER'S THE ONLY TRUE IRON TONIC

FACTS REGARDING Dr. Harter's Iron Tonic.

It will purify and enrich the BLOOD, regulate the LIVER and KIDNEYS, and RESTORE THE HEALTH and VIGOR of YOUTH! In all those diseases requiring a certain and efficient TONIC, especially Dyspepsia, Want of Appetite, Indigestion, Lack of Strength, etc., its use is marked with immediate and wonderful results. Bones, muscles and nerves receive new force. Enlivens the mind and supplies Brain Power.
LADIES suffering from all complaints peculiar to their sex will find in DR. HARTER'S IRON TONIC a safe and speedy cure. It gives a clear and healthy complexion. The strongest testimony to the value of DR. HARTER'S IRON TONIC is that frequent attempts at counterfeiting have only added to the popularity of the original. If you earnestly desire health do not experiment—get the ORIGINAL AND BEST.
(Send your address to The Dr. Harter Med. Co., St. Louis, Mo., for our "DREAM BOOK." Full of strange and useful information, free.)
DR. HARTER'S IRON TONIC IS FOR SALE BY ALL DRUGGISTS AND DEALERS EVERYWHERE.

TUTT'S PILLS

TORPID BOWELS, DISORDERED LIVER, and MALARIA.

From these sources arise three-fourths of the diseases of the human race. These symptoms indicate their existence: Loss of Appetite, Bowels costive, Sick Headache, fullness after eating, aversion to exertion of body or mind, Eructation of food, Irritability of temper, Low spirits, A feeling of having neglected some duty, Dizziness, Fluttering at the Heart, Dots before the eyes, highly colored Urine, CONSTIPATION, and demand the use of a remedy that acts directly on the Liver. As a Liver medicine TUTT'S PILLS have no equal. Their action on the Kidneys and Skin is also prompt; removing all impurities through these three "scavengers of the system," producing appetite, sound digestion, regular stools, a clear skin and a vigorous body. TUTT'S PILLS cause no nausea or griping nor interfere with daily work and are a perfect
ANTIDOTE TO MALARIA.
Sold everywhere, 25c. Office, 44 Murray St., N.Y.

TUTT'S HAIR DYE.

GRAY HAIR OR WHISKERS changed instantly to a GLOSSY BLACK by a single application of this DYE. Sold by Druggists, or sent by express on receipt of $1.
Office, 44 Murray Street, New York.
TUTT'S MANUAL OF USEFUL RECEIPTS FREE.

For A Business Education Attend the

Commercial College

Of Kentucky University, Lexington, Ky. Students can begin any week-day in the year. No vacation. Time to complete the Full Diploma Business Course about 10 weeks. Average Total Cost, including Tuition, Set of Books and Board in a family, $90. Telegraphy a specialty. Literary Course free. Ladies received. 5,000 successful graduates. Over 300 pupils last year from 15 to 45 years of age, from 22 States. Instruction is practically and individually imparted by 10 teachers. Special courses for Teachers and Business Men. University Diploma presented to its graduates. This beautiful city is noted for its healthfulness and society, and is on leading Railroads. Full Session begins Sept. 8th. For circulars and full particulars, address its President, WILBUR R. SMITH, Lexington, Ky.

TESTED BY TIME.
STRONG'S PECTORAL PILLS
IN SUCCESSFUL USE FOR HALF A CENTURY.

The best Remedy for Coughs, Colds, Dyspepsia and Rheumatism. Insure Healthy Appetite, Good Digestion, Regularity of the Bowels. A precious boon to delicate females, soothing and bracing the nervous system, and giving vigor and health to every fibre of the body. Sold by Druggists. For Pamphlets, etc., address C. E. HULL & CO. 18 Cedar St., N.Y. City.

FOUND AT LAST.
THE ANIMAL SAFE GUARD.

Patent applied for. Absolute cure for all breachy stock. Simple and safe appliance; always at hand. No Rope, no Yoke, no pole used to injure stock. No animal will jump a fence when this is used. Send One Dollar for Farm-right and full instruction. Address
C. F. BROSEKE, Justice of the Peace, Falmouth, Ky.

WRIGHT'S INDIAN VEGETABLE PILLS
FOR THE LIVER
And all Bilious Complaints

Safe to take, being purely vegetable; no griping. Price 25 cts. All Druggists.

SANITARIUM, Riverside, Cal. The dry climate cures Nose, Throat, Lungs, full idea, 36 p., route, cost, free.

MARRIAGE AND HEALTH GUIDE. 260 pgs. Illustrated.
All that the doubtful curious or thoughtful want to know. Cloth and gilt bind 50 cts, paper 25c, Marriage Guide, 111 p 15c, and sealed, money or stamps, by DR. WHITTIER 200 RACE STREET, CINCINNATI, OHIO. The great specialist, Nervous Debility, Impediments to Marriage, Constitution and Pamphlet free.

FREE! RELIABLE SELF-CURE.

A favorite prescription of one of the most noted and successful specialists in the U. S. (now retired) for the cure of Nervous Debility, Lost Manhood, Weakness and Decay. Sent in plain sealed envelope free. Druggists can fill it.
Address DR. WARD & CO., Louisiana, Mo.

PISO'S CURE FOR CONSUMPTION
CURES WHERE ALL ELSE FAILS. Best Cough Syrup. Tastes good. Use in time. Sold by druggists. 25 CTS.

KENTUCKY UNIVERSITY,
LEXINGTON, KY.

Three Colleges—Arts, Bible and Commercial. College of Arts has two courses, Classical and Scientific with twelve professors and teachers; fees, $18 per session of nine months. College of the Bible, no tuition fees. Students of the College of the Bible have access without charge to the classes of the College of Arts, and those of the College of Arts to the classes of the College of the Bible. Session opens the Second Monday in September. For catalogues, address CHAS. LOUIS LOOS, President of the University, or ROBT. GRAHAM, President of the College of the Bible.

OPIUM and WHISKY HABITS cured at home without pain. Book of particulars sent Free. B. M. WOOLLEY, M. D., Atlanta, Ga.

Local News.

Joe Hitter has gone into the bee business.

The Burlington calaboose occasionally catches a disorderly.

Threshing wheat will furnish entertainment for the farmers for awhile.

Rice & Westbay will have beef every Saturday and Wednesday hereafter.

The rain Saturday night was timely. The corn, tobacco and other growing crops needed it.

Beaver is the only district that will take a vote on the local option question at the August election.

A. M. Acra has a new harness maker. Mit tried to do the work himself, but a few days taught him that he could not keep up, so he called in help.

James Tolin, our worthy Plattsburg correspondent, is one of the happiest mortals that dwells on Woolper. Its name is Wade Hampton Tolin.

P. H. Duncan will hold a Sunday-school convention at South Fork Christian church, beginning Friday night before the 3d Saturday in July,—July the 18th.

The married ladies of the town are organizing a party to "excurt" to Split Rock one day this week. Cold dinners in Burlington will be the style on that particular day.

A sure way to save money. Have Joe Reed do your house painting, graining and buggy painting. His process of painting insures a good and lasting job. Prices very reasonable.

The colored people had a large meeting here Sunday, and after the morning services the congregation assembled at Mrs. Dempsey's pond, where one woman received the ordinance of baptism.

We are glad to see that Mr. Conrad has a good passenger travel since he commenced carrying the mail. In a few days he will put a nice, new conveyance on the route, and will do all in his power to make his passengers comfortable.

W. R. Kirtley will start to Denver, Colorado, next Tuesday. He contemplates locating there and will look out a location for a cattle ranch which will be purchased or established by him, a Mr. Garnett, of Missouri, and J. M. Kirtley, of Covington.

Commencing with next Tuesday my wagon will go to the city every Tuesday instead of on Wednesday as heretofore. The public will please bear the change in mind. Leave Burlington 6 a. m.—returning, leave Cincinnati at 3 p. m. sharp. JAMES WESTBAY.

When you see Jim Conner come rushing into town with his hat resting on his shoulders, while a handkerchief encircles his neck, you may set it down that, in a few minutes, the town will be thronged with lambs and sheep. That's a sign that never fails in dry weather.

Bellevue's organization of base ball talent came out last Saturday to try conclusions with the local team if one could be found. Nine players were mustered and the fun commenced. When the game was declared out, and the tallies footed up, they showed 8 to 16 in favor of Burlington.

The day has come when to leave the grave of the departed one unmarked by a neat stone, is not suffered by even those in the most ordinary walks of life, and all can be pleased in both design and price by Huschart & Co., of Lawrenceburg, Ind. John Beall, of Hebron, is their agent.

A few days since Brasier Rouse had cut off a limb on which a swarm of bees had settled, and was handing it down from the tree to his father, when he dropped it, the bunch of bees striking the old gentleman on the head, and notwithstanding his frantic efforts he was badly stung about the head and face. Brasier can tell how such a performance looks to a man up a tree.

An organ epidemic struck Burlington last week, and four new instruments of that specie came to town in two days. Mrs. Dr. Grant disposed of her old organ and replaced it with a new Estey. Mrs. Virginia Huey purchased a new Estey for her daughters, and James Metcalf made his little daughter who lives with Mr. and Mrs. W. T. German, a present of a fine one and W. F. McKim also purchased his wife a nice one.

A son of Erin came in from the country Saturday, and after imbibing freely, mounted his charger and commenced taking in the town. In his travels he collided with Abe Utz's horse and buggy. The horse taking fright, broke loose and ran off, the buggy being capsized and reduced to a wreck. About dark Judge Dills concluded to furnish the man with a lodging place for the night and had him registered at the county cooler, where he remained till Sunday morning, when he was released to return home, it is to be hoped a wiser man.

OFFICE OF SCHOOL COMMISSIONER.

GRANT, BOONE CO., KY., June 11.

To the teachers and people of Boone county:

There will be no examination of applicants for certificates during the month of July.

I would respectfully ask you not to use my name in connection with the race for County Superintendent.

With many thanks for the interest manifested, I remain yours

Most Respectfully. D. M. SNYDER.

THE CONVENTION.

At a mass meeting of the Democrats of Boone county, held at the Court-house in Burlington, on the 12th day of July, 1884, for the purpose of selecting delegates to the Judicial convention for the Third Superior Court District to be held at Maysville, on the 17th day of July, 1884, for the nomination of a Superior Judge.

Dr. J. G. Furnish called the meeting to order, and stated the object of the meeting.

On motion of John Stephens, Judge Cyrus Riddell was elected chairman.

On motion of W. T. Snyder, A. B. Parker was elected Secretary.

It was moved and carried that the Chairman appoint a committee of five to select delegates for Boone county.

F. Riddell moved that the delegates from this county be instructed to vote for J. Q. Ward as long as he is a candidate before the convention.

John Stephens moved to amend the motion by inserting the name of B. D. Lacy.

T. W. Finch moved to amend by inserting the name of O.B.Hallam, which amendment was voted down.

The amendment offered by John Stephens was voted on and carried, and the original motion as amended was carried.

On motion of F. Riddell, the delegates were instructed for J. Q. Ward for second choice

The Chairman appointed the following committee to select delegates, to wit: G. M. Riley, F. Riddell, F. Dickey, W. R. Kirtley and Edgar Cropper, who reported the following list of delegates and alternates:

Taylorport—Dr. J. C. Terrill, delegate; Walter Whitaker, alternate.

Burlington—Dr. J. G. Furnish, delegate; L. H. Dills, alternate.

Petersburg—W. T. Snyder, delegate; Charles Schramm, alternate.

Bellevue—J. S. Huey, delegate; D. M. Snyder, alternate.

Carlton—J. A. Wilson, delegate; Omer Kirtley, alternate.

Big Bone—Dr. Sam Adams, delegate; Mosby Allen, alternate.

Beaver—Jos. Hughes, delegate; Dan Bedinger, alternate.

Verona—Dr. R. L. Finnell, delegate; R. Q. Sleet, alternate.

Walton—Reuben Conner, delegate; Dr. D. M. Bagby, alternate.

Florence—Ben Stephens, delegate; Conner Yager, alternate.

Union—B. W. Adams, delegate; Dr. W. H. Blanton, alternate.

On motion of Dr. R. W. Kirtley, the Secretary was directed to publish the proceedings of this meeting in the BOONE COUNTY RECORDER.

On motion the meeting adjourned.

CYRUS RIDDELL, Chairman.

A. B. PARKER, Sec'y.

NOTES.

It was a body of fine looking and representative men.

Everything passed off pleasantly and the brethren departed in peace.

The north part of the county came out in force and was unanimous for Lacy.

Col. Graddy was spokesman for the Lacy part of the convention, which was nearly all of it.

It was the largest mass meeting held by the unterrified for some time except on public days.

Major Sandford came in with the rising of the sun and polled the crowd before the hour for the convention arrived, and had the result announced.

Furnish undertook to instruct the convention in parliamentary law, and was laughed at because he was considered so clearly wrong. Furnish was correct allee samee, though.

Personal Mentions.

[If you have friends from a distance visiting you or expect to be away from home on business or pleasure, let us have the item for this column.]

Mr. J. O. Griffith, of Beaver, was in town Tuesday.

Mrs. Virginia Huey has moved to her son's, John J. Huey.

Mrs. Pem Finch is visiting her relatives in Williamstown.

Miss Sallie Rich, of Kenton county, is the guest of Mrs W. F. McKim.

Dr. S. S. Scott, of Florence, made Burlington a flying visit last Thursday.

Mr. Geo. Duvall and wife, of Cincinnati, spent the day at James Westbay's Sunday.

A. W. Smith mother and little sister, Katie, of Sanford, Florida, arrived last Thursday.

Prof. Harry Piper and Esq. Whitlock will give a rousing picnic at ParlorGrove on the 26th inst.

Mrs. Richie, of Owen county, has been visiting her sister, Miss Susan Utz, for several days.

Willie Glen, of Cincinnati, spent Saturday and Sunday with his aunt, Miss Jessie Glen, of this place.

Miss Lillie Rice, has returned to her sister's at Bellevue, after a visit to friends at Patriot, Indiana.

A. M. Acra, George Piper, Clarence Kirk and Frank Mullins took in the camp meeting at Corinth, Sunday.

Saturday and Sunday Maley Green and family, of Cincinnati, were visiting Mr. Green's sister, Mrs. Carpenter, who lives near here.

Miss Emma L. Hubble, of Philadelphia, and Miss Katie M. Shreve, of Bordentown, New Jersey, are the guests of Mr. S. P. Brady and wife.

Mrs. Worldly and two children, who were the guests of S. A. Palmer for several days, returned to their home in Lawrenceburg, Sunday.

Mr. W. H. Sourds and family, we are glad to learn, are again to be numbered among the citizens of our county, occupying their handsome home near Hebron.

MISSOURI LETTER.

BUTLER, MO., July, 2d, 1884.

To the Editors of the Recorder:

We were driven from our hay harvest this evening by a gentle shower, which gladened our hearts as it was very much needed, and to while away the time, we will indite you a short epistle, thinking it may be of little interest to our friends in Boone to learn how we are getting along in our hesperian home, and the prospects before us.

I do not propose to give a windy dissertation, but will give my unbiased views of our country as I have learned from close observation so far.

We are certainly in a rich, productive country. The wheat crop, which is now harvested, is pronounced as good as Bates county ever produced, except the wheat that was sown late. So far as I have observed, the grain is splendid.

The oat, hay, millet and flax crops are splendid; but the grandest sight I ever beheld is presented when I go on the high prairies, and look around at the vast area of waving corn that reaches farther than the eye. Then arises the thought, if nothing happens to this immense crop, what will the country do with all this corn? It Egypt was anything like Bates county for corn, we commend Jacob for sending his sons there to get bread. Mr. Editors, if you should, by any unforeseen disaster, make a failure in Old Boone, come out to Bates county and we will fill your sacks.

Notwithstanding corn grows very rapidly, weeds grow correspondingly, and should any of the Boone boys come to this country to farm, with an idea that they can make a crop without work, they must lea[illegible] at home, for this is the busiest country I ever saw, from the time the crop is planted until it is laid by. But then there is a pleasure in tilling the land here that one never enjoys in a less favored country to much extent. The soil is so loose and easily cultivated that the plowman sits on his sulky plow, doing as good work as when walking. When tired of riding, he throws the seat forward and walks, but there is more riding than walking you may bet your bottom dollar, while plowing corn.

How is your garden this year? I was thinking about the 10th of June of sending you, if it were possible, a mess of beans, either bunch or pole, which we have had in abundance for nearly four weeks. And, by the way, my better half came in out of the garden this morning with about a peck of sage leaves, and said we would have roasting-ears to-morrow for dinner.

We have had some warm weather. Yesterday the thermometer marked 100 in the shade, but there is most always a pleasant breeze stirring, and the heat is not so oppressive during the day, while the nights are pleasant.

We will have no peaches; the apple crop will be light; cherries and other small fruits, plentiful.

We are surely located in a healthy section of country, all having enjoyed splendid health since moving on the farm. I have not heard of a doctor's visiting a sick person in this neighborhood since we moved here.

My boys were somewhat homesick at first, but soon got over it when they became acquainted with the youngsters in the neighborhood, and seem to have a good time generally. Tell the boys in my old neighborhood that the girls out here are as plentiful as prairie flowers, but if they were to come out we would leave it to them to say whether or not they are as pretty. There is a school taught near my farm, and out of 82 scholars 56 are girls, another evidence that Bates is a productive county.

Everett Hall has been stopping with us most of the time since his arrival in the West. The merchants in Butler and Rich Hill complain of dull times, and Everett has been unable to obtain a situation, and I would not be surprised if he hadn't better make tracks for Kentucky as boys are very popular out here; and the girls may claim the privilege leap year grants them. The RECORDER comes regularly, and is the first paper read. Long may it flourish and be patronized by thousands of subscribers is the earnest wish of WILLIAM WALTON.

In this issue we announce I. J. Daughters as a candidate for County Superintendent of Public Shchools.

NEIGHBORHOOD NEWS.

Scattersville.

You can hear the hum of the mower.

Stacking wheat is the order of the day.

Miss May Mangin, of Gainesville, was visiting at her uncle's last week.

Mrs. W. N. Jurry, of Scott county, is visiting her sister, Mrs. O. P. Conner.

W. A. Carpenter and family, of Covington, were visiting O. P. Conner, Sunday.

We noticed the smiling face of James Barlow at Wm. Clore's, last Sunday.

James Horton and family, of Florence X-Roads, were visiting his father, last Sunday.

The Speedwell club beat the Bruisers of Big Bone, last Saturday, by a score 32 to 22, after about three hours hard hitting. The same teams will play at Big Bone next Saturday.

Constance.

Ask Temp Graves where he was the 4th of July.

Miss Anna McKay, of Cincinati, visited her sister, Mrs. Jas. Loder.

Ed and Ben Stephens, also that dude Temp Graves were visiting Claude Williams, last week.

Willie Kroger and John Hill, of Cincinnati, are spending the summer months with their cousins, the Misses Williams—very wise plan boys.

Jas. P. Loder, last week, made a purchase of one of the finest horses our State now posesses. He purchased it near Aurora. Paid $40,00 for the same.

Graham's saw mill at Anderson's Ferry was burned to the ground last Tuesday night. Loss very heavy, but cannot be correctly estimated yet.

The Misses Williams have completed their course of dancing instructions with Prof. H. M Piper, and now announce themselves ready to attend anything that has any dancing to it, Varina says: "We'll go in style now."

DUDE.

Waterloo.

Weather warm and crops needing rain.

The hay and oat cropsare fine in this locality.

John T. Marshall is again seen on our streets.

If you want amusement watch Len Clore take honey from his pets.

If you want to know about the business end of a bee, inquire of C. S. C.

Ephraim Aylor has taken more honey this year than any one else in this community.

C. B. Rogers, of Louisville, is in town travelling in the interest of the Continental Insurance Company.

Lucien Rice, the only son of George Rice, is quite sick at this writing. Dr. J. M. Grant attending physician.

The wheat crop is excellent. Jonas Clore's boys have 12 acres that has been estimated to yield from 35 to 40 bus. per acre

Joshua Rice, of this vicinity, has used 2000 pounds of fertilizer on his farm this season, and reports it a success, thus far.

Wilder & Co., of Covington, are in this neighborhood, at Ephraim Aylor's, putting up the Eureka Mower. It seems to take the rag off the bush in the way of cutting grass.

Here is to your scribe, our worthy friend, hailing from the heights of Ashbyfork, who has quite recently taken a departure from his line of business. May his domestic happiness be increased with "vehement muchness" is the desire of your scribe at this place.

Union.

Rev. J. A. Kirtley preached here last Sunday evening.

Miss June Dickey is visiting friends in Washington county.

Miss Victor Youell, of Walton, is a guest at M. C. Norman's.

L. B. Dickerson's family are quite sick with whoopingcough.

Miss Willie Moreland, of Covington, is the guest of Mrs. Owen C. Utz.

Miss Mary Wilkie is at home after a three months visit in Richmond, Va.

Miss Mary Coons, of Chilesburg, Ky., is the guest of Miss Annie Anderson.

Miss Willa Whitaker, of Covington, is spending some time with Miss Therese Lassing.

Mrs. L. L. Herndon (nee Smith), of Georgetown, spent last week with her parents here.

Union is a lovely place, but if somebody does not do something, we will certainly all go to sleep.

Miss Sallie Bannister is visiting her sister, Mrs. M. C. Weaver, at Junction City. She will be absent several weeks.

Mr. Clements has made an addition to his store room, and given it a new coat of paint. So you see all enterprise is not dead.

The friends of Henry Lassing will be grieved to hear of his illness. He has lately returned from college at Richmond, Kentucky, and will be a candidate for the West Point scholarship this fall.

A young lady from Covington, in crossing that bridge over "Tiger," to which I have previously alluded, exclaimed: "This bridge is a disgrace to any village." But what is everybody's business is nobody's.

Beaver Lick.

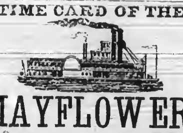
Sam Marshall never fails to supply all of his customers with choice beef every Saturday in Beaver.

Ho! every one that hath a tobacco patch, is the way the farmers down here are beginning to look at it.

The past week hath greatly added to the happiness of our farmers in lending sunshine to the weeds that they are trying to destroy.

Those who engaged lambs of our farmers have been gathering them up this week for market. The buyers say lambs are really not so high as some fellows expected earlier in the season.

Messrs Orrin and William Hoard, who have been visiting relatives here, will, this week, return to their home in Florida. They are noble young men and we sincerely regret the loss of their citizenship.



All things favorable we will have a graded road from Walton to Beaver before another winter sets in. Those who are managing the enterprise are deserving of the praise of all who are in favor of building good roads.

Mr. Bob Roberts' time having expired, Dave Reid will for the present term carry the mail to and from Hamilton to Walton. Many of our citizens are anxious to establish a daily mail between the two above mentioned points, but as it requires a small amount of money it will likely never materialize.

Our bee men held a district convention last Thursday at Beaver, and had an enjoyable interchanging of their experience and ideas respecting bee culture. They resolved to attend the Ky. Bee-Keepers' convention, in Covington, and see if they can't get their bee knowledge recognized and twisted into shape for service to the bee cultural world. They report small yields of honey, not many thinking this year a paying one to bee-keepers.

There is strong talk here of building a Reformed or Christian church as soon as the necessary money can be gotten together. BILL LOYD.

TIME CARD OF THE

MAYFLOWER,

LEAVES PETERSBURG

For Lawrenceburg at 6½ A. M.; 9½ A. M., and 11½ A. M.; at 2 P. M. and at 4½ P. M.

LEAVES LAWRENCEBURG

For Petersburg and Aurora at 8 A. M., 10 A. M., and 12 M.; at 2¾ P. M. and 5 P. M.

LEAVES PETERSBURG

For Aurora at 8½ A. M., 10½ A. M.; at 1 P. M., and 3 P. M.

LEAVES AURORA

For Petersburg and Lawrenceburg at 9 A. M., 11 A. M.; 1½ P. M. and 4 P. M.

ELIHU ALDEN, Master.

NOTICE.

A dividend of 50 cents on each share of stock in the Burlington & Florence turnpike road has been declared, and is payable on demand by DUDLEY ROUSE, July 14 '84. Treasurer.

NOTICE.

Sealed Proposals will be received at the office of the Rabbit Hash and Gunpowder Creek Turnpike Company, at Rabbit Hash, Ky., until the 30th of August, 1884, for the construction of a macadamized turnpike road from Rabbit Hash to Joseph Riddell's, according to specifications now on file with Wilsons & Riddell, at Rabbit Hash, Ky. Proposals will be received for each section, separately, or for the whole route. The company reserve the right to reject any or all bids.

SOLON STEPHENS, Sec'y.

Notice of Incorporation.

Notice is hereby given, that Thadius C. S. Ryle, Joseph Riddell, Solon Stephens, G. L. Smith and J. J. Stephens, have associated themselves together and become incorporated for the purpose of constructing a road on the macadamized (turnpike) plan from Rabbit Hash, following the old Rising Sun and Union graded road as near as practicable to near Gunpowder creek; thence up the said creek the most practicable route to the Middle creek and Big Bone road near Joseph Riddell's.

The name of the said corporation is the Rabbit Hash and Gunpowder Creek Turnpike Road Company.

Its principal place of business shall be at Rabbit Hash, Boone county, Kentucky.

The business of said corporation shall be the constructing, maintaining and operating a turnpike road over the route before described herein, connecting the said points given.

The amount of capital stock, $25,000, to be divided into shares of $25 each, and to be paid on calls of the directors.

The corporation to commence June 7th, 1884, and to continue for 25 years.

The affairs of the corporation to be conducted by a president and four directors, to be elected on the 1st Saturday in August, 1885, and on same day every year thereafter. The present president and directors will serve until their successors are elected.

The corporation shall at no time be indebted beyond $1,000.

Private property is to be exempt from corporate debts.

THADIUS C. S. RYLE, JOSEPH RIDDELL
G. L. SMITH, SOLON STEPHENS
J. J. STEPHENS.

REPORT OF THE CONDITION OF THE

Farmers & Traders National Bank AT COVINGTON,

In the State of Kentucky, at the close of business, June 30, 1884.

RESOURCES.

Loans and discounts		$769,718 91
U.S. Bonds to secure circulation 4 per cent		50,000 00
Furniture and Fixtures		4,668 91
Premiums paid on Bonds to secure circulation	$10,437 50
Less am't previously charged to profit and loss	2,437 50	8,000 00
Due from approved reserved agents	$80,481 08
Due from banks and bankers	21,839 82
5 per cent, fund with U.S. Treasurer	2,250 00
Cash on hand	41,158 78	148,729 68
		$781,117 50

LIABILITIES.

Capital stock paid in		$300,000 00
Surplus fund	$6,000 00
Undivided profits	17,485 41	23,485 41
Circulation		45,000 00
Fund to pay tax on circulation		222 30
Due individual depositors	$385,434 94
Due banks & bankers	26,974 85	412,409 79
		$781,117 50
Undivided profits remaining January 1, 1884		$14,480 40
Gross earnings for 6 months ending June 30, 1884		19,897 20
		$34,377 70

DISPOSED OF AS FOLLOWS:

Current expenses	$ 5,669 99
Tax on circulation	222 30
Dividend No. 3 of 3 per cent	9,000 00
Credited to surplus fund	2,000 00
Balance to undivided profits	17,485 41	$34,377 70

J. L. SANDFORD, Cashire.

L. KUPPERSCHMID,

—42 WALNUT STREET,—

Lawrenceburg. - - - Ind.

Always keeps on hand a large assortment of WATCHES, CLOCKS, JEWELRY, &c. Repairing Watches and Clocks a specialty. Also, agent for the

Rockford Watch Company.

Which manufactures the finest movements made, and they are used by all railroad men.

—Give Me a Call.—

AURORA MARBLE AND GRANITE WORKS, Aurora, Ind.

Will have constantly on hand

Marble and Granite Monuments, Italian & American Headstones, &c.

I am ready to do all kinds of Stone Work on short notice and at low prices Hoping to receive the patronage of Boone County, I am respectfully,

F. W. KASSEBAUM.

INSURE AT HOME

The Farmers' Mutual Fire

INSURANCE COMPANY

Of Boone County

Is now completely organized and receiving applications for insurance.

Its Rates are Lower

Than those of any other Company, and it gives the farmers of Boone County a

HITHERTO UNKNOWN ADVANTAGE

In keeping their property insured.

EVERY FARMER IN THE COUNTY

should take a policy at once.

J. A. GAINES, President, Burlington, Ky. | J. H. WALTON, Secretary, Constance, Ky.

R. RANDALL, Treasury.

DIRECTORS.

LEGRAN GAINES, A. J. UTZ.
JNO. STEPHENS.
OSCAR GAINES, Agent. | C. L. CRISLER, Assessor.

Good Pay for Agents. $100 to $200 per mo. made selling our Grand New History, Famous and Decisive Battles of the World Write to J. C. McCurdy & Co., Cincinnati, O.

GREAT CLEARANCE SALE
—OF—
Spring & Summer Goods
—AT RISING SUN, INDIANA,—
COLTER, POWELL AND OWNBY'S,

Ginghams 7½ cents, worth 10 cents; Satteens 7½ cents, worth 12½ cents, Suitings 7½ cents, worth 15 cents.

Lawns 5 cents, worth 12½ cents. Calicoes 5c. worth 7c. Buntings 15c. worth 30c. Aberdeen Mixtures 7½, worth 35c.

All Summer Goods at prices in proportion to the above. Remember we rule the prices, and when Goods can be

SOLD LOW, WE ARE THE ONES TO SELL THEM

Cottonade can now be bought at 15 cents per yard, worth in any market 25 and 30 cents. A large line of Ironside Seamless Sacks, holding 2 bushels, 20 cents a piece, or $2 25 per dozen.

Colter, Powell & Ownby, RISING SUN, INDIANA.

R. S. CRISLER,

Burlington, Ky.

WAGON MAKER AND

—MANUFACTURER OF—

ROAD WAGONS, SPRING WAGONS, HARROWS, PLOWS, WHEEL BARROWS

AND ALL KINDS OF WOOD WORK.

Also the Manufacturer of W. M. Conner's Patent Right Hay Conveyor

Saws Filed & Sharpened.

Please call and examine my prices before calling elsewhere.

JAMES S. WAYNE, President. JNO. L. SANDFORD, Cashier

CAPITAL $300,000.

FARMERS AND TRADERS

NATIONAL BANK.

Covington, Kentucky.

DIRECTORS.

James S. Wayne, M. C. Motch, Sam Hind, E. J. Hickey, E. J. Greer, J. S. Matson, J. H. Mersman, J. L. Sandford, L. H Dills, F. P. Helm, L. C. Stephens.

The general operations of banking transacted upon the most favorable terms, collections made on all points in the United States.

The Business and Accounts of Farmers are Especially Solicited by this Bank.

dec. 20-6m

UNDERTKAING.

We keep Constantly on Hand all sizes of

Burial Cases and Caskets.

And having just received a beautiful

NEW HEARSE,

Which can be had at a reasonable price when desired.

PRICES GUARANTEED LESS THAN CITY PRICES

DAVIS BROS., - - HEBRON, KY.

City Flouring Mills

RISING SUN, INDIANA.

FLOUR EXCHANGED FOR WHEAT OR CASH. THE HIGHEST MARKET PRICE PAID FOR GOOD WHEAT.

mar7-tf23

J. W. Talbott.

VANDERBILT UNIVERSITY NASHVILLE, TENN.

Cost of grounds, buildings and apparatus, $500,000. Productive Endowment, $700,000. Six Departments. Tuition in Literary and Scientific Department, $65.00; in Theological, free. Special attention given to Civil Engineering. Session opens September, 1. For Catalogue (FREE) Send to Secretary.

KENTUCKY MILITARY INSTITUTE.

At Farmdale P. O., Franklin Co., Ky., six miles from Frankfort. Has the most healthful and beautiful location in the State. Lit by gas as well as heated by steam. A full and able College Faculty. Expenses as moderate as any first-class college. Fortieth year begins September 1st. For catalogues, etc., address as above. COL. R. D. ALLEN, Supt.

CUMBERLAND UNIVERSITY LEBANON, TENN., has had near Half a Century of unsurpassed success. More than TEN THOUSAND Young men from the South and West have been educated here. Preparatory, Collegiate, Theological and Law Schools fully equipped and in successful operation. Next session for all departments begins Sept. 1, 1884. Catalogues sent free on application. Address N. GREEN, Chancellor.

CLEVELAND!

[CONCLUDED FROM FIRST PAGE.]

more. Mr. Cleveland's candidacy before this convention is offered upon the grounds of his honor, his integrity, his wisdom and his Democracy. [Cheers.] Upon these grounds we ask it, believing that if ratified by this convention he can be elected and take his seat in Washington as a Democratic President of the United States.

The nomination of Mr. Cleveland was seconded by Mayor Carter Harrison, in an appropriate speech.

Mr. Grady addressed the Convention in opposition to Mr. Cleveland. During the progress of his speech there were many interruptions, and two offenders in the gallery were expelled.

Mr. Apgar, of New York, being recognized by the Chair, took the floor, and in a short speech seconded the nomination of Cleveland.

A gentleman from Missouri took the floor, but on motion of General Palmer, of Illinois, after considerable delay, at 6:30 p. m. the rules were suspendeded and a recess taken till half-past ten o'clock to-morrow morning.

Third Day.

CHICAGO, July 10.—The Convention was called to order at 11:10. The proceedings were opened with prayer by Rev. George C. Lorimer, of the Emanuel Baptist Church.

NATIONAL COMMITTEE.

On a call of the States, the following were announced as members of the National Committee: Alabama, Henry C. Semple; Arkansas, S. W. Fordice; California, M. F. Tarpey; Colorado, M. S. Waller; Connecticut, W. H. Barnum; Florida, Samuel Pasco; Georgia, Patrick Walsh; Illinois, S. Corning Judd; Indiana, Austin H. Brown; Iowa, M. M. Ham; Kansas, C. W. Blair; Kentucky, Henry V. McHenry; Louisiana, B. F. Jonas; Maine, Edmund Wilson; Maryland, A. P. Gorman; Michigan, Don M. Dickinson; Minnesota, P. H. Kelly; Missouri, John G. Prather; Mississippi, C. A. Johnson; Nebraska, James E. Boyd; Nevada, Dennis E. McCarthy; New Hampshire, A. W. Sullaway; North Carolina, M. W. Ransom; Ohio, W. W. Armstrong; Rhode Island, J. B. Barnaby; South Carolina, Francis W. Dawson; Tennessee, Robt. S. Looney; Texas, O. T. Holt; Vermont, Hon. B. B. Smalley; Virginia, John S. Barbour; West Virginia, Louis Baker; Wisconsin, Wm. F. Vilas; Arizona, W. K. Meade; District of Columbia, Wm. Dickson; Idaho, John Haley; Dakota, M. H. Day; Utah, J. B. Roseborough; Montana, Wm. McCormick; Washington Territory, J. A. Kuhn; New Mexico, not anounced; Wyoming, M. E. Post.

The unfinished business of yesterday—being the call of States for nominations—was resumed.

GOVERNOR HOADLY NOMINATED.

When Ohio was called, Colonel Thomas B. Powell presented the name of George Hoadly, of Ohio, in an appropriate speech.

SAMUEL J. RANDALL NOMINATED.

When Pennsylvania was reached Senator Wallace took the platform amid great applause, and in a speech of some length presented the name of Hon. Samuel J. Randall. Governor Abbett, of New Jersey, seconded the nomination of Mr. Randall.

The roll of States for nomination was resumed. Mr. Abbott, of Massachusetts, and Wade Hampton, of South Carolina, seconded the nomination of Mr. Bayard; and U. M. Rose, of Arkansas, secouded the nomination of Mr. Cleveland.

The convention then adjourned until 8 o'clock p. m.

EVENING SESSION.

At 8:25 the convention was called to order, and a resolution was offered by Mr. Henry, of Massachusetts, expressing the regret and intense admiration of the convention at reading the statesmanlike and patriotic letter of Samuel J. Tilden, in which he made known the overpowering and providential necessity which constrained him to decline the nomination to the Presidency, condemning the fraud and violence by which Tilden and Hendricks were cheated out of their offices in 1876, expressing regret that the Nation has been deprived of the lofty patriotism and splendid executive and administrative ability of Mr. Tilden, and appointing a committee to convey these sentiments to that gentleman. Adopted.

Mr. Morrison, of Illinois, Chairman of the Committee on Resolutions, stepped to the platform to present the report of that committee. His appearance was greeted with cheers. The platform was read by one of the reading clerks, as follows:

THE PLATFORM.

The Democratic party of the Union, through its representatives in National Convention assembled, recognizes that as the Nation grows older new issues are born of time and progress, and old issues perish. But the fundamental principles of the Democracy, approved by the united voice of the people, remain, and will ever remain, as the best and only security for the continuance of free government. The preservation of personal rights, the equality of all citizens before the law, the reserved rights of the States, and the supremacy of the Federal Government within the limits of the Constitution, will ever form the true basis of our liberties, and can never be surrendered without destroying the balance of rights and powers which enables the continent to be developed in peace, and social order to be maintained by means of local self-government. But it is indispensable for the practical application and enforcement of these fundamental principles that the Government should not always be controlled by a political party. Frequent change of administration is as necessary as constant recurrence to the popular will. Otherwise abuses grow, and the Government, instead of being carried on for the general welfare, becomes an instrumentality for imposing heavy burdens on the many who are governed for the benefit of the few who govern. Public servants thus become arbitrary rulers. This is now the condition of the country; hence a change is demanded.

The Republican party, as far as principle is concerned, is a reminiscence in practice; it is an organization for enriching those who control its machinery. The frauds and jobbery which have been brought to light in every department of the Government are sufficient to have called for reform within the Republican party; yet those in authority, made reckless by the long possession of power, have succumbed to its corrupting influence, and have placed in nomination a ticket against which the independent portion of the party are in open revolt.

Therefore a change is demanded. Such a change was alike necessary in 1876, but the will of the people was then defeated by a fraud, which can never be forgotten nor condoned. Again, in 1880, the change demanded by the people was defeated by the lavish use of money contributed by unscrupulous contractors and shameless jobbers, who had bargained for unlawful profits, or for high office. The Republican party during its legal, its stolen and its bought tenures of power, has steadily decayed in moral character and political capacity. Its platform promises are now a list of its past failures. It demands the restoration of our navy. It has squandered hundred of millions to create a navy that does not exist. It calls upon Congress to remove the burdens under which American shipping has been depressed. It imposed and has continued those burdens. It professes the policy of reserving the public lands for small holdings by actual settlers. It has given away the people's heritage till now a few railroads and non-resident aliens, individual and corporate, possess a larger area than that of all our farms between the two seas. It professes a preference for free institutions. It organized and tried to legalize a control of State elections by Federal troops. It professes a desire to elevate labor. It has subjected American workingmen to the competition of convict and imported contract labor. It professes gratitude to all who were disabled or died in the war leaving widows and orphans. It left to a Democratic House of Representatives the first effort to equalize both bounties and pensions. It proffers a pledge to correct the irregularities of our tariff. It created and has continued them. Its own tariff commission confessed the need of more than 20 per cent. reduction. Its Congress gave a reduction of less than 4 per cent. It professes the protection of American manufactures: it has subjected them to an increasing flood of manufactured goods and a hopeless competition with manufacturing nations, not one of which taxes raw materials. It professes to protect all American industries. It has impoverished many to subsidize a few. It professes the protection of American labor. It has depleted the returns of American agriculture—an industry followed by half our people. It professes the equality of all men before the law. Attempting to fix the status of colored citizens, the acts of its Congress were overset by the decisions of its courts. It "accepts anew the duty of leading in the work of progress and reform." Its caught criminals are permitted to escape through continued delays or actual connivance in the prosecution. Honeycombed with corruption, outbreaking exposures no longer shock its moral sense. Its honest members, and its independent journals no longer maintain a successful contest for authority in its counsels or a veto upon bad nominations. That a change is necessary is proven by an existing surplus of more than $100,000,000, which has yearly been collected from a suffering people. Unnecessary taxation is unjust taxation. We denounce the Republican party for having failed to relieve the people from crushing war taxes, which have paralized business, crippled industry and deprived labor of employment and of just reward.

The Democracy pledges itself to purify the administration from corruption, to restore economy, to revive respect for law, and to reduce taxation to the lowest limit consistent with due regard to the preservation of the faith of the Nation to its creditors and pensioners, knowing full well, however, that legislation effecting the occupations of the people should be cautious and conservative in method, not in advance of public opinion, but responsive to its demands.

The Democratic party is pledged to revise the tariff in a spirit of fairness to all interests, but in making a reduction in taxes it is not proposed to injure any domestic industries, but rather to promote their healthy growth. From the foundation of this Government, taxes collected at the Custom-house have been the chief source of Federal revenue. Such they must continue. Moreover, many industries have come to rely upon legislation for successful continuance, so that any change of law must be at every step regardful of the labor and capital thus involved. The process of reform must be subject, in the execution, to this plain dictate of justice.

All taxation shall be limited to the requirements of economical government. The necessary reduction in taxation can, and must, be effected without depriving American labor of the ability to compete successfully with foreign labor, and without imposing lower rates of duty than will be ample to cover any increased cost of production which may exist in consequence of the higher rates of wages prevailing in this country. Sufficient revenue to pay all the expenses of the Federal Government economically administered, including pension, interest and principal of the public debt; can be got under our present system of taxation from Custom-house taxes on fewer imported articles, bearing heaviest on articles of luxury and bearing lightest on articles of necessity. We therefore denounce the abuses of the existing tariff, and, subject to the preceding limitations, we demand that Federal taxation shall be exclusively for public purposes, and shall not exceed the needs of the Government, economically administered.

The system of direct taxation known as the "Internal Revenue" is a war tax, and so long as the law continues, the money derived therefrom should be sacredly devoted to the relief of the people from the remaining burdens of the war, and be made a fund to defray the expense of the care and comfort of worthy soldiers disabled in line of duty in the wars of the Republic, and for the payment of such pensions as Congress may from time to time grant to such soldiers, a like fund for the sailors having been already provided; and any surplus should be paid into the treasury.

We favor an American continental policy based upon more intimate commercial and political relations with the fifteen sister Republics of North, Central and South America, but entangling alliances with none.

We believe in honest money, the gold and silver coinage of the Constitution, and a circulating medium convertible into such money without loss.

Asserting the equality of all men before the law, we hold that it is in the duty of the Government, in its dealings with the people, to mete out equal and exact justice to all citizens, of whatever nativity, race, color or persuasion, religious or political.

We believe in a free ballot and a fair count, and we recall to the memory of the people the noble struggle of the Democrats in the Forty-fifth and Forty-sixth Congress, by which a reluctant Republican opposition was compelled to assent to legislation making everywhere illegal the presence of troops at the polls, of the conclusive proof that a Democratic administration will preserve liberty with order.

The selection of Federal officers for the Territories should be restricted to citizens previously resident therein.

We oppose sumptuary laws which vex the citizen and interfere with individual liberty.

We favor honest civil service reform and the compensation of all U. S. officers by fixed salaries; the separation of Church and State, and the diffusion of free education by common schools, so that every child in the land may be taught the rights and duties of citizenship.

While we favor all legislation which will tend to the equitable distribution of property, to the preservation of monopoly and to the strict enforcement of individual rights against corporate abuses, we hold that the welfare of society depends upon a scrupulous regard for the rights of property, as defined by law. We believe that labor is best rewarded where it is freest and most enlightened. It should therefore be fostered and cherished. We favor the repeal of all laws restricting the free action of labor, and the enactment of laws by which labor organizations may be incorporated, and all such legislation as will tend to enlighten the people as to the true relations of capital and labor.

We believe that the public lands ought, as far as possible, to be kept as homesteads for actual settlers; that all unearned lands heretofore improvidently granted to railroad corporations by the action of the Republican party should be restored to the public domain, and that no more grants of land shall be made to corporations, or be allowed to fall into the ownership of alien absentees. We are opposed to all propositions which, upon any pretext, would convert the general Government into a machine for collecting taxes to be distributed among the States or the citizens thereof.

In reaffirming the declaration of the Democratic platform of 1856, that, "The liberal principles embodied by Jefferson in the Declaration of Independence, and sanctioned in the Constitution, which makes ours the land of liberty, and the asylum of the oppressed of every Nation, have ever been cardinal principles in the Democratic faith," we nevertheless do not sanction the importation of foreign labor, or the admission of servile races, unfitted by habits, training, religion, or kindred for absorption into the great body of our people, or for the citizenship which our laws confer. American civilization demands that against the immigration or importation of Mongolians to these shores, our gates be closed.

The Democratic party insists that it is the duty of this Government to protect, with equal fidelity and vigilance, the rights of its citizens, native and naturalized, at home and abroad, and to the end that this protection may be assured, United States papers of naturalization, issued by courts of competent jurisdiction, must be respected by the Executive and Legislative Departments of our own Government, and by all foreign Powers. It is an imperative duty of this Government to efficiently protect all the rights of persons and property of every American citizen in foreign lands, and demand and enforce full reparation for any invasion thereof. An American citizen is only responsible to his own Government for any act done in his own country, or under her flag, and can only be tried therefor on her own soil and according to her laws; and no power exists in this Government to expatriate an American citizen to be tried in any foreign land for any such act.

This country has never had a well defined and executed foreign policy save under Democratic administration; that policy has ever been, in regard to foreign nations, so long as they do not act detrimental to the interests of the country or hurtful to our citizens, to let them alone; that as the result of this policy we recall the acquisition of Louisiana, Florida, California, and of the adjacent Mexican territory by purchase alone; and contrast these grand acquisitions of Democratic statesmanship with the purchase of Alaska, the sole fruit of a Republican administration of nearly a quarter of a century.

The Federal Government should care for and improve the Mississippi River and other great waterways of the Republic, so as to secure for the interior States easy and cheap transportation to tide-water.

Under a long period of Democratic rule and policy our merchant marine was fast overtaking and on the point of outstripping that of Great Britain. Under twenty years of Republican rule and policy our commerce has been left to British bottoms, and almost has the American flag been swept off the high seas.

Instead of the Republican party's British policy, we demand for the people of the United States an American policy. Under Democratic rule and policy, our merchants and sailors, flying the Stars and Stripes in every port, successfully searched out a market for the varied products of American industry. Under a quarter of a century of Republican rule and policy, despite our manifest advantage over all other nations in high-paid labor, favorable climates and teeming soils; despite freedom of trade among all those United States; despite their population by the foremost races of men and annual immigration of young, thrifty and adventurous of all nations; despite our freedom here from the inherited burdens of life and industry in old world monarchs—their costly war navies, their vast tax-consuming non-producting standing armies; despite twenty years of peace—that Republican rule and policy have managed to surrender to Great Britian, along with our commerce, the control of the markets of the world. Instead of the Republican party's British policy we demand, in behalf of the American Democracy, an American policy.

Instead of the Republican party's discredited scheme and false pretense of friendship for American labor, expressed by imposing taxes, we demand, in behalf of the Democracy, freedom for American labor by reducing taxes, to the end that these United States may compete with unhindered powers for the primacy among nations in all the arts of peace and fruits of liberty.

With profound regret we have been apprised by the venerable statesman through whose person was struck that blow at the vital principle of republics (acquiescence in the will of the majority) that he can not permit us again to place in his hands the leadership of the Democratic hosts, for the reason that the achievement of reform in the administration of the Federal Government is an undertaking too heavy for his age and failing strength. Rejoicing that his life has been prolonged until the general judgment of our fellow-countrymen is united in the wish that that wrong were righted in his person for the Democracy of the United States, we offer to him in his withdrawal from public life not only our respectful sympathy and esteem, but also that best homage of freemen—the pledge of our devotion to the principles and the cause now inseparable in the history of this Republic from the labors and the name of Samuel J. Tilden.

With this statement of the hopes, principles and purposes of the Democratic party, the great issue of reform and change in administration is submitted to the people in calm confidence that the popular voice will pronounce in favor of new men, and new and more favorable conditions for the growth of industry, the extension of trade, the employment and due reward of labor and of capital, and the general welfare of the whole country.

General Butler, a member of the committee made a minority report, which created some discussion.

The minority report was rejected—yeas, 97½, nays, 714½. The question recurring on the adoption of the majority report, a vote was taken and the report adopted.

The convention then proceeded to take the first ballot on the nominations for President, which resulted as follows: Cleveland, 392; Bayard, 170; Thurman, 88; Randall, 78; McDonald, 56; Carlisle, 27; Flower, 4; Hoadly, 3; Tilden, 1; Hendricks, 1. Total vote, 820; necessary to a choice, 547.

The convention adjourned until 10 o'clock to-morrow morning.

Fourth Day.

CHICAGO, July 11.—The convention was called to order at 11 o'clock, and opened with prayer by Rev. Mr. Lock, of Grace Episcopal Church.

Pennsylvania withdrew the name of Randall, and moved to proceed to ballot. Ordered.

The result of the second ballot was: Cleveland, 475; Bayard, 150; Hendricks, 124; Thurman, 60; Tilden, 1.

A change of votes to Cleveland's column was commenced immediately after the result was announced and soon the vote stood as follows: Cleveland, 683; Bayard, 81; Hendricks, 45; Randall, 4; Thurman, 4; McDonald, 2. Whole number of votes cast 820; necessary to choice, 547.

The nomination of Mr. Cleveland was then made unanimous, and Grover Cleveland was declared the nominee of the National Democracy for the Presidency of the United States.

The Convention took a recess till 5 p. m.

The convention assembled at 5:30 and the first business done was the adoption of a resolution electing Mr. Vilas (Chairman of the convention) as Chairman of the committee to notify the nominees of their selection as candidates.

The call of States for the nomination of candidates for Vice President then commenced. Mr. Searles, of California, nominated General Rosecrans; Mr. Brauch, of Colorado, presented the name of Jos. E. McDonald; Mr. Bacon, of Georgia, nominated General John C. Black, of Illinois, but Mr. Black declined; Mr. Pinlow, of Kansas presented the name of Gov. George W. Glyck.

Senator Wallace, of Pennsylvania, then arose and said that he nominated for Vice President a man conversant with public affairs throughout his whole life, an honored statesman, a pure and upright citizen, a victim of the grossest fraud ever perpetrated on the American People—Thomas A. Hendricks. [Cheers.]

Mr. Waller, of Connecticut, seconded the nomination of Mr. Hendricks, and said the Democratic party would, in defiance of fraud and in accordance with the law, place him in the chair of the Vice President.

The other nominees were all withdrawn, one by one, so that Mr. Hendricks' name alone remained before the convention.

Mr. Weed, of New York, suggested that the roll of States should be called, so as to put on record the unanimous vote for Hendricks.

The suggestion was agreed to, and the Clerk proceeded to call the roll of States. The result was the unanimous nomination of Thomas A. Hendricks as the candidate for Vice President.

Resolutions of thanks were passed to the Temporary Chairman, the Permanent Chairman and the clerks and officers of the convention; also to the reportorial corps and press of the country for their accurate and impartial reports of the proceedings.

The Chairman, on his own behalf, moved a vote of thanks to Sergeant-at-arms Bright, of Indiana. Adopted.

Votes of thanks were also passed to the Mayor of the city (Carter Harrison) and the Chief of Police, and the citizens of Chicago for their hospitality. The convention then, at 7:20, adjourned sine die.

—A Boston damsel's lingo always gives her away. She was in humble circumstances, but she was a Boston girl for all that, says the Buffalo Express. "Yes, papa is a unicyclist," she remarked to the railroad reporter whom she met on the excursion train. "Indeed?" responded the young gentleman addressed, very much concerned to know what a unicyclist might be, but very much afraid of exposing his western rawness by asking. From a Boston young man on the train it was learned that "papa" imparted the desired impetus to a wheelbarrow used in connection with city improvements.

—Good housekeepers are frequently annoyed by oil marks on papered walls against which careless or thoughtless persons have laid their heads. These unsightly spots may be removed by making a paste of cold water and pipeclay or fuller's earth, and laying it on the surface without rubbing it on, else the pattern of the paper will then likely be injured. Leave the paste on all night. In the morning it can be brushed off and the spot will have disappeared, but a renewal of the operation may be necessary if the oil mark is old.

—A cashier, living in the Rue Andre del Sarte, was about to commit suicide a day or two ago because he had lost a portfolio belonging to his employer containing about 100,000f. Happily the employer called upon him in the nick of time, and, with words of encouragement, induced him to return to the office, where to their surprise, they found a young man who had turned up with the missing property, which he had picked up in the street. He declined a proffered reward for his honesty, and withdrew without leaving even his name.—Paris Letter.

—Ixtaccihuatl, which, next to Popocatapetl, is the highest volcano in Mexico, is universally called the "white woman" in the land of the Montezumas. Its shape, as viewed from Popocatapetl, some 150 miles away, is suggestive of a dead giantess robed for burial, the white shroud showing the contour of breast and limbs. The face perfect in outline, and long hair seems to stream in silvery locks from the snowy forehead down over the sides of the bier. Her feet are turned toward Popocatapetl, and between them lies a line of low hills, brown and treeless.

—A young woman who thought she was losing her husband's affection went to a seventh daughter of a seventh daughter for a love powder. The mystery woman told her: "Get a raw piece of beef, cut flat, about half an inch thick. Slice an onion in two and rub the meat on both sides with it. Put on pepper and salt and toast it on each side over a red coal fire. Drop on it three lumps of butter and two sprigs of parsley and get him to eat it." The young wife did so and her husband loved her ever after.—Chicago Tribune.

—A farmer at Denver, Ills., has a calf with a very strange appetite. It turns up its nose at everything that the rest of the cattle eat, and craves spring chicken. It isn't necessary to serve them cooked, because she is not at all particular. In the last three weeks she has devoured between fifty and one hundred young chickens, feathers and all. If it gets so that farmers will have to bring up their cattle on spring chicken this country will go to ruin, sure.—Peck's Sun.

—One of the things which is calculated to make life a burden to the journalist, is to have written an elaborate article for the morning paper on "How to Keep Cool," and find that the thermometer dropped fifty degrees during the night.—Philadelphia Call.

THE DAIRY.

—Scientific writers about milk maintain that the caseine in milk is always a constant percentage without the slightest regard to its richness, and that so far as caseine is concerned the more you get the better. This reduces the question of cheese cows to a simple proposition: whichever is the larger milker is the better cow, and the best cheese cow is the one that will make the most milk from a given quantity of feed.

—Experience has proved that the common cow is less liable to disease than her more aristocratic sisters; and that careful crossing with a pedigree bull will effect an improvement in quality and symmetry, and also promote increased hardiness and fecundity. These are highly important considerations; for the general farmer can neither afford to lose his cattle through want of stamina, nor allow them to "miss the season." Pedigree animals may be indulged in by the wealthy; but are not likely to become general in this country. They will be used mostly as improvers of inferior breeds.—Exchange.

—How much should butter be worked, is a question that would evidently be answered differently by different persons. It was formerly the practice, almost universally, among American butter-makers, to work and salt their butter as it came from the churn, and then set it away for twenty-four hours to cool, and for the salt to dissolve before giving it its second working. This was certainly the practice in all the dairies in earlier days. And although there has been a great change in the practice of many makers, yet we find that there are still many others who would expect their butter to be utterly spoiled if it did not receive its second working after standing from twelve to twenty-four hours. If butter is not half worked, or rather, if it is not half salted at the time it is taken from the churn, it is certainly necessary to give it a second working. But, on the other hand, if the churning, washing and salting are all done as they should be, there will be no need of a second working, and such second working will really be an injury to the butter.—Cleveland Herald.

Dairy Farming.

There is a feature in dairying that is not often taken note of, and that is the renovation that takes place when grazing takes its rotation along with the changing crops of the soil. Where grain is exclusively raised soils become worn, perhaps diseased is a better term, and refused to be productively paying, not only from a depleted fertility, but also from the ravages of insects and pests generally, but when the farm is stocked to grass and the cattle and cows cover the fields, a renovation of the soil takes place that adds very largely to the value of the land. While this is never added to the farm credit, it exists nevertheless, and is an element that should be taken into account. Even if prices for dairy produce are low for a year or two the change from grain raising to dairying is profitable in the end, and especially if one after a time goes back to wheat and corn. If the farm is stocked with the best blooded cattle during this period a yet greater gain will be made, for in the aggregate it does not cost as much to keep a well bred animal or cow as an inferior one, and prices for the former are always far in advance of the latter; so if the three things—dairying, line stock and increased productiveness of the farm—are counted, dairying as a change may, even with low prices for milk or produce, be highly profitable. There is yet a better argument for dairying, for in the balance account it will be found that the income of a good dairy equals the income of a grain farm acre for acre. With a grain farm the income is wholly confined to the grain itself, but the dairy needs far less capital in machinery and labor, and there is a constant income from the growth and sale of surplus stock, calves and the like, all of which are not purchased, but are grown upon the farm, and so are to be figured as profit, and not the result of labor, anxiety, and the market value of which is not controlled at least by the "farmers" of Chicago and New York.

There is a limit to skill in the dairy. Skill may improve many things about the butter and the cheese, but common sense will indicate that inferior cows, half fed, and that of poor description, will not furnish milk that can be relied upon to make an article of full quality, or even prime goods. It needs better cows, fed on foods suitable for producing a high quality of fats in the milk, to make gilt edged butter. The common sense part relates to the selection and feeding as well as the care of the cows, and the skill relates to the manufacture of the finished product. The elements of good butter are found first in the milk, and no after skill in the manufacture can supply them. There may be various tricks of the trade resorted to to cover up or disguise defects, but they are not of or parts of a good, prime, sound butter.—Cleveland Herald.

Keeping Summer Butter.

It is a fact well conceded by all good judges of butter that butter made in June is better flavored than that made in any of the other eleven months. It is therefore very important that every one should know how to keep the June product for winter use. Here is one way: Pack the butter solidly in stone crocks to within an inch of the top, level it and cut a piece of white muslin and spread it over the top; then fill to the top with common salt. Dig a hole in the ground on the north side of some building, or in the shade of some tree; or, if this is inconvenient, the garden will do; let it be deep enough, so that when the crock is covered the earth on top of it will not be less than eighteen inches thick. In this hole place the crock; over it put something that will turn off the water if any leaks down to it. An old tin pan turned over makes a good cover. Pack on the earth, leaving it rounding like, like an ant-hill, to carry off the surface water. If this work is done in the garden, plant over the top a tomato vine, or a few beans, or anything to shade and keep away the torrid rays of the sun. The work is then finished, until one wishes to take out the butter any time before a severe frost. This method I will warrant to keep butter perfectly sweet until winter if proper care is taken. An old acquaintance of mine tells me he has practiced this plan for years, and when he lived on the farm he used to take up his butter in November, and sell it for forty cents per pound, whereas if it had been disposed of when made he could not have realized more than fifteen cents. This is also a good way to keep canned fruit during the summer, if one has not a proper place for the purpose. Put the cans in a box and bury it as the above, if canned in glass. —Cor. Rural New Yorker.

—There is now telephone connection between Cincinnati and Baltimore.

Billy's Girl.

A gentleman sat in a rear corner seat in a Broadway car on Sunday evening, reading. He felt a hand on his shoulder as the car was turning into Clinton place. Looking up he encountered the face of the conductor, a tall young fellow with soft blue eyes. The conductor coughed a little, inclined his head toward the gentleman's ear, smiled, blushed and stammeringly whispered:

"Would you—be—good enough to move forward a little? I—a—lady friend of mine is going to get on at the next corner—and—and I want to have a chance to talk with her."

The gentleman said, "Why, certainly," and went out on the front platform. As the car bowled into University place, a handsome girl in black got on and sat down in the seat the gentleman had left. The conductor rang up a fare on the register for her. Then he retired to the rear platform, leaned in at the open window, and talked with her.

The driver turned around as the handsome girl got on, and looked at her admiringly. He then twirled his thumb significantly toward the rear platform, winked ponderously at the gentleman and said:

"That's Billy's gal. She gits on here every Sunday night. You see, Billy has sich long hours that he ain't got time to go sparkin' hisself, so the gal has to go sparkin him. He's goin' to get married next month."

When the gentleman got off the car at Thirty-eighth street, Billy and his sweetheart were still sparking.—N. Y. Sun.

Steel the Coming Metal.

"Yes, sir! steel is having a great boom," remarked Civil Engineer Edward H. Dorsey to a Times reporter who ran across him the other day. "I have been investigating the relative merits of iron and steel for eighteen months past, during which I've made two trips to Europe. I'm thoroughly satisfied that soft or mild steel is much better than iron for all structural purposes. It's safer, because it is stronger and has fewer imperfections and flaws than wrought iron. Orders for wrought-iron work will soon become a curiosity. Up to the present time we've done little with steel in this country, though our iron interests are very large. In the beginning, you see, our engineers expect too much of steel. They got it of too great strength, which class of steel is more or less brittle. The result was unsatisfactory, and a prejudice sprang up against its use. In the last two or three years the open hearth process of manufacture has improved the quality greatly, and the price has been brought down to one-half of what it was three years ago. Yes, sir! wrought-iron for structural purposes will soon be a thing of the past."—N. Y. Times.

Bird-Charming Extraordinary.

There is a gentleman in Paris who has discovered a remarkable secret, by means of which he can make any cage-bird settle on a tree after a few minutes of mysterious coaxing. To prove his power over the feathered tribe, the gentleman in question recently drove from one end of Paris to the other in an open carriage, in the center of which a small shrub was set up. Round about this shrub some dozen canaries fluttered and hopped and chirped as happily as if they were unconfined, and yet with no more idea of making their escape than if they had been confined in the closest boundary of a cage. The miraculous bird-charmer is prepared at any time to take charge of a couple of offices in the Bois de Boulogne, and to promise that they shall be inhabited by birds for any length of time, without the birds making the slightest attempt to quit their leafy prison.—Whitehall Review.

—A prisoner, condemned to solitary confinement, obtained a copy of the Bible, and, by three years' careful study, obtained the following facts: The Bible contains 3,586,489 letters, 773,692 words, 31,173 verses, 1,189 chapters and 66 books. The word and occurs 46,277 times. The word Lord occurs 1,855 times. The word reverend occurs but once, which is in the 9th verse of the 111th Psalms. The 21st verse of the 7th chapter of Ezra contains all the letters of the alphabet except the letter J. The finest chapter to read is the 26th chapter of the Acts of the Apostles. The 19th chapter of the II Kings and the 37th chapter of Isaiah are alike. The longest verse is the 9th verse of the 8th chapter of Esther. The shortest verse is the 35th verse of the 11th chapter of St. John. The 8th, 15th, 21st and 31st verses of the 107th Psalm are alike. Each verse of the 136th Psalm ends alike. There are no words or names of more than six syllables.

—The Norwich (Conn.) Bulletin says of a widower of that place, who a short time ago married his seventh wife, that "he waived the customary tour and buckled down to his daily calling as if he had become convinced that life is too real and earnest in its sunset for any display of foolishness."

THE MARKETS.

CINCINNATI, July 15, 1884.

LIVE STOCK—Cattle—Common	$2 50	@	3 50
Choice butchers	4 75	@	5 50
HOGS—Common	4 25	@	5 00
Good packers	5 10	@	5 60
SHEEP—Good to choice	4 00	@	4 75
FLOUR—Family	4 20	@	4 60
GRAIN—Wheat—Longberry red		@	1 00
No. 2 red	88	@	90
Corn—No. 2 mixed		@	54½
Oats—No. 2 mixed		@	34
Rye—No. 2		@	65
HAY—Timothy No. 1	11 00	@	11 50
HEMP—Double dressed	8 75	@	9 00
PROVISIONS—Pork—Mess	16 50	@	16 75
Lard—Prime steam		@	7 25
BUTTER—Fancy Dairy	14	@	16
Prime Creamery	16	@	18
FRUIT AND VEGETABLES—
Potatoes, new, per barrel	2 00	@	2 25
Apples, prime, per barrel	1 50	@	2 50
NEW YORK.
FLOUR—State and Western	$2 75	@	3 20
Good to choice	3 65	@	6 50
GRAIN—Wheat—No. 2 Chicago		@	93½
No. 2 red	98	@	98¼
Corn—No. 2 mixed	48	@	61
Oats—mixed	37	@	41
PORK—Mess		@	16 50
LARD—Western steam		@	7 40
CHICAGO.
FLOUR—State and Western	$3 50	@	5¾
GRAIN—Wheat—No. 2 red	81½	@	82¼
No. 2 Chicago Spring	81	@	81½
Corn—No. 2	48½	@	51½
Oats—No. 2	29	@	29½
Rye		@	61
PORK—Mess	16 00	@	17 00
LARD—Steam	7 05	@	7 15
BALTIMORE.
FLOUR—Family	$4 25	@	5 50
GRAIN—Wheat—No 2	95½	@	96
Corn—mixed		@	60
Oats—mixed	35	@	38
PROVISIONS—Pork—Mess		@	17 25
Lard—Refined		@	9¼
INDIANAPOLIS.
WHEAT—No. 2 red	$	@	86
CORN—mixed		@	47
OATS—mixed		@	29
LOUISVILLE.
FLOUR—A No. 1	$4 15	@	4 25
GRAIN—Wheat—No. 2 red	80	@	85
Corn—mixed	55	@	55
Oats—mixed		@	34
PORK—mess		@	16 50
LARD—steam	9¼	@	9½

The Record of the Fairs.

The superiority of Wells, Richardson & Co.'s Improved Butter Color over all others made, is again demonstrated by its record at the Autumnal Fairs. The test of practical use is what tells the story, and the great value of the premiums given by the Agricultural Fairs, lies in the fact, that the judges in these cases are regular farmers, who know what their needs are and what will supply them. Wells, Richardson & Co.'s Improved Butter Color, which has taken first premium at all fairs where exhibited, is put up in a vegetable oil so prepared that it can not become rancid, a most important property, the lack of which is fatal to so many of the Butter Colors offered for sale. It does not color the butter-milk; it imparts a bright natural color, which is unattained by many others; and being the strongest is the cheapest Color in the market.

A TIE game—Getting married.—Lowell Courier.

LYDIA E. PINKHAM'S Vegetable Compound is a most valuable medicine for ladies of all ages who may be afflicted with any form of disease peculiar to their sex. Her remedies are put up not only in liquid forms but also in Pills and Lozenges in which forms they are securely sent through the mails.

CAR-TOONS make popular campaign music to train by.

"Rough on Corns." 15c. Ask for it. Complete cure, hard or soft corns, warts, bunions.

FIVE couples accepted Mrs. Jones' cards for her hop, and the paper said there was a good a-tau-dance.

"I USED Swift's Specific on my little daughter, who was afflicted with some Blood Poison which had resisted all sorts of treatment. The Specific relieved her permanently, and I shall use it in my practice." W. E. BRONTE, M. D., Cypress Ridge, Ark.

IS IT better to have something constantly on the mind, or have the mind constantly on something?

"Mother Swan's Worm Syrup," for feverishness, worms, constipation, tasteless. 25c

WHEN is a fortune not a fortune?—When it is a mast (amassed).—Harper's Bazar.

Skinny Men. "Wells' Health Renewer" restores health and vigor, cures Dyspepsia, $1.

Glenn's Sulphur Soap

Renders a lady's skin white and soft. Pike's toothache drops cure in one minute.

"Buchu-paiba." Quick, complete cure, all annoying Kidney and Urinary Diseases, $1.

THE liveliest girl this summer is Polly Ticks.—Oil City Derrick.

"Rough on Coughs," 15c., at Druggists. Complete cure Coughs, Hoarseness, Sore Throat.

BEWARE of the incipient stages of Consumption. Take Piso's Cure in time.

St. Jacobs Oil

THE GREAT GERMAN REMEDY For Pain! Relieves and cures RHEUMATISM, Neuralgia, SCIATICA, LUMBAGO, BACKACHE, Headache, Toothache, SORE THROAT, QUINSY, SWELLINGS, SPRAINS, Soreness, Cuts, Bruises, FROSTBITES, BURNS, SCALDS, And all other bodily aches and pains. FIFTY CENTS A BOTTLE. Sold by all Druggists and Dealers. Directions in 11 languages. The Charles A. Vogeler Co. (Successors to A. VOGELER & CO.) Baltimore, Md., U. S. A.

A THRILLING STORY.

As Told by a Merchant in Troy, N. Y.—A Surgical Operation Avoided—How a Father, Wife and Daughter Escaped an Awful Doom.

Of the hundreds of accounts of remarkable cures wrought by DR. KENNEDY'S FAVORITE REMEDY, none have appeared so purely astonishing as the following: The persons mentioned are among the most highly respected in the city of Troy, and the story as told by the father will prove interesting to all our readers.—ED.

TROY, N. Y.

Dr. Kennedy, Rondout, N. Y.:

DEAR SIR:—My daughter was afflicted with a severe growth of Fungus. To remove it we had resorted to almost every remedy and consulted the most prominent surgeons and physicians. Dr. ——, of Troy, said that a surgical operation would be necessary, but fearing fatal results I hesitated. Some of the physicians claimed that it was caused by one thing and some by another. The Fungus was prominent and disfigured her looks. Having heard of Dr. Kennedy's FAVORITE REMEDY working so thoroughly on the blood I determined to try it, to see if this medicine could do what doctors had failed to do and surgeons had hardly dared to undertake. I can say in truth that the result of this trial was the complete cure of my daughter of this dreadful malady. Dr. Kennedy's FAVORITE REMEDY alone effected it. We used nothing else, for other things had completely failed. My daughter to-day enjoys vigorous health, and to Favorite Remedy alone is the credit due. My wife also was in very poor health, due to some liver difficulty with which she had suffered a long time until she became very much reduced in flesh. A trial of Dr. Kennedy's Favorite Remedy has resulted in the complete restoration of her health, which she had not enjoyed for years. She had gained in flesh and strength, and thus secured perfect health, and this is DUE ENTIRELY TO DR. KENNEDY'S FAVORITE REMEDY. As for myself, being engaged in the grocery and commission business, which makes it necessary for me to test the quality of different articles, like butter, etc., my sense of taste and my stomach were seriously injured. Everything seemed to nauseate me, and fearful of dyspepsia in its most severe form, I tried DR. KENNEDY'S FAVORITE REMEDY. The first bottle afforded immediate relief, and from that day to this I can say that Favorite Remedy has restored me to perfect health. These are facts which I claim prove that Dr. Kennedy's Favorite Remedy is the best medicine in the world for those afflicted with the above difficulties. If any one in the city of Troy doubts the truth of these statements let him come to me and I will prove them. I have recommended Favorite Remedy to hundreds and with the same good results. Yours, etc., WILLIAM WINDSOR.

Corner Canal and Mount Streets, Troy, N. Y.

THIS NEW ELASTIC TRUSS Has a Pad different from all others, is cup shape, with Self-Adjusting Ball in center, adapts itself to all positions of the body, while the ball in the cup presses back the intestines just as a person does with the finger. With light pressure the Hernia is held securely day and night, and a radical cure certain. It is easy, durable and cheap. Sent by mail. Circulars free. EGGLESTON TRUSS CO., 69 Dearborn St., Chicago, Ill.

PISO'S CURE FOR CURES WHERE ALL ELSE FAILS. Best Cough Syrup. Tastes good. Use in time. Sold by druggists. 25 CTS. CONSUMPTION

"THE BEST IS CHEAPEST." ENGINES, Horse Powers THRESHERS SAW-MILLS, Clover Hullers (Suited to all sections.) Write for FREE Illus. Pamphlet and Prices to The Aultman & Taylor Co., Mansfield, Ohio.

AGENTS! Do you want a BUSINESS that will pay you $5 to $10 a day? If so, send for our illustrated Price-List of staple goods. We want reliable, energetic Agents, of either sex. Address NEW ENGLAND SILVERWARE CO., 459 Washington Street, BOSTON, Mass.

BLAINE AGENTS Wanted to sell the Lives of Blaine and Logan, by J. C. Ridpath, LL. D., the eminent historian. Send 50 cts. for complete Agents' Outfit. Extra liberal terms to Agents. JONES BROS. & CO., Publishers, CINCINNATI, CHICAGO, ST. LOUIS.

PILES "Anakesis" gives instant relief, and is an infallible cure for Piles. Price $1 from druggists, or sent prepaid by mail. Samples free. Ad. "ANAKESIS," Makers, Box 2416, New York.

WANTED—Agents for the Authorized Official Campaign BOOK, BLAINE AND LOGAN. Profusely illustrated with Steel and Wood Engravings. Outfit only 50cts. Book sells .... every 10 copies ordered, will give as premium a complete Gazetteer of the U. S. PEOPLE'S PUB. CO., Chicago.

$65 A MONTH and board for 3 live Young Men or Ladies in each county, to take orders for the LIVES OF BLAINE AND LOGAN Address P. W. ZIEGLER & CO., Philadelphia, Pa.

EASILY CURED BOOK FREE! OPIUM HABIT DR. J. C. HOFFMAN, JEFFERSON, WISCONSIN.

BLAINE & LOGAN. Best Steel Portraits, 8x10, 15c. each; $5 per 100, by mail. Agents wanted. H. E. Perine, Pub'r, 121 Nassau St., N. Y.

HAIR Wholesale and retail. Send for price-list. Goods sent C. O. D. Wigs made to order. E. BURNHAM, 71 State Street, Chicago.

Advertising Cheats!!!

"It has become so common to begin an article, in an elegant, interesting style.

"Then run it into some advertisement that we avoid all such,

"And simply call attention to the merits of Hop Bitters in as plain, honest terms as possible,

"To induce people

"To give them one trial, which so proves their value that they will never use anything else."

"THE REMEDY so favorably noticed in all the papers,

Religious and secular, is

"Having a large sale, and is supplanting all other medicines.

"There is no denying the virtues of the Hop plant, and the proprietors of Hop Bitters have shown great shrewdness and ability ● ● ●

"In compounding a medicine whose virtues are so palpable to every one's observation."

Did She Die?

"No!

"She lingered and suffered along, pining away all the time for years,"

"The doctors doing her no good;"

"And at last was cured by this Hop Bitters the papers say so much about."

"Indeed! Indeed!"

"How thankful we should be for that medicine."

A Daughter's Misery.

"Eleven years our daughter suffered on a bed of misery,

"From a complication of kidney, liver, rheumatic trouble and Nervous debility,

"Under the care of the best physicians,

"Who gave her disease various names,

"But no relief,

"And now she is restored to us in good health by as simple a remedy as Hop Bitters, that she had shunned for years before using it."—THE PARENTS.

Father is Getting Well.

"My daughters say:

"How much better father is since he used Hop Bitters."

"He is getting well after his long suffering from a disease declared incurable."

"And we are so glad that he used your Bitters."—A LADY of Utica, N. Y.

☞ None genuine without a bunch of green Hops on the white label. Shun all the vile poisonous stuff with "Hop" or "Hops" in their name.

GAIN Health and Happiness.

How? DO AS OTHERS HAVE DONE.

Are your Kidneys disordered? "Kidney Wort brought me from my grave, as it were, after I had been given up by 13 best doctors in Detroit." M. W. Deveraux, Mechanic, Ionia, Mich.

Are your nerves weak? "Kidney Wort cured me from nervous weakness &c., after I was not expected to live."—Mrs. M. M. B. Goodwin, Ed. Christian Monitor Cleveland, O.

Have you Bright's Disease? "Kidney-Wort cured me when my water was just like chalk and then like blood." Frank Wilson, Peabody, Mass.

Suffering from Diabetes? "Kidney-Wort is the most successful remedy I have ever used. Gives almost immediate relief." Dr. Phillip C. Ballou, Monkton, Vt.

Have you Liver Complaint? "Kidney-Wort cured me of chronic Liver Diseases after I prayed to die." Henry Ward, late Col. 69th Nat. Guard, N. Y.

Is your Back lame and aching? "Kidney-Wort, (1 bottle) cured me when I was so lame I had to roll out of bed." C. M. Tallmage, Milwaukee, Wis.

Have you Kidney Disease? "Kidney-Wort made me sound in liver and kidneys after years of unsuccessful doctoring. Its worth $10 a box."—Sam'l Hodges, Williamstown, West Va.

Are you Constipated? "Kidney-Wort causes easy evacuations and cured me after 16 years use of other medicines." Nelson Fairchild, St. Albans, Vt.

Have you Malaria? "Kidney-Wort has done better than any other remedy I have ever used in my practice." Dr. R. K. Clark, South Hero, Vt.

Are you Bilious? "Kidney-Wort has done me more good than any other remedy I have ever taken." Mrs. J. T. Galloway, Elk Flat, Oregon.

Are you tormented with Piles? "Kidney-Wort permanently cured me of bleeding piles. Dr. W. C. Kline recommended it to me." Geo. H. Horst, Cashier M. Bank, Myerstown, Pa.

Are you Rheumatism racked? "Kidney-Wort cured me, after I was given up to die by physicians and I had suffered thirty years." Elbridge Malcolm, West Bath, Maine.

Ladies, are you suffering? "Kidney-Wort cured me of peculiar troubles of several years standing. Many friends use and praise it." Mrs. H. Lamoreaux, Isle La Motte, Vt.

If you would Banish Disease and gain Health, Take

KIDNEY-WORT THE BLOOD CLEANSER.

PAPILLON

HAY FEVER.

Many members of the Hay Fever Association of New England, have used Papillon Catarrh Cure with remarkable results. We have numerous testimonials testifying to its efficacy. Its curative powers are so positive, and the effect of its use so pleasing, that when once used, it is ever used. Unlike every other HAY FEVER REMEDY, it is not a temporary relief, but a permanent cure. No change of climate is necessary where this remedy is used. It stops the sneezing, the sneezing and the watery eyes. It permits breathing through the nostrils, and cures the inflammation. Any one wishing positive evidence from the many who have and are recommending this remedy, can procure a list of testimonials by sending us their address by postal card.

A prominent reporter on the staff of the Chicago "Tribune" says: "Papillon Catarrh Cure has saved me hundreds of dollars in expenses, and months of time."

Mr. J. C. Emmons, Attorney, Macomb, Ill., says: "I have had more relief from one dose of Papillon Catarrh Cure than from all other HAY FEVER REMEDIES I ever tried; it cured me at once. I traveled among rag weeds during hay fever time, without a recurrence."

It is not a new remedy; it has been in use for nearly ten years, and never fails to cure CATARRH, ROSE COLD and HAY FEVER. Use it by insufflation or with an atomizer, or any other way that will reach the seat of the disease; it cures by healing the inflamed membranes of the nostrils, which is the cause of the disease.

For sale by all druggists.

$1,000

WILL be paid to any one who will find a particle of Mercury, Potash, Iodine, Arsenic, or any poisonous substance in

SWIFT'S SPECIFIC S

"I have cured Blood Taint by the use of Swift's Specific after I had most signally failed with the Mercury and Potash treatment." F. A. TOOMER, M. D., Perry, Ga.

"Swift's Specific has cured me of Scrofula of 12 years standing. Had sores as large as my hand, and every one thought I was doomed. Swift's Specific cured me after physicians and all other medicine had failed." R. L. HIGH, Lonoke, Ark.

Our Treatise on Blood and Skin Diseases mailed free to applicants.

THE SWIFT SPECIFIC CO., Drawer 3, Atlanta, Ga.

N. Y. Office, 159 W. 23d St., bet. 6th and 7th Aves. Philadelphia office, 1205 Chestnut St.

CANCER INSTITUTE. AURORA ILL. Established, 1872; Incorporated, 1880. For the Cure of Cancers, Tumors, Ulcers, Scrofula and SKIN DISEASES, without the use of knife or LOSS OF BLOOD, and little pain. For INFORMATION, CIRCULARS AND REFERENCES, address DR. F. L. POND, Aurora, Kane Co., Ill.

EDUCATIONAL.

UNION COLLEGE OF LAW, Chicago, Ill. The Fall Term will begin September 24. For circular, address H. BOOTH, Chicago, Ill.

LEARN TELEGRAPHY, or SHORT-HAND and TYPE-WRITING HERE. Situations furnished. Address VALENTINE BROS., Janesville, Wis.

YALE LAW SCHOOL. 6 Professors, 10 Instructors. Fall term commences September 25th. For circular address PROF. FRANCIS WAYLAND, Yale College, New Haven, Conn.

A. N. K.—E. 987

WHEN WRITING TO ADVERTISERS please say you saw the advertisement in this paper.

BOONE COUNTY RECORDER.

VOLUME IX. BURLINGTON, KY., WEDNESDAY, JULY 23, 1884. NUMBER 38.

BLAINE'S LETTER.

Formally Accepting the Republican Nomination

For the Presidency of the United States.

Review of the Questions Involved in the Contest—The Development of American Industries—Relations and Interdependence of Capital and Labor—We Have no Cause or Desire to War With any Power and no Nation Cares to Tackle Our Own Glorious Republic—The Republican Standard Bearer Believes in the Bright Ways of Peace.

AUGUSTA, ME., July 15, 1884.

THE HON. JOHN B. HENDERSON AND OTHERS OF THE COMMITTEE, ETC., ETC.—Gentlemen: In accepting the nomination for the Presidency tendered me by the Republican National Convention, I beg to express a deep sense of the honor which is conferred and of the duty which is imposed. I venture to accompany the acceptance with some observations upon the questions involved in the contest—questions whose settlement may affect the future of the nation favorably or unfavorably for a long series of years.

In enumerating the issues upon which the Republican party appeals for popular support the convention has been singularly explicit and felicitous. It has properly given the leading position to the industrial interests of the country as affected by the tariff on imports. On that question the two political parties are radically in conflict. Almost the first act of the Republicans when they came into power in 1861 was the establishment of the principle of protection to American labor and to American capital. This principle the Republican party has ever since steadily maintained, while on the other hand the Democratic party in Congress has for fifty years persistently warred upon it. Twice within that period our opponents have destroyed tariffs arranged for protection, and since the close of the civil war, whenever they have controlled the House of Representatives, hostile legislation has been attempted—never more conspicuously than in their principal measure at the late session of Congress.

THE TARIFF QUESTION.

Revenue laws are in their very nature subject to frequent [illegible] in order that they may be adapted to changes and modifications of trade. The Republican party is not contending for the permanency of any particular statute. The issue between the two parties does not have reference to a specific law. It is far broader and far deeper. It involves a principle of wide application and beneficent influence against a theory which we believe to be unsound in conception and inevitably hurtful in practice. In the many tariff revisions which have been necessary for the past twenty-three years, or which may hereafter become necessary, the Republican party has maintained and will maintain the policy of protection to American industry, while our opponents insist upon a revision which practically destroys that policy. The issue is thus distinct, well defined and unavoidable. The pending election may determine the fate of protection for a generation. The overthrow of the policy means a large and permanent reduction of the wages of the American laborers besides involving the loss of vast amounts of American capital invested in manufacturing enterprises. The value of the present revenue system to the people of the United States is not a matter of theory, and I shall submit no argument to sustain it. I only invite attention to certain facts of official record which seem to constitute a demonstration.

In the census of 1850 an effort was made, for the first time in our history, to obtain a valuation of all the property in the United States. The attempt was in a large degree unsuccessful. Partly from lack of time, partly from prejudice among many who thought the inquiries foreshadowed a new scheme of taxation, the returns were incomplete and unsatisfactory. Little more was done than to consolidate the local valuation used in the States for purposes of assessment, and that, as every one knows, differs widely from a complete exhibit of all the property.

In the census of 1860, however, the work was done with great thoroughness—the distinction between "assessed" value and "true" value being carefully observed. The grand result was that the "true value" of all the property in the States and Territories (excluding slaves) amounted to $14,000,000,000. This aggregate was the net result of the labor and the savings of all the people within the area of the United States from the time the first British colonist landed in 1607 down to the year 1860. It represented the fruit of the toil of 250 years.

After 1860 the business of the country was encouraged and developed by a protective tariff. At the end of twenty years the total property of the United States, as returned by the census of 1880, amounted to the enormous aggregate of $44,000,000,000. This great result was attained, notwithstanding the fact that countless millions had in the interval been wasted in the progress of a bloody war. It thus appears that while our population between 1860 and 1880 increased 60 per cent., the aggregate property of the country increased 214 per cent.—showing a vastly enhanced wealth per capita among the people. Thirty thousand millions of dollars had been added during these twenty years to the permanent wealth of the nation.

These results are regarded by the older nations of the world as phenomenal. That our country should surmount the peril and the cost of a gigantic war and for an entire period of twenty years make an average gain to its wealth of $125,000,000 per month surpasses the experience of all other nations, ancient or modern. Even the opponents of the present revenue system do not pretend that in the whole history of civilization any parallel can be found to the material progress of the United States since the accession of the Republican party to power.

The period between 1860 and to-day has not been one of material prosperity only. At no time in the history of the United States has there been such progress in the moral and philanthropic field. Religious and charitable institutions, schools, seminaries and colleges have been founded and endowed far more generously than at any previous time in our history. Greater and more varied relief has been extended to human suffering, and the entire progress of the country in wealth has been accompanied and dignified by a broadening and elevation of our National character as a people.

Our opponents find fault that our revenue system produces a surplus. But they should not forget that the law has given a specific purpose to which all of the surplus is profitably and honorably applied—the reduction of the public debt and the consequent relief of the burden of taxation. No dollar has been wasted, and the only extravagance with which the party stands charged is the generous pensioning of soldiers, sailors and their families—an extravagance which embodies the highest forms of justice in the recognition and payment of a sacred debt. When reduction of taxation is to be made the Republican party can be trusted to accomplish it in such form as will most effectively aid the industries of the Nation.

OUR FOREIGN COMMERCE.

A frequent accusation by our opponents is that the foreign commerce of the country has steadily decayed under the influence of the protective tariff. In this way they seek to array the importing interest against the Republican party. It is a common and yet radical error to confound the commerce of the country with its carrying trade—an error often committed innocently and sometimes designedly—but an error so gross that it does not distinguish between the ship and the cargo. Foreign commerce represents the exports and imports of a country regardless of the nationality of the vessel that may carry the commodities of exchange. Our carrying trade has from obvious causes suffered many discouragements since 1860, but our foreign commerce has in the same period steadily and prodigiously increased—increased, indeed, at a rate and to an amount which absolutely dwarf all previous developments of our trade beyond the sea. From 1860 to the present time the foreign commerce of the United States (divided with approximate equality between exports and imports) reached the astounding aggregate of $24,000,000,000. The balance in this vast commerce inclined in our favor, but it would have been much larger if our trade with the countries of America, elsewhere referred to, had been more wisely adjusted.

It is difficult even to appreciate the magnitude of our export trade since 1860, and we can gain a correct conception of it only by comparison with preceding results in the same field. The total exports from the United States from the Declaration of Independence in 1776 down to the day of Lincoln's election in 1860, added to all that had previously been exported from the American colonies from their original settlement, amounted to less than nine thousand millions of dollars ($9,000,000,000). On the other hand, our exports from 1860 to the close of the last fiscal year exceeded twelve thousand millions of dollars ($12,000,000,000)—the whole of it being the product of American labor. Evidently a protective tariff has not injured our export trade when, under its influence, we exported in twenty-four years 40 per cent. more than the total amount that had been exported in the entire previous history of American commerce. All the details, when analyzed, correspond with this gigantic result. The commercial cities of the Union never had such growth as they [illegible] our chief emporium, the City of New York, with its dependencies, has within that period doubled her population and increased her wealth five-fold. During the same period the imports and exports which have entered and left her harbor are more than double in bulk and value the whole amount imported and exported by her between the settlement of the first Dutch colony on the island of Manhattan and the outbreak of the civil war in 1860.

AGRICULTURE AND THE TARIFF.

The agricultural interest is by far the largest in the nation, and is entitled in every adjustment of revenue laws to the first consideration. Any policy hostile to the fullest development of agriculture in the United States must be abandoned. Realizing this fact the opponents of the present system of revenue have labored very earnestly to persuade the farmers of the United States that they are robbed by a protective tariff, and the effort is thus made to consolidate their vast influence in favor of free trade. But happily the farmers of America are intelligent and can not be misled by sophistry when conclusive facts are before them. They see plainly that during the past twenty-four years wealth has not been acquired in one section or by one interest at the expense of another section or another interest. They see that the agricultural States have made even more rapid progress than the manufacturing States.

The farmers see that in 1860 Massachusetts and Illinois had about the same wealth—between $800,000,000 and $900,000,000 each—and that in 1880 Massachusetts had advanced to $2,600,000,000, while Illinois had advanced to $3,200,000,000. They see that New Jersey and Iowa were just equal in population in 1860, and that in twenty years the wealth of New Jersey was increased by the sum of $850,000,000, while the wealth of Iowa was increased by the sum of $1,500,000,000. They see that the South, which is almost exclusively agricultural, has shared in the general prosperity, and that having recovered from the loss and devastation of war, has gained so rapidly that its total wealth is at least the double of that which it possessed in 1860, exclusive of slaves.

In these extraordinary developments the farmers see the hopeful impulse of a home market, and they see that the financial and revenue system enacted since the Republican party came into power has established and constantly expanded the home market. They see that even in the case of wheat, which is our chief cereal export, they have sold in the average of the years since the close of the war three bushels at home to one they have sold abroad, and that in the case of corn, the only other cereal which we export to any extent, one hundred bushels have been used at home to three and a half bushels exported. In some years the disparity has been so great that for every peck of corn exported one hundred bushels have been consumed in the home market. The farmers see that in the increasing competition from the grain fields of Russia and from the distant plains of India the growth of the home market becomes daily of greater concern to them, and that its impairment would depreciate the value of every acre of tillable land in the Union.

OUR INTERNAL COMMERCE.

Such facts as these touching the growth and consumption of cereals at home give us some slight conception of the vastness of the internal commerce of the United States. They suggest also that, in addition to the advantages which the American people enjoy from protection against foreign competition, they enjoy the advantages of absolute free trade over a larger area and with a greater population than any other nation. The internal commerce of our thirty-eight States and nine Territories is carried on without let or hindrance, without tax, detention or Governmental interference of any kind whatever. It spreads free over an area of three and a half million square miles—almost equal in extent to the whole continent of Europe. Its profits are enjoyed to-day by fifty-six millions of American freemen, and from this enjoyment no monopoly is created. According to Alexander Hamilton, when he discussed the same subject in 1790, "the internal competition which takes place does away with every thing like monopoly, and by degrees reduces the prices of articles to the minimum of a reasonable profit on the capital employed." It is impossible to point to a single monopoly in the United States that has been created or fostered by the industrial system which is upheld by the Republican party.

Compared with our foreign commerce, these domestic changes are inconceivably great in amount, requiring merely as one instrumentality as large a mileage of railroads as exists to-day in all the other nations of the world combined. These internal exchanges are estimated by the Statistical Bureau of the Treasury Department to be annually twenty times as great in amount as our foreign commerce. It is into this vast field of home trade—at once the creation and the heritage of the American people—that foreign nations are striving by every device to enter. It is into this field that the opponents of our present revenue system would freely admit the countries of Europe—countries into whose internal trade we could not reciprocally enter; countries to which we should be surrendering every advantage of trade, from which we should be gaining nothing in return.

EFFECT UPON THE MECHANIC AND THE LABORER.

A policy of this kind would be disastrous to the mechanics and workingmen of the United States. Wages are unjustly reduced when an industrious man is not able by his earnings to live in comfort, educate his children, and lay by a sufficient amount for the necessities of age. The reduction of wages inevitably consequent upon throwing our home market open to the world would deprive them of the power to do this. It would prove a great calamity to the country. It would produce a conflict between the poor and the rich, and in the sorrowful degradation of labor would plant the seeds of public danger.

The Republican party has steadily aimed to maintain just relations between labor and capital—guarding with care the rights of each. A conflict between the two has always led in the past, and will always lead in the future, to the injury of both. Labor is indispensable to the creation and profitable use of capital, and capital increases the efficiency and value of labor. Whoever arrays the one against the other is an enemy of both. That policy is wisest and best which harmonizes the two on the basis of absolute justice. The Republican party has protected the free labor of America so that its compensation is larger than is realized in any other country. It has guarded our people against the unfair competition of contract labor from China, and may be called upon to prohibit the growth of a similar evil from Europe. It is obviously unfair to permit capitalists to make contracts for cheap labor in foreign countries to the hurt and disparagement of the labor of American citizens. Such a policy (like that which would leave the time and other conditions of home labor exclusively in the control of the employer) is injurious to all parties—not the least so to the unhappy persons who are made the objects of the contract. The institutions of the United States rest upon the intelligence and virtue of all the people. Suffrage is made universal as a just weapon of self-protection to every citizen. It is not the interest of the Republic that any economic system should be adopted which involves the reduction of wages to the hard standard prevailing elsewhere. The Republican party aims to elevate and dignify labor, not to degrade it.

As a substitute for the industrial system which under Republican Administrations has developed such extraordinary prosperity, our opponents offer a policy which is but a series of experiments upon our system of revenue—a policy whose end must be harm to our manufacturers and greater harm to our labor. Experiment in the industrial and financial system is the country's greatest dread, as stability is its greatest boon. Even the uncertainty resulting from the recent tariff agitation in Congress has hurtfully affected the business of the entire country. Who can measure the harm to our shops and our homes, to our farms and our commerce, if the uncertainty of perpetual tariff agitation is to be inflicted upon the country? We are in the midst of an abundant harvest; we are on the eve of a revival of general prosperity. Nothing stands in our way but the dread of a change in the industrial system which has wrought such wonders in the last twenty years, and with which the powers of increased capital will work still greater marvels of prosperity in the twenty years to come.

OUR FOREIGN POLICY.

Our foreign relations favor our domestic development. We are at peace with the world—at peace upon a sound basis, with no unsettled questions of sufficient magnitude to embarrass or distract us. Happily removed by our geographical position from participation or interest in those questions of dynasty or boundary which so frequently disturb the peace of Europe, we are left to cultivate friendly relations with all, and are free from possible entanglements in the quarrels of any. The United States has no cause and no desire to engage in conflict with any power on earth, and we may rest in assured confidence that no power desires to attack the United States.

With the nations of the Western Hemisphere we should cultivate closer relations, and for our common prosperity and advancement we should invite them all to join with us in an agreement that, for the future, all international troubles in North or South America shall be adjusted by impartial arbitration, and not by arms. This project was part of the fixed policy of President Garfield's administration, and it should in my judgment be renewed. Its accomplishment on this continent would favorably affect the nations beyond the sea, and thus powerfully contribute at no distant day to the universal acceptance of the philanthropic and Christian principle of arbitration. The effect even of suggesting it for the Spanish-American States has been most happy, and has increased the confidence of those people in our friendly disposition. It fell to my lot as Secretary of State in June, 1881, to quiet apprehension in the Republic of Mexico by giving the assurance in an official dispatch that "there is not the faintest desire in the United States for territorial extension south of the Rio Grande. The boundaries of the two republics have been established in conformity with the best jurisdictional interests of both. The line of demarcation is not merely conventional. It is more. It separates a Spanish-American people from a Saxon-American people. It divides one great nation from another with distinct and natural finality."

We seek the conquests of peace. We desire to extend our commerce, and in an especial degree with our friends and neighbors on this continent. We have not improved our relations with Spanish America as wisely and as persistently as we might have done. For more than a generation the sympathy of those countries has been allowed to drift away from us. We should now make every effort to gain their friendship. Our trade with them is already large. During the last year our exchanges in the Western Hemisphere amounted to $350,000,000—nearly one-fourth of our entire foreign commerce. To those who may be disposed to underrate the value of our trade with the countries of North and South America, it may be well to state that their population is nearly or quite fifty millions—and that, in proportion to aggregate numbers, we import nearly double as much from them as we do from Europe. But the result of the whole American trade is in a high degree unsatisfactory. The imports during the past year exceeded $225,000,000, while the exports were less than $125,000,000, showing a balance against us of more than $100,000,000. But the money does not go to Spanish America. We send large sums to Europe in coin or its equivalent to pay European manufacturers for the goods which they send to Spanish America. We are but paymasters for this enormous amount annually to European factors—an amount which is a serious draft, in every financial depression, upon our resources of specie.

Can not this condition of trade in great part be changed? Can not the market for our products be greatly enlarged? We have made a beginning in our effort to improve our trade relations with Mexico, and we should not be content until similar and mutually advantageous arrangements have been successively made with every nation of North and South America. While the great powers of Europe are steadily enlarging their colonial domination in Asia and Africa, it is the especial province of this country to improve and expand its trade with the nations of America. No field promises so much. No field has been cultivated so little. Our foreign policy should be an American policy in its broadest and most comprehensive sense—a policy of peace, of friendship, of commercial enlargement.

The name of American, which belongs to us in our National capacity, must always exalt the just pride of patriotism. Citizenship of the Republic must be the panoply and safeguard of him who wears it. The American citizen, rich or poor, native or naturalized, white or colored, must everywhere walk secure in his personal and civil rights. The Republic should never accept a lesser duty. It can never assume a nobler one, than the protection of the humblest man who owes it loyalty—protection at home, and protection which shall follow him abroad into whatever land he may go upon a lawful errand.

THE SOUTHERN STATES.

I recognize, not without regret, the necessity for speaking of two sections of our common country. But the regret diminishes when I see that the elements which separated them are fast disappearing. Prejudices have yielded and are yielding, while a growing cordiality warms the Southern and Northern heart alike. Can any one doubt that between the sections confidence and esteem are to-day more marked than at any period in the sixty years preceding the election of President Lincoln? This is the result in part of time and in part of Republican principles applied under the favorable conditions of uniformity. It would be a great calamity to change these influences under which Southern Commonwealths are learning to vindicate civil rights, and adapting themselves to the conditions of political tranquillity and industrial progress. If there be occasional and violent outbreaks in the South against this peaceful progress, the public opinion of the country regards them as exceptional and hopefully trusts that each will prove the last.

The South needs capital and occupation, not controversy. As much as any part of the North the South needs the full protection of the revenue laws which the Republican party offers. Some of the Southern States have already entered upon a career of industrial development and prosperity. These, at least, should not lend their electoral votes to destroy their own future.

Any effort to unite the Southern States upon issues that grow out of the memories of the war will summon the Northern States to combine in the assertion of that nationality which was their inspiration in the civil struggle. And thus great energies which should be united in a common industrial development will be wasted in hurtful strife. The Democratic party shows itself a foe to Southern prosperity by always invoking and urging Southern political consolidation. Such a policy quenches the rising instinct of patriotism in the heart of the Southern youth; it revives and stimulates prejudice; it substitutes the spirit of barbaric vengeance for the love of peace, progress and harmony.

THE CIVIL SERVICE.

The general character of the Civil Service of the United States under all Administrations has been honorable. In the one supreme test—the collection and disbursement of revenue—the record of fidelity has never been surpassed in any nation. With the almost fabulous sums which were received and paid during the war, scrupulous integrity was the prevailing rule. Indeed, throughout that trying period it can be said to the honor of the American name, that unfaithfulness and dishonesty among civil officers were as rare as misconduct and cowardice on the field of battle.

The growth of the country has continually and necessarily enlarged the Civil Service, until now it includes a vast body of officers. Rules and methods of appointment which prevailed when the number was smaller have been found insufficient and impracticable, and earnest efforts have been made to separate the great mass of ministerial officers from partisan influence and personal control. Impartiality in the mode of appointment to be based on qualification, and security of tenure to be based on faithful discharge of duty are the two ends to be accomplished. The public business will be aided by separating the legislative branch of the Government from all control of appointments and the Executive Department will be relieved by subjecting appointments to fixed rules and thus removing them from the caprice of favoritism. But there should be rigid observance of the law which gives in all cases of equal competency the preference to the soldiers who risked their lives in defense of the Union.

I entered Congress in 1863, and in a somewhat prolonged service I never found it expedient to request or recommend the removal of a civil officer except in four instances, and then for non-political reasons which were instantly conclusive with the appointing power. The officers in the District appointed by Mr. Lincoln in 1861 upon the recommendation of my predecessor, served, as a rule, until death or resignation. I adopted at the beginning of my service the test of competitive examination for appointments to West Point, and maintained it so long as I had the right by law to nominate a cadet. In the case of many officers I found that the present law which arbitrarily limits the term of the commission offered a constant temptation to changes for mere political reasons. I have publicly expressed the belief that the essential modification of that law would be in many respects advantageous.

My observation in the Department of State confirmed the conclusions of my legislative experience, and impressed me with the conviction that the rule of impartial appointment might with advantage be carried beyond any existing provision of the Civil Service law. It should be applied to appointments in the Consular service. Consuls should be commercial sentinels—encircling the globe with watchfulness for their country's interests. Their intelligence and competency become, therefore, matters of great public concern. No man should be appointed to an American Consulate who is not well instructed in the history and resources of his own country, and in the requirements and language of commerce in the country to which he is sent. The same rule should be applied even more rigidly to Secretaries of Legation in our Diplomatic service. The people have the right to the most efficient agents in the discharge of public business, and the appointing power should regard this as the prior and ulterior consideration.

THE MORMON QUESTION.

Religious liberty is the right of every citizen of the Republic. Congress is forbidden by the Constitution to make any law "respecting the establishment of religion, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof." For a century, under this guarantee, Protestant and Catholic, Jew and Gentile, have worshiped God according to the dictates of conscience. But religious liberty must not be perverted to the justification of offenses against the law. A religious sect, strongly intrenched in one of the Territories of the Union, and spreading rapidly into four other Territories, claims the right to destroy the great safeguard and muniment of social order, and to practice as a religious privilege that which is a crime, punished with severe penalty, in every State of the Union. The sacredness and unity of the family must be preserved as the foundation of all civil government, as the source of orderly administration and as the surest guarantee of moral purity.

The claim of the Mormons that they are divinely authorized to practice polygamy should no more be admitted than the claim of certain heathen tribes, if they should come among us, to continue the rite of human sacrifice. The law does not interfere with what a man believes; it takes cognizance only of what he does. As citizens, the Mormons are entitled to the same civil rights as others, and to these they must be confined. Polygamy can never receive national sanction or toleration by admitting the community that upholds it as a State in the Union. Like others, the Mormons must learn that the liberty of the individual ceases where the rights of society begin.

OUR CURRENCY.

The people of the United States, though often urged and tempted, have never seriously contemplated the recognition of any other money than gold or silver—and currency directly convertible into them. They have not done so, they will not do so, under any necessity less pressing than that of desperate war. The one special requisite for the completion of our monetary system is the fixing of the relative values of silver and gold. The large use of silver as the money of account among Asiatic nations, taken in connection with the increasing commerce of the world, gives the weightiest reason for an international agreement in the premises. Our Government should not cease to urge this measure until a common standard of value shall be reached and established—a standard that shall enable the United States to use the silver from its mines as an auxiliary to gold in settling the balances of commercial exchange.

PUBLIC LANDS.

The strength of the Republic is increased by the multiplication of land-holders. Our laws should look to the judicious encouragement of actual settlers on the public domain, which should henceforth be held as a sacred trust for the benefit of those seeking homes. The tendency to consolidate large tracts of land in the ownership of individuals or corporations should, with proper regard to vested rights, be discouraged. One hundred thousand acres of land in the hands of one man is far less profitable to the nation in every way than when its ownership is divided among one thousand men. The evil of permitting large tracts of the national domain to be consolidated and controlled by the few against the many is enhanced when the persons controlling it are aliens. It is but fair that the public land should be disposed of only to actual settlers, and to those who are citizens of the Republic, or willing to become so.

OUR SHIPPING INTERESTS.

Among our national interests one languishes—the foreign carrying trade. It was very seriously crippled in our civil war, and another blow was given to it in the general substitution of steam for sail in ocean traffic. With a frontage on the two great oceans, with a freightage larger than that of any other nation, we have every inducement to restore our navigation. Yet our Government has hitherto refused it help. A small share of the encouragement given by the Government to railroads and manufactures, and a small share of the capital and the zeal given by our citizens to those enterprises would have carried our ships to every sea and to every port. A law just enacted removes some of the burdens upon our navigation and inspires hope that this great interest may at last receive its due share of attention. All efforts in this direction should receive encouragement.

SACREDNESS OF THE BALLOT.

This survey of this condition as a nation reminds us that material prosperity is but a mockery if it does not tend to preserve the liberties of the people. A free ballot is the safeguard of republican institutions, without which no national welfare is assured. A popular election, honestly conducted, embodies the very majesty of true government. Ten millions of voters desire to take part in the pending contest. The safety of the republic rests upon the integrity of the ballot, upon the security of suffrage to the citizen. To deposit a fraudulent vote is no worse a crime against constitutional liberty than to obstruct the deposit of an honest vote. He who corrupts suffrage strikes at the very root of free government. He is the arch-enemy of the republic. He forgets that in trampling upon the rights of others he fatally imperils his own rights. "It is a good land which the Lord our God doth give us," but we can maintain our heritage only by guarding with vigilance the source of popular power. I am, with great respect, your obedient servant,

JAMES G. BLAINE.

—A bold and remarkable attempt at robbery was recently made at the Santa Cruz Church, Mexico. Some people went to the priest and told him that they wanted to bury a relative at four o'clock in the morning, before early mass, no unusual custom in that city, and asked permission to leave the body in the church over night. This was granted. After midnight the sacristan's dogs set up a terrific barking, and that individual going into the church saw a form jump from the altar of an image. Calling the aid of several men a search was made, when it was discovered that the valuable jewelry that decorated several saints was missing. On examining the coffin a living thief was discovered to be its occupant, along with the missing jewels.

—The contents of a Mott street tenement room, New York City, as inventoried by a policeman were: A drunken father; a still more drunken mother; two empty whisky bottles; two equally empty children crying and moaning; and a neatly framed monogram with the legend, "God Bless Our Home."—N. Y. News.

—The base-ball mania in North Carolina is rapidly reaching fever heat. In the town of Henderson the stores close and all business is suspended on the days when a game is being played. The Mayor of the town is a member of the local club, and takes as much interest in its success as any other boy.—Chicago Times.

—A dispatch from London states that the committee engaged in the revision of the Old Testament have finished their labor. After its submission to a convocation of the divines the Testament will be issued to the public. Twelve out of the original twenty-seven members of the committee have died since the work of revision began.

—A prosaic correspondent of the Indianapolis Journal thus expresses himself: "Poets are queer folk, and have had their own way long enough. They say things in rhyme which, if said by other folks in prose, would land them in the penitentiary before Saturday night."

—A Mormon missionary, who was arrested at Vienna some time ago, was sentenced to a month's imprisonment. He tried to propagate the Mormon faith, and baptized a man and a woman in the Danube canal in such cold weather that the man took to flight and the woman fainted.

—Some time ago Richard A. Proctor cast his optics far into the future and said: "The time will come when men will be able to fly." Richard hit the nail square on the head. Just look at the bank officials and trusted clerks that are flying to Europe and Canada.—Peck's Sun.

—A Brooklyn policeman has laid himself liable to discharge. He kept awake all of one night and discovered that a lot of men and boys were using the city reservoir for a bath tub. His discovery, it is alleged, accounts for the peculiarity in the taste of the drinking water of that city.—Peck's Sun.

—Mr. Dwight L. Moody, the American evangelist, has sailed for New York. In an interview with a reporter of the Pall Mall Gazette, prior to his departure from London, Mr. Moody stated that he believed London was not the most religious city in the world.

—The man who finds fun in pointing pistols always selects some one else to point it at. If he would just stand before a looking glass and point the pistol at himself he would experience every bit of the fun there is in the situation.—Indianapolis News.

—It is said that by the following simple method almost instant relief of earache is afforded: Put five drops of chloroform on a little cotton or wool in the bowl of a clay pipe, then blow the vapor through the stem into the aching ear.

—No statue which the rich man may ostentatiously place in his parlor window is at all to be compared to the little expectant faces pressed against the window-panes of the poor man's home, waiting for papa to return from his daily toil.—Chicago Sun.

—"Dear George," said the young wife, tenderly, as she stroked her husband's Irving bang; "shall I sing 'Some Day?'" "Yes, dear," replied the heartless wretch; "some day when I'm away from home."—Somerville Journal.

LOGAN'S LETTER

Accepting the Vice Presidential Nomination.

Brief Discussion of the Platform—"Protection to American Labor" Heartily Approved, And its Benefits Outlined—Domestic and Foreign Commerce, and Foreign Political Relations.

WASHINGTON, July 19.—DEAR SIR: Having received from you on the 24th of June the official notification of my nomination by the National Republican Convention as the Republican candidate for Vice-President of the United States, and considering it to be the duty of every man devoting himself to the public service to assume any position to which he may be called by the voice of his countrymen, I accept the nomination with a grateful heart and a deep sense of its responsibilities, and if elected shall endeavor to discharge the duties of the office to the best of my ability.

This honor, as is well understood, was wholly unsought by me. That it was tendered by the representatives of the party in a manner so flattering, will serve to lighten whatever labors I may be called upon to perform.

Although the variety of subjects covered in the very excellent and vigorous declaration of principles adopted by the late convention prohibits, upon an occasion calling for brevity of expression, that full elaboration of which they are susceptible, I avail myself of party usage to signify my approval of the various resolutions of the platform and to discuss them briefly.

PROTECTION TO AMERICAN LABOR.

The resolution of the platform declaring for a levy of such duties "as to afford security to our diversified industries, and protection to the rights and wages of the laborer, to the end that active and intelligent labor, as well as capital, may have its just award, and the laboring man his full share in the national prosperity," meets my hearty approval.

If there be a nation on the face of the earth which might, if it were a desirable thing, build a wall upon its every boundary, deny communion to all the world, and proceed to live upon its own resources and productions, that nation is the United States. There is hardly a legitimate necessity of civilized communities which can not be produced from the extraordinary resources of our several States and Territories, with their manufactories, mines, farms, timber lands, and water ways. This circumstance, taken in connection with the fact that our form of government is entirely unique among the nations of the world, makes it utterly absurd to institute comparisons between our own economic systems and those of other governments, and especially to attempt to borrow systems from them. We stand alone in our circumstances, our forces, our possibilities, and our aspirations.

In all successful government it is a prime requisite that capital and labor should be upon the best terms, and that both should enjoy the highest attainable prosperity. If there be a disturbance of the just balance between them, one or the other suffers, and dissatisfaction follows, which is harmful to both.

The lessons furnished by the comparatively short history of our national life have been too much overlooked by our people. The fundamental article in the old democratic creed proclaimed almost absolute freed trade, and this, too, no more than a quarter of a century ago. The low condition of our national credit, the financial and business uncertainties, and general lack of prosperity under that system, can be remembered by every man now in middle life.

Although in the great number of reforms instituted by the Republican party sufficient credit has not been publicly awarded to that of tariff reform, its benefits have, nevertheless, been felt throughout the land. The principle underlying this measure has been in process of gradual development by the Republican party during the comparatively brief period of its power, and to-day a portion of its antiquated Democratic opponents make unwilling concessions to the correctness of the doctrine of an equitably adjusted protective tariff, by following slowly in its footsteps, though a very long way in the rear.

The principle involved is one of no great obscurity, and can be readily comprehended by any intelligent person calmly reflecting upon it. The political and social systems of some of our trade competing nations have created working classes miserable in the extreme. They receive the merest stipend for their daily toil, and in the great expense of the necessities of life are deprived of those comforts of clothing, housing, and health producing food with which wholesome mental and social recreation can alone make existence happy and desirable.

Now, if the products of these countries are to be placed in our markets, alongside of American products, either the American capitalists must suffer in his legitimate profits, or he must make the American laborer suffer, in the attempt to compete with the species of labor above referred to. In the case of substantial reduction to pay, there can be no compensating advantages for the American laborer, because the articles of daily consumption which he uses—with the exception of articles not produced in the United States, and easy of being specially provided for, as coffee and tea—are grown in our own country, and would not be affected in price by a lowering in duties. Therefore, while he would receive less for his labor, his cost of living would not be decreased. Being practically placed upon the pay of the European laborer, our own would be deprived of facilities for educating and sustaining his family respectably; he would be shorn of the proper opportunities of self government, and his value as a citizen, charged with a portion of the obligations of government, would be lessened; the moral tone of the laboring class would suffer, and in turn the interests of capital, and the well being of orderly citizens in general, would be menaced, while one evil would react upon another until there would be a general disturbance of the whole community. The true problem of a good and stable government is how to infuse prosperity among all classes of people—the manufacturer, the farmer, the mechanic, and the laborer alike. Such prosperity is a preventive of crime, a security of capital, and the very best guarantee of general peace and happiness.

The obvious policy of our government is to protect both capital and labor by a proper imposition of duties. This protection should extend to every article of American production which goes to build up the general prosperity of our people. The national convention, in view of the special dangers menacing the wool interests of the United States, deemed it wise to adopt a separate resolution on the subject of its proper protection. This industry is a very large and important one. The necessary legislation to sustain this industry upon a prosperous basis should be extended.

No one realizes more fully than myself the great delicacy and difficulty of adjusting a tariff so nicely and equitably as to protect every home industry, sustain every class of American labor, promote to the highest point our great agricultural interests, and at the same time give to one and all the advantages pertaining to foreign productions not in competition with our own, thus not only building up our foreign commerce, but taking measures to carry it in our own bottoms.

Difficult as this work appears and really is, it is susceptible of accomplishment by patient and intelligent labor, and to no hands can it be committed with as great assurance of success as to those of the Republican party.

OUR MONETARY SYSTEM.

The Republican party is the indisputable author of a financial and monetary system which it is safe to say has never before been equaled by that of any other nation.

Under the operation of our system of finance the country was safely carried through an extended and expensive war with a national credit which has risen higher and higher with each succeeding year, until now the credit of the United States is surpassed by that of no other nation, while its securities, at a constantly increasing premium, are eagerly sought after by investors in all parts of the world.

Our system of currency is most admirable in construction. While all the conveniencies of a bill circulation attach to it, every dollar of paper represents a dollar of the world's money standards, and as long as the just and wise policy of the Republican party is continued, there can be no impairment of the national credit. Therefore, under the present laws relating thereto, it will be impossible for any man to lose a penny in the bonds or bills of the United States or in the bills of national banks.

The advantage of having a bank-note in the house which will be as good in the morning as it was the night before should be appreciated by all.

The convertibility of the currency should be maintained intact, and the establishment of an international standard among all commercial nations, fixing the relative values of gold and silver coinage, would be a measure of peculiar advantage.

INTER-STATE, FOREIGN COMMERCE, AND FOREIGN RELATIONS.

The subjects embraced in the resolutions respectively looking to the promotion of our inter-state and foreign commerce and to the matter of our foreign relations are fraught with the greatest importance to our people.

In respect to interstate commerce, there is much to be desired in the way of equitable rates and facilities of transportation, that commerce may flow freely between the States themselves, diversity of industries and employments be promoted in all sections of our country, and that the great granaries and manufacturing establishments of the interior may be enabled to [illegible] relieved of vexatious restrictions and discriminations in matters of which it may emphatically be said, "time is money," and also of unjust charges upon articles destined to meet close competition from the products of other parts of the world.

As to our foreign commerce, the enormous growth of our industries and our surprising production of cereals and other necessities of life, imperatively require that immediate and effective measures be taken through peaceful, orderly and conservative methods to open markets, which have been and are now monopolized largely by other nations. This more particularly relates to our sister republics of Spanish America, as also to our friends—the people of the Brazilian Empire.

The republics of Spanish America are allied to us by the very closest and warmest feelings, based upon similarity of institutions and government, common aspirations and mutual hopes. The "Great Republic," as they proudly term the United States, is looked upon by their people with affectionate admiration and as the model for them to build upon; and we should cultivate between them and ourselves closer commercial relations, which will bind all together by the ties of friendly intercourse and mutual advantage. Further than this, being small commonwealths, in the military and naval sense of the European owners, they look to us as, at least, a moral defender against a system of territorial and other encroachments which, aggressive in the past, has not been abandoned at this day. Diplomacy and intrigue have done more to wrest the commerce of Spanish America from the United States than has legitimate commercial competition.

Politically we should be bound to the republics of our continent by the closest ties, and communication by ships and railroads should be encouraged to the fullest possible extent consistent with a wise and conservative public policy. Above all, we should be upon such terms of friendship as to preclude the possibility of national misunderstandings between ourselves and any of the members of the American Republican family. The best method to promote uninterrupted peace between one and all would lie in the meeting of a general conference or congress, whereby an agreement to submit all international differences to the peaceful decision of friendly arbitration might be reached.

An agreement of this kind would give to our sister republics confidence in each other and in us, closer communication would at once ensue, reciprocally advantageous commercial treaties might be made, whereby much of the commerce which now flows across the Atlantic would seek its legitimate channels, and inure to the greater prosperity of all the American commonwealths. The full advantage of a policy of this nature could not be stated in a brief discussion like the present.

FOREIGN POLITICAL RELATIONS.

The United States has grown to be a government representing 50,000,000 people, and in every sense, excepting that of mere naval power, is one of the first nations of the world. As such, its citizenship should be valuable, entitling its possessors to protection in every quarter of the globe. I do not consider it necessary that our government should construct enormous fleets of approved ironclads and maintain a commensurate body of seamen in order to place ourselves on a war footing with the military and naval powers of Europe. Such a course would not be compatible with the peaceful policy of our country, though it seems absurd that we have not the effective means to repel a wanton invasion of our coast and give protection to our coast towns and cities against any power. The great moral force of our country is so universally recognized as to render an appeal to arms by us, either in protection of our citizens abroad or in recognition of any just international right, quite improbable. What we most need in this direction is a firm and vigorous assertion of every right and privilege belonging to our government or its citizens, as well as an equally firm assertion of the rights and privileges belonging to the general family of American Republics situated upon this continent, when opposed, if ever they should be, by the different systems of government upon another continent.

An appeal to the right by such a government as ours could not be disregarded by any civilized nation. In the treaty of Washington we led the world to the means of escape from the horrors of war, and it is to be hoped that the era when all international differences shall be decided by peaceful arbitration is not far off.

EQUAL RIGHTS OF CITIZENSHIP.

The central idea of a republican form of government is the rule of the whole people as opposed to the other forms which rest upon a privileged class.

Our forefathers, in an attempt to erect a new government which might represent the advanced thought of the world at that period upon the subject of governmental reform, adopted the idea of the people's sovereignty, and thus laid the basis of our present republic. While technically a government of the people, it was in strictness only a government of a portion of the people, excluding from all participation a certain other portion held in a condition of absolute, despotic, and hopeless servitude, the parallel to which, fortunately, does not now exist in any modern Christian nation.

With the culmination, however, of another cycle of advanced thought, the American Republic suddenly assumed the full character of a government of the whole people, and four million human creatures emerged from the condition of bondsmen to the full status of freemen, theoretically invested with the same civil and political rights possessed by their former masters. The subsequent legislation which guaranteed by every legal title the citizenship and full equality before the law in all respects of this previously disfranchised people, amply covers the requirements and secures to them, so far as legislation can, the privileges of American citizenship. But the disagreeable fact of the case is, that while, theoretically, we are in the enjoyment of a government of the whole people, practically we are almost as far from it as we were in the ante bellum days of the republic. There are but a few leading and indisputable facts which cover the whole statement of the case. In many of the Southern States the colored population is in large excess of the white. The colored people are Republicans, as are also a considerable portion of the white people. The remaining portion of the latter are Democrats. In face of this incontestable truth these States invariably return Democratic majorities. In other States of the South the colored people, although not a majority, form a very considerable body of the population, and with the white Republicans are numerically in excess of the Democrats, yet precisely the same political result obtains, the Democratic party invariably carrying the elections. It is not even thought advisable to allow an occasional or unimportant election to be carried by the Republicans as a "blind" or as a stroke of finesse.

Careful and impartial investigation has shown these results to follow the systematic exercise of physical intimidation and violence, conjoined with the most shameful devices ever practiced in the name of free elections. So confirmed has this result become that we are brought face to face with the extraordinary political fact that the Democratic party of the South relies almost entirely upon the methods stated for its success in national elections.

This unlawful perversion of the popular franchise, which I desire to state dispassionately, and in a manner comporting with the proper dignity of the occasion, is one of deep gravity to the American people—in a double sense.

First—It is in violation, open, direct, and flagrant, of the primary principle upon which our government is supposed to rest, viz.: That the control of the government is participated in by all legally qualified citizens, in accordance with the plan of popular government, that the majorities must rule in the decision of all questions.

Second—It is in violation of the rights and interests of the States wherein are particularly centered the great wealth and industries of the nation, and which pay an overwhelming portion of the national taxes. The immense aggregation of interests embraced within, and the enormously greater population of these other States of the Union, are subjected every four years to the dangers of a wholly fraudulent show of numerical strength.

Under this system minorities actually attempt to direct the course of national affairs, and though up to this time success has not attended their efforts to elect a president, yet success has been so perilously imminent as to encourage a repetition of the effort at each quadrennial election, and to subject the interests of an overwhelming majority of our people, North and South, to the hazards of illegal subversion.

The stereotyped argument in refutation of these plain truths is that if the republican element was really in the majority they could not be deprived of their rights and privileges by a minority; but neither statistics of population nor the unavoidable logic of the situation can be overridden or escaped. The colored people of the South have recently emerged from the bondage of their present political oppressors; they have had but few of the advantages of education which might enable them to compete with the whites.

As I have heretofore maintained, in order to achieve the ideal perfection of a popular government, it is absolutely necessary that the masses should be educated. This proposition applies itself with full force to the colored people of the South. They must have better educational advantages, and thus be enabled to become the intellectual peers of their white brethren, as many of them undoubtedly already are. A liberal school system should be provided for the rising generation of the South, and the colored people be made as capable of exercising the duties of electors as the white people. In the meantime it is the duty of the national government to go beyond resolutions and declarations on the subject, and to take such action as may lie in its power to secure the absolute freedom of national elections everywhere, to the end that our Congress may cease to contain members representing fictitious majorities of their people, thus misdirecting the popular will concerning national legislation, and especially to the end that, in Presidential contests the great business and other interests of the country may not be placed in fear and trembling lest an unscrupulous minority should [illegible] in accordance with the spirit of the last resolution of the Chicago platform, measures should be taken at once to remedy this great evil.

FOREIGN IMMIGRATION.

Under our liberal institutions the subjects and citizens of every nation have been welcomed to a home in our midst, and on a compliance with our laws to a co-operation in our government. While it is the policy of the Republican party to encourage the oppressed of other nations and offer them facilities for becoming useful and intelligent citizens in the legal definition of the term, the party has never contemplated the admission of a class of servile people who are not only unable to comprehend our institutions, but indisposed to become a part of our national family or to embrace any higher civilization than their own. To admit such immigrants would be only to throw a retarding element into the very path of our progress. Our legislation should be amply protective against this danger, and if not sufficiently so now should be made so to the full extent allowed by our treaties with friendly powers.

THE CIVIL SERVICE.

The subject of civil service administration is a problem that has occupied the earnest thought of statesmen for a number of years past, and the record will show that toward its solution many results of a valuable and comprehensive character have been attained by the Republican party since its accession to power. In the partisan warfare made upon the latter with the view of weakening it in the public confidence a great deal has been alleged in connection with the abuse of the civil service, the party making the indiscriminate charges seeming to have entirely forgotten that it was under the full sway of the Democratic organization that the motto "To the victors belong the spoils" became a cardinal article in the Democratic creed.

With the determination to elevate our governmental administration to a standard of justice, excellence, and public morality, the Republican party has studiously endeavored to lay the foundation of a system which shall reach the highest perfection under the plastic hand of time and accumulating experience. The problem is one of far greater intricacy than appears upon its superficial consideration, and embraces the sub-questions of how to avoid the abuses possible to the lodgment of an immense number of appointments in the hands of the executive; of how to give encouragement to and provoke emulation in the various government employes, in order that they may strive for proficiency and rest their hopes of advancement upon the attributes of official merit, good conduct, and exemplary honesty, and how best to avoid the evils of creating a privileged class in the government service, who, in imitation of European prototypes, may gradually lose all proficiency and value in the belief that they possess a life calling, only to be taken away in case of some flagrant abuse.

The thinking, earnest men of the Republican party have made no mere wordy demonstration on the subject; but they have endeavored to quietly perform that which their opponents are constantly promising without performing. Under republican rule the result has been that, without engrafting any of the objectionable features of the European system upon our own, there has been a steady and even rapid elevation of the civil service in all of its departments, until it can now be stated, without fear of successful contradiction, that the service is more just, more efficient, and purer in all its features, than ever before since the establishment of our government; and if defects still exist in our system, the country can safely rely upon the Republican party as the most efficient instrument for their removal.

I am in favor of the highest standard of excellence in the administration of the civil service, and will lend my best efforts to the accomplishment of the greatest attainable perfection in this branch of our service.

THE REMAINING TWIN RELIC OF BARBARISM.

The Republican party came into existence in a crusade against the Democratic institutions of slavery and polygamy. The first of these has been buried beneath the embers of civil war. The party should continue its efforts until the remaining iniquity shall disappear from our civilization under the force of faithfully executed laws.

There are other subjects of importance which I would gladly touch upon did space permit. I limit myself to saying that, while there should be the most rigid economy of governmental administration, there should be no self-defeating parsimony either in our domestic or foreign service. Official dishonesty should be promptly and relentlessly punished. Our obligations to the defenders of our country should never be forgotten, and the liberal system of pension provided by the Republican party should not be imperiled by adverse legislation. The law establishing a labor bureau, through which the interests of labor can be placed in an organized condition, I regard as a salutary measure. The eight hour law should be enforced as rigidly as any other. We should increase our navy to a degree enabling us to amply protect our coast lines, our commerce, and to give us a force in foreign waters which shall be a respectable and proper representative of a country like our own. The public lands belong to the people and should not be alienated from them, but reserved for free homes for all desiring to possess them; and, finally, our present Indian policy should be continued and improved upon as our experience in its administration may from time to time suggest. I have the honor to subscribe myself, sir, your obedient servant, JOHN A. LOGAN.

To the Hon. John B. Henderson, Chairman of the Committee.

Ages of Celebrated Men.

The following is given to show that men may work hard in this world, and still not wear out. Hippocrates the world's greatest physician, was 109 years old when he died. Galen one of his illustrious followers, 104. The sages of Greece—Solon, Thales, and Pittacus, each lived a century. Democritus lived to be 102; Zeno, 98; Diogones, 108; Plato, 94; Xenophon, 90; Polemon and Epicharmus, 97 Lycurgus, 85; Sophocles, 104; Gorgias, 108; Aclepides the renowned physician, 150; Juveal, 101; Pacuvius and Varro, 100; Carneades, 90; Galileo, 68; Washington, the same age: Cassini, 98; Newton, 85; Fontenelle, 99; Buffon, 81. Our great American Surgeon, R. D. Mussey, 86; Voltaire, 84.

The following deaths published in one issue of Niles Register, January 6, 1823, Baltimore, is quite remarkable. In Franklin County, Pennsylvania, Elizabeth Campbell, aged 104; several of her relatives had reached a hundred. Ann Fowler, at Troy, N. Y., 100; Abigail Hadlock, Tyngsboro, N. Y., 104; Michael Makeel, Somers, N. Y., 103; Rutland, Oswego County, N. Y., Mrs. Buroy, 110; at Bruswick, Maine, General James W. Ryan, 107; his wife is yet living, they were together in wedded life seventy-five years. At Georgetown, Va., Col. Yarrow, a Moor, 135; in New York City, a woman, a native of San Domingo, 106; at Sargus, Mass., Mrs. Edwards, 101; in Edgecomb County, N. C., William Spicer, 112; in Boston, Willian Homer, 116.

Take Care of Your Eyes.

The late venerable Prof. R. D. Mussey, of Cincinnati, the most scientific and celebrated surgeon our country has ever produced, gave the following instructions as to the proper way of caring for the eyes:

Avoid all sudden change between light and darkness.

Never begin to read, write or sew for several minutes after coming from darkness to a bright light.

Never read by twilight, or moonlight or on any cloudy day.

Never read or sew directly in front of the light, or window or door.

It is the best to have the light fall from above obliquely, over the left shoulder.

Never sleep so that, on first awakening, the eyes shall open on the light of a window.

Do not use the eye-sight by light so scant that it requires an effort to discriminate.

The moment you are instinctively prompted to rub the eyes, that moment cease using them.

If the eyelids are glued together on waking up, do not forcibly open them; but apply the saliva with the finger—it is the speediest dilutant in the world; then wash your eyes and face in warm water.

—As an illustration of the advancing tide of civilization in Japan, it is stated that whereas only 156 papers were published there in 1876, the number now issued is over 2,000.

THE COMMONWEALTH.

Louisville Leaf Tobacco Market.

The market has not presented any features of a peculiar character, but in the latter part of the week a rather general tendency has been developed in favor of buyers. Dark and heavy leaf has not varied much, but the tone has been a shade more quiet. Lugs are a trifle easier. Burley tobaccos have not been supported, the principal decline being in medium grades, the latter having declined 75c.@1. Good grades are weaker as well as lugs, but bright cutting leaf and trash are firm. All crop advices are favorable, except that in some localities there has been some injury from heavy rains. We quote full-weight packages new-crop sound tobacco as follows:

	Dark and Heavy.	Burley.
Trash	$6 50 @ 6 75	$6 00 @ 7 [illegible]
Common lugs	7 00 @ 7 25	7 00 @ 8 00
Medium lugs	7 50 @ 7 75	8 00 @ 9 00
Good lugs	8 00 @ 8 50	10 00 @ 11 00
Common leaf	8 00 @ 8 50	10 00 @ 11 00
Medium leaf	8 75 @ 9 50	12 00 @ 16 00
Good leaf	10 00 @ 11 00	17 00 @ 20 00
Fine and fancy leaf	12 00 @ 16 00	22 00 @ 25 00

Miscellaneous Items.

A PONDEROUS and jolly German drummer was jolted from his seat in the rear of a band wagon at the Fifth and Scott streets crossing, Covington, and sat down in the mud, with his big bass drum in his lap. He didn't pause in his thunderous strokes, and his comrades didn't miss him until they had driven out of hearing, when the leader turned to see what was the matter, and looking back along the streets saw the drummer in the dim distance, with a crowd around him, but still pounding away. The wagon drove back and took him in, amid shouts of laughter from the spectators of the incident.

JOHN WALTON, a conductor on the Kentucky Central fast freight, was killed at the overhead bridge, three miles north of Cynthiana the other morning at 8 o'clock. It seems that Walton had had considerable night work to do, and was consequently almost worn out. He was sitting on the top of the caboose asleep when the train reached the bridge, which struck him on the head, crushing it considerably and instantly killing him. He was formerly of Indiana, and has been a conductor on the road for some time on a construction train. He was promoted to the position of freight conductor about two months ago, since which time he has been running a fast freight.

THE footway on the Cincinnati Southern Railway Bridge, from Cincinnati to Ludlow, will in all probability be built very soon. The contract for furnishing the iron has just been given to the Keystone Bridge Company, and as soon as the iron arrives work will begin. The railroad company will put the structure up. The cost will be from $10,000 to $14,000. The specifications are for a footway five feet in width clear, with a railing three and one half feet high. A spiral staircase will wind up to the bridge from Sixth street, Cincinnati, and a somewhat similar one will be placed at the Ludlow end. The rates of toll will be as follows: Single crossing one cent, thirty passage tickets twenty-five cents.

MRS. S. BAILEY, an aged woman of Covington, was run over in that city by a wagon, occupied by a Cincinnatian. The old lady was considerably injured.

AT Louisville a pretty little widow, Maria Ziebier, eighteen years old, angry from a scolding administered by her mother, attempted suicide on Fourteenth street, near Oak, late the other night by throwing herself upon the railroad track, immediately in front of a locomotive. She was pulled away from danger by Captain Harding, Assistant Chief of Police.

WM. S. PELL, whose barn was burned the other night near Vanceburg, has caused the arrest of Harvey Shope and Samuel Cole on the charge of arson.

THE Louisville Hotel was sold the other day for $149,750.

DAVID B. HARBESON, of Louisville, suicided a few days ago, by hanging.

RICHARD PAYNE was instantly killed at Skillman's saw-mill at Hickman Bridge, by the bursting of a wheel.

THE execution of Wm. Neal, which was to have taken place on the 13th, has been postponed. Neal is now in jail at Mt. Sterling for safe-keeping. Court has refused his application for a new trial and he took an appeal. After all the papers were filed the Court of Appeals issued a supersedeas, and the execution will not come off until that tribunal passes upon the application and the Governor names a day.

IN Louisville, a little son of Mr. Geo. Green died a few days ago from a wound in the hand, inflicted by a toy pistol on the 4th of July.

SOME of the Scott County farmers cut their wheat by moonlight.

"MILK fever" has killed a great many cows recently in the neighborhood of Perryville.

A LARGE mastiff belonging to John Johnson attacked the little four-year-old son of Herman Dickman, of Finchtown, Campbell County, a few days ago. The brute took hold on the left side of the child's face, tore off the side of the face, exposing the jugular vein and cheek bone. The dog was immediately shot. The child may recover.

THE other night at Cooperstown, two miles from Williamstown, Ben Miller met William Faulkner, and renewed an old quarrel. Faulkner stooped down to put up some bars, when Miller shot him and immediately fled. The wounded man will die.

ATHENS DISTRICT, Fayette County, will vote on the local option question at the August election. Great interest is manifested by both parties, and a hot struggle is anticipated.

EDWARD MCCORMACK, an old man, sixty-five years of age, was found dead in bed at his boarding house in Ludlow, the other day. He was a successful machinist in his day, having been master mechanic of several railroads. He died of alcoholism.

JUDGE GEO. V. PAYNE, of Scott County, had forty acres of wheat that averaged thirty-five bushels. He sold his crop at eighty cents per bushel.

THE internal revenue receipts in Kentucky for the fiscal year were: Second District, $2,086,085; Fifth District, $8,636,352; Sixth District, $4,263,844; Seventh District, $2,695,778; Eighth District, $8,866.31; Ninth District, $12,979 (consolidated).

A square and a half of buildings were destroyed at Hopkinsville, the other day, including stores of L. R. Davis, J. W. Breathitt, jr., Burbridge Bros., Payne & Young, and G. U. West. Loss, $36,000.

WARREN ROGERS, of Bourbon County, sold three hundred lambs of his own raising that averaged ninety-six pounds.

THE County Court of Clark County appropriated $60,000 to aid in the construction of new turnpike roads.

AT the Judicial Convention of the Third Superior Court District recently, at Maysville, J. Quincy Ward, of Harrison, was nominated to succeed the late Judge Reid.

HENRY SCHULTE, of Cincinnati, has donated a valuable horse to the sisters of St. Joseph's Orphan Asylum.

THE drowned man in the Kentucky river near High Bridge proves to be Alfred Barle, a French artist, who is supposed to have acquaintances in Cincinnati.

JESSE BILLINGSLY gets three years in Kentucky Penitentiary for helping Monroe County prisoners to break jail.

THE RECORDER.

WEDNESDAY, JULY 23. 1884.

RIDDELL & HALL, Proprietors.

ADVERTISING RATES.

1 Column	1 year	$80
1 "	"	40
1 "	"	20
1 "	"	20
1 "	"	10
1 "	"	6

For announcing candidates, $5. Obituary poetry, 5 cents per line. Obituary notices 20 lines free; over that number (excepting the announcement of the death) 3 cents per line.
Tributes of respect from lodges, &c., $1 50

RATES OF SUBSCRIPTION.

One year	$1 50
Six months	75
Three months	40

THIS week we present our readers a thirty-two instead of a twenty-eight column paper. To enlarge the RECORDER has cost us considerable money, and we rely on our friends assisting us to increase its circulation materially. We labor in the interest of the county, and want to make our paper a reflex and faithful chronicle of every important event that occurs in the county, and with that in view we request any person who has an item, to send it to us. Send us the facts and we will see to their being put in proper shape. Now is the time to subscribe—only $1 50 a year.

MR. HENDRICKS seems to be very apt with his pen.

MORMON preachers are working Jennings county, Indiana.

MAHONE is leading the canvass for the Republicans in Virginia.

THE price of Butler's influence is estimated at a cabinet position.

GEN. GRANT'S financial troubles are weighing him down with grief.

THE Southern Railroad Trustees have adopted the standard gauge for that road.

GEN. LONGSTREET has to surrender his position as Marshal of Georgia to one Bryant.

THE Elkton Register was the only Kentucky paper that advocated the nomination of Butler.

GEN. LOGAN will open the Republican campaign in Indianapolis the last week in next month.

IT is said that Mr. Blaine has invited fifty Republican speakers to stump the State of Maine.

THE last Legislature ought to have passed a law prohibiting the making of hip-pockets on the right side.

"MONEY talks," is an old saying, and it is getting pretty generally believed that money does some voting, also.

GEN. BUTLER is standing with one eye on the working men and the other on the Republican party, and it is hard to tell which way he is going to jump.

BLAINE and Logan's letters of acceptance are on the first page. They are lengthy documents, and by their supporters are pronounced able productions.

THE assignee of the firm of Grant & Ward has filed an inventory of the firm's business, showing the liabilities to be $16,692,647; the nominal assets $26,137,098, and the actual assets $16,141.

LOUISVILLE had a rousing ratification meeting the other night on which occasion Henry Watterson and others expounded Democratic doctrine, in brilliant speeches. The Democrats in that city have on their war paint.

THE Boston Post, before the convention, advocated Butler as the most available candidate for the Democratic part, but it has since discovered that the ticket nominated is the strongest the convention could have made.

IT is said that Tammany is waiting to see what the working men propose to do in the pending Presidential contest before they act, all of which looks very much like the working men run Tammany instead of vice versa.

THE industrious farmer now sits back in his easy chair and congratulates himself that he has successfully saved a large wheat crop and an abundance of hay, while the weeds are strangers in his tobacco patch. Farmers are the happiest and most independent class in the world.

IT is stated that a ruby was found in Clay county, North Carolina, by a Mr. Sedford, which he sold for fifteen dollars; six thousand dollars was paid for it at its next sale but one; and now a lapidary who bought and worked upon it has sold it for eighteen thousand.

THE Judicial Convention at Maysville, last week, was not long in making a candidate for Superior Judge, J. Q. Ward was the lucky man, and his success was so apparent upon the assembling of the convention, that the opposition surrendered at once, and the nomination was made unanimous without a ballot being taken to try the strength of the candidates.

THE threshing machine is now in demand. Many of the farmers of late years economize labor by threshing out of the shock, and they seek to avoid delay, for fear a protracted wet spell will overtake them, and at this season of the year the owner of a good threshing machine is a man much sought.

WE have received a beautiful picture of the Southern Exposition, which opens at Louisville, August 15th, and continues until October 25th. The view is of the main building, which is one of the largest Exposition buildings ever erected. It covers thirteen acres of ground, and will be lighted throughout by five thousand electric lights.

AN effort is being made in Ohio county, Indiana, to consolidate the Republicans and disaffected Democrats, and run Judge Given, present incumbent, against Bainbridge, the Democratic nominee for Circuit Judge who defeated Given in the nominating convention. If Judge Given is the Democrat he is represented to be he will not suffer himself made a party to such a transaction.

THE managers of the Louisville Exposition are meeting with great encouragement in their endeavors to make the exhibition one of the grandest ever witnessed in this country. Every county in the State should be represented by an exhibit of its products, as it is the grandest opportunity ever offered any State to make a showing of its resources. Boone county should not fail to be represented at the Louisville Exposition.

THE Owensboro mob is only another evidence that the people of the State have no confidence in the proper enforcement of the criminal laws; and these uprisings on the part of the people will continue to become more common until a proper punishment of criminals is assured by the courts. That mobs are so frequent is to be deplored, but that the administration of justice is so lax is equally deplorable.

A VISIT among our farmers at this season of the year, just as they have successfully matured their crops, is sufficient to imbue one with the belief that Boone County is about as good an agricultural district as can be found. What our farmers lack in quantity they make up in quality, realizing therefor the best prices for which such products are sold. Nothing like being convenient to a good market.

THE State Board of Equalization fixed the average cash value of land in Christian county at $18 per acre, at which the owners became indignant, and put in circulation a petition remonstrating against the action of the board. It was numerously signed, and placed in the hands of the County Judge who went to Frandkfort to intercede in behalf of his outraged constituents. The average value of land as assessed in that county is $7 90 per acre, which the owners claim is about right.

OUR local peace officers have inaugurated, in the past few days, a policy, which, if adhered to, will effectually suppress much of the disorder occasioned on the streets by drunkenness. Within the past week two escapades have been brought to a sudden and unexpected conclusion by lodging the parties in the county bastile, where they awaited the return of reason. The course the officers pursued in these two cases is commendable, and if continued will soon teach the boisterous that they must respect the town while here by keeping quiet and peaceable.

PROF. I. J. DAUGHTERS' announcement as a candidate for County Superintendent of Schools was handed in at such a late hour last week, that we had not time in which to refer to it. Mr. Daughters has been identified with the schools of this county for several years, having taught at Union, Pleasant Ridge, Florence and Hebron, at which places they have good schools. Experience in the school room is certainly calculated to prepare a man in some degree for the office of County Superintendent, and so far as being a practical educator goes, Mr. Daughtors is well qualified for the duties of the office to which he aspires.

PREPARE for better times. The wheat crop of the United States at 80c per bushel is worth $400,000,000. East of the Rocky mountains it is worth $360,000,000. The winter wheat crop is saved, and is beginning to move briskly to market. This part of the crop, which may be considered a cash asset, is worth at 80c $280,000,000. In a few weeks the spring wheat crop, which is in every way promising, will fall into the procession. The low prices of wheat, with its excellent quality, appear to insure a rapid movement, and it is on the cards for the first great dividends of the sale will soon put a fund in circulation which will put upon the general markets a cheerfulness of countenance to which they have long been strangers.—Courier-Journal.

IF the Presidential campaign is to be one of mud-slinging it has a good start, and those who delight to indulge that propensity will have a long time in which to follow up the political lying.

THE following from the New York Journal is just in season: "There are various methods of conducting a campaign, all good in their way, and pointing to a similar end. There is the shooting canvass, the campaign document canvass, and the canvass of barrels. The Duchess of Gordon gave a kiss of her lovely cheek for a vote. Pelham saluted the ladies. No one appears to have thought of an ice-cream canvass. Mr. Cleveland is, as our lady readers are aware a bachelor. Of the four Presidential and Vice-Presidential candidates he is the most likely one to adopt our valuable suggestion. Ice-cream from an old married man like Blaine, or Hendricks, or Indigo John would taste like a kiss without sugar. Now let our handsome Governor direct his managers to prepare all their speeches with ice-cream. This would attract the ladies, and what the ladies say in a Presidential election is law. Of course the opposite might start a soda-water boom, but both would be excellent."

A CAREFUL perusal of Article VI of the new common-school law of this State, which relates wholly to the mode of election and duties of County Superintendents, will show the actual necessity of the people of each county selecting a man fully capable in every respect to fill the position, which is one of great importance. The duties prescribed by the law for Superintendents are so many and varied that it may be readily understood why a Superintendent shall hold no other official position, the intention of the law being that the entire time of the Superintendent must be given to the duties of his office, and they will be enough to keep him from becoming lazy even during the hottest weather.

The law says the Superintendent "must be possessed of moral character, a good English education, and shall be competent to examine the teachers who shall apply to teach the common schools in the county." This is the first qualification, to which must be added good business capacity, energy, and a natural desire to promote the cause of education in the county through the medium of the common schools therein.

Now, just how many men there are in this county, for instance, possessing all these necessary qualifications is hard to tell, but it is safe to say not a very great number. The office is one of really greater importance to the people of the county than any other in it, and, unlike that of our Superintendent of schools, it can't be declared vacant and then the effort made to squeeze out a Superintendent from among the teachers and give him the same position.

The election of County Superintendent will take place at the coming August election, and the friends of education in the county should see to it that none but the most capable shall be elected.—State Journal.

The Growing Tobacco Crop.

A careful perusal of our crop reports will convince all that there is nothing but glad tidings as to the growing Tobacco crop, except it be complaint from Pennsylvania and a few more points, where, it is claimed, considerable damage has been inflicted by violent rains, and wind storms, and in some instances by the planting of inferior seed. From Kentucky Ohio, Indiana, Tennessee, Virginia, North Carolina, West Virginia, Maryland, Connecticut, New York, Wisconsin and Illinois, all reports are alike hopeful and enthusiastic as to the outcome. Plants have thriven wonderfully and have grown rapidly, and with anything like favorable weather for another month or six weeks, the great bulk of the crop in all sections will be matured and ready for cutting.

It is true there has not much rain fallen within the past month, but the ground was so thoroughly saturated in the winter and Spring, and plants set out under such favorable conditions that they had a good supply of moisture in the ground for reserve, and what few rains we have had recently were so well distributed that they did an immense amount of good. Besides, while the sun has not been hot enough to serve the plants, it has not been so overwhelming as to interfere with the labors of planters and their assistants, who have been enabled to give it good culture, and get their other crops out of the way in time to allow them to put in their time exclusively on Tobacco when it most needs attention.

A few profess to fear that if we do not get a good wet season in a short time much damage will be done the crop. There is not any reason for such alarm, for if it comes to the point Tobacco is in a condition to stand considerable dry weather—in a better condition than in other years, when long spells of drought occurred at the critical time, and yet failed to do the damage anticipated. Another fact in favor of the present crop is its comparative safety so far from the annoying and destructive attention of fly and worms, which in other years have caused great alarm and damage. Little or no complaint is made up to the present of these pests.—Western Tobacco Journal, (Cin.)

IF the accusations made against Cleveland are true, he ought not to accept the nomination.

STATE NEWS.

A Bourbon county man is shipping Poland-China hogs to Hamburg Germany.

The wheat crop in Bourbon county is the finest ever known. Many fields yield from 30 to 40 bushels per acre.

Will Hiffner, of Fayette county, threshed, on July 10th, 1,056 sacks of wheat, containing 2,500 bushels, in twelve hours.

THE dirty attack that is being made on Cleveland's moral character will avail his accusers nothing.

We are authorized to announce DR. JAMES S. BROWN, of Warsaw, as a candidate for the State Senate, from this, the 23d Senatorial District, subject to the action of the Democratic party.

We are authorized to announce I. J. DAUGHTERS as a candidate for County Superintendent of Schools at the August election.

We are authorized to announce H. J. FOSTER as a candidate for County Superintendent of schools at the August election.

Live Stock Market.

CINCINNATI, June 32, 1884.

CATTLE.

Receipts to-day, 986 head—market dull and lower on all grades.

Best Shippers	6 to 6½
Good Shippers	5½ to 6
Extra Oxen	6 to 6
Fair to good Oxen	4½ to 5
Extra Butchers	5 to 5½
Common to Fair	3½ @ 4½
Roughs and Scalawags	8½ @ 3

COWS.

Extra	4½ @ 4½
Common to Fair	3 @ 3½
Fair to Good	3½ @ 4½

BULLS.

Extra	3½ @ 4
Fair to good	3½ @ 3½
Heavy feeding steers	4½ @ 5
Good stockers	4 @ 4½

COWS and CALVES.

The market was slow at the following prices:

Common	20 @ $25
Fair to good	30 @ $40
Choice	45 @ $55
Extra	$60
Jerseys	50 @ $100

Common cows are very hard to sell at quotations, unless they have good calves.

VEAL CALVES.

Best	6½ @ 8
Common	5 @ 6

HOGS.

Receipts 230—market strong, all selling on arrival at following prices:

Select butchers, heavy shippers	5 45 @ 5 85
Good lights, 180 to 220	5 35 @ 5 60
" " 140 to 180	5 15 @ 5 35

SHEEP.

Receipts of sheep and lambs to-day, 2,416, 350 left over, unsold; market dull except extra heavy sheep. Receipts through week have been very liberal, but toward the latter part of the week there was a falling off in shipments, and a decline in prices.

Best wethers	4½ @ 5
Fair to good	4 @ 4½
Ewes and wethers mixed	2½ @ 4½
Stock sheep, dull	3 @ 3½
Common	2 @ 2½

LAMBS.

Dull.

Best shippers	5½ @ 5 90
Fair to good	5½ @ 5½
Lights	4 @ 4½

Election Notice.

BOONE COUNTY COURT.

REGULAR TERM, July 7, 1884.

Numerous Legal Voters (20 in number) of the Beaver Lick Voting Precinct, of this county, having petitioned for the holding of an election, on the first Monday in August, 1884, for the purpose of taking the sense of the legal voters therein, on the proposition whether or not spirituous, vinous or malt liquors shall be sold therein, it is therefore ordered that the Sheriff of Boone county be and he is hereby directed to hold said election at the time and place above indicated. Said Sheriff, in his action herein, will be governed by the law authorizing this proceeding. The fees were deposited as required by law.

A copy—Attest: M. T. GARNETT, Clerk.

In pursuance of the above order, an election will be held at the usual voting-place in the Beaver Lick precinct, on the first Monday in August, 1884, for the purpose of taking the sense of the legal voters therein, on the proposition whether spirituous, vinous or malt liquors shall be sold therein. J. R. CLUTTERBUCK, S. B. C.

COMMISSIONER'S SALE.

Boone Circuit Court, Ky.

John A Kendall's Adm'r, Plff. vs John A Kendall's heirs, &c., Defts. } Notice of sale in equity.

By virtue of a judgment and order of sale of the Boone Circuit Court, rendered at the April term thereof, 1884, in the above cause, the undersigned will on Monday, the 4th day of August 1884 at 1 o'clock p. m., or thereabout (being county court day), proceed to offer for sale at public auction, to the highest bidder, on a credit of 6 and 12 months equal installments, at the Court-house door in the town of Burlington, the property mentioned in the judgment to wit:

Near Burlington, Boone county, Ky., bounded on the North by the lands of Mrs Lucy Rogers on the West by the road leading from the East Bend road to Gunpowder Creek, on the South by the dower of Mrs Mary E Kendall, and Jonas Delph, on the East by Samuel Pope.

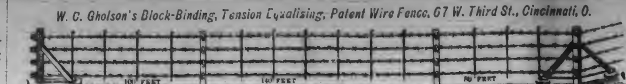
Or sufficient thereof to produce the sums of money so ordered to be made. The purchaser will be required to give bonds with approved security, for the payment of the purchase money, to have the force and effect of a judgment, bearing legal interest from the day of sale, according to law. Bidders will be prepared to comply promptly with these terms. Amount to be raised by sale $2,940 00. Bonds payable to the undersigned.

W. L. RIDDELL, M C B C C

COMMISSIONER'S SALE.

Boone Circuit Court, Ky.

W. E. Anderson, Plaintiff, Against Duly Musters, &c., Defendants. } Notice of sale in Equity.



By virtue of a judgment and order of sale of the Boone Circuit Court, rendered at the April term thereof, 1884, in the above cause, the undersigned will, on Monday the 4th day of August, 1884, at 1 o clock p. m., or thereabout, (being County Court) proceed to offer for sale at public auction, on a credit of 6 months, at the Courthouse door, in the town of Burlington, the property mentioned in the judgment, to wit:

Lying in the town of Constance, beginning at a stone on the bank of the Ohio river, lower corner of Duly Musters' lot; thence with a line thereof s.20 1-4w 90 1-4 poles to a stone, another corner of said lot in John Hood's line; thence with said line n. 69 1-2 w. 61 7-11 feet to a stone in said line; thence n. 20 1-4 e. 90 1-5 poles to a stone under the river bank witnessed by a stone in the line on the bank; thence s. 70 e. 61 7-11 feet to the beginning, containing 2 acre and 26 4-11 poles. It will be offered in two lots, one north and one south of the road and then as a whole, the bid or bids making the most money will be accepted.

The purchaser will be required to give bonds with approved security for the payment of the purchase money, to have the force and effect of a judgment, bearing legal interest from the day of sale, according to law. Bidders will be prepared to comply promptly with these terms. Bonds payable to the undersigned.

W. L. RIDDELL, M. C. B. C. C.

W. C. Gholson's Block-Binding, Tension Equalising, Patent Wire Fence, 67 W. Third St., Cincinnati, O.

As special Agent for the Gholson Fencing Company, for Boone County, I am prepared to build their patent fence at any time. This is the cheapest and best fence in use. It needs no talking up, as it is fast selling itself wherever it is introduced. Any number of wires can be used.

28-1y-84. G. C. GRADDY, Bullittsville, Ky.

CLEARING SALE!

To make room for Fall Stock I have reduced Custom-Made Suits 20 per cent. and on ready-made Men's, Boys' and Children's Clothing 25 per cent. for Cash only, until August 20.

H. F. BLASE, 540 Madison Street COVINGTON, - - - - KY.

BARGAINS IN

Milline'y Goods!

ALL LADIES' HATS, BONNETS AND FEATHERS NOW LEFT OVER WILL BE SOLD AT

Less Than Half Price

(Original Price.) in order to close the season. Broad-Brim Hats, called the "Cartwheel," will be closed out at 30c. each; Large Bushy Tips, three in a bunch, 88c. a bunch, worth $1 75. All other Hats and Bonnets at the same great sacrifice.

MILLINERY DEPARTMENT,

at COLTER'S,

Rising Sun, Ind.

SOUTHERN

EXPOSITION

LOUISVILLE,

Opens August 16th. Closes October 25th, 1884.

13 ACRES UNDER ONE ROOF.

TWO CONCERTS EACH DAY

By Cappa's and Gilmore's, the most famous bands of the world.

Largest and Finest Display of Machinery in MOTION ever witnessed anywhere.

LOWEST RAILWAY RATES EVER GIVEN IN THE STATE.

ART BUILDINGS,

CONTAINING THE CHOICEST PICTURES IN AMERICA.

Ten works of Kentucky's great sculptor, Joel Hart, the best possible collection.

One hundred counties in Kentucky will make exhibits, displaying products which will demonstrate this State's tremendous capacities and future greatness. An occasion for Kentucky pride and glory—KENTUCKY TRIUMPHANT.

AN IMMENSE LIVE STOCK EXHIBITION

Presenting at one time in line over $1,000,000 worth of horses, comprising all the races that have made Kentucky famous. The exhibit will surpass in extent the Royal Stock Show in London, and present to the visitor the grandest, completest, and most magnificent Stock exhibit the world has ever witnessed, and a sight that can not be duplicated in the world.

BENNETT H. YOUNG, President. J. M. WRIGHT, General Manager.

WM. COLTER,

—DEALER IN—

Clothing, Boots, Shoes, Hats, Caps, Millinery Goods, Cloaks, Etc.

JOB LOTS OF ABOVE A SPECIALTY,

We are just now devoting our entire energy to making preparations for the ensuing season, and can promise to call your attention to a stock of Boots and Shoes, Rubber Goods, Men's and Boys' Ready-Made Clothing, Ladies' Cloaks, and Wraps, Millinery Goods, Ribbons, Mens' Hats, Buck Gloves, &c., in which, for real solid and genuine Bargains, we challenge competition. We intend to lead the market in this section much more than we have ever done before, which we can at once prove to you at your first inspection. Have already bought over 500 Overcoats, over 300 Suits, 1,000 pairs of Gloves, over 70 cases Kip Boots, 16 cases Mens' Hats and Caps, all grades. And we are not asleep if it is hot. The above line of Goods is kept in the lower half and 2nd floor of our Mammoth House. We are slashing down prices on all Summer Goods now, as we do not carry any Goods over. Thanks for past favors. Respectfully,

Wm. COLTER, Rising Sun, Ind.

CENTRAL UNIVERSITY,

COLLEGE OF PHILOSOPHY, LETTERS, AND SCIENCE, RICHMOND, KY.

Next Session will open Wednesday, September 3d, 1884.

ADVANTAGES.—A FULL FACULTY of able and experienced instructors. Comprehensive course of study and thorough instruction. Completeness of buildings and apparatus. Social Influence.—The community is distinguished for its refined culture and hospitality, and young men find homes in the BEST families. Not a Saloon in the city. Healthfulness of Location.—Richmond is at an elevation of more than 900 feet above the Ohio river, and free from all malarial influences. Accessibility.—Richmond is the geographical centre of the State, in the heart of the Blue Grass region, and is within a few hours, by rail, of Louisville, Cincinnati, Knoxville and Chattanooga. Moderate Expenses.—Board in the New Memorial Hall, lighted by gas and heated by steam—an elegant, comfortable home—$[illegible] per annum for everything except washing, and in the best families from $3 to $4 per week. Total necessary expenses for the ten months, from $150 to $240.

For full information and catalogue, apply to L. H. BLANTON, D. D., Chancellor.

GEORGETOWN COLLEGE 35th Annual Session begins Sept. 1st. Old and tried. Situated in the famous "Blue Grass" region unrivalled for beauty and health. Charming grounds, and shady groves. Prices low for first-class college. Full Faculty. Complete course. Degrees of B. S., A. B., and A. M. conferred. Before deciding send for catalogue to the President.

R. M. DUDLEY, D. D. GEORGETOWN, KY.

ELECTION NOTICE.

An election will be held in each voting precinct in Boone county, Kentucky on Monday the 4th day of August, 1884, for the following offices: Judge of the Superior Court for the Third Superior Court District to serve for the unexpired term of Judge Richard Reed, deceased. Sheriff of Boone county. Constable in each district, and one Justice of the Peace in Florence district. J. R. CLUTTERBUCK, S. B. C.

July 7th, 1884.

NOTICE.

The heirs of Maria Bowman, deceased, are hereby notified that I will be in Burlington the first Monday in each month, (County Court day) to pay them their distributable shares of said decedent's estate. JONAS ROUSE, Adm'r.

For Sale!

75 high grade sheep, 35 ewes, remainder yearling bucks, all cross of Oxford and Southdown, also the lambs of this season. Will sell worth the money. They are sound and all right. Will divide them to suit buyer. W. Q. KIRTLEY, Bullittsville, Ky.

SCIENCE-HILL

An English & Classical school for girls. FOUNDED 1825 BY MRS. TEVIS.

Aims to give its pupils elements of a complete education. Faculty selected from best Eastern Colleges. Terms reasonable. Send for catalogue. W. T. Poynter, D. D., Principal, Shelbyville, Ky.

LUMBER.

Goe. M. Bedinger & Co.,

Erlang r, - - Ky.

We keep constantly on hand all kinds of Lumber, Laths and Shingles. Also Builder's supplies of all kinds.

—Come and see Us.—

may-pf

We are [illegible]

A. M. ACRA,

—DEALER IN—

HARNESS SADDLES.

Fine and Cheap Buggy Harness. BURLINGTON, KY.

I also have a full stock of BUGGY WHIPS, LAP DUSTERS, ANKLE BOOTS and TROTTING BALLS and everything else usually kept in a first-class harness shop.

REPAIRING A SPECIALTY.

Give Me A Call.

A. L. Brown,

THE HATTER,

Cor. Pike and Washington Streets COVINGTON, - - KY.

Has always on hand a large variety of Men's, Boys' and Children's Hats, and prices GUARANTEED to be as low as the lowest.

Gents' Furnishing Goods a Specialty.

GOLD for the working class. Send 10c for postage, and we will mail you free, a royal, valuable box of sample goods that will put you in the way of making more money in a few days than you ever thought possible at any business. Capital not required. We will start you. You can work part the time only. The work universally adapted to both sexes, young and old. You can easily earn from 50 cents to $5 every evening. That all who want work may test the business we make this unparalleled offer; to all who are not well satisfied we will send $1 to pay for the trouble of writing us. Full particulars, directions, etc., sent free. Fortunes will be made by those who give their whole time to the work. Great success absolutely sure. Don't delay. Start now. Address STINSON & Co., Portland, Maine.

$66 a week at home. $5 outfit free. Pay absolutely sure. No risk. Capital not required. If you want business at which persons of either sex, young or old, can make great pay all the time they work, with absolute certainty, write for particulars to H. HALLETT & Co., Portland, Maine.

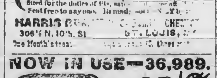
A PRIZE. Send six cents for postage, and receive free, a costly box of goods which will help you to more money right away than anything else in this world. All of either sex, succeed from the first hour. The broad road to fortune opens before the workers, absolutely sure. At once address, TRUE & Co., Augusta, Maine.

AGENTS wanted for The Lives of all the Presidents of the U. S. The largest, handsomest, best book ever sold for more than twice our price. The best selling book in America. Immense profits to agents. All intelligent people want it. Any one can become a successful agent. Terms free. HALLETT BOOK Co., Portland, Maine.

HANOVER

COLLEGE,

Fifty-second year begins Sept. 10, Classical and Scientific courses, with Preparatory Department. Open to both sexes. No saloons. Expenses small. On the Ohio, near Madison. For catalogue address President FISHER, Hanover Jefferson County, Indiana.



VIGOROUS HEALTH [illegible] TESTED FOR 5 YEARS

[illegible] by use in the [illegible] of cases. Entirely scientific method [illegible] principles. It has been [illegible] while its numerous competitors have failed. The direct application of this remedy to the seat of the disease makes its specific influence felt without delay. The natural functions of the human organism are restored. The animating elements of life which have been wasted are given back. The buoyant energy of the brain and muscular system renders the patient cheerful and strength with rapidity. NERVOUS DEBILITY, organic weakness, numerous obscure diseases, baffle the best physicians, result for youthful indiscretion, too free indulgence, and over brain work. Do not temporize [illegible] your system [illegible]. Send for a Descriptive [illegible] Illustrations, which will explain [illegible]. Sent free to anyone.

HARRIS REMEDY CO., MFG. CHEMISTS, 306½ N. 10th St., ST. LOUIS, MO.

NOW IN USE—36,989.

All persons say the goods are the best. We ask you to examine an Improved Keller Positive Force Feed, Grain, Seed and Fertilizing Drill and our Hay Rakes. They are as good as the best, and can be sold as cheap. All are warranted. Circulars mailed free. Newark Machine Co., Newark, Ohio. Eastern Branch House, Hagerstown, Md.

W. J. RICE, CARPENTER & BUILDER, BULLITSVILLE, KY.

Is prepared Raise or Move EITHER LOG or FRAME BUILDINGS On Short Notice.

And at the Lowest Possible Figures.

88-tf Your orders respectfully solicited

THE COMPLETE HOME. Agents Wanted for this beautiful book. New edition.—New bindings.—New Illustrations from new designs. Superbly gotten up. Same low price. Adapted to all classes. Sells at sight. Agents doing big work. EXCELLENT TERMS. The handsomest prospectus ever issued. Apply now. WM. GARRETSON & CO., Lexington, Kentucky. Also other grand new books and Bibles.

INCORPORATED UNDER THE LAWS OF MISSOURI.

CENTRAL MEDICAL & SURGICAL INSTITUTE

OF ST. LOUIS, MO.

Successors to Dr. Butts' Dispensary. Office & Rooms, No. 608 Locust St. CHAS. L. LABARTE, M.D., Pres't & Physician in Charge. NELSON CHEEKMAN, Treas. & Business Manager.

This Institute has ample facilities and an experienced Faculty. [illegible]

CHRONIC DISEASES [illegible]

BLOOD IMPURITIES [illegible]

DEFORMITIES [illegible]

WEAKNESS [illegible]

FEMALE [illegible]

[illegible] Consultation at Office or by mail free and invited.

LADIES [illegible]

DR. HARTER'S IRON TONIC [illegible]

TUTT'S PILLS

TORPID BOWELS, DISORDERED LIVER, and MALARIA.

From these sources arise three-fourths of the diseases of the human race. These symptoms indicate their existence: Loss of Appetite, Bowels costive, Sick Headache, fullness after eating, aversion to exertion of body or mind, Eructation of food, Irritability of temper, Low spirits, A feeling of having neglected some duty, Dizziness, Fluttering at the Heart, Dots before the eyes, highly colored Urine, CONSTIPATION, and demand the use of a remedy that acts directly on the Liver. As a Liver medicine TUTT'S PILLS have no equal. Their action on the Kidneys and Skin is also prompt; removing all impurities through these three "scavengers of the system," producing appetite, sound digestion, regular stools, a clear skin and a vigorous body. TUTT'S PILLS cause no nausea or griping nor interfere with daily work and are a perfect

ANTIDOTE TO MALARIA.

Sold everywhere, 25c. Office, 44 Murray St., New York.

TUTT'S HAIR DYE.

GRAY HAIR OR WHISKERS changed instantly to a GLOSSY BLACK by a single application of this DYE. Sold by Druggists, or sent by express on receipt of $1. Office, 44 Murray Street, New York.

TUTT'S MANUAL OF USEFUL RECEIPTS FREE.

For a Business Education Attend the

Commercial College

Of Kentucky University, Lexington, Ky. [illegible] WILBUR R. SMITH, Lexington, Ky.

TESTED BY TIME.

STRONG'S PECTORAL PILLS

IN SUCCESSFUL USE FOR HALF A CENTURY.

The best Remedy for Coughs, Colds, Dyspepsia and Rheumatism. [illegible] C. E. HULL & CO. [illegible]

FOUND AT LAST.

THE ANIMAL SAFE GUARD.

Patent applied for. [illegible] C. F. BROSEKE, Justice of the Peace, Falmouth, Ky.

WRIGHT'S INDIAN VEGETABLE PILLS FOR THE

LIVER

And all Bilious Complaints

Safe to take, being purely vegetable; no griping. Price 25 cts. All Druggists.

MARRIAGE [illegible] DR. WHITTIER [illegible]

FREE! RELIABLE SELF-CURE.

[illegible] Lost Manhood, Weakness and Decay. [illegible] Address DR. WARD & CO., Louisiana, Mo.

PISO'S CURE FOR CURES WHERE ALL ELSE FAILS. [illegible] CONSUMPTION

KENTUCKY UNIVERSITY, LEXINGTON, KY.

[illegible] CHAS. LOUIS LOOS, President [illegible] ROBT. GRAHAM, President of the College of the Bible.

WASHINGTON & LEE UNIVERSITY

LEXINGTON, VIRGINIA.

[illegible] G. W. C. LEE, President.

LAW SCHOOL

OF WASHINGTON AND LEE UNIVERSITY.

[illegible]

Local News.

Corn needs rain.

Nights cool—days redhot.

Dust, fleas and dogfennel have about captured the town.

D. M. Hewitt rejoiceth and is exceedingly happy—it is a boy.

The averaged assessed value of land in this county is $25¼ per acre.

New wheat started at Rising Sun last week at from 75 to 85 cents.

St. Georgia's chapel is again in operation after several months suspension.

The company in which the saw-mill at Constance was insured will rebuild it.

The picnic season is drawing to a close, and the boys are doubling on the days.

Joe Reed and James Westbay want positions as tumblers in some first-class circus.

The crop of dogfennel in the streets is suffering for an application of the scythe.

DIED—On the 19th inst., at 4 o'clock p. m., aged 83 years and 6 days, John Popham.

The rain-crow has been calling for rain for several days, but his calls are unheeded.

If it don't rain pretty soon the contents of the cisterns will begin to get very scarce.

Mr. Ben Rouse has had Col. C to put up a considerable string of his wire fence for him.

Riddell & Norris, of Kentucky, have six horses in training at the Fair ground —Lawrenceburg Register.

A delegation of Petersburg's belles and beaux were registered at the Boone House Sunday for dinner.

Those of the County officers entitled have received, in pamphlet form, the Acts of the last Legislature.

Those concerned in the R. H. & G. C. T. R. seem to be endowed with some degree of go-a-headativeness.

When Jerry Blythe gives a picnic it always rains, and he would do this section a favor by giving one at once.

Thanks to Bro. Wallace of the Warsaw Independent for his kind letter. He is ever awake to the interest of the craft.

A Sunday-school convention will be held with the Babtist church at Bellevue, on Friday and Saturday of this week.

On the 2d of August, a daylight and moonlight picnic will be given in Walton's grove. A large crowd is anticipated.

Judge Hawes takes exercise by riding on horseback. The Judge can mount and dismount with much ease for one of his age.

Joe Reed has added to his fame as a fine grainer by making an artificial knot formed by graining, so natural, that it fell out.

There is some diversity of opinion as to whether or not wheat is going to yield well. Some say the heads are not half filled.

A delegation of Burlington ladies went to Williamstown, one day last week, and spent the day with Captain J. M. Riddell and family.

Put your premises in good sanitary condition. The cholera has not made its appearance in this country, but it will do you no harm to prepare for its coming.

The crops in this county are needing rain badly, and especially in that section north of this place, where dry weather has prevailed longer than anywhere else.

We received a mammoth poster, the other day, announcing the Pendleton county Fair to commence September 9th and continue five days. Liberal premiums will be given.

Coroner Murat held another inquest at Constance, the other day. It strikes us that the Coroner has been a citizen of another county since his appointment, which vacated his office.

A fishing party headed by John Hall, of Covington, rendezvoused at Burlington, Thursday, and made a raid on the finny tribe in Gunpowder. They had their "catch" served at the Boone House.

Rev. C. S. Vincent, of Blanchester, will occupy the pulpit in the Universalist church at this place, on the fourth Sunday and Saturday evening preceding in this month, in exchange with the pastor.

The Split Rock excursionists did not get off until yesterday, when quite a procession of vehicles, ladies and baskets moved out of town at an early hour, headed for the above named famous resort.

On the second of next month a daylight and moonlight picnic will be given in Carpenter's Grove, at Florence. J. M Reed is at the helm, and he will exert himself to make it a very pleasant occasion.

The writer accompanied a detachment of the fishing club down on Gunpowder Friday, and for the want of the proper brand of "bass drops" their luck was n. g. Everything else was very favorable.

The room in which W. E. Piper will move his stock of goods this week is fixed up in fine style, and Billy will now have a chance to make a good display of his stock, an advantage which he has not heretofore enjoyed.

The day has come when to leave the grave of the departed one unmarked by a neat stone, is not suffered by even those in the most ordinary walks of life, and all can be pleased in both design and price by Huschart & Co., of Lawrenceburg, Ind. John Beall, of Hebron, is their agent.

We made a brief visit to Florence X-Roads Monday evening. The town was exceedingly quiet on account of the very busy season with the farmers, all of whom in that vicinity stay with their work till dark drives them home at night.

Bellevue has put her wharf in good condition again, and there is now no trouble in getting goods to and from the river. The town was badly crippled while the wharf was out of repair, and it is to be hoped that the present wharf will be a perpetual monument to the industry of her citizens who rebuilt it.

The Baptist congregation at this place will soon be without a pastor, Mr. Dicken having accepted a call to preach for the Second Baptist church in Covington. That church called Mr. Vardiman from his pastoral charge at this place, and now taking his successor from this church, looks as if it fancies the ministers who preach here.

A special term of the Ohio County Circuit Court is in session at Rising Sun this week for the trial of Acra and Warner for the burning, beating and robbing of John Smith, an old bachelor of Cass Township, that county, some time since. The prosecuting attorney claims to have new and strong testimony against the accused.

The new Christian Chapel at Lawrenceburg will be dedicated, Sunday, August 3d, 1884. Elder F. D. Power, late Chaplain U. S. House of Representatives of Washington, D. C., will officiate on the occasion. Elder W. S. Keene has been invited to assist. Everybody is respectfully invited to be present. Lunch will be served in the basement of the chapel.

The water in the well at Espey's corner is effervescent. Place some of the water in a glass pitcher and set it in the celler two days; then remove to a room on the floor; let it stand there until morning; then place your ear to the opening of the pitcher and you will hear a bubbling sound and see the bubbles. The water is beautiful and clear. —Rising Sun Recorder.

G. S. Lozier, of Lawrenceburg, Ind., agent for the light running New Home sewing machine, and also agent for the Chickering, and other pianos and the Johnson organ, is selling extensively throughout this and adjoing counties. Write to him for circulars and prices. He gives a sixty dollar New Home sewing machine at the Lawrenceburg Fair as a premium for the best loaf of yeast bread made by a lady.

Some one writing over the sig, "Sidney," asks our advice as to the propriety of depositing small sums of money in a bank that proposes to pay interest on as small deposits as $1, and "how small sums of money may be invested to advantage." Our advice to "Sidney" on the bank question is to avoid all banks that propose to pay interest on as small deposits as $1. Small sums of money, such as $1 50, can be invested to an advantage by subscribing for the RECORDER.

There does not seem to be much interest taken in the race for County Superintendent of Schools. But few are aware, apparently, that that officer has to be elected at the August election. The person chosen to fill that important office will be expected, under the new law, to make the public schools of more value to the county. Under the present law the Superintendent has an opportunity to do more work in the interest of the schools than the Commissioner had, and the people should see to it that he gives the office the necessary attention and labor.

Kentucky Wheat at the Southern Exposition.

Col. John F. Davis, Commissioner of Agriculture, has issued the following circular to the farmers of the State:

"FRANKFORT, KY., July 14.—To the farmers of Kentucky: Believing that exhibitors generally throughout the State would prefer it, I have concluded (by the consent and request of the managers of the Southern Exposition at Louisville, Ky.,) to have the annual wheat show at said Exposition buildings, on the 28th day of August, 1884.

"The following premiums will be awarded:

"First and second premiums at $15 and $10 each for the following varieties, viz.: No. 1 langberry, No 1 white, and No. 2 red; each sample must be sent in separate packages, marked with full address of exhibitor, and the name of variety, and the package may be sent by freight to said buildings at the expense of this office; each sample must contain not less than one-half bushel. It is my purpose to purchase about one hundred and fifty bushels of the premium wheat for distribution through the members of the Legislature in the various counties."

JOHN F. DAVIS,
Com'r. of Agriculture, State of Ky.

[Western Dispatch.]

Died—At the family residence, in this city, on Friday morning, May 9th, 1884, of typhoid fever, after nearly three weeks illness, Jas. M. Cloud, Esq., in the 39th year of his age.

The deceased was a native of Bourbon county, Ky., and in 1878, removed from Boone county in that State, to Pleasant Hill, where he has since resided. In the year 1870, while on a visit to his brother, T. H. Cloud, then residing in Johnson county, this State he connected himself with the Christian church, of which, until his death, he was a consistent member. He was married in May, 1876, to Miss Lillian M. Brasher, daughter of Dr. Brasher, of Covington, Ky., and leaves three small children—one girl and two boys. The deceased joined the Confederate service in the 4th Ky., Vol. Infantry, in what was known as Gen. Roger Hanson's brigade; was engaged in the battles of Stone river, Chicamauga and Missionary Ridge. He was admitted to the Bar of Cass county, July 20, '70.

The decease was a sober, industrious citizen, a kind father, a loving husband and a devout christian. His untimely death, cutting him off in the flower of his manhood, is a source of deep bereavement to his friends.

To the sorrowing widow of the deceased, who, through the prolonged agony of the last fatal sickness, kept her ceaseless vigils through sleepless days and nights, we feel that profound sympathy that only personal observation can arouse, and we hope that the Strength that is above all human endeavor, and the Arm that is never withheld, may sustain her in the hour of grief that has darkened her life and clouded her home. C. W. W.

Personal Mentions.

[If you have friends from a distance visiting you or expect to be away from home on business or pleasure, let us have the item for this column.]

Dr. Bange was quite sick a couple of days last week.

R. H. Sandford moved out to his father-in-law's yesterday.

G. S. Lozier, of Lawrenceburg, spent Sunday and Monday in Burlington.

Mr. and Mrs. Richey returned to their home in Owen county, last Saturday.

John Huey and wife entertained James Rogers and wife, of Bellevue, Sunday.

Sheriff Clutterbuck was out on a little hand-shaking expedition the first of this week.

Mrs. Charlotte Reed, of Covington, is visiting her daughter, Mrs. Lillie Hall, of this place.

James Thompson and wife, of Bellevue, were the guests of Geo. Blythe and wife, Sunday.

W. H. Barlow, a staunch farmer on Gunpowder, made us a brief and pleasant call, Monday.

Miss Hattie Smith and Miss Mary Herriot, of Covington, are the guests of Miss Addie Crisler.

Mr. Maley Green and family, have returned home, after several days visit with his sister, near this place.

Dr. I. R. McKenzie, of St. Louis, arrived here Sunday. The doctor looks as youthful and handsome as ever.

Mrs. W. N. Jury returned to her home in Scott county, Monday, after several days visit to her sister, Mrs. O. P. Conner.

Mrs. Nancy Platt, of Kingstown, Ind., and Miss Hattie Kennedy, of Manchester, Ind., Mrs. Palmer's sisters who were visiting her last week, returned to Indiana, Monday.

Joseph McGarvy and family, of Cincinnati, were the guests of James Westbay and family, Sunday. Mr. McGarvy's folks are here yet, and will spend several days with their relatives.

Misses Jennie and Florence Mitchell and Miss Belle Curson, three charming young ladies, of Florence, were the guests of Mr. and Mrs. S. A. Palmer a few days last week.

John L. Rouse, of Audrain county, Missouri, made us a call last Monday. He is well pleased with the West, and says they have fine crops out there this season, and that the price of land is advancing rapidly.

County Court.

SPECIAL TERM, July 12.—The following persons were appointed officers of elections in this county for the ensuing year:

Taylorport—Shelt Hedges and Hugh Kennedy, judges; W. B. Grubbs, clerk.

Bullettsville—W. A. Goodridge and J. D. Conner, judges; W. C. Watts, clerk.

Petersburg—S. G. Botts and L. A. Loder, judges; John C. Stott, clerk.

Bellevue—John M. Moody and T. H. Sutton, judges; H. C. Botts, clerk.

Carlton—Z. T. Kelly and A. G. McConnell, judges; Chas. Wilson, clerk.

Hamilton—F. M. Howlett and Geo W. Baker, judges; G M. Allen, clerk.

Beaver—J. O. Griffith and W. M. Rouse, judges; J. C. Hughes, clerk.

Verona—J. J. Brumback and Sam'l McPherson, judges; R. Q. Roberts, cl'k.

Walton—Sam Hind and James Arnold, judges; Wood Stansifer, clerk.

Union—Henry Bannister and T. J. Baker, judges; Everett Norman, cl'k.

Florence—Joe Wagstaff and Alex. Murray, Judges; Butler Carpenter, clerk.

Burlington—E. H. Baker and E. A. Hughes, judges; H. J. Foster, clerk.

July 14.—John Klasner and John Erneste appointed administrators of Henry Klasner, with Mary Klasner on bond. B. Faltz Zimmer, Montgomery Anderson and Alfed Whitlock, appraisers.

M. T. Garnett allowed $0 20 for Poll Books, payable out of the levy of 1885.

NEIGHBORHOOD NEWS.

Bullittsville.

T. P. Crisler is building a new barn.

Mrs. Nannie Casey is visiting at her father's.

Died on the 13th inst., a little child of Henry Gordon and wife.

P. W. Strader, son of R. S. Strader, of Lexington, is visiting scenes familiar to his childhood.

Miss Campbell, of Cincinnati, is the guest of Anna Clore. Miss Willa Kennedy, of Covington, and Miss Bradley, of Lexington, are visiting the Misses Graddy.

Hebron.

Corn looks well.

Oats about all cut.

Irish potatoes, two-thirds of a crop.

W. C. C. Rouse makes his home at J. M. Utz's.

The hay harvest is under full headway, with an average crop.

There was a lively time at this place the other day, on politics, with Joel Clore and James Utz in front and Wilson Quick bringing up the reserve.

The 27th anniversary of the Hebron Sunday-school, will take place near Florence X-Roads, on the 31st. A procession will be formed at Hebron church, at 9 o'clock a. m., and proceed to the grounds prepared for the occasion, it will arrive in time to commence at 10 o'clock sharp. Music by the school, and band from the city. J. C. Clore and Mr. Shockley will be the orators of the day.

Longstreet.

J. J. Lillard is going to build a large barn. W. J. Rice will boss the job.

John E. Walton had a mule shot Sunday morning week. It was dead when found.

Our saw mill is doing a lively business under the management of Mit Lening, a very enterprising young man.

Meadows are very fine, and the farmers are busy maturing feed for next winter. They do not wish to be caught without food again.

The other Sunday evening business came to a stand still until Messrs Hunt and Hunley could take a little fight. Cause Hunt tried to nail Hunley up in a yard.

There was a shooting match at pigeons at Mr. Alfred Cason's last week. Ben Cason was the champion shot; Clide Berkshire was second. Score: Ben 6; Clide, 5. There were three or four other gunners. Have not learned what the prizes were.

Rabbit Hash.

Health of the neighborhood very good, except several sour throats.

Ben Wilson has commenced to repair his house since he has moved into it.

Aunt Polly Miller, of Rising Sun, was the guest of her sister-in-law, last week.

Chas. H. Acra is a candidate for constable, in the Carlton precinct, at the August election.

Our dry goods and grocery merchant, C. G. Riddell, is picking and shipping apples. They are bringing a good price.

The sale of the personal property of Mrs. Elizabeth Davis, deceased, will take place at her late residence, near Hamilton, Saturday the 26th inst.

The crops in this vicinity are needing rain very badly. The tobacco is looking very well. Potatoes are about made, so rain will not do them much good.

Florence.

H. J. Foster, candidate for County Superintendent of Schools, made us a short visit on Saturday.

As soon as we get a good rain to settle the terrible dust, we are going to hurrah for Cleveland and Hendricks.

Miss Maud Kirkpatrick, one of Burlington's most charming belles, is paying a visit to her cousin, Oceola Yeager.

Dr. Rice is the prince of anglers in these parts. He hooked a bass in Ben Stephens' pond last week: weight 4 lbs. 6 oz.; length, 21 inches. Doc. said it was a darling. It was his first experience in bass fishing, and he had considerable difficulty in landing the finny animal.

Everett Carpenter and family, of Pettis county, Missouri, arrived in town unexpectedly on Saturday morning, on a visit to friends and relatives. Mrs. E. V. Grant the mother of Mrs. Carpenter was almost placed hors de combat by the [illegible] occasioned by the sudden arrival of her pet. Everett is looking hearty and is as handsome as ever.

Our delegate to the Maysville convention, which convened July 15th, to nominate a candidate for Judge of the Superior Court, has returned. He went via the K. C. R. R., passing through the flourishing towns of Falmouth, Cynthiana, Paris, Carlisle, Millersburg, &c. He reports part of the country upon the route as laying beautifully, while some was rugged in the extreme, but generally fertile. The condition of the crops was very promising; corn rank and in the tassels and the tobacco crop, which seems to have no end was very heavy, appearing to be all topped and nearly waist high. The convention which was very large for a district meeting, was a little boisterous at the organization, but finally settled down and a feeling of harmony prevailed. A careful survey of the field convinced the opponents of Hon. J. Q. Ward, that they would be left, so they wisely withdrew, leaving the laurels for Mr. Ward. All parties then went into a general jolification for the favorite, which was supplemented with Cleveland and Hendricks.

GAS OMETER.

Beaver Lick.

Dury Bondurant, one of Gallatin county's gentlemanly pedagogues, was visiting at the Springs last week.

Wood Miller and tenant, have the finest field of corn on the Hamilton & Big Bone turnpike, although there are many other fields looking promisingly well round about it.

A big game of base-ball, and picnic, will take place at the Springs next Saturday at the Ball Park. Everbody should come and taste the invigorating hospitality of the Springs on that same day.

J. C. Hughes has grazing on his pasture near Beaver, about one hundred and fifty head of the best cattle ever developed in these parts. It will strain the famous Blue Grass regions to surpass them in any respect.

There never was, at this season of the year, as much fine old tobacco, in the hands of the buyers in Boone, as at present. Three buyers alone, near Beaver, have on hand three hundred thousand pounds of as fine leaf as ever grew in the county.

Lo, the whistle of the steam thresher is now heard in the land, and those who have threshed their wheat report a good yield of a fair quality. This should run a golden thread through the fabric of the dreams of those who have to buy their bread.

The mass meeting of Boone's Democracy on last Saturday week, should have hired a wagon and canvassed the county a while longer, for Mr. Ward is decidedly the choice of the county. However, those who sit still in such matters deserve some consideration for the interest they manifest.

Quite a nice party of ladies and gentlemen from Covington and Union came to the Springs, last Friday, and enjoyed a big picnic. They spread an elegant repast in the beautiful grove and after partaking bountifully of it, they spent the afternoon in driving and strolling about the enchanted resort of old Boone.

Geo. M. D. Grigsby, once a citizen of this locality, but now of Jefferson, Texas, is here at present on a visit. Dal looks as rosy and cheerful as when he left old "Kentuck" five years ago. He speaks well of Texas; having seen most all of the State, and thinks emigrants should see it before purchasing elsewhere.

BILL LLOYD.

A man in Ohio has discovered a process by which tough beef can be made tender in a few minutes. Ex.

Send down some of your process, please.

As will be remembered Ed Golway of Florence, in the early part of the wool season, offered a special premium of $5 for the best wool purchased by him during the season. After an impartial examination of all wool purchased, the premium was awarded to Mr. Milt Willhoit, his wool (72 fleeces) being the best purchased.

ED GOLWAY.

Notice of Incorporation.

Notice is hereby given, that Thadius C. S. Ryle, Joseph Riddell, Solon Stephens, G. L. Smith and J. J. Stephens, have associated themselves together and become incorporated for the purpose of constructing a road on the macadamized (turnpike) plan from Rabbit Hash, following the old Rising Sun and Union graded road as near as practicable to near Gunpowder creek; thence up the said creek the most practicable route to the Middle creek and Big Bone road near Joseph Riddell's.

The name of the said corporation is the Rabbit Hash and Gunpowder Creek Turnpike Road Company.

Its principal place of business shall be at Rabbit Hash, Boone county, Kentucky.

The business of said corporation shall be the constructing, maintaining and operating a turnpike road over the route before described herein, connecting the said points given.

The amount of capital stock, $25,000, to be divided into shares of $25 each, and to be paid on calls of the directors.

The corporation to commence June 7th, 1884, and to continue for 25 years.

The affairs of the corporation to be conducted by a president and four directors, to be elected on the 1st Saturday in August, 1885, and on same day every year thereafter. The present president and directors will serve until their successors are elected.

The corporation shall at no time be indebted beyond $1,000.

Private property is to be exempt from corporate debts.

THADIUS C. S. RYLE, JOSEPH RIDDELL, G. L. SMITH, SOLON STEPHENS, J. J. STEPHENS.

REPORT OF THE CONDITION OF THE Farmers & Traders National Bank AT COVINGTON,

In the State of Kentucky, at the close of business, June 30, 1884.

RESOURCES.

Loans and discounts			$569,718 91
U.S. Bonds to secure circulation 4 per cent			50,000 00
Furniture and Fixtures			4,668 91
Premiums paid on Bonds to secure circulation	$10,437 50
Less am't previously charged to profit and loss	2,437 50		8,000 00
Due from approved reserved agents	$80 481 08
Due from banks and bankers	24,839 82
5 per cent, fund with U. S. Treasurer	2 250 00
Cash on hand	41.158 78		148,729 68
			$781,117 50

LIABILITIES.

Capital stock paid in			$300,000 00
Surplus fund	$6,000 00
Undivided profits	17,485 41		23,185 41
Circulation			45,000 00
Fund to pay tax on circulation			222 30
Due individual depositors	$385,434 94
Due banks & bank's	26,974 85		412,409 79
			$781,117 50
Undivided profits remaining January 1, 1884			$14,480 40
Gross earnings, for 6 months ending June 30, 1884			19,897 20
			$34,377 70

DISPOSED OF AS FOLLOWS:

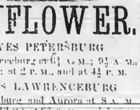
Current expenses	$ 5,669 99
Tax on circulation	222 30
Dividend No. 3 of 3 per cent	9,000 00
Credited to surplus fund	2,000 00
Balance to undivided profits	17,485 41	$34,377 70

J. L. SANDFORD, Cashire.

L. KUPPERSCHMID,

—42 WALNUT STREET,—

Lawrenceburg, - - Ind.



Always keeps on hand a large assortment of WATCHES, CLOCKS, JEWELRY, &c. Repairing Watches and Clocks a specialty. Also agent for the

Rockford Watch Company,

Which manufactures the finest movement made, and they are used by all railroad men.

Give Me a Call.—

TIME CARD OF THE

MAYFLOWER.

LEAVES PETERSBURG

For Lawrenceburg at 6½ A. M.; 9½ A. M. and 11½ A. M.; at 2 P. M., and at 4½ P. M.

LEAVES LAWRENCEBURG

For Petersburg and Aurora at 8 A. M. 11 A. M. and 12 M; at 2½ P. M. and 5 P. M.

LEAVES PETERSBURG

For Aurora at 8¼ A. M., 10¼ A. M.; at 1 P. M., and 3 P. M.

LEAVES AURORA

For Petersburg and Lawrenceburg at 9 A. M., 11 A. M.; 1½ P. M. and 4 P. M.

ELIHU ALDEN, Master.

FOR SALE.

A good dwelling house with 2 acres of ground, the property of Edward Fowler, deceased. Inquire of C. A. Fowler.

For Sale.

A good frame dwelling house of four rooms and all necessary out-buildings, with half acre lot, in the town of Bellevue, Ky., on the Ohio river. Inquire or address,

JOHN DECK, Grant P. O., Boone County, Ky.

NOTICE.

A dividend of 50 cents on each share of stock in the Burlington & Florence turnpike road has been declared, and is payable on demand by DUDLEY ROUSE, July 14, '84 Treasurer.

NOTICE.

Sealed Proposals will be received at the office of the Rabbit Hash and Gunpowder Creek Turnpike Company, at Rabbit Hash, Ky., until the 30th of August, 1884, for the construction of a macadamized turnpike road from Rabbit Hash to Joseph Riddell's, according to specifications now on file with Wilsons & Riddell, at Rabbit Hash, Ky. Proposals will be [illegible] for each section, separatly, or for the whole route. The company reserve the right to reject any or all bids.

SOLON STEPHENS, Sec'y.

WITTENBURG COLLEGE,

Springfield, Ohio.

For young men and women. Four courses—Classical, Scientific, Literary and Ladies' Preparatory and Normal departments. New building [illegible] grounds. [illegible] experience. Ex-penses low. Students going home and returning travel at reduced rates. Fall term begins Sept. 4th. For catalogue containing full details address The Secretary of the Faculty.

OPIUM and WHISKY HABITS cured at home without pain. Book of particulars sent Free. B. M. WOOLLEY, M. D., Atlanta, Ga.

County Directory.

OFFICERS.

Assessor—G. M. Riley.
County Surveyor—W. E. Vest.
School Commissioner—D. M. Snyder.
Coroner—Dr. A. A. Murat, Constance.

COURTS.

CIRCUIT COURT meets the 2d Monday in April and first Monday in October. [illegible] Major, Judge; W. L. Riddell, Clerk; A. G. DeJarnette, Commonwealths Attorney; W. L. Riddell, [illegible] to Jury Fund.

COUNTY COURT meets the first Monday in every month. L. H. Dills, Judge; S. W. Tolin, County Attorney. M. T. Garnett, Clerk; J. R. Clutterbuck, Sheriff, T. W. Finch and W. T. German, Deputy Sheriffs.

QUARTERLY COURT meets the first Monday in March, June, September and December. The officers of the County Court preside.

COURT OF CLAIMS meets the first Monday in November.

MAGISTRATES' COURTS are held in March, June, September and December, as follows:

Bellevue—M. B. Green, first Saturday, and T. H. Sutton, third Monday. J. M. Moody, Constable.

Burlington—E. H. Baker, Thursday after first Monday, and Oscar Gaines, fourth Monday. R. H. Sandford, Constable.

Carlton A. G. McConnell, Wednesday after second Monday, and B. H Ryle, Saturday after third Monday. Walter Ryle, Constable.

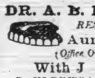
Petersburg—Jos. Hensley, Wednesday after first Monday, and L. A. Loder fourth Saturday. Geo. Comer, Constable.

Beaver—W. M. Rouse, Friday after the third Monday, and

Union—M. C. Norman, Thursday after third Monday, and H. Bannister, Thursday after second Monday. A. D. Riley, Constable.

Hamilton—F. M. Howlett, Tuesday after second Monday; W. W. Garnett, Wednesday after third Monday. R. L. Roberts Constable.

Walton—T. F. Carley, second Friday, S. T. Johnson, Tuesday after second Friday. W. C. Moxley, Constable.



H. C. CHAMBERS,
AUCTIONEER
FLORENCE, - - - KENTUCKY.

CONNER YAGER
Attorney and Counselor
FLO[illegible] - KENTUCKY.

ROBERT B. REED
Attorney at Law.
OFFICE AT - UNION, KY

F. RIDDELL. H. P. STEPHENS.
RIDDELL and STEPHENS,
ATTORNEYS at LAW
BURLINGTON, KY.
Office over Dudley Rouse's Store.

W. E. VEST,
COUNTY SURVEYOR
WALTON, KY.
Is prepared to do all kinds of surveying. All orders sent him through the mail to Walton, will receive his prompt attention.

E. E. IGOE,

Resident Dentist,
Rising Sun, Ind.
WITH
J. P. Ulrey.
Monday and Tuesday at Rising Sun. Ind

DR. A. B. HARRY AN

RESIDENT DENTIST
Aurora, Indiana.
(Office Over Postoffice)
With J P. ULREY.
Dr. ULREY'S days, Wednesday and Saturday. Office open at all hours. 8-1y

J. J. Landram. G. G. Hughes.
LANDRAM & HUGHES.
ATTORNEYS at LAW.
Will practice in the Boone Circuit Court and the Court of Appeals. Prompt attention given to Collections, on application to G. G. Hughes, Burlington, Ky.

S. W. TOLIN.
ATTORNEY AT LAW
BURLINGTON, - - KY
Office in Court-house on 2d floor.
Will manage litigation in any of the Courts of the State, contracts and other legal instruments drawn up at reasonable rates. Aprompt an studious attention given to business intrusted to my care. A trial solicited. 12-1y

AURORA MARBLE AND GRANITE WORKS, Aurora, Ind
Will have constantly on hand
Marble and Granite Monuments,
Italian & American Headstones, &c.
I am ready to do all kinds of Stone Work on short notice and at low prices Hoping to receive the patronage of Boone County, I am respectfully,
F. W. KASSEBAUM.

INSURE AT HOME
The Farmers' Mutual Fire
INSURANCE COMPANY
Of Boone County
Is now completely organized and receiving applications for insurance.
Its Rates are Lower
Than those of any other Company, and it gives the farmers of Boone County a
HITHERTO UNKNOWN ADVANTAGE
In keeping their property insured.
EVERY FARMER IN THE COUNTY
should take a policy at once.
J. A. GAINES, President, Burlington, Ky. | J. H. WALTON, Secretary, Constance, Ky
R. RANDALL, Treasury.
DIRECTORS.
LOGAN GAINES, A. J. UTZ.
JNO. STEPHENS.
OSCAR GAINES, Agent | C. L. CRISLER, Assessor.

Good Pay for Agents. $100 to $200 per mo. made selling our Grand New History, Famous and Decisive Battles of the World. Write to J. C. McCurdy & Co., Cincinnati, O.

GREAT CLEARANCE SALE
—OF—
Spring & Summer Goods
—AT RISING SUN, INDIANA.—
COLTER, POWELL AND OWNBY'S,
Ginghams 7½ cents, worth 10 cents. Satteens 7½ cents, worth 12½ cents. Suitings 7½ cents, worth 15 cents.
Lawns 5 cents, worth 12½ cents. Calicoes 5c. worth 7c. Buntings 15c. worth 30c. Aberdeen Mixtures 7½, worth 35c.
All Summer Goods at prices in proportion to the above. Remember we rule the prices, and when Goods can be SOLD LOW, WE ARE THE ONES TO SELL THEM.
Cottonade can now be bought at 15 cents per yard, worth in any market 25 and 30 cents. A large line of Ironside Seamless Sacks, holding 2 bushels, 20 cents a piece, or $2 25 per dozen.
Colter, Powell & Ownby,
RISING SUN, INDIANA.

C. S. CRISLER,
Burlington, Ky,
WAGON MAKER AND
—MANUFACTURER OF—
ROAD WAGONS, SPRING WAGONS, HARROWS, PLOWS, WHEEL BARROWS
AND ALL KINDS OF WOOD WORK.
Also the Manufacturer of W. M. Conner's Patent Right Hay Conveyor.
Saws Filed & Sharpened.
Please call and examine my prices before calling elsewhere.

JAMES S. WAYNE, President. JNO. L. SANDFORD, Cashier
CAPITAL $300,000.
FARMERS AND TRADERS
NATIONAL BANK.
Covington, Kentucky.
DIRECTORS.
James S. Wayne, M. C. Motch, Sam Hind, S. J. Hickey, E. J. Green, J. S. Matson, J. H. Mersman, J. L. Sandford, L. H. Dills, F. P. Helm, L. C. Stephens.
The general operations of banking transacted upon the most favorable terms, collections made on all points in the United States.
The Business and Accounts of Farmers are Especially Solicited by this Bank.

UNDERTAKING.

We keep Constantly on Hand all sizes of
Burial Cases and Caskets.
And having just received a beautiful
NEW HEARSE,
Which can be had at a reasonable price when desired.
PRICES GUARANTEED LESS THAN CITY PRICES
DAVIS BROS., - - HEBRON, KY.

City Flouring Mills
RISING SUN, INDIANA.
FLOUR EXCHANGED FOR WHEAT OR CASH. THE HIGHEST MARKET PRICE PAID FOR GOOD WHEAT.
mar7-tf28 J. W. Talbott.

VANDERBILT UNIVERSITY NASHVILLE, TENN.
Cost of grounds, buildings and apparatus, $500,000. Productive Endowment, $700,000. Six Departments. Tuition in Literary and Scientific Department, $65.00; in Theological, free. Special attention given to Civil Engineering. Session opens September, 1. For Catalogue (FREE) Send to Secretary.

KENTUCKY MILITARY INSTITUTE.

At Farmdale P. O., Franklin Co., Ky., six miles from Frankfort. Has the most healthful and beautiful location in the State. Lit by gas as well as heated by steam. A full and able College Faculty. Expenses as moderate as any first-class college. Fortieth year begins September 1st. For catalogues, etc., address as above. COL. R. D. ALLEN, Supt.

CUMBERLAND UNIVERSITY LEBANON, TENN.
[illegible]

Now is the time
To Subscribe for
The Recorder.
Only $1 50 a Year.

THE RECORDER.

RIDDELL & HALL, Publishers.

BURLINGTON, : : KENTUCKY.

CURRENT TOPICS.

CALIFORNIA ostrich eggs bring $1,200 a dozen.

ELLA WHEELER has written about 1,500 poems.

THERE are over 38,000 locomotives in this country.

TURKEY is about to adopt the international postal service.

THE Pullman car works, near Chicago, employ 2,700 men.

PEAR blight has appeared among the California pear trees.

ENGLAND refuses to revise its commercial treaty with France.

VANDERBILT'S household expenses are said to reach $250,000 a year.

THE latest success of dentistry is the manufacture of false teeth for pet dogs.

THE peach crop of Delaware is estimated to be 10,000,000 baskets, the largest since 1875.

BOSTON wants to photograph those of its old landmarks which it can not afford to preserve.

MISS EMILY J. LEONARD, botanist, authoress and political economist, of Meriden, Conn., is dead.

A NUMBER of hogs at Rockford, Ill., which had been bitten by a mad dog, are dying with hydrophobia.

ANDREW CARNEGIE, a millionaire ironmaster, says that the iron trade of England is in a wretched condition.

THE tobacco, blackberry and potato crops of Southwestern Indiana are suffering seriously from the drouth.

A DENVER physician has failed financially, and has thus acquired the title of "Dr." at both ends of his name.

THERE is nearly $9,000,000 worth of furniture manufactured in Cincinnati, giving employment to about 5,000 hands.

TWO HUNDRED Turks in the Egyptian army at Abassies were ordered to Assouan, When called to start 130 had deserted.

HAIL as large as hen's eggs fell in Erie County, Pa., recently, during a storm, demolishing windows and ruining crops.

THE Massachusetts Charitable Mechanics' Association has decided not to loan its organ to the World's Fair at New Orleans.

PATTI is said to have once refused an offer of marriage from Brigham Young. He wanted her to sing his babies to sleep.

TWO SKIRMISHES between the Cuban insurgents and the regular troops are reported, in which the former were victorious.

MRS. WATSON, of Catskill, Green County, N. Y., dreamed that she saw her husband kissing a neighbor's wife. She awoke and struck him in the face, breaking his nose.

MANY a bride will pout her pretty lips and make faces at Secretary Folger. He decides that a wedding trousseau and wedding presents can not be brought from Europe duty free.

J. W. ROEBLING'S Son's Company, of New Jersey, have shipped a wire rope six and a quarter miles long, weighing 86,825 pounds, to the Third Avenue Surface Railway of New York.

GRANT County, New Mexico, now lays claim to the largest cattle ranch in the world, enclosing an area forty-miles wide and sixty miles long, and comprising 1,500,000 acres of grazing land.

A NEW YORK dentist has charged $7,000 for treating the teeth of three Venezuelan ladies. Either the ladies of Venezuela must have excessively large mouths or the dentists of New York large bills.

THERE is a club of pretty girls in Boston who have sworn never to wear eyeglasses or spectacles before they are married, because they have discovered that the men never kiss girls who wear glasses.

A CORRESPONDENT of an agricultural paper says: "Sheep poisoned by eating laurel can be saved by giving each a gill of strong green tea. One farmer saved the lives of hundreds of animals with this remedy.

SOME of the watering-place hotels employ public entertainers. These are women of talent, who play on the piano, sing, and in every way make the time pass pleasantly to the guests, for the compensation of board and a small salary.

JUDGE TULLY, of the Chicago Circuit of the U. S. Court, has decided that the stockholders of the Republic Life Insurance Company at the time of its failure are individually liable to the full amount of their stock.

THE New York Tribune fresh air fund, organized to send tenement house children to the country for two weeks, has begun its summer's work. Already ten parties have left the city and many more are soon to go.

THE Indian Office has been informed of the murder of Noshiway, chief of the Sac and Fox tribes of Indians, now on the Pottawotomie Reservation in Kansas. A reward of $300 is offered for the arrest of the murderer.

Two hundred and twenty-five dozen eggs were shipped from Cape Breton to Boston in fresh cut grass a few days ago, and the grass "heated" and cooked the eggs, and they were all condemned by the Inspector of Provisions upon arrival.

IN the high, semi-mountain town of Caldwell, Essex County, N. J., three miles by turnpike and stage northeast of Montclair, there stands a little two-and-a-half-story white house, with wooden shutters, where, in 1837, Grover Cleveland was born.

FOUR little children, all less than twelve years old, landed at New York the other day, and were sent to their parents in Ohio and Chicago. They came from Switzerland alone, with leather tags tied to them, giving directions to the captain of the vessel and railway conductors.

GIRLS in Russian schools all wear uniforms, and mostly hideous ones at that. A brown frock with a small, starched linen collar and a black apron, fastened by straps, is the dress in the lower schools; in the upper the color is gray. In the institutes the frocks are either green or crimson, with black aprons for ordinary wear and white for state occasions.

MISS JEANNIE CHAMBERLAIN, the Ohio girl who is creating such a social sensation in London, is statuesque and marvelously handsome. Her pictures do not give an adequate idea of her beauty, much of which consists in her complexion and wonderful eyes.

SIX wholesale stores under the Brooklyn bridge are in operation. The stores are each two stories high, seventy-five feet deep, and twenty feet wide. The average rent is nearly $2,000 a year. Other arches will be fitted up and ready for occupancy within a year.

MISS RONALDS, the American who was married in London a few days ago, received more than 600 presents. The jewels were of immense value, and the silver plate would fill a dozen plate chests, every conceivable article, useful and ornamental, seems to have been showered upon the bride, who has the best wishes of perhaps the largest circle of any young lady in London society from royalty downward.

A HUGE block of ice was left in front of John Sipping's residence the other day in Louisville. A servant split the piece open, and just in the center was a large frog. The animal was a large black one of the species known as the Michigan frog, and weighed two pounds or over. The men who delivered the ice said that it was part of a lot that had been stored away by the Talmage Company in their icehouse for over four years, so that the frog had been a prisoner in his dungeon for all that time. His frogship was quite lively when relieved from his prison.

IN the West, twenty years is believed to be the average duration of an apple tree, as against forty years on the Atlantic slope.

A BRAVE GIRL.

Miss Etta McCall Rescues a Baby From a Cistern at the Risk of Her Life.

A Deed Requiring Such Bravery and Endurance as Few Men Possess.

CINCINNATI, July 20.—Ella McCall, a modest, unassuming young lady residing at 220 Longworth street, near Smith, has suddenly become a heroine, having performed a feat requiring such bravery and endurance as few men possess. Yesterday afternoon as she sat at her sewing she was startled by piercing screams coming from the side-yard. Rushing to the window she was in time to see Frankie Parr, the four-year-old child of the servant employed in the family, disappear down the cistern, the cap of which had inadvertently been removed. It took her but an instant to reach the opening, where she could see the little fellow floundering about eight feet below in four feet of water. Unfortunately she was alone in the house at the time. The little boy sank below the surface, and there was no help at hand to summon. It was a time to act rather than to think, and without taking into consideration what might be the consequences to herself, Miss McCall grasped the rim of the cistern and lowered herself through the orifice. Hanging suspended at arm's length for a second, she dropped into the water, barely missing the struggling and almost exhausted child. In striking the bottom she lost her footing, and was herself submerged in the chilling water. She managed to get the boy into her arms in time to save his life. She cried for assistance, but no one being at home, no one came. She tried to attract the attention of passersby on the street, but failed. Courageously she stood in the water, which reached above her waist, and held up the boy, who was much too heavy a load for her. She stood there for fully half an hour. She was almost fainting away, and was chilled to the bone when help finally came in the person of her mother, who had been away on an errand. Help was quickly brought, and a ladder was lowered into the cistern. Miss McCall scarcely had strength left to hand up her charge, and had to be assisted to the dry ground. Restoratives were at once applied, and to-day she was as well as usual, and able to receive the many congratulatory calls from her admiring neighbors, who can scarcely express in words their praise for her heroism.

Proclamation by the President.

WASHINGTON, D. C., July 18.—By the President of the United States of America—a proclamation: While quarantine regulations are committed to the several States, the general Government has reposed certain powers in the President, to be used at his discretion, in preventing a threatened epidemic. Feeling it to be my duty, I hereby call upon all persons who, under the existing systems in the several States, are entrusted with the execution of quarantine regulations, to be diligent and on the alert, in order to prevent the introduction of the pestilence which we all regret to learn has made its appearance in some countries of Europe between which and the ports of the United States intercourse is direct and frequent. I [illegible] that the cities and towns of the United States, whether on the coast or on lines of inter-communication, by sound sanitary regulations and promotion of cleanliness be prepared to resist the power of the disease, and to mitigate its severity. And I further direct the consuls of the United States in the ports where pestilence has made or may make its appearance, to exercise vigilence in carrying out the instructions heretofore given, and in communicating to the Government of the United States any information of value relating to the progress or treatment of the disease. CHESTER A. ARTHUR.

By the President,
F. T. FRELINGHUYSEN,
Secretary of State.

Shrouded in Mystery.

PITTSBURG, July 19.—Early this morning citizens of the Twenty-second Ward were aroused by an excited cry of alarm from a man who, being unable to speak English, endeavored by gesticulation to give his listeners to understand that a crime had been committed. A crowd collected and followed the excited individual to a clump of trees, where the body of a well dressed, middle aged man was found suspended by the neck from the limb of a tree. The Coroner was notified and held an inquest. Nothing was ascertained regarding the deceased's name or where he was from. The case is shrouded in mystery.

First Blood for the Prohibitionists.

MUSCATINE, IA., July 19.—The first trial under the new prohibition law in this county resulted in a victory for the prohibitionists. The defendant, James Wier, a saloon-keeper, was found guilty on two counts, and fined on each the full limit of the law. The case was fought inch by inch by the saloon men, and was appealed to the District Court. Similar cases are pending against four others. Wier re-opened his saloon to-day.

Brigandage in Constantinople.

CONSTANTINOPLE, July 20.—The public security in the suburbs of this city has never been in worse condition. Brigands to-day entered a mosque, four miles from the city, and after firing several volleys into the ceiling, rifled every person present, securing money and valuables. The brigands also attacked and plundered the village of Bozhali, a few miles outside the city.

A Veteran Lady Teacher Killed.

MILWAUKEE, WIS., July 20.—Mrs. B. G. Roots, of Tamaroa, Ill., wife of Mr. Roots, member of the Illinois State Board of Education, was killed in a runaway last night, being thrown from a road cart. She and her husband had been in attendance on the National Teachers' Convention, at Madison. Mrs. Roots was sixty-six years old, and had taught for thirty years in Southern Illinois.

The Duty on Linen.

WASHINGTON, July 19.—The Secretary of the Treasury has made a decision in regard to the duties on linen thread, claimed to be salmon net twine, in which he affirms the assessment duty at the rate of forty per cent. ad valorem on certain importation of so called salmon net twine, made by the Collector of Customs at San Francisco.

$4,000 Short.

WASHINGTON, July 19.—A package containing $7,000 forwarded by the Assistant Treasurer at New Orleans by express to the U. S. Treasurer, when opened was found $4,000 short. There were evidences of the package having been opened and resealed during the transmission. The loss will fall on the express company.

To the International Association.

WASHINGTON, July 19.—Miss Clara Barton, President, and Mr. A. S. Solomons, Vice President of the American Association of the Red Cross, have been appointed by the President delegates to represent the United States at the Geneva Conference and International Association in September next.

Prohibiting Rag Importation.

WASHINGTON, July 18.—Arrangements are being made by Government officials whereby the importation of rags from abroad will be prohibited for a period of three or four months. This action is thought necessary, owing to the prevalence of cholera in foreign countries.

Dr. Koch Decorated.

PARIS, July 19.—Dr. Koch, the German scientist, whose researches into the causes and preventive of cholera have gained him worldwide celebrity, has received from the French Government the decoration of the Grand Cross of the Legion of Honor in recognition of his eminent services.

Probable Fratricide.

MANSFIELD, PA., July 19—Because Albert Wyles interfered when his brother Barney struck a younger brother, Barney turned on Albert and beat him so badly that he will die. Barney has been arrested.

One Hundred Arrests.

ST. PETERSBURG, July 19.—There were one hundred arrests at Warsaw in connection with the plan to blow up the palace during the Czar's visit.

The Week's Failures.

NEW YORK, July 18.—Failures the past seven days in the United States, 192; Canada, 23; total, 215; against 198 last week. The increase is in the Western and Middle States.

TERRIBLE ACCIDENT.

Nearly Two Hundred Persons Wounded, Many of Them Seriously. Several Deaths Reported.

CANTON, OHIO, July 19.—A broken frog caused a disastrous and fatal wreck on the Valley Railroad at Lake Park Station, two miles north of here, about eight o'clock this evening. The employes of the Aultman Agricultural Works, with their families, numbering two thousand souls, held their annual picnic at Cuyahoga Falls to-day. They occupied two trains in sections of sixteen coaches each. The first section returning home reached here shortly before eight o'clock, and a few minutes later the wreck of the second section was reported. The news spread like wild-fire, and in a few minutes every available vehicle and an army of foot passengers were on the road to the scene of the accident. Meanwhile the most intense excitement prevailed. The train was loaded down with about one thousand residents of Canton, whose relatives at home were agonized at the uncertainty of their safety. Fifteen minutes after the news of the accident was made public transportation of any kind could not be obtained for love nor money. The scene and excitement on the streets were such as Canton never witnessed before. The engine had jumped the track, but remained standing, while the first seven coaches had rolled over a six-foot embankment into a pool of mud and water about five feet deep. People were crawling from the overturned cars, while the cries of those imprisoned by the broken wood made frantic those who had escaped without injury. The moans of the injured and the weeping of the terror-stricken friends and relatives, whose loved ones were in the ruins, formed a heart-rending spectacle. A few cool heads were busy at work with axes releasing the wounded, who lay pinioned among the debris. The injured were conveyed to farm-houses or taken in ambulances to the city. A score or more of crying, frightened children were found sticking fast in the mud, and were pulled out like so many frogs. The frog which caused the accident is supposed to have been broken by the first section, which passed in safety. The number of wounded is estimated at nearly two hundred, of which number about a score are badly hurt. A complete list of the wounded is unobtainable to-night. John Whittaker, engineer at the Aultman Works, and Albert Fravel, aged fifteen, were both terribly mutilated, and are reported dead. Mary Shinasky, aged thirteen, is badly crushed, and will probably die. Ella Newman, aged eighteen, had both limbs broken, and is seriously bruised. Charles Ackerman, Irwin Shnnafelt and Eva Beweese sustained severe wounds. All the doctors in the city are busy attending to the injured to-night, and many houses resemble hospitals. The engineer and fireman both escaped uninjured. The supposition is prevalent that when the work of removing the debris is completed, many dead and mingled bodies will be found imbedded in the mud beneath the upturned cars.

THE DREAD DISEASE

Grows Daily Worse—The Cholera Has Reached Paris.

MARSEILLES, July 19.—Thirty deaths from cholera occured here last night. The epidemic is increasing owing to the heat, which has grown intolerable. The panic continues, people leaving the city in large numbers.

TOULON, July 19.—There was a marked increase in the number of deaths from cholera last night, thirty-three having been officially reported. The heat is overpowering, and the panic among the people is increasing. The arsenal is closed, the workmen having fled the city.

PARIS, July 19.—Three cases of cholera were reported here to-day, two of which proved fatal. There were five cholera deaths in the department of the Lower Alps. The inmigation of railway stations at Toulon, Marseilles and Paris has been abandoned, proving useless.

TOULON, July 20.—For the twenty-four hours ending at six this evening forty-six deaths are reported. In the same time 170 cases were received at the hospitals. The refusal of the municipal authorities to allow a procession of women in the streets offering prayers for the cessation of the scourge created a bad impression.

MARSEILLES, July 20.—For the twenty-four hours ending at 8 p. m. there were fifty-seven deaths. The Chamber of Commerce voted an appropriation of 10,000 francs for the relief of the sufferers to-day. Three deaths occurred at Brignoles.

PARIS, July 20.—Two fresh sporadic cases of cholera are reported. A noticeable fall in the temperature to-day is regarded as the best safeguard against the disease becoming epidemic. A lady, whose husband died in one of the small towns outside Marseilles, has been refused by the Mayor permission to see the corpse of her husband, or even to enter her own house, and has to encamp in the open air. Instances of heroism alternate with the terrible cowardice. The Sisters of Charity are true to their duty.

A New Comet Discovered.

ROCHESTER, July 20.—Dr. Swift, director of the Warner Observatory, has received intelligence of the discovery of a comet by Prof. E. E. Barnard, of Nashville, on the night of the 13th inst., which discovery was verified by the motion of the comet to-night. It is in the bend of the Wolf, right ascension 15h. 50m. 30s., declination south 17° 19', and is moving slowly in an easterly direction. It seems to be growing brighter, and is probably coming toward the earth. This is the first comet discovered in the Northern Hemisphere this year.

A Colored Woman Dead at 110

WHEELING, W. VA., July 20.—Caroline Hamilton, a mulatto woman, who was born in Baltimore in 1774, and was therefore 110 years old, died here this morning, after being confined to her bed five weeks with a general physical breakdown, due to old age. Her father died a number of years ago in the Pittsburg poor-house, aged 108.

Want American Cattle.

LONDON, July 19.—The Marquis of Lorne will introduce to Lord Carlingford, Lord of the Privy Seal, next week, deputation in favor of the importation of healthy cattle from America.

Purchase of Silver.

WASHINGTON, July 18.—The United States Treasury Department has purchased 355,000 ounces of silver for delivery at Philadelphia, New Orleans and San Francisco mints.

Interest in the Arctic Expedition.

LONDON, July 20.—English Arctic explorers display much interest in the Greely expedition, and are impatient to learn all the particulars. Sir George Nares declares that England must not be outdone, and proclaims his readiness for another journey.

Chief of Labor Statistics

WASHINGTON, July 18.—The Star says: "The President has not yet issued a commission to John Jarrett, of Pittsburg, to be Chief of the Bureau Statistics, and has not yet determined to do so. Jarrett made very disparaging remarks in regard to the President, in his public speech at Pittsburg, and is in danger of losing the position, which was in his grasp."

Father and Daughter Killed by Cars.

SHANER'S, PA., July 20.—This afternoon Samuel Smith and daughter were walking on the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad track near here, when they were struck by a freight train coming in the opposite direction. Smith was killed instantly, and his daughter, aged fifteen, fatally injured.

Killed by a Bursting Boiler.

CLEVELAND, O., July 20.—At five o'clock this morning a boiler used at the sinking gas well at Mt. Vernon, O., exploded, killing two tramps sleeping near. One was identified as John Casey, who had worked in a blacksmith shop at Gambier. The other is unknown.

Washington Monument.

WASHINGTON, July 18.—This evening the Washington Monument reached the height of 488 feet. This is one foot higher than the Cathedral at Rouen. The Cathedral at Cologne is the only one that exceeds the monument in height, and that is 525 feet.

Death of a Centenarian.

CINCINNATI, July 18. Charles Heeley, age one hundred years, died to-day. He had been in excellent health until three weeks ago, when he ceased to take food, being sustained by liquid nourishment alone after that time. The widow, aged eighty-four, still survives.

THE POLAR PERILS.

The Nearest Exploration Toward the North Pole.

An Open Polar Sea Discovered Beyond Question.

The Finale of the Last Artic Expedition—Lieutenant Greely and Six of His Comrades Survive the Voyage and Return with the Relief Party—Terrible Privations and Suffering of the Crew—Seventeen Men Frozen or Starved to Death—Timely Arrival of the Rescuers—Commander Greely's Statement of the Voyage.

THE Greely expedition set out in mid-summer about two years since to man one of the polar stations in the North, established for scientific purposes by the leading governments of the world.

The party left the ship Proteus at Lady Franklin Bay and proceeded northward. Nothing was heard of Greely and his followers for some time, but finally reports were received at the war and navy departments that the party were in distress.

An expedition was immediately sent for their relief, which was compelled to return without accomplishing their purpose, or even being able to obtain any reliable information in regard to the fate and whereabouts of the missing party.

About May the relief expedition, consisting of the Thetis, the Bear and the Alert, sailed for their rescue, and the following is the first news received from them:

WASHINGTON, July 17.—The Acting Secretary of the Navy has just received a telegram from St. John's, N. F., stating that the Greely Relief Expedition has found survivors of Greely's party, eight men in all. The following is the telegram:

ST. JOHN'S, N. F., July 17—9 A. M.—Hon. W. E. Chandler, Secretary of the Navy, Washington: Thetis, Bear and Lock Garry arrived here to-day from West Greenland. All well. Separated from the Alert 150 miles north during a gale at 9 p. m., June 22, five miles off Cape Sabine in Smith's Sound, and the Thetis and Bear rescued alive Lieutenant A. W. Greely, Sergeant Brainard, Sergeant Fredericks, Sergeant Long, Hospital Steward Belderbeck, Private Connell, and Sergeant Ellison, the only survivors of the Lady Franklin Bay expedition. Sergeant Ellison had lost both hands and feet by frost bite, and died July 6, at God Haven, three days after amputation, which had become imperative. Seventeen of the twenty five persons composing the expedition, perished by starvation, at the point where found. One was drowned while sealing to procure food. Twelve bodies of the dead were secured, and are now on board the Thetis and Bear. One Esquimaux, Turnevik, was buried at Disco, in accordance with the desire of Inspector of Mister Guzzland. Five bodies buried in the ice fort, near camp, were swept away at sea by winds and currents before my arrival, and could not be rescued. The names of the dead recovered, with dates of death, are as follows: Sergt. Cross, January 1, 1884; Wedrick, Esquimaux, April 5; Sergt. Linn, April 6; Lieut. Lockwood, April 9; Sergt. Jewell, April 12; Private Ellis, May 19; Sergt. Halston, May 23; Private Whistler, May 24; Sergt. Israel, May 27; Lieut. Kingsbury, June 1; Private Henry, June 6; Private Schneider, June 18. The names of the buried in the ice fort, with the date of their death, whose bodies were not discovered, are Sergeant Rice, April 9, 1884; Corporal Salor, June 3; Private Bender, June 6; Acting Assisting Surgeon Pavey, June 6; Sergeant Gardner, June 12. One drowned by breaking through newly-formed ice while sealing, Jeno Edwards, Esquimaux, April 4. Would earnestly suggest that the bodies now on board be placed in metallic cases here for safe and better transportation. This appears to me imperative. Greely abandoned Fort Conger Aug. 9, 1883, and reached Baird Inlet September 29 following with his entire party.

He abandoned all his boats, and was adrift thirty days on an ice-floe in Smith's Sound. His permanent camp was established October 21, 1883, at the point where he was found. During nine months the party lived upon the scant allowance of food brought from Fort Conger. That cached at Payer Harbor and Cape Isabella by Sir George Nades in 1875 was found, but it proved to be much damaged by lapse of time. That cached by Beebee at Cape Sabine in 1882, and a small amount saved from the wreck of the Proteus in 1883, and landed by Lieutenants Garlington and Cowell on the beach where Greely's party was found camped, was also discovered and used.

When their provisions were consumed the party were forced to live upon boiled sealskins, strips from their sealskin clothing, lichens and shrimps preserved in good weather, when they were strong enough to make exertion. As 1300 shrimps were required to make a gill measure, the labor was too exhausting to depend upon them to sustain life entirely. The channel between Cape Sabine and Littleton island did not close on account of violent gales all winter; so that 240 rations at the latter point could not be reached.

All of Greeley's records, and all instruments brought by him from Fort Conger, are recovered, and are on board. From Hare Island to Smith's Sound I had a constant struggle with ice, impassable floes and solid barriers of ice was overcome by watchfulness and patience. No opportunity to advance a mile escaped me, and for several hundred miles the ships were forced to ram their way from lead to lead through ice varying in thickness from three to six feet, and when rafted much greater.

The Thetis and Bear reached Cape York, June 18, after a passage of 21 days in Melville Bay, with two advance ships of the Dundee whaling fleet, and continued to Cape Sabine. Returning seven days later I fell in with seven others of the fleet off Woslenholm e island, and announced Greeley's rescue to them, that they might not be delayed from their fishing grounds, nor tempted into the dangers of Smith's Sound, in view of the reward of $25,000 offered by Congress.

Returning across Melville bay, I fell in with the Alert and Lock Garry off Devil's Thumb, struggling through heavy ice. Commander Coffin did admirably to get so far with transports so early in the season before the opening had occurred. Lieut. Emory, with the Bear has supported me with great skillfulness and unflagging readiness in accomplishing the the great duty of relieving Greely. I would ask instructions about Lock Garry, as the charter party held by her master differs in several respects from mine.

The Greely party are much improved in health since their rescue, but their condition was critical in the extreme when found, and for some days after. Forty-eight hours delay in reaching them would have been fatal to all now living. This season north is late and closest for years. Smith's Sound was not open when I left Cape Sabine. Winter about Melville bay was the most severe for twenty years. This great result is entirely due to the prompt action and unwearied energy of yourself and Secretary of War in fitting this expedition for the work it has had the honor to accomplish.

W. S. SCHLEY,
Commander.

FROM LIEUTENANT GREELY.

General Hazen, Chief of the Signal Office, has received the following telegram:

ST. JOHN'S, N. F., July 17

For the first time in three centuries, England yields the honor of the furthest exploration of the north. Lieutenant Lockwood and Sergeant Brainard on May 13 reached Lockwood Island, latitude 83 deg. 24 min., longitude 44 deg. 5 min. They saw from a two-thousand feet elevation no land north or northwest, but to the northeast Greenland, yet extended, lost in view on Cape Robert Lincoln in latitude 83 deg. 35 min., longitude, 38 deg. Lieut. Lockwood was turned back in 1883 by open water on the North Greenland shore, the party barely escaping drifting into the Polar Sea. Dr. Pavey, in 1882, following the Markham route, was adrift one day in the Polar Ocean, north of Cape Joseph Henry, and escaped to land, abandoning nearly everything. In 1882 I made a spring and late summer trip into the interior of Grinnell Land, discovering Lake Hazen, some sixty by ten miles in extent, which was fed by the ice at the cape of North Grinnell Land, drains Ruggle River and Weyprecht Fiord into Conybeare Bay and Archer Fiord. From the summit of Mt. Arthur, five thousand feet, the contour of the land west of Conger Mountain convinced me that Grinnell Land tends directly south from Lieutenant Aldrich's farthest in 1876. In 1883 Lieutenant Lockwood and Sergeant Brainard succeeded in crossing Grinnell Land, and ninety miles from Beautax Bay, at the head of Archer's Fiord, struck the head of a fiord from the Western Sea, temporarily named by Lockwood Greely Fiord. From the center of the Fiord in latitude 80 deg. 30 min., longitude 78 deg. 30 min., Lieutenant Lockwood saw the northern shore, some twenty miles west, and the southern shore, extending some fifty miles, with Cape Lockwood some seventy miles distant. They were apparently separate land from Grinnell's Land. I have named the new land Arthur Land. Lieutenant Lockwood followed, going and returning, on Tice Cape, averaging about 150 feet perpendicular face. It follows that Grinnell Land, interior, is ice-capped with a belt of country some sixty miles wide, between the northern and southern ice capes.

In March, 1884, Sergeant Long, while hunting, looked from the northwest side of Mount Carey to Hayes Sound, seeing on the northern coast three capes westward of the furthest seen by Nares in 1876.

The sound extends some twenty miles further west than shown by the English chart, but is possibly shut in by land which showed up across the western end. The two years' station duties, observations, all explorations, and the retreat to Cape Sabine were accomplished without loss of life, disease, serious accident, or even severe frost-bites. No scurvy was experienced at Conger, and but one death occurred from it last winter.

GREELY, Commanding.

A second dispatch from Lieutenant Greely is as follows:

ST. JOHN'S July 17.

Chief Signal Office, Washington:

Brainard, Biederbeck, Connell, Fredericks, Long and myself, the sole survivors, arrived to-day, having been rescued, at the point of death from starvation, by the relief ships Thetis and Bear, on June 22, at Camp Clay, northwest of Cape Sabine. All are now in good health, but weak. Sergeant Ellison, who was rescued, died July 8. Cross died last January; Christiansen, Linn, Rice, Lockwood, Jewell and Edwards in April; Ellis, Ralston, Whistler and Israel in May; Kisslinbury, Salor, Henry, Bender, Pavey, Gardiner and Schneider in June. We abandoned Fort Conger August 9. We were frozen in a pack, off Victoria Head, August 29; abandoned the steam launch September 11, eleven miles northeast of Cocked Hat Island. When on the point of landing we were three times driven by southwest storms into Kane's Sea. We finally landed, September 28, in Baird Inlet, learning by scouting parties of the Proteus' disaster, and that no provisions had been left for us. From Cape Isabella to Sabine we moved, and established winter quarters at Camp Clay, half way between Sabine and Cocked Hat.

An inventory showed that by a daily ration of four and one-third ounces of meat, seven ounces of bread and dough biscuits, and four ounces of miscellaneous food, the party would have ten days' full rations left for crossing Smith Sound to Littleton Island. Unfortunately Smith Sound remained open the entire winter, rendering crossing impracticable. Game failed, despite daily hunting from early February. Before the sun returned only five hundred pounds of meat were obtained this year. Minute shrimps, seaweed, sassafras, rock lichens and sealskin were resorted to for food, with results as shown by the number of survivors. The last regular food issued was on May 14. Only one hundred and fifteen pounds of meat being left by Garlington compelled me to send, in November, four men to obtain a hundred and forty pounds of English meat at Isabella. During the trip Ellison froze solid both hands and feet, and lost them all, surviving, however, through our terrible winter and spring until July 8. The survivors owe their lives to the indomitable energy of Captain Schley and Lieutenant Emery, who preceded by three and accompanied by five whalers, forced their vessels from Upernevik through Melville Bay into the North-water at Cape York with the foremost whaler. They gained a yard whenever possible, and always held it. Smith Sound was crossed, and the party rescued during one of the most violent gales that have ever been known. The boats were handled only at imminent risks of swamping. Four of us were then unable to walk, and could not have survived exceeding twenty-four hours. Every care and attention was given us. I have saved and bring back copies of the meteorological, tidal, astronomical, magnetic pendulum and other observations; also, pendulum, Yale and standard thermometers. Forty-eight photographic negatives, a collection of blanks and photographic proofs, Eskimo relics, and other things necessarily abandoned. The Thetis remains here five days, probably. GREELY.

Commanding.

The following dispatches were sent Lieutenant Greely to-day:

SIGNAL SERVICE, July 17.

Lieutenant A. W. Greely, St. John's:

Our hearts are overflowing with gladness and thanks to God for your safety, and in sadness for those who, without fault of yours, are dead. Your family are well and in San Diego. W. B. HAZEN.

Lieutenant Greely, St. John's:

Your dispatches are most satisfactory, and show your expedition to have been in the highest degree successful in every particular. This fact is not affected by the disaster inter.

W. B. HAZEN.

JOYFUL NEWS TO GREELY'S FAMILY.

NEWBURYPORT, July 17.—The news of the finding of the Greely party was received at the home of the famous commander with profound joy. His career from childhood to the present time has been watched with intense interest, and the great fame which he has gained is proudly felt by all here. He resided with his brother and mother, and when the glad news was conveyed to them they were almost overcome. Mrs. Grealy, while joyful at her son's safety, was deeply affected at the loss of so many of his party.

Cruelty Boys are Capable of.

The old saying that small boys are the most cruel animals under Heaven is certainly borne out by the performances of two young gentlemen who figured in the Lambeth Police Court on Saturday. Not having any "home lessons" to do, this is how they spent the hours after school one day last week: They got hold of a child, three and one-half years old, put him in the dustbin of an unoccupied house in their neighborhood, threw brickbats on the top of him, and fastened the lid down. The scheme as divulged to another conspirator was to leave the child in the dustbin until he was dead, so as to get a reward for the discovery of the body, and the little victim was actually immured for more than twenty hours. After such disclosures, it is really quite refreshing to come upon one touch of juvenile human nature in the culprits, and to learn that the defense set up by each in turn was that "it was the other boy."—Pall Mall Gazette.

Gone For the Summer.

Mrs. Shabby Genteel—"Jane, has the flour come?"

Jane—"Yes, mum, eight barrels."

"And the potatoes?"

"Yes, mum, twenty bushels."

"And the canned meats?"

"Yes, mum, six dozen cans; that's all was ordered, mum."

"And how is the stock of other provisions, including groceries of all kinds?"

"Got enough, mum, to last three months easy, and the ice and milkmen promised to come every night after dark."

"Very well, Jane. Board up the front shutters."—Philadelphia Call.

He Couldn't.

She—Did you order that watermelon?

He—Yes, dear, I ordered two.

She—Good land, man! what ever do you suppose we can do with two big watermelons?

He—I told the man to deliver one today and the other to-morrow.

She—Oh!

He—Yes, my dear. You see, I am not such a fool as I look.

She—No, dear. You never could be, either.

—While admonishing a number of children, who had just been confirmed recently, Archbishop Gibbons told this story of a little boy in East Baltimore, who was lost a month or two ago, and was taken to the station house for the night: "After he was put to bed," said the archbishop, "he called the officers back, and said he had forgotten to say his prayers, and in their presence the little fellow bravely knelt down and recited 'Our Father,' which was perhaps the first sermon any of them had heard in a long time; certainly it was the best."—Baltimore American.

—A number of music teachers, following the fashion of the day, have been holding a convention at Cleveland, at which the principal business, after the election of officers, seems to have been the organization of an American College of Musicians. Among a long list of professors chosen for the new college are found many names of foreigners, and but few whose cognomens afford evidences of American origin. The new College of Musicians is American only in name.—Philadelphia Record.

—The oyster beds in Long Island Sound, in the vicinity of New Haven, are reported to have been damaged by the ravages of star fish, the numbers of which are rapidly increasing in that locality. So numerous are they that over two hundred bushels of them were captured on one bed by steam dredges in two days.—Hartford Courant.

—Nothing will surprise a married man more than for him to go home and surprise his wife in limping around the house with her little toe bandaged, and to have her say in a half-reproving way, that she don't see why he need keep such an awful sharp edge on his razor. —Norristown Herald.

—A large district in Drogheda, Ireland, was suddenly deprived of water the other day, and the water company's men were puzzled to account for the stoppage. On examination being made it was found that a pipe had been stopped by an enormous eel several feet in length and of unusual thickness.

—Young women have defeated a West Point order by smuggling cigarettes into the grounds for the incipient generals.—N. Y. Sun.

BANK FAILURE.

The Richmond, Ind., National Bank Closes its Doors.

Liabilities $500,000—County and Township Officials Caught for Large Amounts.

RICHMOND, IND., July 21.—The Richmond National Bank closed its doors to-day, after receiving deposits up to three o'clock, to the tune of $500,000. Considerable excitement prevails upon our streets to-night in consequence. Hundreds of our people have every dollar they are worth in its vaults. Peter Kern, the County Treasurer, had about $70,000 of the county funds in the bank. The township funds to the amount of $21,000 are also gone where the woodbine twineth. The Coffins are the principal stockholders. They were considered among our wealthiest citizens. They are Quakers, and one of the leading men of the bank was a Quaker preacher. The Richmond National Bank is the oldest bank in city. Owing to the connection of the Coffins with it, the people have had confidence in its soundness. It is impossible to give anything like a correct statement this evening of the amount of the deposits, but as almost every man one meets on the streets has lost more or less, it is but natural to conclude that the amount is heavy. A run on the other banks is looked for to-morrow.

Cholera Spreading.

MADRID, July 21.—Two deaths have to-day from Asiatic cholera.

MARSEILLES, July 21.—Sixty-one deaths from cholera here during the twenty-four hours ended at nine o'clock to-night.

PARIS, July 21.—The cholera in Paris is increasing. Eight cases were reported to-day, two fatal. The deaths from cholera at Arles are averaging nine daily.

TOULON, July 21.—The deaths last night were twenty-eight. A famine is threatening this city. Provisions are scarce and dear, and there is much distress. Hotels are closing their kitchens, and provision warehouses are expected to close, owing to a lack of supplies. A typhoid epidemic has followed in a number of cholaraic cases. The doctors pronounce the disease typhoid cholera. The epidemic is assuming a most virulent character; nearly all the victims dying suddenly.

Greely and Companions Growing Strong.

ST. JOHN'S, N. F., July 21.—The collier of the Greely relief expedition, the Loch Garry, left this afternoon for New York. She takes the mail of the expedition and of the Greely survivors. Greely's strength is steadily increasing. He continues to be feted and banqueted by leading citizens of St. John's. Frederick, Connell, Long, Brainard and Biederbeck are progressing amazingly. The Alert will be dispatched forty-eight hours in advance of the Thetis and Bear, so the squadron may reach New York simultaneously.

A Fatal Kansas Cyclone.

LITTLE ROCK, ARK., July 21.—A destructive and fatal storm is reported yesterday from Summer County, Kansas. Some two inches of rain fell, accompanied by lightning. The wind destroyed the house of Jaremiah Huffman, killing his oldest child and breaking the leg of another. The lightning struck the barn of George Wolfrum, killing a valuable team and completely destroying and burning the stable and outbuildings. A Miss Barker, who had taken refuge in the stable, was stunned and her life is despaired of.

Fatal Firework Explosion.

MARSHALL, ILL., July 21.—Word reached here from Robinson, Crawford County, today, that a number of sky-rockets exploded in the arms of a man in the crowd at the Democratic rally there, and killed a lad by the name of Crow and probably fatally injured a little girl, while the man who caused the tragedy was badly burned.

Volunteer Cholera Expert.

NEW YORK, July 21.—Mrs. Metilde A. Schultze wrote to the Health Board to-day from Cincinnati, offering her services in case of an outbreak of cholera here, she having had experience, and a diploma from the Women's Medical College. Her services will be thankfully accepted if required.

Killed the Engineer.

MENDOTA, WIS., July 21.—A freight train, going north at 2 o'clock yesterday afternoon, was attempting to side track at this place, when the engine jumped the track and upset, killing Engineer Philip Harry. The firemen escaped by jumping through the cab window.

Boy Killed by a Street Car.

PITTSBURG, July 21.—Joseph Horne, aged seven, for stealing a ride, was thrown off a Birmingham street car this morning by Conductor Lapham, and fatally injured by a car going in the opposite direction running over him. Lapham has been arrested.

First Bennett-Mackay Cable Message.

BOSTON, July 21.—A dispatch from Rockport says the first message over the Bennett-Mackay cable was received here last night. It was to J. W. Mackay from his children, Willie and Claire, in Paris.

Riot at a Camp-Meeting.

BALTIMORE, July 21.—Late yesterday afternoon a riot occurred at a colored camp-meeting about four miles from Chestertown, Kent County, in which four men were shot and several cut with razors.

Unparalleled Hail-Storm.

CLAREMONT, N. H., July 21.—The severest hail-storm ever known in this section passed over Cornish Saturday afternoon. Large and small trees were taken down and corn and grain crops ruined. On the side of Keayon's Hill, Cornish, hailstones were piled five feet high against a stone wall. In the winrows of a corn field there were hailstones as large as hen's eggs, to a depth of two feet. The windows of the main buildings were broken.

Paralyzed in the Pulpit.

LONDON, ONT., July 21.—Dean Boomer, while pronouncing the benediction at the service at Chapter House yesterday, fell in a fit. Paralysis of the side ensued, and he is in a very critical condition.

A Mother's Tears.

The wooden beasts of a merry-go-round in Central Park were circling to the exceedingly fierce music of a concealed organ, the noise of which equaled that of a full orchestra. The figures, though individually quite unmoved, were jolted and hurried as greatly as the two men at the crank, behind a curtain, could achieve by the expenditure of their strength and perspiration. Each back in the menagerie bore a youngster. A fond mother, after a half-hour's search for her boy, descried him astride a basswood lion, rampant.

"Oo-ow-o-oop!" she yelled; "James Alfred, get off'n that dreadful wild animal. Stop the machine, mister, and let my boy off this minnit."

The rattle and bang of machinery and music ceased, and the boy sullenly dismounted.

"I've paid for six more rounds mommy," he said "Yer oughter let me git me money's worth."

That argument was potential with the old woman. But a shivering glance at the lion confirmed her in the belief that he was a highly dangerous beast. Next in the line was a pony, as square and docile in appearance as a dry-goods box with board legs at its corners. Its rider recklessly preferred the lion.

"Here, James Alfred," she exclaimed, "get onto the pony. He don't look skittish. But I wouldn't have you ride that Nubian monster for the world."—N. Y. Cor. Albany Journal.

—In New York, as a gastronomic dainty, the fat spring gosling is crowding out the scrawny spring chicken. It is said that by a proper course of feeding the gosling may be given any desired flavor.—N. Y. News.

—Go Slo and Chu Gum are among the names that appear on the Boston City Directory. They oscillate the linen cleanser for a livelihood.—Boston Globe.

Mark Twain's Search for a Rare Book.

At a meeting of a literary club held in this city some months ago, Mark Twain was the essayist of the evening, and, for the purpose of fully illustrating the subject under consideration, he read numerous extracts from a rare book which had been lent to him for the occasion. It was a very rare volume and it had come into Mr. Clemens' hands only by accident and for a short time. It happened that Mr. Cable was then Mr. Clemens' guest, sick at his house. Mr. Cable had the book, and he had borrowed it from a gentleman in New York who valued it so highly that he had repeatedly besought Mr. Cable to treasure it with the utmost care, and return it without fail. Indeed, Mr. Cable was so careful of it that he hesitated to let Mr. Clemens take it with him from the house that evening and was uneasy until he brought it back in safety.

The reading was a complete success, and the book was heartily enjoyed. It was found that the Hon. Henry C. Robinson had a copy, which had belonged to his brother, Mr. Lucius Robinson, but to almost all present the book was entirely novel.

Mr. Clemens determined to have a copy, and he wrote to a New York book-buying house directing them to buy it for him regardless of cost. He must have it. Time passed, but the book did not come; and finally a letter came instead, saying that careful inquiry and long search had simply demonstrated that the book could not be had. It was out of print and out of existence. That ended the matter.

Rev. Mr. Twitchell, who was at the gathering, remembered that he had seen the book on sale in New Haven when he was a boy in college, and a few weeks ago while in that city he stepped into the old store where he had once seen it on the shelves. The same old proprietor was there, and remembered his visitor. "Do you recall such-and-such a book?" asked Mr. Twitchell. "Oh, yes," was the reply, "and I remember so-and-so (the author) when he was in college," and a pleasant flow of reminiscence followed. Mr. Twichell timidly asked whether it would be possible to secure a copy of the book now at this late day, and hardly dared to hope for a favorable reply.

"Well," was the answer, "I undertook to put my cellar in order the other day, and I found about a cord of them down there, and I think I could supply you if you wanted quite a number."

He inquired the price of the book (for a copy of which an unrestricted offer had been sent out) and was told that they were ten cents apiece. He took a dozen and came back to Hartford. Tying up six of them, he put them in his pocket a few days later when he was going to walk with Mr. Clemens.

Introducing the subject of the rare volume, Mr. Twitchell casually inquired of his companion if he had ever found a copy of it.

"Never," said Mr. Clemens. "There are none in existence. The book is something we must go without."

"What would you give for a copy?" asked Mr. Twitchell, and the answer was that it wasn't a question of money. He would give whatever was asked. The price was for the owner to set, then he would pay it. But it was idle to talk about it, as the book was unobtainable.

"Well, Mark," said Mr. Twitchell, producing the package, "if that's the way you feel, here are six to begin with; and, if these aren't enough I can get you a couple of hundred more."

The unlimited order for one copy at any price has been rescinded and it will take a bonfire to make the book a rare one.—Hartford (Conn.) Courant.

Company Shops.

Mr. M. M. Shoffner, Postmaster and Justice of the Peace, Company Shops, Alamance Co., N. C., writes, he has used St. Jacobs Oil for rheumatism, cuts, swelled ankles and knees, pains in the back and sore-throat. One or two applications in each case has always cured, and he believes the Great German Remedy is the best in the world. "As long as I can get it," he adds, "I never intend to be without it."

"FIVE thousand molecules can sit comfortably on the point of a pin." Herein the molecule differs materially from man. —Norristown Herald.

JOHN A. SMITH, the largest merchant in Gainesville, Ga., says: "I suffered for years from the combined effects of Erysipelas and Eczema. I continued to grow worse under medical treatment and by taking medicine containing Potash. S. S. S. cured me thoroughly and absolutely. My appetite, strength and flesh returned as I was cured with it."

AN anxious inquirer asks: "Where is the best place for salt-water bathing?" In the salt-water, dear friend.

The Best for Butter.

There is but one best color for butter, and that that is Wells, Richardson & Co.'s Improved Butter Color, no candid investigator doubts. It is the best butter color in the world; is free from sediment or impurity, always ready for instant use, and it imparts to butter that rich dandelion yellow, without a tinge of red, which is the acme of desirability in any butter color.

"MADAME," said a gentleman, offering a rose to a lady, "allow me to present you to one of your sisters."

Regulars.

One of the strongest proofs of the value of Kidney-Wort as a remedy for all diseases of the Kidneys, Liver and Bowels, is the fact that it is used and prescribed by "regular" physicians, Philip C. Ballou, M. D., of Monkton, Vt., says: "Take it all in all, it is the most successful remedy I have ever used."

CAN you speak of a young lady as being brow beaten when she has her hair banged? —Burlington Free Press.

MANY ladies who for years had scarcely ever enjoyed the luxury of feeling well have been so renovated by the use of Lydia Pinkham's Vegetable Compound that they have triumphed over the ills flesh is said to be heir to, and life has been crowned with added charms and fresher beauty.

THE MARKETS.

CINCINNATI, July 22, 1884.

LIVE STOCK—Cattle—Common	$2 25	@	3 25
Choice butchers	4 50	@	5 25
HOGS—Common	4 25	@	5 15
Good packers	5 20	@	5 70
SHEEP—Good to choice	4 00	@	4 65
FLOUR—Family	4 20	@	4 50
GRAIN—Wheat—Longberry red		@	93
No. 2 red	88	@	90
Corn—No. 2 mixed	54½	@	55
Oats—No. 2 mixed	33½	@	34
Rye—No. 2	65	@	67
HAY—Timothy No. 1	11 00	@	11 50
HEMP—Double dressed	8 75	@	9 00
PROVISIONS—Pork—Mess	16 25	@	16 50
Lard—Prime steam	7 00	@	7 10
BUTTER—Fancy Dairy	13	@	15
Prime Creamery	10	@	18
FRUIT AND VEGETABLES—
Potatoes, new, per barrel	2 10	@	3 15
Apples, prime, per barrel	1 50	@	2 50
NEW YORK.
FLOUR—State and Western	$3 65	@	3 90
Good to choice	3 80	@	6 25
GRAIN—Wheat—No. 2 Chicago	92	@	92¼
No. 2 red	98¾	@	98¾
Corn—No. 2 mixed	49	@	63
Oats—mixed	37	@	46
PORK—Mess		@	16 50
LARD—Western steam		@	7 40
CHICAGO.
FLOUR—State and Western	$3 50	@	5¾
GRAIN—Wheat—No. 2 red	82¾	@	83½
No. 2 Chicago Spring	[illegible]	@	83¾
Corn—No. 2	51½	@	54¼
Oats—No. 2		@	29½
Rye		@	62½
PORK—Mess	16 00	@	17 00
LARD—Steam	7 05	@	7 10
BALTIMORE.
FLOUR—Family	$4 25	@	5 50
GRAIN—Wheat—No 2	95½	@	95¾
Corn—mixed	59½	@	61
Oats—mixed	36	@	38
PROVISIONS—Pork—Mess		@	17 00
Lard—Refined		@	9¾
INDIANAPOLIS.
WHEAT—No. 2 red	$	@	86
CORN—mixed		@	50
OATS—mixed		@	31
LOUISVILLE.
FLOUR—A No. 1	$ 4 15	@	4 25
GRAIN—Wheat—No. 2 red	83	@	86
Corn—mixed		@	56
Oats—mixed		@	34
PORK—mess		@	16 50
LARD—steam		@	9¼

THE professional thief is the only man who believes in doing everything exclusively upon his own hook.

☞Do it Yourself. With Diamond Dyes any lady can get as good results as the best practical dyer. Every dye warranted true to name and sample. 10c. at druggists. Wells, Richardson & Co., Burlington, Vt.

WHAT the sewing-machine said when it skipped the stitch—Sew long!—The Judge.

Glenn's Sulphur Soap Removes pimples from the face of humanity. Hill's Hair and Whisker Dye, 50c.

"THIS is a suggestion of spring," said the rat, as the trap closed upon him.

FOR a cold in the head, there is nothing so good as Piso's Remedy for Catarrh.

OARSMEN might appropriately be termed "Knights of the rowed."

IF afflicted with Sore Eyes, use Dr. Isaac Thompson's Eye Water. Druggists sell it. 25c.

A YOUTHFUL EDITOR.

History of the Hardest Struggle of His Life.—Of Deep Interest to all Professions.

WORCESTER, MASS., March 22, 1884.

Dr. David Kennedy, Rondout, N. Y.:

DEAR SIR—My son, a lad of fifteen, editor of the "Go-Ahead," amateur journal, of this city, has been at different times most severely, and apparently hopelessly, afflicted with Salt Rheum. When a very small child his body was almost entirely covered with this loathsome eruption. It mostly passed away, however, after the teething period, and he was not seriously troubled with it again until about one year ago, when the Salt Rheum first appeared on his hands between his fingers, then on his limbs, then on his face and head in one solid mass. His condition was terrible. The rash resembled ivy poisoning and we at first fancied it might be something not so bad as his old troubles, but the physician pronounced it Salt Rheum, and made every effort, without avail, to cure it. We tried a preparation widely advertised as a specific for skin diseases, but it made about as much of an impression as so much cold water might have done. You can understand the situation when I say we were in despair of obtaining real help from any source.

At this point, through the advice of Mr. J. W. Bacon, whose daughter had been cured of Salt Rheum by it, I tried KENNEDY'S FAVORITE REMEDY. This was the right and only thing at last! The skin began to heal at once, and to-day the evidences of the disease have wholly disappeared. How thankful we are, Dear Doctor, I leave you to imagine. Yours,

No. 17 Tarrill Street. J. W. BATCHELDER.

The experience of years, and the testimony of thousands demonstrate DR. DAVID KENNEDY'S FAVORITE REMEDY to be the most successful medicine for organic and blood diseases ever discovered. Prepared solely by Dr. David Kennedy, Physician and Surgeon, Rondout, N. Y.

PAPILLON

TO WHOM IT MAY CONCERN!

I have been troubled with Eczema of the worst form, the past two years. I have consulted some of our best physicians who have made this disease a specialty, but found no relief until about one year ago, through the recommendation of a friend. I was persuaded to try Papillon Skin Cure; the relief I received was like a charm, for it gave relief when every thing else failed, and now I am about well. I think Papillon Skin Cure one of the blessings of the age.

J. A. CRAWFORD, Tug Agent, 288 S. Water St. Chicago, Ills., Aug. 4, 1882.

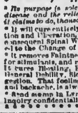
Capt. Crawford had been treated at the Hot Springs for his affliction. He informed us: "I would give more for fifteen drops of Papillon Skin Cure, than for the whole of the Hot Springs."

Papillon Skin Cure is one of the most remarkable remedies for diseases of the skin and cutaneous system. It is the only remedy that has been found that will cure that annoying disease, known as the Prairie Mange; it cures the disease in a few days. For a cut or bruise, burn or scald, nothing is so quick to stop the bleeding, remove inflammation and relieve the pain. It will cure a FELON, CARBUNCLE, BOIL, PIMPLES, RASH, and for blind, bleeding or itching PILES, this remedy is the most positive cure ever discovered. A raw sore or ulcer bandaged with Papillon Skin Cure, will be relieved of pain and commence to heal at once. Sold by all druggists.

20 Years!

A CANCER FOR TWENTY YEARS.

"For twenty years I suffered from a Cancer on my neck. 'Patent Potash and Mercury Mixtures' fed instead of curing the Cancer. I lost the use of my arms and the upper part of my body. My general health was broken down, and my life was despaired of. S. S. S. cured me sound and well. This new lease of life it gave to me can not be measured by any monetary value. I owe my life and the support of my family to Swift's Specific." W. R. ROBISON, Davisboro, Ga.



HOPES TO BE CURED.

"Mr. Brooks, near Albany, was hopelessly afflicted with Cancer. It had eaten through his nose into his mouth and throat. The time of his death was only a question of a very short time. He prayed for death, his suffering was so great. S. S. S. has had a wonderful effect on him. His improvement is so great that we all feel sure of his being perfectly cured in time.

W. H. GILBERT, Albany, Ga.

Our Treatise on Blood and Skin Diseases mailed free to applicants.

SWIFT SPECIFIC CO., Drawer 3, Atlanta, Ga. N. Y. Office, 159 W. 23d St.; Philadelphia Office, 1205 Chestnut St.

LYDIA E. PINKHAM'S VEGETABLE COMPOUND IS A POSITIVE CURE FOR All those painful Complaints and Weaknesses so common to our best FEMALE POPULATION.

Price $1 in liquid, pill or lozenge form.

Its purpose is solely for the legitimate healing of disease and the relief of pain, and that it does all it claims to do, thousands of ladies can gladly testify.

It will cure entirely all Ovarian troubles, Inflammation and Ulceration, Falling and Displacements, and consequent Spinal Weakness, and is particularly adapted to the Change of Life.

It removes Faintness, Flatulency, destroys all craving for stimulants, and relieves Weakness of the Stomach. It cures Bloating, Headaches, Nervous Prostration, General Debility, Sleeplessness, Depression and Indigestion. That feeling of bearing down, causing pain, and backache, is always permanently cured by its use. Send stamp to Lynn, Mass., for pamphlet. Letters of inquiry confidentially answered. For sale at druggists.

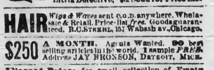
U. S. STANDARD. JONES OF BINGHAMTON

5 TON WAGON SCALES, Iron Levers, Steel Bearings, Brass Tare Beam and Beam Box, $60 and JONES he pays the freight—for free Price List mention this paper and address JONES OF BINGHAMTON, Binghamton, N. Y.



PILES ITCHING PILES. Symptoms—Moisture, intense itching, most at night. SWAYNE'S OINTMENT sure cure. It is EQUALLY EFFICACIOUS in CURING ALL SKIN DISEASES such as Pimples, Blotches, Rash, Tetter, Itch, Salt Rheum, no matter how obstinate or long standing. Box, by mail, 50c. DR. SWAYNE & SON, Phila., Pa. Sold by Druggists.

PISO'S CURE FOR CONSUMPTION. CURES WHERE ALL ELSE FAILS. Best Cough Syrup. Tastes good. Use in time. Sold by druggists.

BLAINE AGENTS Wanted to sell the Lives of Blaine and Logan, by J. C. Ridpath, LL. D., the eminent historian. Send 50 cts. for complete Agents' Outfit. Extra liberal terms to Agents. JONES BROS. & CO., Publishers, CINCINNATI, CHICAGO, ST. LOUIS.

"THE BEST IS CHEAPEST." ENGINES, Horse Powers THRESHERS SAW-MILLS, Clover Hullers (Suited to all sections.) Write for FREE Illus. Pamphlet and Prices to The Aultman & Taylor Co., Mansfield, Ohio.

LIVER "ST. BERNARD VEGETABLE PILLS." The Best Cure for Liver and Bilious complaints, Costiveness, Headache and Dyspepsia. Price, 25c. at Druggists or by mail. Samples free. St. Bernard Pill Makers, 53 Mercer St., New York.

GUNS ShotGuns Revolvers, Rifles, Etc. Large Ill. Catalogue free. Great Western Gun Works, Pittsburgh, Pa.

CHICAGO SCALE CO. 151 South Jefferson Street, Chicago, Ill. 2-Ton Wagon Scale, $40; 4-Ton $60; "Little Detective," $3. Send for Price List.

HAIR Wigs & Waves sent c.o.d. anywhere. Wholesale & Retail. Price-list free. Goods guaranteed. B. C. STREHL, 157 Wabash av., Chicago.

$250 A MONTH. Agents Wanted. 90 best selling articles in the world. 1 sample FREE. Address JAY BRONSON, DETROIT, MICH.

Elegant Prices for small collection of Empty Durham Tobacco Bags. Particulars free. Thompson Bro., 257 Main St., Cincinnati, O.

AGENTS WANTED. Sure to sell; good pay; best out; circulars free. J. E. REYNOLDS, Westboro, Mass.

EDUCATIONAL.

$40 PAYS for a Life Scholarship in the COLEMAN BUSINESS COLLEGE, Newark, New Jersey. Positions for graduates. National patronage. Write for Circulars. COLEMAN & PALMS.

YALE LAW SCHOOL. 6 Professors, 10 Instructors. Fall term commences September 25th. For circular address PROF. FRANCIS WAYLAND, Yale College, New Haven, Conn.

CHICAGO MUSICAL COLLEGE. CENTRAL MUSIC HALL. DR. F. ZIEGFELD, PRESIDENT. All Instruments and Voice taught by the most skillful Instructors. Fall Term opens September 8th, 1884. Send for Catalogue.

A. N. K.—E. 988

WHEN WRITING TO ADVERTISERS please say you saw the advertisement in this paper.

BOONE COUNTY RECORDER.

VOLUME IX. BURLINGTON, KY., WEDNESDAY, JULY 30, 1884. NUMBER 39.

TOPICS OF THE DAY.

It is believed that the Keely motor will not be ready in time to be shown at any of the expositions this fall.

COMMANDER SCHLEY has never been on the sick list since he entered the service, about twenty-five years ago.

NINE ladies out of ten in Boston who go shopping do not buy goods, it is said, but ask for "samples for a sick friend."

IN Reading, England, the asphalt pavement was recently raised and broken by a large number of mushrooms growing underneath.

CHOLERA has made periodical twelve-year visits to this country. The last epidemic was in 1873. Thus we have something to fear for next year if not this.

EVERY year the number of mysterious deaths which occur in London is increasing. Nearly one hundred corpses have been fished out of the Regent's Canal.

EDGAR A. POE'S old cottage at Fordham, N. Y., has been bought, not for demolition, as reported, but for preservation as a monument to the memory of the poet.

THE information has been obtained at last that there is an open polar sea; but it has been discovered at the cost of the indescribable horrors of the starvation of seventeen men.

A YOUNG man of Boston sent his sweetheart a nail-cleaning outfit the other day. She returned it, accompanied with a cake of scented soap. They never speak as they pass by, now.

SIMON KNOWLES, of Meriden, N. H., in his ninety-ninth year, still daily works at his trade as a shoemaker. We presume it is safe to predict that if awl goes well with him he will last out his century.

GOOD illuminating gas can be made from city garbage collections. In an experiment made in New York, the other day, seventeen ounces of garbage yielded twenty-two cubic feet of gas of fair quality.

THE little Breton sheep takes its name from the part of France in which it is most raised. It is not much if any, larger than a pug dog; is affectionate and as great a pet as Mary's little lamb in its tenderest days.

THE furniture of the late President Buchanan, from the old homestead near Lancaster, Pa, is soon to be sold at auction in Philadelphia. It includes his desk and arm-chair, a night-case clock and a spinning-wheel.

A PHYSICIAN writes: "I know of nothing better for instantaneously taking the heat out of a burn, where the surface is not broken, than turpentine. Soak the part well with it for a minute or two; the relief is magical."

AN Iowa newspaper suggests that the pupils in the public schools be taught reading from a weekly newspaper or magazine to be published by the State, and that it take the place of the readers which are now generally used.

THE course of diplomacy flows sweetly in Europe. Some Alsatian peasants insulted the German flag in Paris on a Monday, Ferry apologized on Tuesday, Bismarck expressed himself satisfied on Wednesday, and everything was lovely on Thursday.

ON the farm of I. E. Hitchcock, near Union City, Pa., a currant seed, in some way became lodged in a crevice in the bark of a locust tree, taking root and literally engrafting itself into the tree, from which it apparently receives its nourishment. The branch was first noticed last year. A good sized branch is now visible, and a short time ago was well filled with currants.

THE miners in the Cœur d'Alene mining regions, Idaho, collected a fund of $5,000, some time ago, as a prize for the first white baby born within that territory. The wife of a freight hand on the Northern Pacific received the prize a few days ago, having walked twenty-five miles that her child might first see the light of day in accordance with the terms of the prize.

IT has heretofore been the theory of fishermen that crabs always shed their shells in shallow water, and the old-time plan of wading along the shore with a crab net and dipping them up from the shallows has been rigidly respected. Marylanders now supplement this with a trot-line, by which the hard-shell crabs are caught and penned until the change of the moon, when the "peelers" drop their shells. They are then shipped as soft-shell crabs.

A LITTLE nine-year-old son of Mr. Waughan, living near Dayton, Oregon, sickened and died the other day. During the boy's lifetime he had a little pony, to which he had become much attached, and which, in return, had become very much attached to his young master. On the morning of the young master's death, the animal came to the house where his lifeless young rider lay, laid down by the door, and expired in a few minutes without any previous sickness whatever.

A REMARKABLE mirage, lasting several hours, was recently witnessed by residents on the eastern coast of the lower Chesapeake Bay. A long line of the Atlantic coast lifted up in the air, with steamers and sail vessels on its bosom could be seen.

AN ex-member of Congress was knocked down in Norristown, Pa., by a sheep the other day—one of a drove being driven up Main street. The honorable gentleman hastily arose and walked away unhurt in person, but much injured in dignity.

DEAD AND DYING.

A Special Correspondent's Experience Amid the Pestilence.

Horrible Scenes at Marseilles—Streets and Gutters Reeking With Filth—Weird and Ghastly Burials By the Fitful Lantern's Light.

CINCINNATI, July 28.—A correspondent of the Commercial Gazette, who has been making the rounds in cholera-infected districts in France relates his experience. He found no outward sign of the pestilence in the better quarter of Marseilles, but in the poorer sections almost all shops were closed and houses deserted. A canal and several small streams, reeking with sewage filth, in the latter portions, fully explains the sources of disease. Passing along the narrow and squalid Rua Caisserie, over one-half the shops were seen to be closed at every crossing. From a tenement region, on the hill above, a stream of fetid water flowed across the street, and plunged down a precipitous descent on the other side, through dark lanes crowded with towering rookeries, swarming below with idle men, and children playing in the filthy gutters, the women, meanwhile, swashing the water about with their brooms, under the evident impression that they were cleaning something. Each glimpse of any of the streets is enough to turn the stomach of any healthy men. The smell through all this quarter, in which, during a space of twenty minutes, were met three laden hearses, was bad enough, but the smell was indescribably worse when we had driven across the town to two of the most afflicted quarters of all Marseilles—Capeleite and the adjoining quarter. In order to reach them he crossed the old ship canal, which was filled to the brim with reeking water, and had its surface thickly covered with garbage and refuse of a decidedly miscellaneous and revolting kind. Along the gutters ran rivulets of drab-colored water, which had overflown from the canal, which was dammed now and then by heaps of rotting vegetables or worse substances, including dead cats and dogs. Four out of every five houses were found closed. Those which remained open were mainly estaminets, where, under dirty awnings and on dirty sidewalks men and women sat drinking, or were already reduced to stupor from previous drinking; and junk shops, in which filthy people were sorting rotten rags in an unspeakably vile atmosphere. Festering filth was around them, and a tropical sun beat fiercely down upon the scene. The correspondent says, after this experience I decided to visit the hospital. During a tour of the room I saw eighty-four patients in all stages of the disease, from the last agonized breath to the period of cheerful convalescence. Every face in these eighty-four, male and female, was the face of a person from the lower walks of life, and this, I am told, has been the rule among patients from the first. The treatment, both here and at Toulon, in the first stages, is twenty drops of laudanum, with three grains of ether, and ice in the mouth to stop vomiting. In the second stage the patients become very cold. From ten to fifteen grammes of acetate of ammonia, the same quantity of alcohol, and two injections of morphia are given daily. If the patient can not breathe, artificial respiration of oxygen is produced, and the limbs are rubbed with turpentine. The third stage is the coffin. Delay in placing the bodies in the coffins is made necessary by the fact that violent post-mortem action of the limbs takes place, caused by a terrible reaction after death, in which the temperature rises from extreme cold at dissolution to one hundred and twenty degrees after it. Each coffin is carefully disinfected. Of many pathetic sights, the most painful that I saw occurred in the female ward, where one room was mostly occupied by children. A nun held in her arms, by an open window, a dying babe eighteen months old. Its three sisters, the oldest being only ten years, lay on beds near by their parents, both of whom died the same day, and there was small hope for any of the remaining children save the oldest. Late at night I drove with my courier outside the city to the Cemetery St. Pierre, to see the burial of the three patients whom I had observed in the Pharo Hospital in the afternoon. Soon the first of the hearses appeared, and then followed the others. After a brief burial service intoned by a pale young priest, who looked badly scared, three boxes were hurriedly lowered into a trench eight feet deep by twenty feet long, and a goodly quantity of lime was shoveled on top. It was a ghastly trench, and there was plenty of room for more coffins. It was a weird and saddening sight. There stood the blanched-faced priest, intent on his holy calling, surrounded by a gang of swart, bare-chested, brigandish-looking laborers, who bore the somber coffins. For a background there stood the tall, white houses. The dead still wore their tawdry trinkets, and the whole was lighted up, as in a picture by Rembrandt, by the fitful glare of lanterns. Those gaping trenches were big enough to hold their thousands.

More Salvationists Arrested.

ROCHESTER, N. Y., July 27.—Eighteen members of the Salvation Army were arrested to-day for singing while parading the streets—eight men and ten women. They will remain all night in the police station, praying and singing. A request to pass six tambourines to the prisoners was denied. The leaders had been notified not to sing while marching.

Electric Street Railroad.

CLEVELAND, O., July 26.—An electric railroad, one mile long, has been completed, and is being successfully operated by the East Cleveland Street Railroad Company.

Crop Reports.

CINCINNATI, July 28.—Reports from different points in Ohio, Indiana and Kentucky to the Commercial Gazette indicate that, despite the prolonged, excessive drouth, the crops this season, speaking for the whole valley, will be good. The late rains have given much needed relief to the almost exhausted vegetation, and in many localities have been the saving of many a crop. In many localities this relief is still needed. The wheat crop is good. In the Northwest the average yield of spring wheat is twenty bushels per acre, and of winter wheat thirty or forty bushels. Oats have suffered most. Corn is damaged in many localities, but the general outlook is favorable.

Self-Confessed Murderer in Custody.

CAIRO, ILL., July 28.—The real murderer of Marsh, for which May and Tyes were tried at Smithland, has been found, and is in jail at Smithland, Ky. His name is Mirick. He was caught in Texas, where he told about his connection with the murder, and how he shot Marsh.

Hail-Storm in Wisconsin.

MILWAUKEE, WIS., July 26.—A storm in Eau Claire County damaged crops and buildings to the extent of $20,000. Hail-stones fell which are alleged to have measured six and eight inches in diameter.

BADLY WANTED,

The Jail Surrounded by an Angry Mob, and the Murderer Demanded—Police and Arms Sent to Protect the Prisoner—The Outer Gates Broken Open by the Excited Crowd.

MINNEAPOLIS, July 26.—At three o'clock this morning Officer McLaughlin arrested Tony Ceatiney, Mart Gorman and James Parker for riotous proceedings. In an attempt to escape both officers and men fired, and the officer fell with a fatal wound in the bowels. The prisoners escaped, but at a later hour all were arrested, and are now in jail. This is the second shooting of an officer in a week, and violence is anticipated. The prisoners belong to a local gang which has terrorized the community for several years. All but these have scattered. Excited crowds have been in the vicinity of the Central Station and jail all the evening, and many threats were made if Officer McLaughlin died his supposed murderer, young Cantiney, would be summarily dealt with. The three prisoners were arraigned in the Municipal Court this afternoon on a charge of attempting to murder, and removed to jail for safekeeping. Sheriff Stoddard to-night made a call on the Mayor for aid, as he feared an attempt to take the prisoners. Police were sent to the jail, as well as arms, secured from the Wolfe Tone Rifles, and those in possession of the Sons of Veterans. Chief of Police West says any attempt to take the prisoners from the jail will be resisted with all the force and means in his power. Sergeant Hine, of the police, being ordered to go for the arms to-night to be sent for the protection of the jail, refused, saying he would not use arms against the citizens to guard such wretches as the prisoners, who would be responsible for Laughlin's death, and was dismissed from the force by the Mayor. Laughlin, in the opinion of the physicians, has no chance for recovery, though he himself, when conscious, thinks he will pull through. While conscious, he said Cautieny shot him. At 12:30 an immense crowd was gathered at the jail with ropes, sledge hammers, etc., eager to get Cautieny. The decorations in front of a store down town were fired, evidently with a view of drawing the crowd away, but no diversion worth the trouble was created. At 12:45 it is reported that the crowd has burst in the outer door of the jail, but no shots have been fired.

MISS SALTER'S SUICIDE.

Deliberate Preparations for the Desperate Deed—A Sad and Tragic Romance.

PITTSBURG, PA., July 26.—Maria Salter, who shot herself at her home at Leechburg, last evening, died at an early hour this morning. The cool manner in which she prepared for a death that was to be preferred to a life without her lover, Oscien Terburg, was remarkable. After she had finished her household duties she took a bath, combed her beautiful dark tresses with great care, donned a night dress of pure white, richly embroidered, and with a revolver in one hand, laid down upon the bed. She was unconscious from the time she fired the fatal shot until death came, in a few hours. Some weeks ago the dead woman distributed her personal effects among friends, retaining two rings which had been presented her by her dead lover, Terburg, whose parents are Spiritualists, became imbued with the faith early in life, and it is believed Maria had followed his example. It is not unlikely that they had agreed to suicide, and confidentially expected a glad reunion in a Spiritualist world. Both suicided, he by poison and she by pistol, on a Friday evening.

The Cholera in France.

PARIS, July 26.—The epidemic at Toulon continues to decrease. There were thirteen deaths last night, four at the hospital, six in the suburbs, and three in the city. At Marseilles there were twenty-four deaths last night. The flight of people from Toulon continues. A cholera patient in the hospital there committed suicide to-day by plunging a knife into his heart. At Arles many persons have become insane through fear. The total number of places in France where the infection has appeared is fourteen.

MARSEILLES, July 26.—This city is threatened with a meat famine. Many butchers have shut up their shops, and others find it difficult to procure supplies. Noon.—Seven deaths since 9 o'clock. The cholera has appeared at Spezzia, Italy, carried there by an Italian workman from the arsenal at Toulon. There have been two fatal cases already, and the inhabitants are in a panic. 9:30 p. m.—During the past twenty-four hours there were fifty-eight deaths from cholera.

American Scenic Artist Shot.

LONDON, July 26.—A New York young man, who described himself as Arthur Burrell, single, and a scenic painter, was taken to the hospital to-night, bleeding from a wound in the breast. On examination it was found that a bullet had penetrated his body just below the heart. It is thought he will die. He said a friend of his, whose name he refused to disclose, was exhibiting a revolver to him, when the weapon accidentally exploded, the bullet entering his chest. He refused to give any further particulars.

Remains of Beethoven and Schubert.

LONDON, July 26.—The bodies of Beethoven and Schubert, the composers, will be removed from Wahring to the Central Friedhof, a large new cemetery, outside Vienna, where a portion of the ground is especially reserved for the interment of great men.

Siberian Pest.

ST. PETERSBURG, July 28.—The Siberian pest has appeared at Getschina. A committee has been formed, with Prince Schapoffsky at its head, to enforce vigorous sanitary measures to check the spread of the disease.

Well! Did You Ever?

CAIRO, ILL., July 26.—Five boys, from five to seven years of age, visited the house of a man named Pittman, at Pepper's Mills, yesterday, and finding no one at home, caught a great number of pigs, geese, ducks and chickens, several cats and two dogs, and dumped them all into the well. Chairs, tables, knives and forks, bed clothing, in fact everything portable followed the live stock of the place, the last contribution being the wheelbarrow. This about filled the wall. The outcry made by the pigs, chickens, etc., attracted the attention of neighbors, who came to the rescue. The loss, which was heavy, was adjusted by the young rascals' parents.

Tornado in North Carolina.

NORFOLK, VA., July 26.—A terrible cyclone occurred this afternoon at Edinton, N. C. The hardware house of H. Dickson & Co. was blown down. J. H. Wood, general merchandise; Hooper & Co., drug store, and Barnes' Hotel were unroofed. A warehouse and wharfs were destroyed. One child was killed and several people wounded by falling timber.

Decreasing.

MARSEILLES, July 27.—9 P. M.—Thirty-six deaths here from cholera the past twenty-four hours.

PARIS, July 27.—Twelve deaths from cholera at Arles to-day, and six at Aix. There is a panic at the latter place.

A TERRIBLE TALE.

The Steamship Laxham Collides With the Spanish Steamer Gijon.

One Hundred and Thirty Lives Lost by the Collision Story of the Survivors.

LONDON, July 28.—The survivors of the steamship Laxham, which collided with the Spanish steamship Gijon, report that on the evening of the collision there was a thick fog. The Laxham was going slow and both steamers were sounding their whistles. The Gijon struck the Laxham amidships and the latter was nearly cut asunder. The funnel fell and steampipe burst. The chief engineer was horribly scalded. The most of the Laxham's crew boarded the Gijon. Captain Lothian tied his wife and child to himself and all three were hauled aboard the Gijon. The Laxham sank twenty minutes after the collision. Not long before that the Gijon began to settle. Terrible confusion prevail. The Captain stood with a revolver in his hand, but was unable to keep order. The passengers and crew were fighting for their lives. The boats lowered were filled to the gunwales, but could not accommodate half the people. Those fortunate enough to secure places in them, were obliged to keep off the others with knives. The Gijon sank bow first. The quarter deck was crowded with men and women, the Captain and officers standing on the bridge. It is estimated that one hundred and thirty persons perished.

HEROISM REWARDED.

What an Indianian Did for the Salvation of a Railroad Train.

COLUMBUS, July 28.—During the heavy rain and thunder-storm last night a large tree was blown down, falling lengthwise of the track of the Jeffersonville, Madison and Indianapolis Railroad, near Austin, thirty miles below this city. A man named H. D. Robinson, who happened near, attempted to get a light to hail the north-bound express train, then almost due. He could get no lantern, and matches were blown out faster than he could light them, amid the blinding rain and terrible wind-storm still prevailing. Robinson saw the train coming, and, planting himself firmly in the center of the track, he yelled at the top of his voice and waved his umbrella wildly through the pitchy darkness and the storm. The train came thundering along until within a few feet of the obstruction, when the glare of the head-light discerned it to the engineer, who at once reversed the engine and had all brakes applied, stopping the train within less than two feet of Robinson, who fainted and fell in the middle of the track before the engine. And thus by his heroism a terrible calamity was avoided. Passengers and train men, realizing what a terrible fate they had escaped by Robinson's heroism, made up over $100 on the spot and presented it to him.

OFFICER LAUGHLIN DEAD,

And His Slayer Secretly Removed from Jail.

MINNEAPOLIS, July 28.—Officer Laughlin, shot by roughs Saturday morning, died this evening. Cetienty, the one who is believed to have done the shooting, and whom a mob tried to take from jail Saturday night, was removed from jail by officers this evening to prevent a repetition of the scenes of Saturday night, and his present whereabouts are kept secret. Mr. Laughlin, shortly before his death, made a statement to his priest, in which he expressed the hope that the mob would abstain from all violence, and that his murderer be given a fair trial. He requested that his wishes should be made known to the mob, and hoped that his wishes would be observed.

Died From Grief.

WILKESBARRE, PA., July 28.—Mrs. Jos. Hassel, wife of the engineer, who with his son and son-in-law, Armbrustar, was killed by a locomotive explosion near White Haven last Friday, died early this morning at her home in East Mauch Chunk from grief consequent upon the severe loss she had sustained. Mrs. Hessel was about to become a mother, but upon hearing the news of the dreadful calamity which had overtaken her family she fell into a swoon, and remained unconscious, except at slight intervals, during which she bemoaned her loss until death relieved her sufferings. The explosion has therefore brought five persons to the grave from out of one family, and the above death only makes its sadness more intense, as nine orphan children survive.

Fatal Cattle Disease in Kansas.

TOPEKA, KAS., July 28.—N. A. Adams, of Manhattan, purchased two hundred head of Colorado steers at Kansas City last week and thirty head of them have died with Spanish or Texas fever. One carload was stopped here, and out of that six have died. The others were taken to Manhattan and are quarantined in shipping pens there. Up to 3 o'clock this afternoon twenty-five had died. People, and especially stock men, are greatly excited. In answer to a telegram Governor Glick has sent State Veterinary Surgeon Holcomb to investigate the trouble.

Stanley Arrives at Plymouth.

LONDON, July 28.—Henry M. Stanley, the African explorer, arrived at Plymouth this evening. In an interview with an Associated Press representative, Stanley said he had returned to England considering that he had completed the work of establishing satisfactory trading stations along the Congo River, from its mouth to Stanley Pool, fourteen hundred miles by river. When he left the Congo country he was suffering badly from bronchitis, but was much benefited by the sea voyage. He eulogised the trading prospects of the country in the vicinity of the Congo River.

Greely's Wife On Her Way to Meet Him.

KANSAS CITY, July 28.—The wife of Lieutenant A. W. Greely passed through this city this evening, en route from San Diego, Cal., to Portsmouth, N. H., where she expects to meet Lieutenant Greely, August 2. The lady was accompanied by her brother, L. G. Nesmuth, and her two children.

—James Street, for many years engineer on the Lehigh & Susquehanna Railroad, became suddenly insane recently, and as his train approached Mauch Chunk, instead of slackening, he opened wide the throttle valve and ran for several miles at the rate of a mile a minute, frightening the passengers and all along the line.—Pittsburgh Post.

—Four little children, all less than twelve years old, landed at New York recently and were sent to their parents in Ohio and Chicago. They came from Switzerland alone, with leather tags tied to them giving directions to the Captain of the vessel and the railway conductors.—N. Y. Tribune.

—The summer's sport at Block Island is sword-fishing. Frequently the game shows fight, and in such cases the excitement is intense. The sword-fish caught on those waters weigh from two hundred to five hundred pounds, and the swords are from two to three feet in length.

—Milton's Bible has found its way into the British Museum. It contains the dates of the birth of his children in the poet's handwriting

THE COMMONWEALTH.

Louisville Leaf Tobacco Market.

The market has been rather featureless in the main, and without any positive tendencies at variance with previous conditions. Burley tobaccos have continued quiet, and except at short intervals, or for exceptional lines of offerings, there has been a mild tendency in favor of buyers. Sales have displayed unusual irregularity, and rejections have largely increased. At the close the range is slightly lowered for all grades. Dark and heavy leaf has been quiet, with prices about uniform, and lugs have been steady and firm. Crop advices are eminently satisfactory. We quote full-weight packages new-crop sound tobacco as follows:

	Dark and Heavy.	Burley.
Trash	$6 50 @ 6 75	$6 00 @ 7 50
Common lugs	7 00 @ 7 25	7 00 @ 8 00
Medium lugs	7 50 @ 7 75	8 00 @ 9 00
Good lugs	8 00 @ 8 50	10 00 @11 00
Common leaf	8 00 @ 8 50	10 00 @11 00
Medium leaf	8 75 @ 9 50	12 00 @16 00
Good leaf	10 00 @11 00	17 00 @20 00
Fine and fancy leaf	12 00 @16 00	22 00 @[illegible] 50

Miscellaneous Items.

DENNIS CARROLL, a boy of about four years old, was playing in the yard attached to the home of his parents in Covington the other afternoon. In the course of his rompings the little fellow approached the cistern box, which is very low, and the lid of which, at the moment, was raised. In trying to look down into the cistern the boy lost his balance and tumbled in. The water was six or seven feet deep, and after a few faint calls for help he sank from sight. Councilman William O'Brian was one of the first to respond to the alarm, and at once jumped into the cistern in the hope to bring the boy up alive. The gallant attempt failed of its object. The body was immediately lifted up, and efforts made for resuscitation, but without avail.

IN Louisville, the other afternoon, a wild Cherokee bull was imprisoned in the slaughter pen of Mr. Shucknight. The bull was a very ferocious one, just having been received from the Indian Territory. By some chance the door of the pen was left open. The bull, observing this, made a dash through it. Two neighboring dogs ran at the bull, which so incensed him that he charged upon them, killing one with his sharp horns. The bull, with his head and tail high in the air, continued his course. He made a dash for a young butcher, struck him in the side, and knocked him into the ditch. He then drew back for another plunge, but such was the impetus that he leaped clear over the ditch. This gave the men an opportunity to get up and escape. Two bloodhounds, belonging to a man in the neighborhood, were procured and put in pursuit. The bull killed one but the other got him by the ear, and no amount of shaking would throw him off. He finally ran again with the dog still clinging to his ear. Reaching Beargrass, he plunged into the creek, and held his head and the dog beneath the water until he thought the latter was drowned. Being unable to hold his head under water any longer, he brought it up, but the dog was still there. The bull then swam to the bank, where it was lassoed and captured.

EX-SENATOR G. W. SWOPE is under arrest charged with burglarizing a store.

WINCHESTER is suffering from the tramp nuisance.

WINIFRED COSTILLO, Gipsy Queen, died suddenly at Louisville, a few days ago.

PRESTON SEXTON, an old man sixty-five or sixty-eight years old, was shot the other night at a house near Junction City, and probably fatally wounded. Four men named James and Scott Milburn, Anderson Dungan and John Sanditer have been arrested for the crime, the cause of which is unknown.

JOHN HENRY GROBMEIER, an enterprising citizen of Carrollton, is dead, aged 54 years.

THE Superintendent of Public Instruction has just made the agreeable announcement of an increase of fifteen cents in the per capita for the school year 1884-'5. Last year it was $1 40, and this year it is $1 55 for both white and colored. The outlook is very pleasant for the common schools in view of the additions to the fund and the numerous changes under the new law.

PACK KIRTLEY, son of Perry Kirtley, a prominent stock-man of Horse Cave, was drowned while bathing.

WM. HARRISON, a blacksmith, living on Portland avenue, Louisville, received word the other day from England that he had fallen heir to $350,000. The fortune was bequeathed by an uncle who recently died in Wolverhampton, England.

AT Princeton, Marshal Wilson attempted to arrest a negro named Jack Mitchell, for disorderly conduct. Mitchell ran and Wilson fired and shot him through the body.

CHAS. E. SUMAN, the last of the Suman family, of Louisville, died at Bowling Green, the other day, of congestion of the brain. Three years ago there were six members of the family living, but a singular fatality seems to pursue them, and Charles, aged forty, the last of his race, is laid to rest in Cave Hill Cemetery.

GUS ZOLLER, aged fourteen years, and Emil Kreider, aged sixteen, were bathing in the river at Louisville, a few days ago, when they were caught by a whirlpool which is formed by a bend in the river, and were drawn beneath the surface and drowned. When Zoller's body was taken home his mother was thrown into convulsions and for some time her life was despaired of.

THE train dispatchers will hold their first convention in Louisville, August 20. Committees have been appointed on Reception and Entertainment, and resolutions adopted inviting all train dispatchers to attend the convention. Wm. Marshall Chairman of the Entertainment Committee, will answer all inquiries in regard to the convention, addressed to Louisville.

NEVER were vegetables more plenty or cheaper than they are now all through the South. The copious rains made them abundant and of fine quality. Plenty of fruit, too, and chickens and eggs are cheap. Living is now cheaper than at any time since the war.

THE recent extreme drought in Pendleton County injured corn and tobacco.

THE wheat crop in Madison County is the largest for years, forty bushels to the acre being an ordinary yield.

A MAGNIFICENT meteor was seen at Louisville the other night, flashing across the southern heavens. It appeared in the constellation of the Dolphin and disappeared in the sign Aquarius. It was nearly as large as the moon, and of the most intense brilliancy. The whole southeastern heavens seemed as bright as sunrise. In its southeastern course of about 15° it displayed most beautifully the prismatic colors. It belonged no doubt to the July meteors designated as the Aquarids.

R. B. SCOOBEE, of Clark County, had four hundred acres in wheat. It took him seven days to cut it.

MRS. NANCY SALLEE, one of the oldest residents of Fayette County, is dead, aged eighty-three years.

AN enormous amount of tobacco has been set in Central Kentucky.

RAIN is much needed in Bourbon County.

NEW wheat is worth from 70 cents to 75 cents a bushel in Fleming County. The farmers complain that the price does not pay the cost of production.

MR. JOHN WRIGHT, a prominent citizen of Frankfort, was thrown from a team, a few days ago, and died in two hours afterward.

Sun-stroke—Its Symptoms and Its Treatment.

It is very important that every one should be able to make out a case of sun-stroke when it occurs and not mistake it for drunkenness or apoplexy.

When a person is "dead drunk" his countenance, breathing and pulse are very like those of a sun-struck case. Besides, the person sun-struck may have taken a glass of beer or a small amount of alcohol in some form just before the attack. His breath would, by its odor, be apt to cause what might be a fatal mistake. But the heat of the body ought to prevent any such error. In drunkenness, pure and simple, the heat of the body is never above ninety-eight and a half degrees, often a little less. In sun-stroke it is always increased, sometimes from 106 to 108 degrees, or even more. Confinement in the close and vitiated air of a cell at the station-house, or transportation a mile or more in an open wagon exposed to the direct rays of the sun, may not kill the intoxicated person, but would probably, nay, almost certainly—have that effect on the unfortunate victim of sunstroke.

In apoplexy, which has a superficial resemblance to one form of sunstroke, the skin is never hot and excessively dry, but is often cold and moist; the pulse in apoplexy is slow, sometimes intermittent, generally very full; in sun stroke it is quick and sharp; in apoplexy there is paralysis on one side of the face and body; in sun stroke there is no difference between the two sides: the breathing in apoplexy is slow, snoring and often interrupted or irregular, in sun-stroke it is rapid and noisy, but not snoring; in sun-stroke both pupils of the eye are contracted and the eyes look red and congested; in apoplexy one or both pupils are widely dilated, the eyes often turned upward and toward one side: the whites of the eyes are not reddened, at least not early in the attack. These distinctions are so plain that a mistake ought not to be made.

The prevention of sunstroke is of very great importance in view of the high rate of mortality of its victims and the serious after effects in those who recover from the immediate symptoms. A consideration of the conditions which favor its occurrence gives the key to its prevention. Avoidance of extraordinary muscular effort, so far as possible, is first to be kept in mind. A rise of five degrees of temperature above its natural limit of 98½ degrees has been observed in a man who ran a foot race, although the atmospheric heat was but sixty-one degrees and he was perspiring freely at the time. Water should be drunk freely to supply the loss from the blood by way of the skin, lungs and kidneys. This is fully as important as avoidance of excessive exercise. Excesses of all kinds should be carefully guarded against. Everything that depresses the nervous system predisposing to sunstroke, excesses and loss of sleep, particularly, should be kept clear of during the heated term. Places where the air is close, damp or vitiated by overcrowding or by reason of unhealthful exhalations, should be carefully shunned. The skin should be kept clean and in good working order by frequent bathing. The clothing should be kept light of texture and pervious to moisture. It should not hinder the free movements of the chest in breathing or constrict the neck. The food should be mostly of vegetable substances, in order to throw as little extra work upon the kidneys as possible. This is especially worthy of the attention of every one who has Bright's disease or any disturbance of the functions of the kidneys.

The treatment of the attack is sufficiently simple. No time should be lost in removing the sufferer to a cool, shady, airy place. The outside clothing should be removed. When practicable all the coverings of the body should be taken off. The whole surface should be drenched with cool water. Ice is not necessary, any water which is cooler than the body will do. In fact, water from sixty to eighty degrees Fahrenheit is more speedy in its refrigerating action than if it is ice-cold. The amount of heat removed by the change into vapor is many times greater than the amount used up in raising the same quantity from the freezing to the boiling point. Evaporation from the surface should be promoted by fanning or exposure to a natural current of air. If the pulse becomes very feeble, irregular, or more frequent than 120 per minute, stimulants should be given, such as ammonia or alcohol, if the patient can swallow, or ether, coffee or brandy, by injection under the skin. If convulsions occur early they are not dangerous as when they come on after several hours, when they denote impending death. They may be controlled by giving chloroform carefully by inhalation. Of course, ether, chloroform or other powerful remedies should be given only by or under the direction of a competent physician. The treatment of the after-effects of sunstroke may require removal to a more temperate climate, or the application of remedies which should be intrusted only to those who have made a strong study of such matters.—St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

The Foaming Curs.

Rabies (madness) in the dog was known long before many of the more common diseases. Ages ago, as Plutarch tells us, according to Athenodorus, it was first observed in mankind in the days of the Asclepiadæ, the descendents of the god of medicine, Esculapius, by his sons Podalirius and Machaon, who spread through Greece and Asia Minor as an order of priests, prophets and physicians, preserving the results of the medical experience acquired in the temples as a hereditary secret. Homer speaks of the malignant influence of the dog star on the health of mankind. Celsus says the Greeks called it hydrophobia—a most wretched disease, in which the sick person is tormented at the same time with thirst and the fear of water, and in which there is little hope.

In his time the treatment for hydrophobia was to throw the patient into the sea. This mode was supposed to remove the thirst and dread of water. Euripides, the Greek tragic poet, who lived in the fifth century before our era, is reported to have been cured by the bath. In Pliny's time a remedy for hydrophobia was the application to the bitten part of the ashes of a dog's head. The head was also recommended to be eaten. To avoid being bitten in earlier times people's carried a dog's heart about them, and others a dog's tongue in the shoe under the great toe. The tail of a weasel that had been deprived of its liberty and then set free was also considered a safeguard. Ovid states that hydrophobia and gout were in his day reckoned incurable. People to-day look back and smile at the superstitions, rites and ideas devised by ignorance, priestcraft and fear.

For instance, in Belgium the custom is to go the shrine of St. Hubert in the Ardennes for the cure of hydrophobia as in the early ages. In the life of St. Lambert, written about the eleventh century, mention is made of several people being thus cured in A. D. 825. The legend relates that the stole of St. Hubert which works the miracle was brought from Heaven by an angel, who gave it to the saint while he was praying at the tomb of St. Peter in Rome. History teems with queer stories about this disease. But the majority of people know less regarding the disease of the dog rabies and its counterpart in man, so-called hydrophobia, than did the ancients. People to-day see muzzled dogs panting in the streets and the law directs that "no dog shall be allowed to go unmuzzled in the streets of Albany between the first day of June and the first day in October in any year." But the remaining eight months of the year the dogs are allowed to roam without muzzles.

How insane this is, when it is a fact that rabies is undoubtedly most prevalent in temperate and incomparably less frequent in torrid and frigid zones. It is no more influenced by the dog star or heat of midsummer than is tooth-ache. Therefore, as hydrophobia in man is the result of inoculation from the bite of a rabid animal, and as rabies is more common in spring and fall than in summer or winter, it follows that people are in error when, during hot weather they put muzzles on their dogs. Especially is it cruel, as the dog does not when heated perspire, but cools by opening the mouth and lolling out the tongue and panting. Again, who wants to be confined in the hottest of weather in any way? Now, a dog that has been bitten by a rabid dog and thus inoculated with rabies, will carry the virus in his system for an indefinite period—the so-called period of incubation—ere he develops rabies; therefore it may be ten days or a year before he goes mad, and consequently it would be strange if all the dogs inoculated were to happen to become mad while wearing muzzles.

The muzzle is worn only on the street and taken off at home; where then is the protection? Another brilliant idea of the present age that places us on a par with the superstitious heathen, is that of believing that a healthy, non-rabid dog which bites a person from any cause or under any circumstances should be killed at once in order to prevent the person bitten from having hydrophobia. If a dog has rabies he is capable of introducing the poison into the system of people or animals by biting them. If he is not rabid his bite is no more likely to produce hydrophobia than small-pox. These are facts, not hearsay or supposition, and they may serve in some future day to drive away fear after a dog bite and give a few people common-sense ideas regarding the disease of the dog and other animals known as rabies and that which is produced in man by inoculation from one of these mad animals and called hydrophobia.—Dr. Edward Moore.

The Swinging, Gleaming Ax.

The dexterity and precision with which a first-class chopper handles an ax are quite remarkable. Trees three feet in diameter are often cut entirely through and still retain their perpendicular position until a breeze, or some slight shock topples them over. The two gaps on either side meet in a straight line. To the novice there are many strange things within the province of an ax. In cleaning a piece of farm land it is frequently a stipulation that the chopper shall "bucket" his stumps to hold a pail of water, in other words, leave a concave bowl on their tops to catch rain-water and rot them. In the pineries the ax is used for nearly every purpose for which a cutting tool is required. With it the chopper trims his "boot-packs" cuts lacing thongs, "buckets" horse and cattle feed boxes, pins up his sheds, shanties and outhouses, constructs his bobs and "go-devils," and even whittles his tooth-picks. He gutters chips for drinking cups, fixes tobacco for his pipe, throws flying bridges over winter streams whittles out the checkers for his evening's amusement, and carves the checker board. In a word, it is a part and parcel of himself, and its song is the music of life to his ear.

After leaving the pineries the axe has a long ramble to a new life upon the Pacific Slope. In California, on the Coast Range, it enters the famous redwoods, and then indeed another existence is found. In fact, its position in society is elevated. Those noble trees, the Goliaths of the forests, are fast disappearing. But their gigantic stumps still remain to tell of their departed greatness. And enormous stumps they truly are. So much so, indeed, that the axe has to climb in the world to overcome them, and the chopper assumes a position which he is not compelled to attempt anywhere else. To surmount the enormous swell at the base of the tree and commence operations where the average diameter of the trunk may be said to begin, he builds a platform made of stakes with cross-pieces of rails, sometimes six or ten feet high, around his victim, and chops from that, cutting above the bulbous swell. Or, if an expert, he will simply "bucket" a hole in the trunk, and driving a stake into it, stand perched upon that slender foothold as he dextrously swings his blade.

The size of the red-wood giants is world-famous, and it is a legend of the coast that a woodsman having chopped for a week on one side of a tree, walked around it and found another chopper who had been at work for a month on the other side. Huge they are, but beautiful wood to chop, fairly luring the inquisitive blade to the mysteries of untold centuries wrapped up in their red hearts; and the death-bellow of the forest colossus, as, in his final agony, he plunges down some dark, wooded canyon, crushing all before him, may be heard reverberating in dull thunder through the cloaked hills at all seasons of the year.

But it is not until the cypress swamps of the South-land are reached that the axe takes to water. In those dark-shadowed and moss-draped lagoons the chopper becomes amphibious, and performs his work while skillfully balanced in one of the most treacherous of all aquatic contrivances. Should any one think there is no science required to chop from a dug-out, let the skeptic try it. A person, not an inexpert hand with an axe, but a novice at teetering in a canoe, did so, and mourned. Once on the Bayou Teche he paddled up to a big tree, whose great, bulbous stem reached far under water, and fastened his dug-out to the victim, seized his axe and boldly stood erect in the prow. Balancing himself for a moment, until a true equilibrium was attained, he swung back his axe and made a bold stroke at the tree. The dug-out attempted a somersault instantly. It shot out of the water at the stern; the cutter shot under water at the bow, and where the axe went is a mystery to this day.—San Francisco Call.

SCIENCE AND INDUSTRY.

—Superior blankets are now being woven of cow hair. Only the longer hair is used.

—Steel tubes are found to retain twice as much magnetism as steel rods and are therefore better for permanent magnets.

—A Hartford (Conn.) correspondent says that the red sunsets are very common in Norway, where, if very red, they are taken to indicate rain; but if of a lighter hue and clear, the weather thereafter is likely to be fine for many days.—N. Y. News.

—It has recently been proposed to prevent petroleum fires by placing a bottle of ammonia in each barrel of the oil. On ignition, by accident or otherwise, the bottle would break, and the effect of the ammoniacal vapors would be to extinguish the fires.—Chicago Herald.

—Considerable amusement was given recently at the convention of teachers of deaf and dumb in New York, when Prof. Samuel Potter, of the National College at Washington, who is deaf, exhibited a pair of patent ears. With them he could hear without the use of an ear-trumpet.—N. Y. Times.

—Mr. E. Wethered has investigated the structure and formation of coal. He concludes (1) that some kinds of coal were practically made up of spores while others were not, these varieties often occurring in beds of the same seam; and (2) that the so-called bituminous coal was largely composed of the substance which he termed hydro-carbon, to which the wood tissue had contributed beyond a doubt.—Boston Globe.

—Many of our greatest inventions were accidentally revealed or suggested. The telephone was discovered or invented by three persons about the same time. The phonograph was the result of an accident. The carelessness of a kitchen maid in allowing a pot containing brine to boil over led to the manufacture of common glazed pottery. Goodyear had been reduced to the necessity of pawning his wife's wedding ring when a piece of rubber in his hand accidentally struck a hot stove, and from the contact derived the last chemical property needed to make it India rubber. It should be noted, however, that such "accidents" only happen to men whose minds are keenly alive to their backings.—Chicago Journal.

PITH AND POINT.

—First the necessary, then the useful, then the ornamental, says a philosopher. The dude doesn't seem to fit in any place.—Exchange.

—A dimple is a bewitching expression in a lady's cheek which makes an impression hard of suppression and ends in oppression.—Philadelphia Call.

—If the faults of man were turned to virtues, and his virtues to faults, he would be so nearly perfect that—well, he couldn't stay here, that's the truth of the matter.—Arkansas Traveler.

—When they build a railway the first they do is to break ground. This is often done with great ceremony. Then they break the shareholders. This is done without ceremony.—N. Y. Herald.

—"I admit," said the young lawyer, "that I am not a very good man, but then how could you expect it of me. It's practice that makes perfect, you know, and that I haven't got.—Philadelphia Call.

—When a cow-boy, in telling a story, says "I herd" so and so, do not think his grammer is at fault, for he may be referring to his work of herding cattle; or, if you do think his syntax is false, don't say so in his hearing.—N. Y. Ledger.

—"Biddy," said a lady to her servant, "I wish you would step over and see how old Mrs. Jones is this morning." In a few minutes Biddy returned with the information that Mrs. Jones was just seventy-two years, seven months, and two days old.

—Some of Meissonier's models, it is said are compelled to retain the same positions for six hours at a time. Almost as long as a well-regulated family can persuade a servant girl to retain her position in these days of culinary competition.—Burlington Free Press.

—The editor of the Wisconsin Banner says: "Wednesday's mail brought to us a letter addressed 'Rev.,' another, the 'Hon.,' another 'Col.,' one, 'Mr.,' and the last, 'Esq.' On the way to dinner we accidentally stepped on a woman's dress, and she addressed us thus: 'You brute!'"

—"What," asks a writer, "do half a dozen young ladies talk about when they get together, after not having seen each other for a day or two?" Why, they talk about three hours in one inning. Also, about dresses and the young men and and that's about all.—Norristown Herald.

The Stale Pun and the Leading Editorial.

The Horse Editor of a Great Daily once introduced a Stale Pun into a Column where slumbered a Leading Editorial. The Latter, awakened by an Electric Shock from the Unwelcome Intruder, rubbed his Eyes and Exclaimed:

"What have we here."

Unabashed, the Pun turned a Summersault over the Body of the Sluggish Giant with the irrelevant remark:

"Here we are again!"

Whereupon the Editorial Soliloquized thus:

"It is a Lamentable Fact that Flippant Folly and Nauseous Nonsense are rapidly taking the place of Dignity and Decorum in Journalism. Beardless Witlings and Giddy Punsters now wield the Pen around whose Nib once gathered the Halo of Meaty Argument and Rhetorical Splendor. It is time to cry a—"

"Aw, yer make me tired," said the Pun.

"A halt," continued the Editorial. "The Goths and Vandals of this Incursion threaten not only the Fabric of Legitimate Journalism, but, as we shall attempt to show further on, endanger the very Foundations of—"

"Oh, pull down your vest," said the Pun.

"Of Civil Liberty itself. The Time was when affairs of State were discussed with a Calmness which befitted their Solemnity when the Citadel of Error was scientifically besieged; when the Catapult of Journalism hurled huge Masses of ponderous Sarcasm against its Walls, and it was shaken to its Foundations by the Battering Ram of Truth."

At this point an Old Boy, who had been trying for some time to arrive at the "True Inwardness" of His Editorialship, caught sight of the Pun, whereupon he fell into such a violent fit of Laughter that the Editorial could not proceed and soon resumed his Lethargic Condition.

MORAL.

Don't get too Close to the male-end of a Pun.—Washington Hatchet.

THE RECORDER.

WEDNESDAY, JULY 30. 1884.

RIDDELL & HALL, Proprietors.

ADVERTISING RATES.

1 Column	1 year	$80
1 "	"	40
1 "	"	20
"	"	20
"	"	10
"	"	6

We are authorized to announce
I. J. DAUGHTERS
as a candidate for County Superintendent of Schools at the August election.

We are authorized to announce
H. J. FOSTER
as a candidate for County Superintendent of schools at the August election.

THE standard time was too slow for Louisville and she has gone back to solar time.

ON what grounds will Mr. Pickett account for the small per capita for the school years 1884-5?

THE Lexington Transcript has gone back to the folio form. It is as big as a sheet, and about the best paper in Central Kentucky.

R. B. HAYES is as dumb as an oyster when approached in regard to the pending Presidential contest. He will hardly be called upon to do any stumping in the canvass.

THIS is the way the candidates for congress in the eighth district are sized up: Thompson is the hardest worker; Durham, most popular; McCreary has the largest bank book.

LAST Saturday a young man named Collins was shot and mortally wounded while assisting the Marshal of Crittenden to arrest some druken men who were painting the town red.

CLARK COUNTY has evidently a commendable spirit of improvement, which it is not afraid to back up with the county's funds, having recently appropriated $60,000 for turnpike purposes.

THE County of Knott having no county officers will not participate in the August election, which is said will cut the Democratic candidate in that judicial district out of about 900 majority.

LOCAL politics are at a white heat in Fayette county, and the floating element is enjoying a fat time. Both parties have candidates for Sheriff the contest for which is causing so much bad blood.

MR. LINCOLN's first letter of acceptance contained about 100 words; his second, less than 200. Grant's letter in 1868 was shorter. Mr. Blaine's letter contains 6,000, too many for the ordinary reader to tackle.

THE rule by which the Georgetowners compute the cost of 75 telephone instruments at $40 each, makes the total cost of the instruments $300. It is certainly a double-back-action calculation which brings about such a result.

THE managers of the Louisville Exposition are having some trouble, resulting from inviting Hon. James G. Blaine to open the Exposition, while Governor Cleveland was slighted. The board has had some noisy meetings in consequence of the above mentioned trouble.

GEN. BUTLER ought to come out of his shell and quiet the nerves of his followers by presenting his letter of acceptance. His delay is making them very restless, but they console themselves by the statement that when the letter does come it will thoroughly perforate all other parties.

GREEN CLAY SMITH and other popular temperance advocates have canvassed Owen county in the interest of prohibition which is to be voted on there next Monday. The county is pretty well aroused on the subject, which will no doubt, bring the entire voting population to the polls.

THE Democratic State Committee met at Frankfort and adopted a resolution requesting the Democracy of each county in the State to meet in mass convention at the Court-house in their respective county seats, on Saturday, August 16th, at 2 o'clock, p. m., and select a new County Committee, or confirm those they now have. An address was issued to the Democracy of the State commending the platform and candidates presented at Chicago, and urging the formation of Cleveland and Hendricks Clubs in every county.

THE time for the opening of fall schools draws nigh, and, as yet, nothing, so far as we are aware, has been done towards securing a teacher for the Morgan Academy. There are quite a number of young men and ladies in this immediate vicinity whose parents contemplate giving them better educations than can be acquired in the common schools of the county, and to do so will require much expense and trouble, unless they secure a good teacher at home. Those who are thus interested should unite and secure a good teacher for the Academy, to which place they can send their children from home and thus avoid much expense.

DURING the session of the Legislature last winter, those who were in position to know, and favored and worked for the passage of the new school law, figured out a result, which under the new law, would place such an amount of money to the credit of the school fund, that the per capita would reach at least $2. This anticipated result, making a favorable impression with the members, the bill was passed, and the people congratulate themselves that educationally the State would be greatly benefitted. But now comes the Superintendent of Public Instruction with his circular letter, announcing that the per capita for this year will be $1 50. Why could not Mr. Pickett and his associates, when making their calculations before the law passed, arrive at the same result? They had the same data to base their calculations upon, and the two results should not be so different. The first estimate was made to induce the passage of the law, while the second is made for entirely different purpose. The new school law is a creature of false pretenses, and with such an opposite result from that which the people had been induced to anticipate, it will not be surprising if a demand for the repeal of the entire public school system be the result.

Democratic Conventions.

The following are the nominations of Democratic conventions for the past fifty years:

1836, Martin Van Buren, 1st ballot.

1840, Martin Van Buren, unanimously.

1844, James K. Polk, 9th ballot.

1848, Lewis Cass, 4th ballot.

1852, Franklin Pierce, 49th ballot.

1856, James Buchanan, 17th ballot.

1860, John C. Breckinridge, 56th ballot.

1864, George B. McClellan, 1st ballot.

1868, Horatio Seymour, 23d ballot.

1872, Horace Greely, indorsed.

1876, Samuel J. Tilden, 2d ballot.

1880, Winfield S. Hancock, 2nd ballot.

1884, Grover Cleveland, 2d ballot.

The 1860 convention that nominated Breckinridge balloted 55 times at Charleston, S. C., then adjourned to Baltimore, June 18, when Breckinridge was unanimously nominated on the first ballot. The "bolters" met the same day and nominated Stephen A. Douglas on the first ballot. The name of Pierce, in 1852, first appeared on the 35th ballot with 15 votes of Virginia. Lewis Cass and James Buchanan were the leading candidates on most of the 45 ballots, but at no time did either have a majority even of the convention, while a two-thirds vote was required to nominate.

STATE NEWS.

A late Boyd county Grand Jury returned 149 indictments.

There are two post-masters in the State with salaries of less than one dollar a year.

The drouth is injuring the growing crops to an alarming extent. Tobacco and forward corn especially.

Rice P. Scobee, of Clark county, had 400 acres in wheat. It took him seven days, with three machines to cut it.

The wheat crop in Madison county is reported as the largest for years forty bushels to the acre being an ordinary yield.

A fine stream of Blue Lick water has been found on the farm of John C. Dean, near Harrodsburg, at a depth of 135 feet.

Many of the Franklin county farmers cut their wheat before it was fully ripe, and as a consequence it has rotted in the shock.

It is estimated that 5,000 acres of tobacco will be raised in Bourbon county this year. Ten years ago not ten acres were raised.

Fears are entertained that tobacco is being cultivated to such an extent that the value of the wood will fall to an unremunerative point.

There is complaint from some of the farmers that some kind of worm is working on the root of the tobacco and many of the plants dying—Owen News.

Threshers have begun work, and wheat is yielding handsomely. Some of it has been damaged in the shock, in consequence of it being cut too green.—Owen News.

J. M. McClain has threshed three fourth of an acre of wheat that made forty bushels. He claims that he can beat any man in Henry or Shelby counties in tobacco. He thinks he has the best tobacco crop in the State. He will begin cutting this week.

Representative Kehoe, of Maysville, has announced himself as a candidate for Congress in that district. Mr. Kehoe has twice served Mason county in the Legislature, is a hard worker and will make an efficient member of that august body should he be elected.

Wheat in many localities is turning out beyond the expectations of farmers. J. H. Hunt had a 55 acre field which averaged 36 bushels, S. B. Redmon made 28½ bushels, Ed Louis 26 bushels and Thos. Goff had 32 acres which averaged 32 bushels.—Clark County Democrat.

Last Thursday Dock Riley, who lives on Short Creek, Pendleton county, while stacking wheat fell on a wooden fork that was leaning against the stack, which penetrated the lower part of his body nine inches and broke off. He is now reported out of danger.—Williamstown Courier.

One of the largest suits for slander ever brought in this county is that brought in the common Pleas Court last Saturday by James Chorn against Obediah Dooley for $20,000. Chorn charges in his petition that Dooley falsely, maliciously and with intent to annoy, embarrass and injure him, by circulating the report that he, the plaintiff, owed $30,000 to the Bean estate, and large sums to others, and had sold a half interest in a hundred and fifty acres of his own land to his nephew in order to defraud his creditors, and that such report had put him to great inconvenience and trouble. Both parties to the suit are held in the very highest esteem by the people of this county and are prominent farmers of the same neighborhood, and the unpleasant relations which will be engendered by the suit will be deeply regretted by the community.—Clark Co., Democrat.

We are authorized to announce
DR. JAMES S. BROWN,
of Warsaw, as a candidate for the State Senate, from this, the 23d Senatorial District, subject to the action of the Democratic party.

Live Stock Market.

CINCINNATI, July 28, 1884.

CATTLE.

The receipts light. The market has been dragging since our last report until to-day, owing to light receipts there was an advance of 10 to 15c in prices on good grades, but slow on common.

Best Shippers	6 to 6¼
Good Shippers	5 to 5¾
Extra Oxen	5 to 5¾
Fair to good Oxen	4½ to 5
Extra Butchers	5 to 5½
Common to Fair	3¾ @ 4
Roughs and Scalawags	2½ @ 3

COWS.

Extra	4¼ @ 4¾
Common to Fair	3 @ 3½
Fair to Good	3½ @ 4

BULLS.

Extra	3 @ 3½
Fair to good	3½ @ 3¾
Heavy feeding steers	4½ @ 5¼
Good stockers	4 @ 4½

COWS and CALVES.

The supply is more than equal to the demand, consequently are dull at the following prices:

Common	18 @ $25
Fair to good	30 @ $40
Choice	45 @ $55
Extra	$60
Jerseys	50 @ $90

VEAL CALVES.

Best	6½ @ 7¼
Common	4½ @ 5½

HOGS.

Select butchers, heavy shippers	5 00 @ 5 75
Good lights, 180 to 220	5 50 @ 5 75
" " 150 to 175	5 15 @ 5 50

SHEEP.

Receipts have been very liberal the past week, and buyers were slow to take hold owen to bad advices from the eastern markets, and the result was a very dull market at low prices, but to-day the feeling was a little better, especially on stock sheep.

Best weathers	4¼ @ 4¾
Fair to good	4 @ 4¼
Ewes and wethers mixed	3½ @ 4
Stock wethers	2¾ @ 3¼
Common	75 @ 1 00

LAMBS.

Lambs declined about $1 per 100 from the first to the last of last week, but to-day there was a better feeling.

Best shippers	4¾ @ 5 50
Fair to good	4 @ 4½
Lights	3 @ 3¾

L. KUPPERSCHMID,

—42 WALNUT STREET,—

Lawrenceburg. - - Ind.

Always keeps on hand a large assortment of WATCHES, CLOCKS, JEWELRY, &c. Repairing Watches and Clocks a specialty. Also, agent for the

Rockford Watch Company.

Which manufactures the finest movements made, and they are used by all railroad men.

—Give Me a Call.—

TIME CARD OF THE

MAYFLOWER.

LEAVES PETERSBURG

For Lawrenceburg at 6[illegible]; 9½ A. M., and 11½ A. M.; at 2 P. M., and at 4½ P. M.

LEAVES LAWRENCEBURG

For Petersburg and Aurora at 8 A. M., 10 A. M., and 12 M.; at 2½ P. M. and 6 P. M.

LEAVES PETERSBURG

For Aurora at 8½ A. M., 10½ A. M.; at 1 P. M., and 3 P. M.

LEAVES AURORA

For Petersburg and Lawrenceburg at 9 A. M. 11 A. M.; 1½ P. M. and 4 P. M.

ELIHU ALDEN, Master.

NOTICE.

Sealed Proposals will be received at the office of the Rabbit Hash and Gunpowder Creek Turnpike Company, at Rabbit Hash, Ky., until the 30th of August, 1884, for the construction of a macadamized turnpike road from Rabbit Hash to Joseph Riddell's, according to specifications now on file with Wilsons & Riddell, at Rabbit Hash, Ky.

Proposals will be received for each section, separatly, or for the whole route.

The company reserve the right to reject any or all bids.

SOLON STEPHENS, Sec'y.

Master Commissioner's Notice.

Merit Sullivan's admr Plff. vs Henry Sullivan &c., Dfts. } In Equity

Persons having claims against the estate of Merit Sullivan, deceased, must present them, properly proven, to the undersigned at his office in Burlington, Ky., on or before September 15, 1884.

W. L. RIDDELL, M C B C C

Notice of Incorporation.

Notice is hereby given, that Thadius C. S. Ryle, Joseph Riddell, Solon Stephens, G. L. Smith and J. J. Stephens, have associated themselves together and become incorporated for the purpose of constructing a road on the macadamized (turnpike) plan from Rabbit Hash, following the old Rising Sun and Union graded road as near as practicable to near Gunpowder creek; thence up the said creek the most practicable route to the Middle creek and Big Bone road near Joseph Riddell's.

The name of the said corporation is the Rabbit Hash and Gunpowder Creek Turnpike Road Company.

Its principal place of business shall be at Rabbit Hash, Boone county, Kentucky.

The business of said corporation shall be the constructing, maintaining and operating a turnpike road over the route before described herein, connecting the said points given.

The amount of capital stock, $25,000, to be divided into shares of $25 each, and to be paid on calls of the directors.

The corporation to commence June 7th, 1884, and to continue for 25 years.

The affairs of the corporation to be conducted by a president and four directors, to be elected on the 1st Saturday in August, 1885, and on same day every year thereafter. The present president and directors will serve until their successors are elected.

The corporation shall at no time be indebted beyond $1,000.

Private property is to be exempt from corporate debts.

THADIUS C. S. RYLE, JOSEPH RIDDELL
G. L. SMITH, SOLON STEPHENS
J. J. STEPHENS.

REPORT OF THE CONDITION OF THE Farmers & Traders National Bank AT COVINGTON,

In the State of Kentucky, at the close of business, June 30, 1884.

RESOURCES.

Loans and discounts		$569,718 91
U.S. Bonds to secure circulation 4 per cent		50,000 00
Furniture and Fixtures		4,668 91
Premiums paid on Bonds to secure circulation	$10,437 50
Less am't previously charged to profit and loss	2,437 50	8,000 00
Due from approved reserved agents	$80,481 08
Due from banks and bankers	24,839 82
5 per cent. fund with U.S. Treasurer	2,250 00
Cash on hand	41,158 78	148,729 68
		$781,117 50

LIABILITIES.

Capital stock paid in		$300,000 00
Surplus fund	$6,000 00
Undivided profits	17,485 41	23,485 41
Circulation		45,000 00
Fund to pay tax on circulation		222 30
Due individual depositors	$385,434 94
Due banks & bank's	26,974 85	412,409 79
		$781,117 50
Undivided profits remaining January 1, 1884		$14,480 40
Gross earnings, for 6 months ending June 30, 1884		19,897 20
		$34,377 70

DISPOSED OF AS FOLLOWS:

Current expenses	$ 5,669 99
Tax on circulation	222 30
Dividend No. 3 of 3 per cent	9,000 0)
Credited to surplus fund	2,000 00
Balance to undivided profits	17,485 41	$34,377 70

J. L. SANDFORD, Cashire.

Election Notice.

BOONE COUNTY COURT.

REGULAR TERM, July 7, 1884.

Numerous Legal Voters (20 in number) of the Beaver Lick Voting Precinct, of this county, having petitioned for the holding of an election on the first Monday in August, 1884, for the purpose of taking the sense of the legal voters therein, on the proposition whether or not spiritious, vinous or malt liquors shall be sold therein, it is therefore ordered that the Sheriff of Boone county be and he is hereby directed to hold said election at the time and place above indicated. Said Sheriff, in his action herein will be governed by the law authorizing this proceeding. The fees were deposited as required by law.

A copy—Attest: M. T. GARNETT, Clerk.

In pursuance of the above order, an election will be held at the usual voting place in the Beaver Lick precinct, on the first Monday in August, 1884, for the purpose of taking the sense of the legal voters therein, on the proposition whether spirituous, vinous or malt liquors shall be sold therein. J. R. CLUTTERBUCK, S. B. C.

COMMISSIONER'S SALE.

Boone Circuit Court, Ky.

John A Kendall's Adm'r, Plff } Notice of sale in equity vs
John A Kendall's heirs, &c., Defts }

By virtue of a judgment and order of sale of the Boone Circuit Court, rendered at the April term thereof, 1884, in the above cause, the undersigned will on Monday, the 4th day of August 1884 at 1 o'clock p. m, or thereabout (being county court day), proceed to offer for sale at public auction, to the highest bidder, on a credit of 6 and 12 months equal installments, at the Court-house door in the town of Burlington, the property mentioned in the judgment to wit:

Near Burlington, Boone county, Ky., bounded on the North by the lands of Mrs Lucy Rogers on the West by the road leading from the East Bend road to Gunpowder Creek, on the South by the dower of Mrs Mary E Kendall, and Junns Delph, on the East by Samuel Pope.

Or sufficient thereof to produce the sums of money so ordered to be made. The purchaser will be required to give bonds with approved security, for the payment of the purchase money, to have the force and effect of a judgment, bearing legal interest from the day of sale, according to law. Bidders will be prepared to comply promptly with these terms. Amount to be raised by sale $2,940 00. Bonds payable to the undersigned.

W L RIDDELL, M C B C C

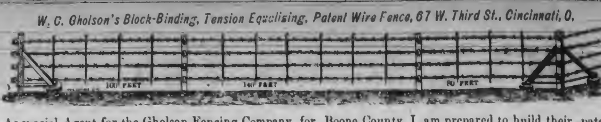
COMMISSIONER'S SALE.

Boone Circuit Court, Ky.

W. E. Anderson, Plaintiff,
Against } Notice of sale in Equity.
Duly Masters, &c., Defendants.

By virtue of a judgment and order of sale of the Boone Circuit Court, rendered at the April term thereof, 1884, in the above cause, the undersigned will, on Monday the 4th day of August, 1884, at 1 o'clock p. m., or thereabout, (being County Court) proceed to offer for sale at public auction, on a credit of 6 months, at the Courthouse door, in the town of Burlington, the property mentioned in the judgment, to wit:

Lying in the town of Constance, beginning at a stone on the bank of the Ohio river, lower corner of Duly Masters' lot; thence with a line thereof s.20 1-4w. 90 1-4 poles to a stone, another corner of said lot in John Hood's line; thence with said line n. 69 1-2 w. 61 7-11 feet to a stone in said line; thence n. 20 1-4 e. 90 1-5 poles to a stone under the river bank witnessed by a stone in the line on the band; thence s. 70 e. 61 7-11 feet to the beginning, containing 2 acre and 26 4-11 poles. It will be offered in two lots, one north and one south of the road and then as a whole, the bid or bids making the most money will be accepted.



The purchaser will be required to give bonds with approved security for the payment of the purchase money, to have the force and effect of a judgment, bearing legal interest from the day of sale, according to law. Bidders will be prepared to comply promptly with these terms. Bonds pay able to the undersigned.

W. L. RIDDELL, M. C. B. C. C.

WITTENBURG COLLEGE, Springfield, Ohio.

For young men and women. Four courses—Classical, Scientific, Literary and Ladies' Preparatory and Normal departments. New building Spacious grounds. Teachers of experience. Expenses low. Students going home and returning travel at reduced rates. Fall term begins Sept. 4th. For catalogue containing full details address The Secretary of the Faculty.

W. C. Gholson's Block-Binding, Tension Equalising, Patent Wire Fence, 67 W. Third St., Cincinnati, O.

As special Agent for the Gholson Fencing Company, for Boone County, I am prepared to build their patent fence at any time. This is the cheapest and best fence in use. It needs no talking up, as it is fast selling itself wherever it is introduced. Any number of wires can be used.

28-1y-84. G. C. GRADDY, Bullittsville, Ky.

CLEARING SALE!

To make room for Fall Stock I have reduced Custom-Made Suits 20 per cent. and on ready-made Men's, Boys' and Children's Clothing 25 per cent. for Cash only, until August 20.

H. F. BLASE,
540 Madison Street
COVINGTON, - - - - KY.

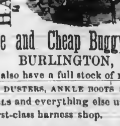
BARGAINS IN

Milline'y Goods!

ALL LADIES' HATS, BONNETS AND FEATHERS NOW LEFT OVER WILL BE SOLD AT

Less Than Half Price

(Original Price.) in order to close the season. Broad-Brim Hats, called the "Cartwheel," will be closed out at 30c. each; Large Bushy Tips, three in a bunch, 88c. a bunch, worth $1 75. All other Hats and Bonnets at the same great sacrifice.



MILLINERY DEPARTMENT,

at COLTER'S,

Rising Sun, Ind.

A. M. ACRA,

—DEALER IN—

HARNESS  SADDLES

Fine and Cheap Buggy Harness.

BURLINGTON, KY.

I also have a full stock of BUGGY WHIPS, LAP DUSTERS, ANKLE BOOTS and TROTTING BALLS and everything else usually kept in a first-class harness shop.

REPAIRING A SPECIALTY.

—Give Me A Call.—

SOUTHERN EXPOSITION

LOUISVILLE,

Opens August 16th. Closes October 25th, 1884.

15 ACRES UNDER ONE ROOF.

TWO CONCERTS EACH DAY

By Cappa's and Gilmore's, the most famous bands of the world.

Largest and Finest Display of Machinery in MOTION ever witnessed anywhere.

LOWEST RAILWAY RATES EVER GIVEN IN THE STATE.

ART BUILDINGS,

CONTAINING THE CHOICEST PICTURES IN AMERICA.

Ten works of Kentucky's great sculptor, Joel Hart, the best possible collection. One hundred counties in Kentucky will make exhibits, displaying products which will demonstrate this State's tremendous capacities and future greatness. An occasion for Kentucky pride and glory—KENTUCKY TRIUMPHANT.

AN IMMENSE LIVE STOCK EXHIBITION

Presenting at one time in line over $1,000,000 worth of horses, comprising all the sires that have made Kentucky famous. The exhibit will surpass in extent the Royal Stock Show in London, and present to the visitor the grandest, completest, and most magnificent Stock exhibit the world has ever witnessed, and a sight that can not be duplicated in the world.

BENNETT H. YOUNG, President. J. M. WRIGHT, General Manager.

WM. COLTER,

—DEALER IN—

Clothing, Boots, Shoes, Hats, Caps, Millinery Goods, Cloaks, Etc.

JOB LOTS OF ABOVE A SPECIALTY,

We are just now devoting our entire energy to making preparations for the ensuing season, and can promise to call your attention to a stock of Boots and Shoes, Rubber Goods, Men's and Boys' Ready-Made Clothing, Ladies' Cloaks, and Wraps, Millinery Goods, Ribbons, Mens' Hats, Buck Gloves, &c., in which, for real solid and genuine Bargains, we challenge competition. We intend to lead the market in this section much more than we have ever done before, which we can at once prove to you at your first inspection. Have already bought over 500 Overcoats, over 300 Suits, 1,000 pairs of Gloves, over 70 cases Kip Boots, 16 cases Mens' Hats and Caps, all grades. And we are not asleep if it is hot. The above line of Goods is kept in the lower half and 2nd floor of our Mammoth House. We are slashing down prices on all Summer Goods now, as we do not carry any Goods over. Thanks for past favors. Respectfully,

Wm. COLTER, Rising Sun, Ind.

CENTRAL UNIVERSITY,

COLLEGE OF PHILOSOPHY, LETTERS, AND SCIENCE, RICHMOND, KY.

Next Session will open Wednesday, September 3d, 1884.

ADVANTAGES.—A FULL FACULTY of able and experienced instructors. Comprehensive course of study and thorough instruction. Completeness of buildings and apparatus.

Social Influence.—The community is distinguished for its refined culture and hospitality, and young men find homes in the BEST families. Not a Saloon in the city.

Healthfulness of Location.—Richmond is at an elevation of more than 500 feet above the Ohio river, and free from all malarial influences.

Accessibility.—Richmond is the geographical centre of the State, in the heart of the Blue Grass region, and is within a few hours by rail, of Louisville, Cincinnati, Knoxville and Chattanooga.

Moderate Expenses.—Board in the New Memorial Hall, lighted by gas and heated by steam—an elegant, comfortable home—$110 per annum for everything except washing, and in the best families from $3 to $4 per week. Total necessary expenses for the ten months, from $150 to $240.

For full information and catalogue, apply to L. H. BLANTON, D. D., Chancellor.

GEORGETOWN COLLEGE 55th Annual Session begins Sept. 1st. Old and tried. Situated in the famous "Blue Grass" region unrivalled for beauty and health. Charming grounds, and shady groves. Prices low for first-class college. Full Faculty. Complete course. Degrees of B. S., A. B., and A. M. conferred. Before deciding send for catalogue to the President

R. M. DUDLEY, D. D. GEORGETOWN, KY.

ELECTION NOTICE.

An election will be held in each voting precinct in Boone county, Kentucky on Monday the 4th day of August, 1884, for the following offices: Judge of the Superior Court for the Third Superior Court District to serve for the unexpired term of Judge Richard Reed, deceased. Sheriff of Boone county. Constable in each district, and one Justice of the Peace in Florence district. J. R. CLUTTERBUCK, S. B. C.

July 7th, 1884.

NOTICE.

The heirs of Maria Beemon, deceased, are hereby notified that I will be in Burlington the first Monday in each month, (County Court day) to pay them their distributable shares of said decedent's estate.

JONAS ROUSE, Adm'r.

For Sale!

75 high grade sheep, 65 ewes, remainder yearling bucks, all cross of Oxford and Southdown, also the lambs of this season. Will sell worth the money. They are sound and all right. Will divide them to suit buyer. W. O. KIRTLEY, Bullittsville, Ky

SCIENCE-HILL

An English & Classical school for girls.

FOUNDED 1825 BY MRS. TEVIS.

Aims to give its pupils elements of a complete education. Faculty selected from best Eastern Colleges. Terms reasonable. Send for catalogue. W. T. Poyntur, D. D., Principal, Shelbyville, Ky.

LUMBER.

Goe. M. Bedinger & Co.,

Erlanger, - - Ky.

We keep constantly on hand all kinds of Lumber, Laths and Shingles. Also Builder's supplies of all kinds.

—Come and see Us.—

may 9-tf

OPIUM and WHISKY HABITS cured at home without pain. Book of particulars sent Free. B. M. WOOLLEY, M. D., Atlanta, Ga.

A. L. Brown,

THE HATTER,

Cor. Pike and Washington Streets
COVINGTON, - - KY.

Has always on hand a large variety of Men's, Boys' and Children's Hats, and prices GUARANTEED to be as low as the lowest.

Gents' Furnishing Goods a Specialty.

GOLD for the working class. Send 10c for postage, and we will mail you free, a royal, valuable box of sample goods that will put you in the way of making more money in a few days than you ever thought possible at any business. Capital not required. We will start you. You can work part the time only. The work is universally adapted to both sexes, young and old. You can easily earn from 50 cents to $5 every evening. That all who want work may test the business, we make this unparalleled offer; to all who are not well satisfied we will send $1 to pay for the trouble of writing us. Full particulars, directions, etc., sent free. Fortunes will be made by those who give their whole time to the work. Great success absolutely sure. Don't delay. Start now. Address STINSON & Co., Portland, Maine.

$66 a week at home. $5 outfit free. Pay absolutely sure. No risk. Capital not required. If you want business at which persons of either sex, young or old, can make great pay all the time they work, with absolute certainty, write for particulars to H. HALLETT & Co., Portland, Maine.

A PRIZE. Send six cents for postage, and receive free, a costly box of goods which will help you to more money right away than anything else in this world. All, of either sex, succeed from the first hour. The broad road to fortune opens before the workers, absolutely sure. At once address, TRUE & Co., Augusta, Maine.

AGENTS wanted for The Lives of all the Presidents of the U. S. The largest, handsomest, best book ever sold for more than twice our price. The best selling book in America. Immense profits to agents. All intelligent people want it. Any one can become a successful agent. Terms free. HALLET BOOK Co., Portland, Maine.

HANOVER COLLEGE,

Fifty-second year begins Sept. 10, Classical and Scientific courses, with Preparatory Department. Open to both sexes. No saloons. Expenses small. Location healthful. For catalogue address President FISHER, Hanover Jefferson County, Indiana.

VIGOROUS HEALTH FOR MEN. TESTED FOR 5 YEARS. [illegible]

HARRIS REMEDY CO. MFG. CHEMISTS. 306 N. 10th St. ST. LOUIS, MO.

NOW IN USE—36,989: [illegible]

W. J. RICE, CARPENTER & BUILDER, BULLITTSVILLE, KY.

Is prepared Raise or Move EITHER LOG or FRAME BUILDINGS On Short Notice, And at the Lowest Possible Figures.

$3-tf Your orders respectfully solicited

THE COMPLETE HOME. [illegible]

INCORPORATED UNDER THE LAWS OF MISSOURI.

CENTRAL MEDICAL & SURGICAL INSTITUTE OF ST. LOUIS, MO.

SUCCESSORS TO DR. BUTTS' DISPENSARY. OFFICE & ROOMS, No. 920 LOCUST ST.

CHAS. L. LABARGE, M. A., Pres't & Physician in Charge. NELSON CHESMAN, Treas. & Business Manager.

This Institute has ample facilities and an experienced Faculty. While it succeeds to a large business, which has been established for years, it will aim to extend its medical and surgical practice, giving skilled and scientific treatment to CHRONIC DISEASES of the Head, Spine, Lungs and Air Passages, Heart, Liver, Stomach and Bowels, Rheumatism, Dyspepsia, Consumption and Asthma. BLOOD IMPURITIES, inherited or caused by impure association, Scrofula, Fever Sores, Ulcers, etc. DEFORMITIES of the Limbs, Spinal Curvature, Wry-Neck, Diseases of the Joints, Piles, Fistula, Rupture, etc. WEAKNESS and wasting disease in old and young men, also all diseases of the genito-urinary organs. FEMALE irregularities and weakness, causing pain in the back or side, etc. [illegible]

HARTER'S THE ONLY TRUE IRON TONIC

FACTS REGARDING Dr. Harter's Iron Tonic.

It will purify and enrich the BLOOD, regulate the LIVER and KIDNEYS, and RESTORE THE HEALTH and VIGOR of YOUTH! [illegible] LADIES [illegible] DR. HARTER'S IRON TONIC IS FOR SALE BY ALL DRUGGISTS AND DEALERS EVERYWHERE.

TUTT'S PILLS

TORPID BOWELS, DISORDERED LIVER, and MALARIA.

From these sources arise three-fourths of the diseases of the human race. [illegible] ANTIDOTE TO MALARIA. Sold everywhere, 25c. Office, 44 Murray St., N.Y.

TUTT'S HAIR DYE.

GRAY HAIR OR WHISKERS changed instantly to a GLOSSY BLACK by a single application of this DYE. Sold by Druggists, or sent by express on receipt of $1. Office, 44 Murray Street, New York. TUTT'S MANUAL OF USEFUL RECEIPTS FREE.

For A Business Education Attend the Commercial College Of Kentucky University, Lexington, Ky. [illegible] WILBUR R. SMITH, Lexington, Ky.

TESTED BY TIME. STRONG'S PECTORAL PILLS IN SUCCESSFUL USE FOR HALF A CENTURY. [illegible] C. E. HULL & CO. 18 Cedar St., N. Y. City.

FOUND AT LAST. THE ANIMAL SAFE GUARD. [illegible] C. F. BROSEKE, Justice of the Peace, Falmouth, Ky.

WRIGHT'S INDIAN VEGETABLE PILLS FOR THE LIVER And all Bilious Complaints Safe to take, being purely vegetable; no griping. Price 25 cts. All Druggists.

MARRIAGE AND HEALTH GUIDE. [illegible]

FREE! RELIABLE SELF-CURE. [illegible] Address DR. WARD & CO., Louisiana, Mo.

PISO'S CURE FOR CONSUMPTION. CURES WHERE ALL ELSE FAILS. [illegible]

KENTUCKY UNIVERSITY, LEXINGTON, KY. [illegible] ROBT. GRAHAM, President of the College of the Bible.

WASHINGTON & LEE UNIVERSITY, LEXINGTON, VIRGINIA. Instruction in the usual academic studies, and in the professional schools of Law and Engineering. [illegible] Session opens Sept. 18. [illegible] G. W. C. LEE, President.

LAW SCHOOL OF WASHINGTON AND LEE UNIVERSITY, GEN. G. W. C. LEE, President. [illegible] address CHAS. A. GRAVES, Prof. of Law, Lexington, Va.

Local News.

That was a glorious rain.

Monday is County Court and election day.

Sheriff Clutterbuck was quite sick a day or two last week.

Dr. Cowen, of Rabbit Hash, spent last Sunday in Burlington.

Next Saturday there are picnics at Florence and Walton's Grove.

Richard and E. E. Utz took six barrels of extracted honey this season.

The dust has kept all the women in town in a bad humor this month.

Last Thursday and Friday the heat was great and much complained of.

It is feared that the drought has greatly injured the town's crop of dog-fennel.

Mittle Acra is making a set of fine buggy harness for exhibition at the Aurora Fair.

No Blaine and Logan nor Cleveland and Henkricks clubs have been organized in Burlington yet.

"Chris," another beneficiary at the Poor-house was consigned to his last resting place last week.

For the Democratic barbecue near Lexington yesterday, 150 sheep, 60 hogs and 10 beeves were to be cooked.

Around the chess board and on the croquet ground are where many leisure moments in Burlington are whiled away.

Capt. A. G. DeJarnett, Commonwealth's Attorney for this district, has gone to the Hot Springs in Arkansas, for his health.

Bellevue is trying to raise money with which to build a public cistern. It is a public institution which the town is greatly in need of.

J. J. Lillard, one of the directors of the Lawrenceburg Fair, was in town the other day distributing the premium list of the fifth annual Fair.

The social event of last week, at this place, was at W. E. Piper's, Friday evening, where music, ice-cream and other delicacies were enjoyed by the guests.

Doc Bonlurant and his brother have bought a new steam thresher, which they have in operation in the Bellevue bottoms.

Blackberry canvassers have been numerous, but, owing to the scarcity of berries, the result of their efforts have been very unsatisfactory.

On the 25th of next month Elder H. W. Elliott will commence a protracted meeting at the Christian church in Bellevue. All are invited to attend.

The Commissioners for this county, appointed for the Southern Exposition are requested to meet at the Circuit Clerk's office in Burlington next Monday.

From the vociferation of the firm of Westbay & Crisler we are convinced they have successfully harvested between 1500 and 2000 acres of oats and grass.

The following officers are to be elected next Monday: Judge of the Superior Court in this district; Sheriff, Superintendent of Public Schools and Constable.

We are going to petition Congress for an appropriation to have Burlington moved down on the river. So much fishing talent should not be so far from a river.

Burlington base-ballists got too much interested in the Louisville club early in the season to organize a local nine. However, they will lose no money by the failure.

J. J. Berkshire was in town again the other day buying all the empty goods boxes he could find, and it is supposed he is trying to get a corner on that article.

Charles Fowler sold his interest in the right to erect the Chambers Lightning rods in this county, to his partner W. E. Piper, who sold it to a couple of young Metzingers.

From the best information that can be collected, it appears that J. R. Clutterbuck will be re-elected to the office of Sheriff, next Monday, by an overwhelming majority.

H. J. Foster visited Judge Major at Worthville last week to obtain a certificate of qualification entitling him to an election as Superintendent of schools for this county.

W. B. Roberts has sued the Louisville and Nashville Railroad in the Gallatin Circuit Court, for $25,000 damages sustained from being run into by a train at Sparta last March.

Master Gaines Rice is transcribing an index to deeds in the County Clerk's office for Mr. Garnett. The index contains 40,000 names, to say nothing about a much larger number of figures.

The southern part of the county was visited by fine and badly needed showers last Saturday afternoon and evening. The margin of the favored district extended to within a mile of Burlington.

We are requested by the Split Rock tourists to say that those who contemplate an expedition to that place, to place no reliance on those old timers, who try to make out that shade and water are scarce as there is plenty of both.

Detachment No. 2. of the fishing club visited Laughery island last Saturday night with their sein, and scooped a large lot of very fine fish, catching a "herd" of 18 buffalos, the smallest of which weighed 13 pounds and the largest, 22 pounds. A lot of fine perch were also captured.

The day has come when to leave the grave of the departed one unmarked by a nent stone, is not suffered by even those in the most ordinary walks of life, and all can be pleased in both design and price by Huschart & Co., of Lawrenceburg, Ind. John Beall, of Hebron, is their agent.

James Acra was sent to the penitentiary from Rising Sun last week, for two years for beating, burning and robbing old man Smith. If Smith was treated as badly as it was reported, the sentence was very light, and Acra deserved hanging. Warner, who was under arrest as an accomplice, was acquitted, Smith not being able to identify him.

Thirty-two years ago Mr. Hunt, who lives on John E. Walton's farm near here, left Germany, at which time one of his friends owed him eight dollars which he could not collect. The other day he received a letter from the man in Germany inclosing an International Money Order for $8, in satisfaction of the debt which had been almost forgotten by Mr. Hunt.

The Sunday-school convention held by the Baptists at Bellevue last Friday and Saturday was largely attended. John S. Huey was elected chairman and Oscar Huey, secretary. The exercises were attentively listened to by an audience that crowded the house to its utmost capacity notwithstanding the oppressive heat. Each day the clever people of that section (and that includes all of them) furnished an abundance of everything that was good to eat, and at noon a table was spread and everybody invited to help themselves, an invitation which was universally accepted, much to the pleasure of those who furnished the fine dinners.

Essays were read and short speeches made by Revs. J. A. Kirtley, R. E. Kirtley, E. N. Dicken, J. S. Huey and others during the meeting. The Superintendents of the various schools reported the work progressing very satisfactorily, while the interest in the schools is increasing.

The fishing club turned out in full force last Thursday, and went to the river at North Bend, where they were joined by a large crowd of the natives, and seining and cooking and eating fish was the order of the night. They arrived at home about 7 a. m., Friday morning looking like they had been out on a six months campaign in the mountains. J. F. Blythe and O. H. Conrad distinguished themselves as cooks by the light of the moon on a cloudy night.

NOTES.

Joe Reed ate fish till scales are now growing all over him.

Hitter worked till tired, when he burrowed into the sand and went to sleep.

Spoon-bills and carp are favorite fish with the Burlington boys, at least that is the only kind of fish they ever bring home with them.

The cooks say they want more light on the subject next time, as they are not certain they removed all the feathers before cooking the fish.

Last week you referred to the exodus of the Split Rock picnic party, and we now report their coming in and the doings of the parties in the interim.

The party arrived at Split Rock at 10 a. m., and after a hasty unharnessing of steeds, and scattering of bridles and traces, et cetera, and hanging up baskets on the ground—principally by my ladies fair, and a final restoration to order out of said chaos aforesaid by the captain and hostler, and his hauling the wonderful one-horse chaises into the dense shade out of Old Sol's hot as endorsed blue blazes, the party rushed down to the old Ohio, "rocked ribbed and ancient as the sun." Mark you, we insist on the words, "rushed down." It occurred to the captain, although he kept eternal silence, that each member of the party, in making the descent to the river and rock, should have borrowed their steed's backing-straps; for but for friendly trees to check the "rushing-on," the captain firmly believes he had not survived to shove this weighty account from his heavy quill.

Well, we are at the water's edge, and have been literally baptized with delight ravished with the monster rock eternal, and the scenery sublime. Here were great conglomerate rocks, rivaling in dimensions the largest houses in Boone county, split in two, and out of these splits, ranging from one to ten feet wide, grow trees that barely reach to the top of these over-hanging rocks, although a hundred feet high. An occasional cave is seen, from the mouth of which may be seen the ember traces of the fisherman's fire. Here overhanging ledges hold in fast embrace bush and beech, fern and flower. There a large bowlder has rebelled against its cemented guard, tired of the prison of ages, and escaped to the Split Rock valley enchanted. Here, indeed, may one linger and learn—he may wander and wonder, but, at last, must know that the fashioning hand of this rude temple rare, was not puny man's, but that of the Architect divine.

We look at our watch and find that the hour hand has run the full dial, although the 1 pm. hour seemed never so short, and although "it is not good for man to live by bread alone," something reminds us without voice dissenting, to turn from views sublime to viands substantial and baskets bursting. A short journey and ascent steep, but appetites sharp and feet sure and determined, safe soon to luncheon spread, that was tempting to epicurean and fit for a king, bring us. The menu was salads savory and fat chickens fried; beef in steak and beef dried; cake mountain, jelly and ice; pies of peach and plum, and pickles spiced with spices Arabian. An appropriate after-dinner grace would have been "thanks to the fulness and fatness—for the glee and gladness and good things without number," for it was even so. The chicken bones shouted: "Ye are Methodist." Empty cake and pie plates: "Ye are hungry school children," while harmless bottles and water-bucket proclaimed: "We are empty, ye are surely not thirsty."

It is 2 o'clock. After ham and wine came hammock and swinging, and laughter and lounging and song enchanting, and mirth spontaneous and unrestrained like that of children.

It is 3 p. m. and we are hitching up; 3½ and we are homeward bound; 7 and all at home, glad—without regret of the day's experience, long to be remembered as a joyous day in "ye other days."

ONE OF THE PARTY.

Mr. and Mrs. George Gordon lost their infant child Monday night. They have the sympathy of the entire community.

THE RICHWOOD KILLING

John Tirney Killed by Thos. Garrity.

Stabbed Seven Times in the Heart and then Disemboweled.

The Murderer at Large.

Last Wednesday between 6 and 7 p. m. John Tierney and Thomas Garrity, two section hands on the railroad, quarreled and fought near Richwood station, in front of Hon. Reuben Conner's residence, and a few yards southeast of the Section House. The assault grew out of a quarrel over a valise. Tierney, a large, muscular man, had been to Walton during the day, and had been drinking, returning to the Section House late in the afternoon. Rumor says that Tierney and Garrity had quarreled on Monday or Tuesday, and that Garrity avoided him, fearing trouble; that Tierney went to Walton on Wednesday looking for Garrity and threatening him, but not finding him. Soon after supper Garrity left the Section House and walked southeast on the railroad, and when near a small pond in front of Mr. Conner's gate, he was attacked by Tierney with a heavy bolt of iron, with which Garrity was struck over the head, cutting him severely. Some of the men at the Section House hearing the quarrel, ran to separate them, but only succeeded after Tierney had been fatally stabbed several times in the heart, and disemboweled. Tierney appears to have been the aggressive party, and the prevailing opinion from the best information is that Garrity did the fearful deed in self-defense. Garrity is a small Irishman, and reputed to be not quarrelsome. He left immediately after the killing and has not been arrested at this writing. An inquest was held by Esquire Curley, of Walton, late last Wednesday night. Your reporter gives the substance of what he learned about the affair, and it conforms to the facts much closer than other papers' accounts of the same. Tierney was not shot as reported in Saturday's Enquirer, nor were these men put off of the hand-car to fight, by the fellow laborers as was reported by some papers.

NEIGHBORHOOD NEWS.

Bellevue.

The dry weather seriously effected all kinds of growing crops.

Wheat threshing has commenced, and, so far as we have heard, the yield is good.

The Sunday-school convention at this place last Friday and Saturday was largely attended.

A crowd of Burlington fish eaters spent Saturday night on the island. They had fine luck.

Mont Balsly came near handing in his checks the other day, from an attack of cholera morbus.

Mont Balsly's drug-store building will soon be completed, and ready to receive the large stock of goods Mr. B. will buy.

The river is so low that the "Grant" can not reach the wharf at Rising Sun, being afraid to attempt to cross the bar at the head of the channel.

It was with difficulty that a game of ball could be kept going Saturday afternoon. Too many of the boys were accompanied to the church by their girls.

The farmers co-operative store at this place contemplates closing out this fall. This store has been doing a large business, and, no doubt, has paid the stockholders well.

A large slice of McVille disappeared last week. We have reference to the saw-mill which was moved from that place to Aurora, where the owners reside. Our neighbor has Bellevue's sympathy in her griefs over the loss.

Petersburg.

Mrs. Henry Meyers spent last week with friends at Florence.

W. J. Coyle and family, of Pittsburg, Pa., are visiting friends here.

W. R. Gordon is building a nice residence in the Norris addition.

Dr. W. H. Terrill has gone to the mountains of Ky., for his health.

The farmers are all busy harvesting. The wheat is good in this locality.

I. N. Gordon has just finished an addition to his residence, and it helps the looks of that part of town.

Col. Holabird says the distillery is progressing finely and he will have it completed by first of October.

Stott Bros., have moved into their new building and have added a first-class stock of Groceries to their stock of Dry Goods.

Several of Burlington's fair ladies passed through here, one day last week, on their way to the celebrated Split Rock to spend the day picnicing.

J. E. Porter, who has been away for three years in the interest of a Pittsburg Bridge Company, is here for a few days shaking hands with his many friends.

Any person wishing to enter in the hotel business, this would be the place to strike, as travelers have to stop with private families, and some times have to leave the town for want of hotel accommodations.

Everett Hall, who has been in Mo., for some time, passed through here last week enroute for his home. While in Mo., he visited Mr. Walton and family, late of this county. He says Mr. W's family are well pleased with the West.

Union.

I sent you a very newsy communication last week, which, as it did not appear, I presume did not reach you.—[It came too late.—EDS.]

Miss Emma Wilson is visiting Mrs. Nannie Thornton.

Mrs. B. L. Corbin is visiting Mrs. Anna Graves, of Florence.

Mrs. Lida Conner is entertaining Miss Kate Ashbrook, of Covington.

Miss Dollie Haven, of Covington, is ruralizing at Hon. L. W. Lassing's.

Miss Janie Dickey is at home from a visit to Louisville and other points.

Miss Virginia Taliaferro is in Scott county, as the guest of Mrs. Herndon.

Capt. L. C. Norman and family are here to remain the rest of the summer.

Miss May Cropper, of North Bend, is visiting her aunt, Mrs. Addison Huey.

Mrs. Thomas and daughter, of Covington, are the guests of Mrs. D. Johnson.

P. Taliaferro and daughter, Mrs. J. D. Smith, are visiting friends at Morning View, Kenton county.

We have just been blessed with splendid rains and the farmers greet each other with beaming smiles.

Mrs. Belle F. Bonnie and children, of Louisville, are spending the summer with her father, Joel B. Frazier.

Our prayer meeting has been changed from Wednesday evening to Sunday morning which is hardly a popular change.

Miss Janie Crouch returned to her home near Warsaw, Sunday, after a visit of several weeks with her sister, Mrs. Jimmie Huey.

We have recently been treated to a series of serenades in the form of shrieks and oaths, which culminated, last Friday night, in a taking apart of wagons, unhinging gates, bursting barrels of salt and other disgraceful performances. Who the boisterous offenders are is not exactly known. It is palpable that the cause was whisky, and the question arises, where do they get it?

Florence.

We have had a glorious rain and the prospects of the farmers have brightened up.

I don't want to forget the improvement in the RECORDER, which entitles the proprietors to much credit as well as to many new subscribers.

Judge L. H. Dills honored us with a couple of visits in the last few days, and we understand done some talking in the right direction. At least it had the effect of causing the saloon-keepers to lock up and respect one Sabbath, and the old soakers to stop and think. We are going to have a sort of decent place here now. "Forbearance has ceased to be a virtue," and the people have gone to work. It would be well for some other houses that follow their business on Sunday to take a hint as this will not be tolerated any longer.

The death angel has passed over this neighborhood, and two victims have fallen under his withering touch within the past week. The first, Mrs. Swetnam, wife of Bartlett Swetnam, died at their home in Kenton county, a few miles from here, on Thursday the 24th inst., after an illness of several weeks. Deceased was a good wife and mother, and the place made vacant by this stroke will be hard to supplant. To soothe the trouble, however, there is one thought; there is no little children to care for; only two daughters, both married and live close to the old homestead. The remains were interred in Florence cemetery on Friday.

Scarcely had our faces turned from this sad scene, when the news comes to us of another death. This time a young plant, fresh with vigor of the morn of life, Miss Alice Rice, daughter of Thos. Rice, near Mt. Zion, and grand-daughter of W. E. Carpenter. Deceased was the eldest of several daughters, being about 25 years of age, a beautiful lady and possessed of all the accomplishments that most adorn her sex. Indeed, I might say that she was the center of the household; the one to whom the rest looked for advice, contributing to their joys and sharing their sorrows. 'Tis said that death loves a shining mark and this surely was verified in this case. Alice was a true Christian and a member of the Luthern church. She was confined to her bed about two weeks with typhoid fever, and on Friday last her suffering ceased. The funeral services were conducted by Rev. G. N. Buffington at the family residence on the Lexington pike, on Sunday morning, and the remains deposited in the family burial ground near Mt. Zion.

GAS OMETER.

Beaver Lick.

Local Option and Al K. Hall are going it in Beaver precinct at present. It seems that it is hard to tell who'll be who.

Ed Williams is suffering with the mumps. Ed says they are a big thing about the neck, especially at this time of the year.

William Piatt, our turnpike contractor on the B. B. & H. road, has resumed operations on said road and expects to complete it before the weary winter sets in.

John Cleek, Geo. Ossman and several other leading farmers here are preparing to build large frame barns. Our farmers are greatly improving their farms by erecting convenient out buildings on them.

Rev. William Riley failed to preach at the Baptist church here last Wednesday night per appointment. Ministers should not disappoint their congregations except under circumstances too unavoidable for anything.

Last Wednesday B. K. Sleet drove out of this neighborhood several hundred choice lambs. He had engaged them early in the season at good figures, but believes the extra quality of the "little innocents" will bring him out all right.

R. D. Howlett and his tenants had some difficulty in their farm business, which they aimed, one day last week, to settle by law. Esquire Rouse however, would not give them a hearing, as it was a civil case, until his regular court day in September.

Geo. Cayton, one of the Springs' most genial and philanthropic citizens, has built on the public grounds, one of the neatest and most pleasant rustic bath houses that has ever been erected at the Springs. It is known as "Cayton's Rustic," and to get a bath there now reminds one of going to mill; every fellow has to wait his turn.

Mr. Daughters, candidate for County Superintendent of Public Schools, was among the voters here last week. He and Foster should have made an active campaign and addressed the people in each precinct upon the importance of education, and let their views on the subject be known. The new law places considerable responsibility upon this officer, hence one competent and efficient should be elected.

BILL LLOYD.

Plattsburg

Dog days are now with us again.

Mr. Waterloo serlie, we catch on.

J. M. Thompson has topped all of his tobacco.

A deputy revenue collector was in town one day last week.

Egbert Nichols and wife, of Ludlow, spent last week among relatives in this vicinity.

Miss Loulie Hendy has purchased a new organ and Miss Sallie Barnett a new piano.

George Voshell and wife will start on a visit to friends in Kansas City, Mo., in a few days.

Dr. E. W. Duncan, of Bullittsville, made a very pleasant call in our burg last Friday morning.

It is rumored that M. F. Wingate and Andy Crosser will start a butcher shop here in the near future.

It is said that the American people can be humbugged easier than any race upon the earth—looks that way.

Dr. Robert Grant has had his eye operated on by Dr. DeBeck, of Cincinnati, and we are glad to say is getting along nicely.

Jno. J. Rucker had a field of timothy so thick and heavy that he had to let the fence down so they could have room to shock it—Reference, Uncle Henry Snyder.

J. W. Whitaker's new steam thresher is in the neighborhood and is doing a land office business. Wheat is yielding about 20 bushels to the acre, considerably above an average.

One of Thos. Eggleston's little boys took sick about 10 o'clock, one night last week, and before Dr. Grant could get there from Burlington, died. Sick about 2 hours, supposed to be cholera morbus.

There will be a basket meeting in the grove near here, the fourth Sunday in August, when the dry bones of the Woolper valley will get a shaking such as never was before. Bro. Froh will conduct the meeting.

Wade Hampton hasn't taken the stump yet, but his pap can raise his hat louder and halloo higher for Cleveland and Hendricks than anybody. [We knew you would get it backwards, but are excusable, PAP.—EDS.]

Bishop Schramm came to town very unexpectedly one day last week, and everybody was glad to see him and flocked about him like flies around a leaky molasses barrel in August. The Bishop is good company, and don't you forget it.

The boys have cleared up the bottoms near the school house and converted it into a ball park. The boys call their club the Carlisles. Now if the Speedwells want to cross bats with the Carlisles, let them know and they will be accommodated to a game.

Any mail? said a friend of ours last Thursday. Nothing but the RECORDER we said, and when handed out he declared it wasn't the RECORDER, judging from its size, but he was convinced that we were right before he left town, and when he left he said, "that looks like business."

Last Tuesday evening we visited the town of Petersburg and was astonished to see so many improvements going on. J. Frank Grant has his new store nearly finished, and when completed it will be one of the finest in Northern Kentucky. The new distillery is now towering high above any of the other buildings in the town. The Stott boys have moved into their new building, and Billy was busy unloading a barge of coal. Along in the evening H. P. Stephens, of Burlington, put in his appearance in town, and it was not many minutes till it seemed that Burlington's entire female population had emptied itself into town. It was hot and dusty and the ladies made a raid on Sam Buchanan's soda fountain, and it was very funny to see Bishop assisting Sam in waiting on the ladies. We took this all in from a window on the 2d floor of J. Frank's store.

The School Commissioner has a postal from the Auditor saying he hopes to be able to send him the balance of the money due the teachers of this county, by the last of this month. The Superintendent notifies him that the per capita, both white and black, this year, will be $1 55.

Mrs. Rucker, mother of John J. Rucker, was thrown from her buggy last Saturday, and had her limb badly broken just below the knee. The horse, some 20 years old, and considered perfectly safe, took fright at a pan of water thrown from a house on the road near Gainesville, and upset the buggy, throwing her over an embankment.

James Monroe and Phillip McGiven indulged in a row in Walton last Sunday, in which the former attempted to knife the latter, but failed. Monroe was arrested and tried before Esquire Curley and a jury for assault and battery, and his punishment fixed at 25 days imprisonment and $50 fine, and Monday Constable Moxley lodged him in jail at this place.

This locality's time came at last, and Sunday night a gentle rain commenced falling, and continued till the ground was thoroughly wet. The corn crop has no doubt, been considerably injured by the long dry spell, but there will be no scarcity of that article this fall. The pastures are revived and stock, which has been doing so good for several weeks will again commence taking on fat.

As will be remembered Ed Goway of Florence, in the early part of the wool season, offered a special premium of $5 for the best wool purchased by him during the season. After an impartial examination of all wool purchased, the premium was awarded to Mr. Milt Willhoit, his wool (72 fleeces) being the best purchased.

ED GOLWAY.

Personal Mentions.

[If you have friends from a distance visiting you or expect to be away from home on business or pleasure, let us have the item for this column.]

Miss Pinkie Cowen is visiting relatives at Hebron.

Miss Rosa Dempsey is visiting at Cedarville, Ohio.

Mrs. M. S. Rice has been seriously ill for several days.

Mrs. M. S. Rice, of Covington, is visiting Mr. Benjamin Rice and family.

Everett Hall returned from Missouri last Saturday. He considers it a fine farming country.

Mose Rice and Miss Emma Brown, of Covington, were the guests of Benj. Rice and family, Sunday.

COMMISSIONER'S NOTICE.

Michael Carey's Adm'r., Plff. vs } in equity
Michael Carey's widow, &c. Defts

Persons having claims against the estate of Michael Cary, deceased, must present them, properly proven, to the undersigned at his office in Burlington, Ky., on or before September 15, 1884.

W. L. RIDDELL, M C B C C

County Directory.

OFFICERS.

Assessor—G. M. Riley.
County Surveyor—W. E. Vest.
School Commissioner—D. M. Snyder.
Coroner.—Dr. A. A. Murat, Constance.

COURTS.

CIRCUIT COURT meets the 2d Monday in April and first Monday in October. P. U. Major, Judge; W. L. Riddell, Clerk A. G. DeJarnette, Commonwealths Attorney; W. L. Riddell, Trustee Jury Fund.

COUNTY COURT meets the first Monday in every month. L. H. Dills, Judge; S. W. Tolin, County Attorney. M. T. Garnett, Clerk; J. R. Clutterbuck, Sheriff, T. W. Finch and W. T. German, Deputy Sheriffs.

QUARTERLY COURT meets the first Monday in March, June, September and December. The officers of the County Court preside.

COURT OF CLAIMS meets the first Monday in November.

MAGISTRATES' COURTS are held in March, June, September and December, as follows:

Bellevue—M. B. Green, first Saturday, and T. H. Sutton, third Monday. J. M. Moody, Constable.

Burlington—E. H. Baker, Thursday after first Monday, and Oscar Gaines, fourth Monday. R. H. Sandford, Constable.

Carlton A. G. McConnell, Wednesday after second Monday, and B. H. Ryle, Saturday after third Monday. Walter Ryle, Constable.

Petersburg—Jos. Hensley, Wednesday after first Monday, and L. A. Loder fourth Saturday. Geo. Comer, Constable.

Beever—W. M. Rouse, Friday after the third Monday, and

Union—M. C. Norman, Thursday after third Monday, and H. Bannister, Thursday after second Monday. A. D. Riley, Constable.

Hamilton—F. M. Howlett, Tuesday after second Monday; W. W. Garnett, Wednesday after third Monday. R. L. Roberts Constable.

Walton—T. F. Curley, second Friday, S. T. Johnson, Tuesday after second Friday. W. C. Moxley, Constable.

H. C. CHAMBERS,
AUCTIONEER
FLORENCE, - - - KENTUCKY.

CONNER YACER
Attorney and Counselor at Law,
FLORENCE, - KENTUCKY

ROBERT B. REED
Attorney at Law.
OFFICE AT - UNION, KY

F. RIDDELL. H. P. STEPHENS.
RIDDELL and STEPHENS,
ATTORNEYS at LAW
BURLINGTON, KY.
Office over Dudley Rouse's Store.

W. E. VEST,
COUNTY SURVEYOR
WALTON, KY.
Is prepared to do all kinds of surveying. All orders sent him through the mail to Walton, will receive his prompt attention.

E. E. IGOE,

Resident Dentist,
Rising Sun, Ind.
WITH
J. P. Ulrey.
Monday and Tuesday at Rising Sun. 2nd Wednesday and Saturday at Aurora, Ind.; Thursday and Friday at Lawrenceburg.

DR. A. B. HARRYMAN,

Resident Dentist.
Office over Post-Office.
AURORA, INDIANA.

J. J. Landram. G. G. Hughes.
LANDRAM & HUGHES.
ATTORNEYS at LAW.
Will practice in the Boone Circuit Court and the Court of Appeals. Prompt attention given to Collections, on application to G. G. Hughes, Burlington, Ky.

S. W. TOLIN,
ATTORNEY AT LAW
BURLINGTON, - - KY
Office in Court-house on 2d floor.
Will manage litigation in any of the Courts of the State, contracts and other legal instruments drawn up at reasonable rates. A prompt and studious attention given to business intrusted to my care. A trial solicited. 12-1y

AURORA MARBLE AND GRANITE WORKS, Aurora, Ind.
Will have constantly on hand
Marble and Granite Monuments,
Italian & American Headstones, &c.
I am ready to do all kinds of Stone Work on short notice and at low prices. Hoping to receive the patronage of Boone County, I am respectfully,
F. W. KASSEBAUM.

INSURE AT HOME
The Farmers' Mutual Fire
INSURANCE COMPANY
Of Boone County
Is now completely organized and receiving applications for insurance.
Its Rates are Lower
Than those of any other Company, and it gives the farmers of Boone County a
HITHERTO UNKNOWN ADVANTAGE
In keeping their property insured.
EVERY FARMER IN THE COUNTY
should take a policy at once.
J. A. GAINES, President, Burlington, Ky. | J. H. WALTON, Secretary, Constance, Ky.
R. RANDALL, Treasury.
DIRECTORS.
LEORAN GAINES, A. J. UTZ.
JNO. STEPHENS.
OSCAR GAINES, Agent. | C. L. CRISLER, Assessor.

Good Pay for Agents. $100 to $200 per mo. made selling our Grand New History, Famous and Decisive Battles of the World. Write to J. C. McCurdy & Co., Cincinnati, O.

GREAT CLEARANCE SALE
—OF—
Spring & Summer Goods
—AT RISING SUN, INDIANA.—
COLTER, POWELL AND OWNBY'S,
Ginghams 7½ cents, worth 10 cents; Satteens 7½ cents, worth 12½ cents, Suitings 7½ cents, worth 15 cents. Lawns 5 cents, worth 12½ cents. Calicoes 5c. worth 7c. Buntings 15c. worth 30c. Aberdeen Mixtures 7½, worth 35c. All Summer Goods at prices in proportion to the above. Remember we rule the prices, and when Goods can be
SOLD LOW, WE ARE THE ONES TO SELL THEM
A large line of Ironside Cottonade can now be bought at 15 cents per yard, worth in any market 25 and 30 cents. Seamless Sacks, holding 2 bushels, 20 cents a piece, or $2 25 per dozen.
Colter, Powell & Ownby,
RISING SUN, INDIANA.

C. S. CRISLER,
Burlington, Ky,
WAGON MAKER AND
—MANUFACTURER OF—
ROAD WAGONS, SPRING WAGONS, HARROWS, PLOWS, WHEEL BARROWS
AND ALL KINDS OF WOOD WORK.
Also the Manufacturer of W. M. Conner's Patent Right Hay Conveyor.
Saws Filed & Sharpened.
Please call and examine my prices before calling elsewhere.

JAMES S. WAYNE, President. JNO. L. SANDFORD, Cashier
CAPITAL $300,000.
FARMERS AND TRADERS
NATIONAL BANK.
Covington, Kentucky.
DIRECTORS.
James S. Wayne, M. C. Motch, Sam Hind, E. J. Hickey, E. J. Green, J. S. Matson, J. H. Mersman, J. L. Sandford, L. H. Dills, F. P. Helm, L. C. Stephens.
The general operations of banking transacted upon the most favorable terms, collections made on all points in the United States.
The Business and Accounts of Farmers are Especially Solicited by this Bank. dec. 20-6m

UNDERTAKING.

We keep Constantly on Hand all sizes of
Burial Cases and Caskets.
And having just received a beautiful
NEW HEARSE,
Which can be had at a reasonable price when desired.
PRICES GUARANTEED LESS THAN CITY PRICES
DAVIS BROS., - - HEBRON, KY.

City Flouring Mills
RISING SUN, INDIANA.
FLOUR EXCHANGED FOR WHEAT OR CASH. THE HIGHEST MARKET PRICE PAID FOR GOOD WHEAT.
mar7-tf23 J. W. Talbott.

VANDERBILT UNIVERSITY. NASHVILLE, TENN.
Cost of grounds, buildings and apparatus, $500,000. Productive Endowment, $700,000. Six Departments. Tuition in Literary and Scientific Department, $65.00 (in Theological, free. Special attention given to Civil Engineering. Session opens September, 1. For Catalogue (FREE) Send to Secretary.

KENTUCKY MILITARY INSTITUTE. At Farmdale P. O., Franklin Co., Ky., six miles from Frankfort. It is the most healthful and beautiful location in the State. Lit by gas as well as heated by steam. A full and able College Faculty. Expenses as moderate as any first-class college. Fortieth year begins September 1st. For catalogues, etc., address COL. R. D. ALLEN, Supt.

CUMBERLAND UNIVERSITY LEBANON, TENN. has had near Half a Century of unsurpassed success. More than TEN THOUSAND Young men from the South and West have been educated here. Preparatory, Collegiate, Theological and Law Schools fully equipped. Begins Sept. 1, 1884. Catalogues sent free on application. Address N. Green, Chancellor.

Now is the time To Subscribe for The Recorder.

Only $1 50 a Year.

THE RECORDER.

RIDDELL & HALL, Publishers.

BURLINGTON, : : KENTUCKY.

THE EMPTY CRADLE.

The cradle is empty now,
For gold-haired baby May
No more in it is sleeping
Throughout the livelong day.

As we see it standing there,
In the dingy garret room,
We think of the laughing baby
As a white rose all in bloom;

And we think of the painted toys,
And the lullaby refrain,
And the pearly dimpled knuckles,
And the tiny counterpane;

And the mellow soft blue eyes,
That twinkled all the while,
And the little school of dimples
That played about her smile.

The summer may come again
With its clouds as white as curds,
And its silver fingered daisies
And its songs of happy birds;

But what are the songs to us?
And what is the cloudless day?
And the silver-fingered daisies
When we haven't our baby May?

Yet she hears all the summer birds
And the crickets and katydids—
She's in Pawtucket, the mother
Of a dozen blooming kids.
—N. Y. Sun.

A COSTLY WEDDING GOWN.

When Ada Hurd wrote her friend Mrs. Dean asking her to buy a wedding dress in Paris for her, she had, of course, no idea of the bother the commission would give the lady. A favor? Well, yes; but Ada was sure she should be quite willing to do the same for any one else, and with all those lovely shops to choose from, and Janie providentially just her size, so that there could be no trouble about the fit—and what woman would not like to fuss over a trousseau? And what a distinction to say her gown came straight from Paris, not to mention that of course it would be cheaper, for the Morgans had bought lovely things the year before for almost nothing, and tilled her ears with the tale of bargains, till she expected a marvel of elegance for a modest sum. As for the sending—well, one does not live five years in Paris without making friends, it is to be hoped, and with the fifty thousand returning pilgrims of the next autumn, of course dear Janie could easily find some one to bring the dress.

But Mrs. Dean, reading her letter before the open fire of her pretty salon, had another opinion. Buy a wedding dress, indeed, and send it over by some one so as to avoid the Custom-house!—was ever such impertinence? Really, long as she had known Ada—and they had played together in the years before she married Richard Dean and came with him to Paris, where he had charge of the foreign branch of his father's business—she had not expected so heavy a tax on her friendship. She had filled smaller commissions once or twice for gloves and laces, and she had offered the year before—she remembered it ruefully now—to send a black silk dress to her elder sister. And just here it came to her that the Hurds were Elinor's next neighbors, and had been specially kind to this pet sister in a long illness the year before. They were nice people, and Ada was a pretty girl, and naturally elated at her engagement to Ned Morgan. She wanted everything as handsome as possible, since she was marrying into a family above her own, and she had not too much money, probably, for the Hurds were not precisely in the hundred thousands. And it was pretty certain to make a coolness between the families if she refused, and—and—in brief, "the woman who hesitates is lost." Mrs. Dean abandoned her first intention of throwing the letter into the fire and leaving Ada to think the mails remiss, and picked it up again to read her directions.

"'Something soft and rich'—velvet and satin and silk are all that—'and with lots of lace on it'—delightfully vague that—'and cut in whatever is the very latest style, only with a nice long train, and fitted on you.' Well, we used to wear each other's gowns, but who knows it now—and she's willing to trust my taste for all details, as if I wanted such a responsibility. And upon my word, now I think of it, she hasn't sent any money!"

She threw down the letter again, ready to give up the whole business, but she was not a woman to do things by halves, and she had a liberal check by her now, a gift from her father toward a prospective refurnishing of their apartment. She first endured and presently embraced the idea of devoting a part of it to the sacred cause; but she shrugged her shoulders as she put the letter away. "I'm a fool for my pains; but Ada knew when she wrote that I would be just so good-natured. I dare say she thinks it will be pure pleasure to buy her a wedding dress, and she'll expect a tremendous bargain."

And this thought made, indeed, half the misery of the commission. She could not buy outright of Madame Atoutprix, who would take all the responsibility off her mind. She must wait for an occasion at the Louvre to get her material, and hunt up a cheaper woman, who was stylish but not renowned. She worried a deal more over the lace than if it had been for herself, and was distracted after she bought the silk because the dressmaker feared it would crack. Then there were all the pretty finishings to be added—gloves and fan and handkerchief and silk stockings—and altogether she wasted six precious afternoons over the business, and was drenched finally in an unexpected shower, where no cabs were at hand, in the suburb where she had found her dressmaker. But it was sent home at last, and Mrs. Dean paraded in it one evening before her husband, half to show him how pretty it was, half to ease her conscience over the customs, for now one could swear that it had been worn.

"But I don't see what your putting the dress on has to do with that," Mr. Dean said, when in a burst of confidence she mentioned this. "And I should like to know, my dear, how you are going to get it to Ada without a heavy bill of charges."

"Oh, I shall get some friend to take it over—Mrs. Warren, perhaps. There's time enough, thank fortune! Ada don't expect to be married before Thanksgiving, she writes."

"Delightful commission to propose to Mrs. Warren!" Dick went on. "She will have more finery of her own than she can manage."

"Why, I don't know," Mrs. Dean said, doubtfully, examining the lace draperies. "She comes over so often she don't need to buy out the shops every time. The lace doesn't look as well as I thought it would, and I'm afraid Ada will open her eyes over the bill of it. But if she's not satisfied, after all the trouble I've taken—"

"Oh, but people never are," Mr. Dean said, consolingly. "They always think you might have done better by them. At least," falling back on impartial evidence, "I've heard you say so. I never tried to buy clothes for another fellow. Men don't demand such sacrifices to friendship."

"And I wish women did not," Mrs. Dean murmured, as she went into the next room to take off the dress. "I only hope Elinor will appreciate the fact that it was done half on her account, to keep the peace between her and her best neighbor. Of course they would have thought it dreadful if I had refused, and they will have no idea of what I've gone through in the bulness."

"My dear," Mr. Dean said, when after folding all the flounces and flutings away with infinite care, she came back, "just as a matter of curiosity, will Ada Hurd really pay any less for that dress than if she had bought it at home? She means to pay the duty, I suppose?"

"Why, as to that," Mrs. Dean answered, hesitatingly, "of course she will pay if she must. But if she does—well, in that case, the gain will not balance my cab fare in getting the gown. But I hope Mrs. Warren can get it through; she knows exactly how to manage."

Mr. Dean put his hands behind his head, and looked at his wife quizzically. "You women have queer consciences," he said.

"Why, Dick, the Custom-house isn't for things like these: it's for what the shop-keepers bring over to sell. Of course, if the duties weren't so abominably high, I might feel differently. Sixty per cent. is too outrageous. And I don't believe in protection, anyway. I'm a free-trader. Now, Dick, you needn't look so—so—"

"I was only wondering, my dear," he answered, "what possible connection there was between your private opinions and the law of the land. Feminine logic is beyond me. As a stupid brute of a man, I should say that in the interest of a pretty dress and friendship's sacred cause Mrs. Warren was to be asked to perjure herself. I suppose she will do it. What sacrifices women will make for each other."

"Mrs. Warren will have nothing to do with it," Mrs. Dean cried, indignantly. "Her husband will make the—the declaration for her trunks, and he won't know anything about it. Why, Dick, only last year Mrs. Marsh—and she's a minister's wife—took home things for all the parish; and Mrs. Graham duplicated all her dresses for her sister at home, and Mrs. Avon had fifteen trunks and thousands of dollars in presents. Don't you remember her on the steamer the last time we went home? She said she should give the inspector her keys and a guinea, and ask him to be careful in taking the things out, and she didn't expect to pay a cent, though she owned to having forty yards of silk in the piece in one trunk. I don't know how she got on; I was too busy over my own to see; but I always have said that the next time I went over I'd try the effect of a fee on the man who went through my things. Do you remember how he threw my dresses about, and how I found one of my fans broken afterward? Things like that make one hate the Custom-house."

"And make smuggling a sacred duty, I suppose," laughed Dick.

"It's not much to get a dress through," Mrs. Dean went on, convincing herself, if not her husband. "Mrs. Smith took over some one's diamonds a few years ago, and never knew till a gentleman came to claim the little box at Sandy Hook what was inside of it. That was asking a good deal of a stranger, I think. But you see the management is so perfectly stupid. There was that steamer chair of mine, left behind at Liverpool, and sent on by the next boat a week later. After I had signed the paper that it was two years old and had been abroad before, and paid the notary's fee, then the old thing came on to me with two dollars duty tacked on, and it only cost three to begin with, and was all used up. And that nice English girl—you remember her—who had had a dress given her in Liverpool, and partly made it on the ship, she was too poor to pay the duty they asked—but because she couldn't swear she had worn it—and so she lost her dress. No, indeed, you may say what you please, Dick: there's nothing so dreadfully wrong in circumventing a custom-house managed like that."

And it was really with a sense of virtuous honesty that Mrs. Dean called a fortnight later on Mrs. Warren to ask her to take charge of the dress.

"So sorry, my dear!" Mrs. Warren said; "but I really haven't room for my own things. I've sent for a professional packer, and I've no doubt I shall have to buy another trunk, but even then I couldn't do it."

It was only September, and Mrs. Dean had a large circle of acquaintances. Some of them, or some of their friends, would be going in the next two months. Mrs. Dean was cheerful about it; but she did feel a little as if she had an elephant on her hands when seven ladies in turn had declined her commission. Two were conscientious, and the others had their hands full already with their own commissions. Her husband told her to send it by express; and she had half a mind to, she was so bothered. But she knew that would spoil all she had done, and the Hurds would never forgive her. Finally an accommodating dame was found. Mrs. Dean did not know her; it was through the intervention of a mutual acquaintance that the arrangement was made, and Mrs. Dean felt a good deal like a fraud as she turned over her precious box and gave the stranger Ada's address. Mrs. Draper looked naughty and bored, but she could not be expected to take a deep interest in the wedding gown of a girl she had never heard of. She took charge of it to please her friend, who had social designs on Mrs Dean; but her feelings may be fancied when, safe in her hotel in New York, she took the dress out to forward, and found she had lost the address.

"I haven't an idea what it was," she said to her husband; "but it's a wedding dress, and it may be wanted at once, and anyway I can't carry it about with me. What shall we do?"

"Cable, of course," Mr. Draper said, in anything but a cheerful tone; "and, Maria, if you ever again are so foolish as to bring clothes for another woman through the Custom-house I'll never forgive you. To think of the trouble we might have got into if the inspector had found it! You couldn't have pretended, you a woman of fifty, that it was yours; and as for paying duties and trusting strangers to make it good—no, thank you. What is Mrs. Dean's address, now?"

"I don't know at all. I never saw the woman till she brought me the dress."

"Then we must send to Mrs. Grover, and have her hunt her up. I hope it won't delay us here a day or two. If she happened to be out of Paris for a few days—a pretty mess altogether!"

But Mrs. Dean was at home; the answer came at once, and Mrs. Draper relieved herself of the dress hoping it was in time for the wedding.

In time for the wedding, indeed! When that precious box came into Ada Hurd's possession a wedding was the last thing in her thoughts. How could she know when she ordered it that papa was on the ragged edge of failure, and that when the crash came, and he went under, unhappy fate would make her lose at once her fortune and her lover? For Fred Morgan, who had thought the exchange of his old name for her money a perfectly fair one, had found excuse from his engagement only a week before the gown arrived. Figuratively speaking, she bedewed it with tears, which really she took care should not fall on it; but her grief changed to dumb consternation when she took the bill out from its folds and read its appalling total. There was absolutely no money now for such follies; and what would papa say? and what could she write to Mrs. Dean? For papa had not been consulted on the commission, and they had trusted to his good-nature over the fascinating result to pay the bill.

"But it's perfectly preposterous, this bill," cried Mrs. Hurd. "Why, with express and all, it has cost nearly double what we expected. It's pretty, of course, very pretty, and if things had been as they were, and you could use it, I wouldn't say a word. I would pay every penny, though I did think it a bad bargain. But now—now it's totally impossible, and your father would be furious; and I shall go straight over to Mrs. Allen and tell her we can't take it. She can probably do something with it, and we can't, that's certain." And while her resolution was hot, she swept over to her next neighbor's with the box.

Mrs. Allen was past forty, and a great invalid. She had no daughters; she rarely went out; she had absolutely no use for this airy combination of lace and satin and velvet spread before her astonished eyes. But she was a generous woman, and she knew as well as they that the Hurds could not pay for it if they would; that indeed it was a final stroke that this symbol of her lost happiness should come to poor Ada now. What she could do with it she didn't know, but she took it at once off their hands.

"You might send it to the city to be sold," her husband suggested, "to some big dressmaker, perhaps. Of course you couldn't get its value, but you could get something."

But Mrs. Allen knew no one in the city, and had no mind to go huckstering her gown among strangers.

"I've thought of something," Mrs. Hurd volunteered, coming in next day, for the dress was really upon her conscience. "You know Minnie Wood is to be married in December, and why would she not like it? They could afford anything, and it wouldn't need much altering to fit her."

This seemed more feasible. Mrs. Allen ordered her carriage, put the box on the front seat, and drove the next day to Judge Wood's. She did not know the lady very well, and she found her task a delicate one; but when Mrs. Wood understood—

"Why, we have just ordered Minnie's dress from New York—direct from Madame Bulbul, you know. Otherwise, perhaps, we might have been glad to take it. But, now I think of it, there is Bell Bent—she's to be married some time this winter, I believe. Of course the Bents ought not to afford such a dress, but I've no doubt they would if only to outdo my Minnie." And with that idea in mind it was certainly good-natured in Mrs. Wood to remember them.

But an examination of the gown showed Mrs. Allen plainly that by no possibility could it be stretched to Bell Bent's buxom beauty. Besides, she hated the idea of that coarse girl wearing pretty Ada's lost gown. She was genuinely sorry for her unlucky neighbors, and that feeling softened her heart when she wrote her sister about it. "And as it's partly my fault," she added, "I'll take the dress off your hands. If I had had strength of mind enough to snub Ada when she mentioned that she thought of writing you, we should never have got the elephant. But I hated to seem unneighborly, and I thought you would find excuses enough. I have put the dress away, and think of labelling the box 'Mistaken Good-nature.'"

"You might give it to one of the girls," her husband suggested. The girls were a half-dozen nieces, all more or less of a marriageable age. "As a wedding present, you know. Promise it to the first one who goes off."

But Mrs. Allen shook her head. "There isn't one of them who is really able to have such a gown, and fancy the strife to get it, my dear. No, no; I shall manage something, for it's so far ahead of the style that it will be good a year or two. At the worst, I can have it dyed, and take the lace for a series of summer bonnets, though it does seem sacrilege to suggest such a fate for it."

But though the tale of Mrs. Allen's Paris gown spread gradually through the little town and neighborhood, and various maidens came to look and long, it lay still, a year after its arrival, in its box. One mamma found it too dear, and another too striking, and another's daughter it would not fit, and to another it was pointedly unbecoming. Mrs Allen grew to hate the mention of it, and her feminine pleasure in spreading it out for household admiration died away after she had done it a dozen times. But one day there came a letter announcing the engagement and speedy marriage of a favorite niece, Alice Grey. Alice was poor and pretty and clever and sweet, and she had won the heir of a fine family, and was exultant at once over her luck and her love. "Fo though it wouldn't have made any difference to me, and I should have liked him just the same if he had been a nobody, still, for one's friends, it is a satisfaction to have so irreproachable a person as Fred Raymond. And the Raymonds have been so kind, too: over it. They offered their house for a reception after the ceremony, and they proposed a great party when we came home from our trip. But I have declined both, chiefly because I don't want to dress for them. We are going to have the prettiest kind of a wedding: bridesmaids in costumes out of Sir Joshua's pictures, big hats and high-looped skirts and long mitts, you know, combining economy and picturesqueness. Only I'm afraid most people won't see it, and will think we only do it to be odd."

Mrs. Allen put down her letter and thought. She had meant to send Alice a silver service, perhaps, or all her house linen, and she knew now that this was the sensible thing to do. But there was that gown wasting its sweetness on the desert air of her best closet, and how pretty Alice would look in it! and no one could call it an extravagance if the dress was given her; and then the dear child could have her party and reception, which, of course, she wanted. And it would not affect the rest of her outfit; she was too sensible a girl to have her head turned by a lovely gown.

And so, ten days later, the little family a hundred miles away were thrown into a pleasant excitement by the coming of a letter from Aunt Elinor and a box from the express.

"How perfectly lovely of her!" cried Alice, flushing to new beauty as she read. "And to think of me in a really Paris gown! I wish now I hadn't declined the parties."

"But why can't you have them?" cried the younger sister, as she tugged at the strings of the box. "Tell Fred you have changed your mind. You know they said they shouldn't take your decision as absolute. They knew why you had to decline."

"But we must give up the morning wedding," the elder sister said, decisively, when the gown had been taken out and admired. "A dress like that shows off ten times more by gaslight."

"And my four bridemaids in Sir Joshua dresses," Alice added, a little mournfully. "I know beforehand that May Fleming and Ruth Nicol can't"

"You might take Fred's sisters in their places," Mrs. Grey suggested. "It would be a proper respect to the family. But, to be sure, they are older than you, and not so—so very good-looking. And you promised to be a rose among rose-buds, Allie."

"Good-looking, indeed!" cried the young sister. "They are horrid old maids. But—but they do know how to dress, and in the evening I daresay won't look so bad. But perhaps the others can manage it."

But Alice's foreboding was realized. Her best friend declined her office at sight of the treasure. She was a teacher, she had an invalid mother to support, and a gown to match this would be a base extravagance. Alice was fain to propose the vacancies in her guard of honor to her prospective sisters-in-law, and find what comfort she could in her sister's suggestion that the contrast between their faded faces and her fresh young beauty would be all the more striking. And besides, they all agreed that such a gown deserved some sacrifice.

Well, it had all it deserved before they were through with it. Alice had meant to have everything simple and suited to her circumstances. She had no intention of putting everything into fallals. For if the Raymonds were a fine family, and some day Fred would have plenty of money, he had only a nice salary now, and they were to begin in the Queen Anne cottage his father had given him, and hers was to furnish. But really one must have some sort of relation between things, so all the pretty and picturesque plans for the house yielded to its claims, and presently they were all pale and worn with the stitching they undertook to get things undreamed of before its coming made plain the shabbiness of their previous ideas. Mrs. Allen, who came down a week before the wedding, saw with dismay the ruin she had wrought. The talk was all of fashions and frills, of presents and parties and prinking, and temporarily it seemed that the Paris gown had changed her Puritan niece into a gilded worldling.

"You would like to see the dress on me, auntie," Alice said that first morning. "It fits almost as if it were made for me, but we have thought of altering the draperies. And papa declares the corsage is too low, but the Raymond girls say not. The Raymonds are used to everything, you know, but I've promised that you shall decide the matter."

Half an hour later she trailed down into the little parlor attended by her two sisters, each with a lamp to aid in beauty's illumination. She looked a very rose in all these draperies of palest pink and cream, and the graceful neck rising from the foam of laces was white as they. But somehow Mrs. Allen did not like the way she swept her train about, and turned and twisted and looked at herself in the small, old-fashioned mirror, and complained that really one could see nothing in such a thing.

"And I want more light," she cried. "Bring in the large burner from the hall, mamma, and, Nelly, those sconces."

And in an instant Nelly had lit them, tossing away the match as the flame broke out. She was a little excited, a little careless, and then she thought it extinguished. But it was not, and it fell—since at that very moment Alice had swept her train into a new place—on her laces. And then in an instant there was a sheet of flame, and they were all running and screaming, and Alice was on the floor, and smothered in the rug one of them had caught up, and Mr Grey had thrown a vase of flowers over her, and the fire was out.

"But, oh, papa" moaned Alice, forgetting everything even then but her dress, "how could you—how could you throw water on me? I suppose it's ruined. And oh, my arm and my hair!"

"Thank Providence," Mrs. Allen cried, "if only your dress is hurt. Such an escape! But your arm—let us see it. My poor, poor child!" For as she stripped off the blackened bits of lace and satin, she saw that the fair round arm was deeply marked by the track of the flame. One shoulder, too, and the curl at the nape of the neck had suffered; but, under the circumstances, she had suffered less than they feared.

"But my dress! my dress!" she cried again, as she looked at its ruin—"what shall I do now for a dress? And the cards out, and everybody knowing what I'm to wear, and even the flowers ordered, and no money left—"

"My dear," Mrs. Allen interrupted, as she bathed her arm, "there'll be time enough to see to all that. The burn is deeper than I thought. If your arm is well in a month, you'll do very well." And when the doctor came he confirmed this opinion.

So the grand wedding, and the reception, and the train of parties, were all off. There was nothing for it but a month of poulticing and bandaging and sitting at ease all day long, while her friends heard over and over again the tale of her escape, and mourned with her over the fate of her gown.

But she came to herself in that month. Perhaps, when she had time to think of it, the escape from a horrible death made plain to her the realities of life, which in these last weeks she had half forgotten in a whirl of vanity. Certainly, when six weeks later she was married, it was a very quiet and simple wedding, and her best friend, easily reconciled in her new trouble, was her only bridemaid.

"The best thing that ever happened to it was its burning," Mrs. Allen said to her husband. "It's been a vexation and snare from the first, and if Janie Dean undertakes such a commission—"

But Mrs. Dean had learned her little lesson long before, and her friends no longer send her orders.—Emily F. Wheeler, in Harper's Bazar.

The Fabulous Straits of Anian.

As early as 1500 a Portuguese named Gaspar Corterenl coasted along the shore of Novus Mundus (North America), and entered Hudson's Bay through the straits of the same name. Upon these he bestowed the title of the "straits of Anian," though for what reason, or what is the significance of the name, is a mystery to the present day. This he reported to communicate directly with the Inter Ocean, a body of water now known to lie more than ten thousand miles to the southwest. Even with the scant geographical knowledge of those times the idea was scouted by educated men; yet upon the maps of the period such a passage was indicated in the latitude of sixty degrees, leading indefinitely westward from the Atlantic, and variously named "Straits of Anian," "Straits of Labrador," or "Straits of Corterеal." In 1519 a navigator named Magellan, a Portuguese, who had several times visited the Indies by passing eastward around the Cape of Good Hope, sailed under the flag of Spain to search for a southern passage in the South Sea. Three years later one of his vessels returned, having entered the Pacific through the Straits of Magellan, crossed it to the Indies, and reached home by passing around the southern extremity of Africa. This voyage contributed more to geographical knowledge than any other expedition before or since. It demonstrated that America was a distinct continent, separated from Asia, on the south at least, by an ocean of gigantic proportions that the Indies could positively be reached by sailing westward, and that the world was not only a sphere, but there was a salt water highway by which vessels could sail completely around it.

The prevailing opinion that there existed a Northwest passage into the Pacific was now crystalized into a general belief. Magellan had simply passed through the straits, and was unaware of the open sea lying still further to the south, and it was many years before Dutch freebooters discovered the passage around Cape Horn. It was supposed that he had simply traversed a dangerous passageway leading through a narrow portion of the great South American continent. Just such a waterway the Straits of Anian were then supposed to be, piercing the continent from the Atlantic to the South Sea. To find it England, Spain, France and Russia vied with each other for nearly three centuries before all belief in its existence was finally abandoned.—The West Shore.

Preparing the Soil for an Orchard.

Many people do not think that an orchard needs any special care. They do not grow fruit as they grow other crops, for which they carefully prepare the soil and carefully cultivate for the purpose of making the crop better and more abundant. The orchard, in too many instances, is set out without care and never has any care afterward. It is true that an apple orchard will often do well even under such neglect, but care in the preparation of the soil and good care afterward will pay a fine per cent. of profit for all the time and labor that is expended. The subject of drainage will be the very first to present itself in the consideration of a site for an orchard. Everybody knows that wet land will not answer, and nobody would select a low wet field for an orchard site. Many times, however, a portion of a field which elsewhere is all right for an orchard, is too wet for trees, and it is folly to plant trees on that portion unless it is drained. It is of no use to think that, perhaps, they will amount to something even if they are not as good as the balance of the field will produce. Either drain or do not plant the trees; and whenever drainage is attempted for an orchard, or for other purposes, it should be thorough and systematic. No fruit grower should be content with surface drainage. Underdraining is expensive, and much more so than it ought to be, but as we have said so many times, it will pay to underdrain. On our level prairies we can hope for success in apple culture only by thoroughly draining. In many portions of the West, as we well know, the soil is often too wet to grow anything. Millions of dollars are lost every year because drainage has not yet been as extensively adopted as its merits would warrant.

Having selected the site with a view to dryness, put the soil in good condition, remembering that when the soil is not too thin, it may be plowed deep with good results. The orchard should never be set on uncultivated land; and that so many orchards have done reasonably well by setting the trees in a space dug in a pasture, is no argument that this is the way to set trees. Thoroughly cultivate the soil, and when it can be done just as well as not, cultivate it deeply, as we said before, although we do not attach so much importance to trench plowing or subsoiling as some do. The roots will penetrate anyhow, and will at least in a measure prepare the soil for the use of the tree. If there is in the ground in available shape what the tree wants, the roots will find it.

Whether or not to apply manures will depend upon the condition of the soil, and no rule can be laid down that would answer for the vast territory over which the Rural circulates. It must be remembered that trees are great feeders. If the soil is worn out, lime with clover as a green manure, will prove very valuable. If on such soils from twenty-five to fifty bushels of slacked lime are applied to the clover, it will both improve the clover, and act directly upon the soil itself. No one thing will do as much to prepare a field of comparatively poor land for an orchard as clover. Its roots penetrate deep into the earth, and disintegrate the soil besides drawing up a vast amount of hidden treasure. Wood ashes will be found valuable either when the soil is being prepared or afterward. Besides these, composts and stable manures are valuable at least in bringing up soils that are comparatively poor. If there is a necessity for planting such soil immediately, thoroughly decomposed compost, mixed with the soil, should be applied about the trees, but the entire surface of the field will also have to be manured afterward several times. Fresh stable manure should never be placed about the young tree.

Now we come to digging the holes for the trees. If the ground is well prepared, as we have indicated the holes need not be very large, either in width or depth. Some lay great stress upon wide and deep holes, but such holes are a matter of greater expense, and when they are not needed the expense should not be incurred. If the field is in grass the holes should be wide, about as wide as the field, we think. And where a few trees are to be set in grass, why, of course, make the holes large. The holes prepared, take the tree and carefully examine the roots, cutting away mats of fibers and any roots that are bruised or ragged. Now set them out, spreading out the roots carefully and packing the soil about them firmly. Then cultivate for several years.—Western Rural.

Shoes and Stockings.

Low shoes, with black or very dark blue, brown, or red stockings, will be worn out-of-doors more than they have been at any previous time. These shoes have rounded (not pointed) toes, thicker soles than are used for house shoes, and the preference with ladies who follow English fashions is for low heels, though French heels are still worn in moderation. Patent-leather remains in favor for such shoes, but will be more often used merely for the vamp, while the uppers are kid, instead of having the whole of patent-leather. These are made to lace through six sets of eyelets quite far up on the instep, or else they are cut lower and finished out with a broad tongue. Black kid linings are used by many dealers, as light linings are soon soiled by colored stockings. Slippers for the house are cut very low in front, and have their box toes more sharply pointed than shoes. What is called the slipper tie, and also the sailor tie, is a pretty slipper that laps slightly from the sides, and is tied through one or two sets of eyelets; this is liked for house slippers in the daytime.

More dressy slippers, to be worn with black silk stockings on full-dress occasions, are of kid, with a jetted medallion cut on each, or with spaces cut out in diamond shapes and beaded; these are also made of bronze kid, of white kid with pearl for brides, or of the silk or satin of the dress material. For use in bedrooms are slippers of red morocco, or of alligator skin either black or colored, or else of ecru kid. Walking boots are of French kid, or else they have patent leather vamps. Tips of patent-leather just across the toes are no longer used, as the vamp is enlarged to look like a slipper in which rests the upper boot of kid, or of colored prunella to match the dress in color, or of checked cloth, or, if for very handsome boots, the uppers are of satin Francais embroidered with jets that are finely cut. Buttoned boots are most used, though there is a renewed effort to introduce lace shoes for walking. Extremely high French heels are not put on walking boots, the toes are a compromise between the pointed and square shapes occasionally seen, the soles are light but substantial, and in every way there is a return to sensible shoes of ample size and easy fit, which give, not only comfort, but symmetry to the foot. The ecru canvas shoes remain in favor for country use.

Black stockings are still commended with dresses of all colors and all occasions. Those of silk or of brilliant lisle thread with a slight clocking on the sides are chosen in preference to more elaborately decorated stockings. Very dark navy blue, brown and red stockings are the colors most in favor; the latter are not so fashionable as formerly, but in nice qualities of English thread they wash so well that ladies are loath to give them up. Black stockings are still worn by children in preference to those of any color.—Harper's Bazar.

HOME AND FARM.

—Cold slaw is a good garnish for fried or broiled lamb chops.

—Cows eat sugar cane so greedily that every farmer should plant at least a small patch for soiling purposes.—N. Y. Herald.

—Don't have any cheap thought about butter. "Cooking butter" is a snare and a delusion when it means that with which, in its raw state, you wouldn't think of insulting the palate.—Detroit Post.

—It is said that by the following simple method almost instant relief from earache is afforded: Put five drops of chloroform on a little cotton or wool in the bowl of a clay pipe, then blow the vapor through the stem into the aching ear.

—Baking powder is preferable to yeast for cake making, although with the use of yeast less butter and eggs are required. The cake is lighter when made with baking powder, and, what is sometimes a consideration, keeps much better.—Exchange.

—A correspondent of the Fruit Recorder says he has boiled leaves and stems of tomato plants until the juice is all extracted, and finds the liquor deadly to caterpillars, flies and many other enemies of vegetation. It does not injure the growth of plants, and its odor remains for a long time to disgust insect marauders.

—The New Japan maples are now creating a good deal of interest as hardy plants for lawns. They are perfectly hardy, and grow to a height of from six to nine feet. They possess not only the extraordinary merit of having their foliage colored with the hues of Autumn the entire season, but the delicate formation of their leaves gives many of them the appearance of the most fantastic ferns. Nearly every known shade of color is found in the leaves.—Chicago Journal.

—An old farmer, in whom we have much faith, writes that clover hay is very often rendered nearly worthless by over-exposure in curing. It should be raked up and cocked within a couple of hours after cutting and let it "sweat" for a couple of days in the heaps. On the third or fourth day the cocks should be spread out, but only so much in advance of the gathering wagon that they will get about an hour's sun. Then it will hold its green color. If dried for a day or two before being raked up it gets stiff and rusty and breaks up, and there is not only great waste in cutting but a greater loss in food value, as the woody matter formed by long exposure to the sun makes the hay indigestible in proportion and correspondingly worthless.—Cleveland Herald.

Living From the Garden.

Gardeners, and above all, farmers, have no business to live meanly, or to think of themselves as obliged to drudge ceaselessly without the indulgences of other classes. One has no business to see town folks having early vegetables and berries a month before his tardy supply comes on, to be out of them in dog days before the merchants and cheap boarding house keepers in the city have begun to see the end of fresh things; he has no need to live on doughnuts and boiled dinners the year round, when others try the changes of spring lamb, fresh fish, boiled chicken salads, ducks and green peas, capons and veal till turkey time comes again. He ought not to see town homes fragrant with flowers, while his wife has only a bunch of syringa and cinnamon roses, with a tuft of asparagus, to sweeten her parlor when she thinks to pick them. What better right have rich men to sit over desserts of choice pears, plums, grapes and apricots, while he must content himself with a Baldwin apple in midwinter? Who should have a becoming home with its lawn in front, and wide borders of the richest flowers; his house, one story and small, perhaps yet hung with woodbine, wild grapes and roses against the back ground of orchard and nut trees, spreading their thinking boughs with good effect as if it were a cottage ornee, with its acres of shrubberies. Why should he not have in his garden choice of fruit for the season, strawberries, currants and gooseberries jostling each other in earliest perfection red and black cherries, golden and purple plums, plenty of black caps to make up for the lost strawberries, and grapes as soon as raspberries are over, big blanched salads and peas in succession, as well as his town neighbor who sells him groceries and cotton? Why should he not have as fine pears, peaches, winter apples and grapes at Christmas as well as the President of the horticultural society, and why should not his girls have big French roses and tuberoses as well as the solitary dahlia and China aster, which decorate the yard, and the common geranium indoors? Why doesn't he have a herb bed to make his plain dinner savory, and lavender to sweeten his sheets at night? A poor English cottager will have all these by thrift and contrivance. Why not put it in front of his house instead of behind it, and instead of making his cabbage and potatoes his main features of the place, why not screen them from the road and from sight by a belt of choice fruit trees, and have trees to shelter his cattle outside the barn fence, shutting off all that is unsightly? Why doesn't he raise plenty of fowls, pigeons, and a sheep or two on his lawn, to supply his tables, to find fertilizer for the pining garden, and yield his wife pin money, instead of paying so much to the butcher and buying salt fish by the box? Plants cost money, do they? Your wife spends enough for baking powders weekly to buy a fine tree or choice rose; instead of making good yeast bread as her folks did. She buys a shilling's worth of cheap edging for the pinafores instead of making neat hemmed ruffles, and spoils more cretonne and red cotton flannel with bad fancy work than would stock a garden year by year. Then the children must have their five and ten cents worth of candy every time one goes to the store, when fruit would be much better for them, and the money would buy flowers and flower seeds. You might have enough to stock the garden, buying groceries by the month's supply, instead of from hand to mouth, or by taking care of the tools and things you have, so as not to pay so much for repairs. I won't say anything about the fireworks you subscribed for election night, or the excursion that gave your wife a sick headache the week after, nor the jig saw or card printing press you must buy for your hopeful, because the other boys each have one and you are tired of his teasing. Nor of the horse you lost by leaving him sweating at the grocery door one cold day while you stopped just to get a pound of soda and hear what all the loungers had to say. Of course you can't have anything like the rest of folks; it is not in nature, your own nature, that you should.—Susan Powers, in Vick's Monthly.

—A man in Pittsburgh had his mother in law arrested for using his wooden leg as firewood to cook the breakfast. The Judge decided that as the complainant had eaten part of the meal he had breakfasted off his own leg, and the charge was dismissed.—Pittsburgh Post.

—Two negro women of Concordia Parish, Louisiana, recently fought a duel, the one having a revolver and the other a shot-gun. It was believed, however, that both antagonists shut their eyes during the firing, as neither was hit.—N. O. Times.

—"Bowser" Witt, a colored boy of Greenville, Va., died a short time ago, aged sixteen years. Ten months after birth his flesh began wasting away, and though he increased in stature, it was in the bones only. He grew to five feet in height, with a well-developed head and neck, but the rest of his body was strictly skin and bone. When held in front of a strong light the process of digestion could be observed in his body. He had never walked or talked. This case of atrophy elicited much interest among medical men.—N. O. Picayune.

"Mr. Brooks, near Albany, was hopelessly afflicted with Cancer. It had eaten through his nose into his mouth and throat. The time of his death was only a question of a very short time. He prayed for death, his suffering was so great. S. S. S. has had a wonderful effect on him. His improvement is so great that we all feel sure of his being perfectly cured in time."
W. H. Gilbert, Albany, Ga.

Keeping a record of the precise number of eggs laid by each particular hen is the lay-test freak.

Prominent Butter Makers.

There is no dissent from the decision of candid and capable dairymen, that the Improved Butter Color of Wells, Richardson & Co., Burlington, Vt., is the best in the world. Such men as A. W. Cheever, of Massachusetts, E. D. Mason, Vermont, Francis A. Hoffman, Wisconsin, use it, and recommend it as superior to all others.

A counter irritant—the woman who goes shopping, yet buys nothing.—Boston Globe.

No lady of refinement likes to resort to superficial devices to supply a becoming semblance of her former beauty. It is health alone that lights the countenance and brings back fresh tints to the faded cheek. If anything on earth will do this, it is Mrs. Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, which has already brought health to multitudes with whom all other means had failed.

Advertise and adversity begin alike, but they end very differently.—Chicago Inter Ocean.

"Rough on Corns." 15c. Ask for it. Complete cure, hard or soft corns, warts, bunions.

Kind words are like bald heads; they never dye.—Chicago Journal.

"Mother Swan's Worm Syrup," for feverishness, worms, constipation, tasteless. 25c

A sound reasoner—The inventor of the telephone.—Philadelphia Call.

Glenn's Sulphur Soap

Remedies all complexional blemishes, so repulsive to charming features.

A rousing demonstration—Getting a growing boy out of bed.—Boston Post.

Skinny Men. "Wells' Health Renewer" restores health and vigor, cures Dyspepsia, $1.

A grave mistake—Burying a live man.—Baltimore Every Saturday.

"Buchu-paiba." Quick, complete cure, all annoying Kidney and Urinary Diseases, $1.

An able see man—The astronomer.—Marathon Independent.

"Rough on Coughs," 15c., at Druggists. Complete cure Coughs, Hoarseness, Sore Throat.

An inn-dependent—The hotel waiter.—N. Y. Journal.

Public speakers and singers use Piso's Cure for hoarseness and weak lungs.

THE MARKETS.

CINCINNATI, July 29, 1884.

LIVE STOCK—Cattle—Common	$3 00	@	3 25
Choice butchers	4 50	@	5 25
HOGS—Common	4 50	@	5 20
Good packers	5 30	@	5 70
SHEEP—Good to choice	3 75	@	4 50
FLOUR—Family	3 75	@	4 15
GRAIN—Wheat—Longberry red		@	87
No. 2 red	85	@	86
Corn—No. 2 mixed	53	@	54
Oats—No. 2 mixed	36½	@	37
Rye—No. 2	66	@	67
HAY—Timothy No. 1	11 00	@12	00
HEMP—Double dressed	8 75	@ 9	00
PROVISIONS—Pork—Mess	16 25	@16	50
Lard—Prime steam		@ 7	25
BUTTER—Fancy Dairy	14	@	16
Prime Creamery	18	@	20
FRUIT AND VEGETABLES—
Potatoes, new, per barrel	2 00	@ 2	25
Apples, prime, per barrel	2 00	@ 2	50

NEW YORK.

FLOUR—State and Western	$2 65	@ 3	30
Good to choice	3 80	@ 6	25
GRAIN—Wheat—No. 2 Chicago	92	@	92¼
No. 2 red	97½	@	97½
Corn—No. 2 mixed	56	@	63¾
Oats—mixed	37	@	46
PORK—Mess	16 75	@17	00
LARD—Western steam		@ 7	45

CHICAGO.

FLOUR—State and Western	$3 50	@ 5	00
GRAIN—Wheat—No. 2 red	81	@	84½
No. 2 Chicago Spring	81	@	84½
Corn—No. 2	55	@	56
Oats—No. 2	30	@	30½
Rye		@	62½
PORK—Mess	15 50	@16	50
LARD—Steam	7 15	@ 7	20

BALTIMORE.

FLOUR—Family	$4 25	@ 5	25
GRAIN—Wheat—No. 2	94½	@	94¾
Corn—mixed	62	@	62½
Oats—mixed	38	@	39
PROVISIONS—Pork—Mess		@17	00
Lard—Refined		@	9¼

INDIANAPOLIS.

WHEAT—No. 2 red	$	@	83
CORN—mixed		@	50
OATS—mixed		@	30

LOUISVILLE.

FLOUR—A No. 1	$4 15	@ 4	25
GRAIN—Wheat—No. 2 red		@	84
Corn—mixed		@	51
Oats—mixed		@	31
PORK—mess		@16	50
LARD—steam		@	9½

ST. JACOBS OIL
TRADE MARK

THE GREAT GERMAN REMEDY
FOR PAIN.
CURES
Rheumatism, Neuralgia, Sciatica
Lumbago, Backache, Headache, Toothache, Sore Throat, Swellings, Sprains, Bruises, Burns, Scalds, Frost Bites,
And All Other BODILY PAINS and ACHES.
Sold by Druggists and Dealers everywhere. Fifty Cents a bottle. Directions in 11 Languages.
THE CHARLES A. VOGELER CO.,
(Successors to A. VOGELER & CO.) Baltimore, Md., U. S. A.

CATARRH

HAY-FEVER

HAY-FEVER is a type of catarrh having peculiar symptoms. It is attended by an inflamed condition of the lining membrane of the nostrils, tear-ducts and throat, affecting the lungs. An acrid mucus is secreted, the discharge is accompanied with a burning sensation. There are severe spasms of sneezing, frequent attacks of headache, watery and inflamed eyes. Ely's Cream Balm is a remedy based upon a correct diagnosis of this disease and can be depended upon. 50 cts. Sample bottle by mail 10c. Ely Bros., Druggists, Owego, N. Y.

at druggists; 60 cts. by mail.

PISO'S CURE FOR CURES WHERE ALL ELSE FAILS. Best Cough Syrup. Tastes good. Use in time. Sold by druggists. CONSUMPTION 25 CTS.

PILES "Anakesis" gives instant relief, and is an infallible cure for Piles. Price $1 from druggists, or sent prepaid by mail. Samples free. Ad. "ANAKESIS," Makers, Box 2416, New York.

BLAINE AGENTS Wanted to sell the Lives of Blaine and Logan, by J. C. Ridpath, LL. D., the eminent historian. Send 50 cts. for complete Agents' Outfit. Extra liberal terms to Agents. JONES BROS. & CO., Publishers, CINCINNATI, CHICAGO, ST. LOUIS.

$65 A MONTH and board for 3 live Young Men or Ladies in each county, to take orders for the LIVES OF BLAINE AND LOGAN. Address P. W. ZIEGLER & CO., Philadelphia, Pa.

HAIR Wholesale and retail. Send for price-list. Goods sent C. O. D. Wigs made to order. E. BURNHAM, 71 State Street, Chicago.

EASILY CURED. BOOK FREE! OPIUM HABIT DR. J. C. HOFFMAN, JEFFERSON, WISCONSIN.

A Great Problem.

—Take all the Kidney and Liver Medicines,
—Take all the Blood purifiers,
—Take all the Rheumatic remedies,
—Take all the Dyspepsia and indigestion cures,
—Take all the Ague, Fever, and bilious specifics,
—Take all the Brain and Nerve force revivers,
—Take all the Great health restorers.
—In short, take all the best qualities of all these, and the —best
—Qualities of all the best medicines in the world, and you will find that —Hop
—Bitters have the best curative qualities and powers of all —concentrated
—In them, and that they will cure when any or all of these, singly or —combined
—Fail. A thorough trial will give positive proof of this.

Hardened Liver.

Five years ago I broke down with kidney and liver complaint and rheumatism.

Since then I have been unable to be about at all. My liver became hard like wood; my limbs were puffed up and filled with water.

All the best physicians agreed that nothing could cure me. I resolved to try Hop Bitters; I have used seven bottles; the hardness has all gone from my liver, the swelling from my limbs, and it has worked a miracle in my case; otherwise I would have been now in my grave. J. W. Morey, Buffalo, Oct. 1, 1881.

Poverty and Suffering.

"I was dragged down with debt, poverty and suffering for years, caused by a sick family and large bills for doctoring.

"I was completely discouraged, until one year ago, by the advice of my pastor, I commenced using Hop Bitters, and in one month we were all well, and none of us have seen a sick day since, and I want to say to all poor men, you can keep your families well a year with Hop Bitters for less than one doctor's visit will cost. I know it."—A Workingman.

☞ None genuine without a bunch of green Hops on the white label. Shun all the vile, poisonous stuff with "Hop" or "Hops" in their name.

A CURE FOR GRAVEL,

A Common and Painful Complaint—A Statement You May Confide In.

It seems to have been reserved for Dr. David Kennedy, of Rondout, N. Y., to accomplish, through his preparation widely known as KENNEDY'S FAVORITE REMEDY, what others have failed to compass. The subjoined letter will be found of vital interest to sufferers from gravel and to the general public:

ALBANY, March 20, 1884.

Dr. D. Kennedy, Rondout, N. Y.:

Dear Sir: Let me tell you frankly that I have never been partial to proprietary medicines, as I believe the majority of them to be nothing better than methods of obtaining money from people whom suffering makes ready to catch at any hope of relief. They are mean cheats and delusions. But your FAVORITE REMEDY I know by happy experience to be a totally different thing. I had been a sufferer from gravel for years, and had resorted to many eminent physicians for relief, but no permanent good came of it. About three years ago your FAVORITE REMEDY was recommended to me. I can give you the result in a sentence: I tried it and it cured me completely. I am confident it saved my life. You can use this letter if you think best. Yours, etc.,
NATHAN ACKLEY.

Captain Nathan Ackley was for a long time connected with the Canal Appraiser's office in Albany. He is well known and writes for no purpose but to do good to others.

As a medicine for all diseases of the blood, liver, kidneys and digestive organs, KENNEDY'S FAVORITE REMEDY has fairly won its high reputation. Write, if desirable, to Dr. David Kennedy, Rondout, N. Y.

KIDNEY-WORT

THE SURE CURE FOR KIDNEY DISEASES, LIVER COMPLAINTS, CONSTIPATION, PILES, AND BLOOD DISEASES.

PHYSICIANS ENDORSE IT HEARTILY.

"Kidney-Wort is the most successful remedy I ever used." Dr. P. C. Ballou, Monkton, Vt.
"Kidney-Wort is always reliable." Dr. R. N. Clark, So. Hero, Vt.
"Kidney-Wort has cured my wife after two years suffering." Dr. C. M. Summerlin, Sun Hill, Ga.

IN THOUSANDS OF CASES

it has cured where all else had failed. It is mild, but efficient, CERTAIN IN ITS ACTION, but harmless in all cases.

☞ It cleanses the Blood and Strengthens and gives New Life to all the important organs of the body. The natural action of the Kidneys is restored. The Liver is cleansed of all disease, and the Bowels move freely and healthfully. In this way the worst diseases are eradicated from the system.

PRICE, $1.00 LIQUID OR DRY, SOLD BY DRUGGISTS.
Dry can be sent by mail.
WELLS, RICHARDSON & CO. Burlington Vt.

KIDNEY-WORT

PAPILLON

COUGH CURE.

TESTIMONIALS.

Mrs. W. K. Sidley, No. 3848 Ellis avenue, Chicago, Ill., says: "We have used Papillon Cough Cure for all kinds of coughs in our families. We have never known a case of whooping cough that the syrup failed to cure. We recommend it to every one and wish every family had a bottle of it on hand."

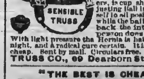
Mrs. Mary E. Richards, No. 3827 Ellis avenue, writes June 30, 1882: "I owe you many thanks for the courtesy last Saturday evening in sending me the medicine I so much wished for. I was first enabled to try your whooping cough remedy (Papillon Cough Cure), through the kindness of my neighbor, Mrs. W. K. Sidley, and it gave such great relief to my little girl that when the second child was attacked, I coveted the same relief for her. I know of no other medicine which so much mitigated a malady, generally so distressing, and feel very appreciative of my good fortune in obtaining it."

Mrs. M. D. Davis, No. 3836 Ellis avenue, and Mrs. Jas. M. Buchanan, No. 3831 Ellis avenue, also recommend Papillon Cough Cure for whooping cough; it cured their children, one an infant only a few weeks old, whom another paroxysm would have choked to death, as its life had been for some hours despaired of.

It is a harmless vegetable syrup, very delicious, and is for sale by all druggists.

IT IS NOT

A CURE ALL, but as a tonic and health renewer, and for Blood and Skin Diseases, and troubles dependent on impure or impoverished blood, Swift's Specific is without a rival.



"My baby six months old broke out with some kind of skin humor, and after being treated five months by my family physician, was given up to die. The druggist recommended Swift's Specific, and the result was as gratifying as it was miraculous. My child soon got well, all traces of the disease is gone, and he is as fat as a pig."
J. J. KIRKLAND,
Minden, Rusk County, Texas.

Our Treatise on Blood and Skin Diseases mailed free to applicants.

THE SWIFT SPECIFIC CO.,
Drawer 3, Atlanta, Ga.

N. Y. Office, 159 W. 23d St., between 6th and 7th Aves. (Philadelphia Office, 1205 Chestnut St.

CANCER INSTITUTE. AURORA ILL. Established, 1872; Incorporated, 1880. For the Cure of Cancers, Tumors, Ulcers, Scrofula and Skin Diseases, without the use of knife or Loss of Blood, and little pain. For INFORMATION, CIRCULARS AND REFERENCES, address DR. F. L. POND, Aurora, Kane Co., Ill.

THIS NEW ELASTIC TRUSS Has a Pad different from all others, is cup shape, with Self-Adjusting Ball in center, adapts itself to all positions of the body, while the ball in the cup presses back the intestines just as a person does with the finger. With light pressure the Hernia is held securely day and night, and a radical cure certain. It is easy, durable and cheap. Sent by mail. Circulars free. EGGLESTON TRUSS CO., 69 Dearborn St., Chicago, Ill.

"THE BEST IS CHEAPEST." ENGINES, Horse Powers THRESHERS SAW-MILLS, Clover Hullers (Suited to all sections.) Write for FREE Illus. Pamphlet and Prices to The Aultman & Taylor Co., Mansfield, Ohio.

TEXAS and Mexican Lands for sale. Send for bulletin. J. S. CARR, 131 Vine St., Cin'ti, O.

EDUCATIONAL.

UNION COLLEGE OF LAW. Chicago, Ill. The Fall Term will begin September 24. For circular, address H. BOOTH, Chicago, Ill.

LEARN TELEGRAPHY, or SHORT-HAND and TYPE-WRITING HERE. Situations furnished. Address VALENTINE BROS., Janesville, Wis.

SPECIAL Inducements to Young Men to Learn Telegraphy. Send for terms. Commercial and Railroad Telegraph College, Ann Arbor, Mich.

YALE LAW SCHOOL. 6 Professors, 10 Instructors. Fall term commences September 25th. For circular address PROF. FRANCIS WAYLAND, Yale College, New Haven, Conn.

WHEN WRITING TO ADVERTISERS please say you saw the advertisement in this paper.

BOONE COUNTY RECORDER.

VOLUME IX. BURLINGTON, KY., WEDNESDAY, AUGUST 6, 1884. NUMBER 40.

TOPICS OF THE DAY.

THERE is still some coolness between the most ardent Arctic explorer and the North Pole.

GREAT BRITAIN spends between $4,000 and $5,000 yearly for photographs of jail-birds.

THE discovery of natural gas reservoirs under Pittsburg makes manufacturers there rejoice, as it will save thousands of dollars in fuel.

HENRY M. STANLEY, the African explorer, is being lionized in England, and Lieutenant Greely, the Arctic explorer, is the hero of the hour on this side.

THE English is a queer language. In England a "pony" is a five pound note; in this country, a small glass of beer, in the dictionary, a small horse.

THE Italian government has been advised by its consuls to prohibit the emigration of organists with monkeys, on the ground that they give a bad reputation to Italy in foreign countries.

A PLAN for lessening the violence of storms has been submitted to the French Academy of Sciences by M. Minard, who proposes to use a great number of lightning rods elevated on telegraph poles and connected with the iron tracks of railways.

POOR RICE, the photographer of the Greely expedition, who died while on a journey to find some meat which had been cached while on the way to Lady Franklin Bay, said, as his last words: "Tell Lieut. Greely that I tried very hard to get the meat, but could not succeed."

THE public baths of Vienna are said to be the finest in the world. The building is in the heart of the city and encloses a basin 570 feet in length by 150 feet in width, and varying in depth to twelve feet. The water is renewed three times a day. The basin is divided into five baths; one is for ladies.

IN finishing cutlery the English manufacturers use almost exclusively the shank bones of cattle, the best qualities of which are so good as to be mistaken for ivory by the inexperienced eye. The United States sends to Great Britain annually about $100,000 worth of bones, hoofs and horns.

IF you think you are a prodigy of orthographic potentiality go into a Chinese laundry and learn humility of "On Hang," who spells two shirts, an undershirt, and three pairs of socks with a K wrong side up, and all the rest of your washing with half a button-hook and two or three fragments of a shattered lizard.

OUR army is to don a new uniform at the next issuing of clothing to the troops, which is in much better taste than the old one, being more sensible and attractive. A white stripe takes the place of black for the infantry in the pantaloons; the cuffs of the coat are faced with white, and the chevrons for non-commissioned officers are of gold braid.

LORD SHAFTSBURY is of the opinion that the emigration of half a million women is one of the social necessities of the times in England. The Women's Emigration Society has in the last three years sent 350 women to the colonies, and this, the Pall Mall Gazette says, is like trying to empty the Atlantic with a teaspoon.

THE rapidity of the present ocean transit is shown in the shipment of a parcel of cheese from New York, being delivered in London eight days from date of the bill of lading. This is the most rapid transit ever known, and speaks well for the mode of handling the goods at Liverpool, the port of entry, which is distant by rail 200 miles from London.

SOCIETY in Philadelphia is all torn up by the question whether a lady should recognize a gentleman while he is having his shoes blacked on a street corner. Gentlemen have taken off their hats to ladies under such circumstances, and have received the cut direct. The burden of opinion is against attending to any matter of public adornment in the open street.

THE Hindoo Bible forbids a woman to see dancing, hear music, wear jewels, blacken her eyebrows, eat dainty food, sit at the window, or view herself in the mirror in the absence of her husband, and it allows him to divorce her if she has no sons, injures his property, scolds him, "dips," smokes, or in any form makes use of tobacco, drinks spirituous or malt liquors, quarrels with another woman, or presumes to eat before he has finished his meal. There is not much woman's rights there.

FOURTEEN coops of fancy chickens arrived at San Francisco from China and are now on their way to the Zoological Gardens at London. These fowls cost $75 a piece and are the first of the kind ever sold to anyone. The birds vary greatly in size and color, but the most striking feature is the length of the tail feathers of the cocks, some of them being eight feet long. These feathers are folded in a roll and wrapped with ribbon to prevent injury while on their journey.

AN Indian opened a barber shop in an Arizona town recently. The other day while shaving a white man he permitted his mind to wander back to the days when he was roaming the forests with his tribe, and in a twinkling he had his customer's gory scalp dangling in his hand. Of course he apologized when he fully realized what he had done in his absent-mindedness, and offered to glue the scalp on at his own expense; but the white man would not listen to reason, and left his shop thoroughly disgusted with Indian barbers.

FALLING WALLS.

The United States Hotel Partially Collapses.

Several of the Inmates Buried in the Ruins—A Rotten Foundation the Supposed Cause of the Accident.

WASHINGTON, D. C., August 3.—About eight this evening, the back building of the United States Hotel, on Pennsylvania Avenue, fell with a terrible crash, burying in the ruins a number of people, estimated between six and twelve persons. The number of guests in the building at the time of the accident did not exceed fifty, and most of these had taken supper and were out at the time of the accident. The main building of the hotel is five stories, and covers a frontage of about one hundred and fifty feet. This remains intact. Up to ten o'clock but two persons had been rescued, both colored chambermaids, who were in a dying condition. The piteous cries of a little boy for help could be heard, and active hands were vigorously at work to rescue him. The hotel was leased by a Mr. Beldan, whose wife is in the ruins. The hotel was built thirty years ago, and during the war it did a flourishing business. Subsequently, because of its down-town location, it was patronized as a second-class one. Various causes are ascribed for the accident, the general one accepted being that the foundation rotted away and the tumble was the result. Had the accident happened two hours earlier forty persons who were at supper would have been covered in the ruins. Up to midnight four persons, Mrs. Belden, the boy Snooks and two colored women, Addie Fletcher and Annie Dickson, had been taken from the ruins. Miss Belden was very badly bruised and mangled, and it is feared can not survive. The others were considerably bruised, but will, it is thought, recover. There are probably three or four persons still under the debris, and they may not be reached for several hours yet. If not already dead, they can hardly survive until help comes to them.

DIDN'T WANT TO BE ALONE.

A Child Climbs out of a Fifth-Story Window to Call Her Grand-Mother.

NEW YORK, August 3.—Mrs. Murphy, with her little grand-daughter, Christine Collins, six years old, occupies apartments on the fifth story of the tenement building, 239 West Third street. Yesterday afternoon the little one laid down on the lounge and soon was fast asleep, and the grand-mother improved the opportunity by going to the grocery for some tea. She locked the door and started out. Mrs. Murphy hurried quickly to the store, and was soon back in the neighborhood of her home. As she approached the place a spectacle was presented that made her tremble with fright. Away up on the fifth floor, hanging from the window sill of her rooms, she beheld her granddaughter, while over five hundred people stood in the street shouting to the little one suspended above. Mrs. Murphy fainted and fell to the pavement in a swoon. A number of children recognized the woman and ran toward her. She had the key of her room in her hand, and this was quickly grasped by the onlookers. Policeman Moloney happened to be passing during the excitement. He rushed up the stairs until the room door of the Murphys was reached. He was about to break the door in when the key was handed to him. A moment more and a pair of strong hands grasped the tiny limbs of the little one that clutched on to the window-sill. The child was then lifted into the room amid many expressions of relief from the spectators below. An examination of the window was made. It was seen that the child, by lowering herself feet first, could just get a foothold on the lintel of the window underneath. In this way she got a purchase that sustained her weight, and by clinging to the window sill she kept herself from falling. The little one, though she easily reached this position, could not have got back to the room without assistance. If she had once looked down upon the excited multitude below, or was compelled to remain a minute longer in her perilous position, there is little doubt that she would have let go her hold. Christine said that she wanted to get out and found the door locked. She said she was afraid to remain alone in the room, and was going to call her "granny" out of the window.

Singular Fatal Accident.

WHEELING, W. VA., August 3.—A fatal and distressing accident occurred near Fish-creek, in the lower end of Marshall County, yesterday afternoon. Theodore Gatts had been hauling in hay and putting it in his barn. He had come down from the loft and left a pitchfork. He sent his son, a small boy, up after it. The boy, instead of bringing it down, threw it. The tines of the fork struck the father just above the ear, and, penetrating the brain, caused instant death. Deceased was a widower with a family, and was a farmer universally respected.

The Dread Scourge in Italy.

ROME, August 3.—Several cases of cholera reported to-day in various parts of Italy. There have been many disorders at Borgo San Dalmazzo, the inhabitants believing the doctors and chemists poisoned the girl who died there from cholera. Stringent orders were issued by the Government that all linens arriving from France be disinfected or burned.

Village Nearly Destroyed.

BIRMINGHAM, N. Y., August 3.—Afton, a thriving village, twenty-eight miles from this city, was half destroyed by fire this morning. Losses aggregate $75,000.

Horrible Discovery.

DAYTON, OHIO, August 2.—The decomposed body of a man was this morning found in an open field, near the Soldiers' Home about one hundred feet from the pike. It was in such an advanced state of decay that shovels were used to put it in a box, and when an attempt was made to raise it the head fell from the trunk. It was identified as the remains of James Doulen by the hat and cane. Doulon was an inmate of the Soldiers' Home, and had been missing since June 21. The identification was made by his brother, also an inmate. There were no bones broken, and it is impossible to tell whether he was murdered and carried where found or not. He was an epileptic, and it is possible that he met with a sudden natural death, but how he came to be so far from the road is what makes somewhat of a mystery. He was a member of the Forty-third New York Volunteers.

Failures For the Week.

NEW YORK, August 1.—The failures for the last seven days are: United States, 233; Canada, 18. Total, 251, against 284 last week. The whole increase appears to arise in the Pacific States and Territories, where the casualties have been more numerous than in any week for years.

ACROSS THE OCEAN.

Interest of Geographers and Scientists in Greely's Exploration—Military Pigeon Station.

LONDON, August 2.—One of the busiest men in London just now is General Merritt, the American Consul General, who is actively exerting all the machinery of his office to keep the cholera out of America. He said this afternoon, that, without any intention to boast, he was greatly gratified at the success which had attended the precautions taken by the Consulate against the dissemination of the disease. The measures adopted at the various English ports were still working well, and it had not yet become necessary to stop any person or any vessels starting from Great Britain for America. The various Consular offices were still alert, and would not relax their vigilance until the danger was entirely passed.

LONDON, August 2.—Ever since the news of the rescue of the Greely exploring party the rooms of the Royal Geographical Society have been almost continuously besieged by crowds, anxious to obtain accurate and scientific information concerning Greely's achievement and the work performed by Commander Schley's fleet. To facilitate the work of accommodating the public in this respect, Mr. Coles said: "I have had Greely's movements carefully traced in detail, in bold lines, upon the society's huge public map in the main hall. This map has for days been undoubtedly the most studiously scanned chart in all England."

LONDON, August 2.—It has been decided to establish military pigeon stations at all army centers at home and abroad. Captain Cahill has been sent to France and Germany to study the system of employing pigeons adopted in these countries. It is estimated that 30,000 pigeons will be required to stock the various stations.

A STEAMER IN FLAMES.

Burning of Hudson River Steamer Eagle—No Lives Lost.

NEWBURG, N. Y., August 2.—The steamer Eagle left here this morning with twenty-five passengers and considerable freight for Albany. At quarter to eight smoke and flames poured out from beneath the crank room. The flames spread with great rapidity beneath the boiler and engine room. The streams of water turned on were unable to subdue them. The boat headed for the Milton dock and the passengers were landed before they knew of the fire. There was no alarm or confusion, the officers acting promptly and the crew readily obeying orders. The crew succeeded in removing most of the freight. A horse was burned to death. The fire soon communicated to the upper portion. The steamboat La Fevre, with an excursion party, came along and towed the burning vessel to the east side of the river, where the Eagle burned to the water's edge and the hull was beached. At 1 o'clock this afternoon the vessel was a smoking wreck, the only upper portion of the works unconsumed being the flagstaff at the bow. The Eagle was built in 1852. She was insured for $25,000. The fire caught from a kitchen stove below the deck. The loss is about $50,000.

MERCHANTS INDIGNANT.

Bad Feeling Over the Enforcement of an Objectionable Ordinance.

PITTSBURG, August 2.—For the past two days an old ordinance prohibiting swinging signs, sidewalk obstructions, etc., has been rigidly enforced by the police, under orders from Chief Braun. Considerable indignation has been shown by business men, and at present Mayor Fulton's administration is in decidedly bad odor. Shortly after 9 o'clock this morning about one thousand persons gathered about the following placard attached to a telegraph pole at the corner of Liberty and Sixth streets.

War! War! War!

A meeting of the merchants of Liberty street will be held at high noon to-day at the corner of Liberty and Sixth streets, for the purpose of impeaching Mayor Fulton and Chief Braun. Prominent speakers will be present. By order L. O. Q. L. M. (skull and cross bones.)

After remaining up some time, the placard was torn down and carried to the Chief's office by a policeman. To cap the climax Chief Braun this afternoon ordered the removal of an immense Blaine and Logan banner strung across Fifth Avenue, in front of the headquarters of the Republican County Committee. All sorts of jokes about the city administration, which is Republican, were made by Democrats, who saw the banner taken down.

A Terrible Death.

DELPHOS, OHIO, August 3.—John Heck, aged eighty years, employed in running a hoop-coiler at the Pittsburg hoop and stave factory, was struck by a large piece of iron thrown from the coiler, tearing open his side, the bowels protruding from the wound. He died almost instantly. He leaves one son who resides in Baltimore.

Americans in London.

LONDON, August 3.—London is declared, in spite of all contradictions, to be fuller of Americans than ever, especially of young married couples, and the table d'hote, at the Grand Hotel, is described as a nightly bridal procession.

Commands Forcibly Enforced.

PORTSMOUTH, N. H., August 2.—Last night, after a circus performance, the employes ordered all persons off the grounds, enforcing the command with tent-stakes and stones. One lady was struck with a stone and severely injured, and a townsman had his arm broken. Several others were injured. Shooting was then resorted to, but the police finally stopped the row, and arrested four of the circus men.

Workingmen's Conference Called.

BOSTON, August 2.—A State conference of workingmen is called for the 27th instant in this city.

Only Cholera Morbus.

NEW YORK, August 2.—A man was found by the police to-day in a yard writhing in great agony, with his legs drawn up almost to his chin. An ambulance was summoned, and the surgeon pronounced the case cholera. The man's name is Patrick, and he drives a manure cart. He was removed to the hospital. The name of the victim is learned to be Patrick Hughes. The hospital authorities say the case is only cholera morbus.

Fatally Injured by a Runaway.

INDIANAPOLIS, IND., August 2.—Mrs. Greene White, living eight miles southeast of here, was in the city shopping this afternoon, and upon starting home in her buggy her horse became frightened and ran away, throwing Mrs. White to the ground and injuring her fatally. Her husband and children were summoned at once, and they are now with her. They are a prominent and wealthy family.

A $200,000 Fire.

BUFFALO, August 2.—A fire broke out in Hellman's drug store, at Emporium, Pa., this afternoon, and destroyed twenty business places and the Shives House. Fourteen families are homeless. Loss about $200,000.

HONORING HEROES.

Ovation at Portsmouth to the Greely Survivors and Rescuers.

Wild Enthusiasm Manifested—Greely Shows His Gratitude to His Rescuers.

PORTSMOUTH, N.H., August 4.—The city to-day was thronged, public and private buildings decorated, and "Welcome to Our Arctic Heroes" placarded on bunting everywhere. The harbor was filled with craft laden with people. At 11:20, amid considerable enthusiasm, Commander Schley, Lieutenant Emory and Commander Coffin disembark. Following them were the other officers of the Greely expedition, and the sailors of the Thetis, Bear and Alert. They were enthusiastically greeted as they landed, and the crowd pressed forward to shake their hands. A roar of welcome went up when Greely was discovered with his comrades coming toward the landing in the Admiral's barge. Greely was clothed in white, with a slouched hat, and wearing spectacles. As he and his companions alighted, all crowded to welcome him. Greely leaned upon the arm of Lieutenant Powell, and languidly lifted his hat. His every movement indicated weakness. His comrades received much attention. All were placed in coaches and immediately driven to the Rockingham House, it having been decided that they should not appear in the procession. At the hotel crowds gathered to catch a glimpse of them. Mrs. Greely joined her husband at the hotel. At 11:20 the procession began to march. The streets were packed. Applause greeted the sailors of the relief squadron. The ovation continued through the entire route. Commander Schley, Lieutenant Emory and Commander Coffin were received with tremendous applause. So were Secretary Chandler, General Hazen, Commodore Wells and Acting Admiral Luce. As the head of the procession neared the Rockingham House, where Lieutenant Greely and the survivors were waiting to review, the pressure of the crowd became so great that the column was delayed several minutes. Lieutenant Greely and comrades were seated upon a balcony. Cheer after cheer greeted them. As the crews of the Thetis, Bear and Alert passed, Greely bowed very low, and seemed to look his gratitude to the men who had so recently rescued him from an Arctic grave. The scene was affecting. Many brushed tears from their eyes. Greely was kept busy bowing acknowledgment as the procession passed. Commanders Schley and Coffin and Lieutenant Emory raised their hats as they passed the heroes. A meeting of citizens in Music Hall this evening, to extend the official welcome of the city to Lieutenant Greely and his surviving companions, was largely attended, and was characterized by unbounded enthusiasm.

Marked Decrease in Exportations.

WASHINGTON, August 4.—Returns of imports and exports for the year ending June 30 last, tabulated by the Bureau of Statistics, show that compared with the preceding year the value of domestic merchandise exported fell over $83,000,000. The falling off in exports of wheat was particularly marked, the decline being over $46,000,000, or more than one-half of the aggregate loss. The returns from every port except Boston show a falling off in the export of wheat. At New York the value of wheat exported during the year was $50,000,000 against $83,000,000 the preceding year. At Philadelphia there was a falling off from $13,000,000 in 1883 to $8,000,000. At Baltimore from $32,000,000 to $23,000,000. At San Francisco from $31,000,000 to $25,000,000. At Boston there was an increase from $15,000,000 to $17,000,000. The export of gold for the year was $18,000,000 in excess of the amount imported.

Funds to Relieve Gordon.

LONDON, August 4.—Gladstone stated in the Commons to-day that he would ask the House to-morrow to vote a credit for an expedition to relieve General Gordon. He will at the same time make a statement of the steps the Government proposes to take in consequence of the failure of the Egyptian Conference. The amount of the credit Gladstone will propose will be £300,000.

Smothered in a Corn-Bin.

LINCOLN, ILL., August 4.—This afternoon while Willie Thompson, aged eleven years, was playing on top of a bin full of shelled corn in the Logan Mill, when, by the elevator being started, he was drawn to the bottom and covered with corn. He was smothered before he could be taken out.

Deadly Work of a Steam Thresher.

KENESAW, NEB., August 4.—J. A. Smith, living three miles northeast, was instantly killed this morning by the explosion of a threshing machine boiler. The body was thrown twenty yards, and a portion of the boiler forty rods. Smith's bowels were torn open, and his head nearly cut off.

Love and Suicide.

MATTOON, ILL., August 4.—Emma Welsh, a young lady who resided in the vicinity of Cook's Mill, six miles north of this city, jumped from the bridge and was drowned. Search for the body has proved fruitless as yet. A love affair is said to have been the incentive for the victim's rash act.

Collision at Sea.

LONDON, August 4.—The British brigs Belle Star, from Scotia for Queenstown, and the Richard Owen, from Cardiff for St. Johns, came in collision at sea. The latter was sunk and four of her crew drowned. The rest of her crew are at Queenstown.

Good Grain Crops.

WASHINGTON, August 4.—The grain crops in Missouri, Kansas, Nebraska, Texas and Indian Territory are reported to be unprecedented, both in increase of yield and in acreage.

July Fire Losses.

NEW YORK, August 4.—The losses by fire in the United States and Canada, during July, are estimated at $8,800,000.

Earthquake.

VIENNA, August 4.—Severe earthquake shocks were felt yesterday at Toco, Bosnia.

—The Irish peasantry are noted for their beautiful hands. Whether potatoes, poor living, bog-trotting and damp climate improve the hand we know not, but the Irish lass has a well-formed and a pretty hand. They are a small handed people, no matter how much they wash, iron, cook, or dig. The English on the contrary are a people of big knuckles; so are the Scotch.—Albany Journal.

—The fashionable name for sunburn is "Raphael tint," and the young ladies out summering are cultivating this by outdoor exposure and exercise. They should be encouraged. The Raphael tint is healthy as well as fashionable.—Chicago Times.

—The descendants of Rebekah Nurse, who was hanged as a witch in Salem in 1692, still nurse the grievance of the family, and hold their annual protesting convention at Tapleyville, Mass. Boston Journal.

—There are over a thousand hotels and boarding-houses in the Catskill Mountains. Last year it is estimated that the visitors to this famous summer resort numbered 200,000.—Troy Times.

THE COMMONWEALTH.

THE following is a synopsis of the June report of the Commissioner of Agriculture for this State: Corn.—Notwithstanding casualties, the average condition for the State is but 13 per cent. below an average, with bright prospects for a great improvement. Rye and Barley.—Condition good, with less acreage than usual. Wheat.—Average 95 per cent., but from later reports it is believed there will be the largest yield for years, except the crop of 1882. Oats.—Average 84. Irish Potatoes.—The acreage of this crop is below that of last year, while the conditions are about equal. Grasses.—In excellent condition. Clover.—Young in excellent condition. Old injured by the hard winter. Tobacco.—Reports very encouraging; plants were plentiful and in fine condition, and the prospects for a good crop are excellent, with a largely increased acreage. 55 counties out of 77 report an increase of acreage at 33 per cent. above an average. The rest of the tobacco counties report an average acreage. Fruits.—Peach crops a failure; apple crop promises a fair yield; pear crop small. Dairy Products.—Up to the average.

NEAR the White Sulphur Springs, ten miles above Hartford, Ohio County, there is a white oak that measures a little over twenty-seven feet, two and a half feet from the ground. This tree is a veritable king of the forest, and impresses one with a feeling of respect when in its presence. This venerable specimen will soon be numbered among the things of the past, for it was lately struck by lightning, and is now dead. Large as this white oak has grown to be, it was outstripped by a giant poplar two or three miles away, on Rough River. The tree was cut a few months back, and the stump now measures eleven feet across.

A GERMAN woman, whose husband died recently, was admitted to the City Hospital, Louisville, some days ago, and since then has been delivered of a child. The attending physicians have discovered in her an anatomical curiosity, from the fact that she possesses five nipples on her breast, three on one side and two on the other, from either of which the child readily takes its nourishment. It is said that no such case was ever heard of, by our medical men before.

THEODORE DEMPSTER, aged twenty-three, son of a widow on Eighth, Louisville, while painting a skylight at Bacon's dry goods house the other afternoon, caused a ladder lying parallel across the balusters to slip off at one end, and he was precipitated through the aperture to the main floor, crushing the back of his head to a pulp, causing instant death. The store was crowded with ladies, and the calamity caused a decided sensation.

IT is claimed that two thousand frauds were committed in Louisville, under the new State registration law.

BEN SHRUSE, the murderer of an old man named Heulta, in Bath County, was captured and incarcerated at Owingsville to await trial.

THE Board of Trustees at Nicholasville, have purchased two chemical engines, four small Babcock extinguishers and a hook and ladder rig from a Chicago firm. A test of the apparatus proved satisfactory.

FIVE thousand acres of tobacco will be raised in Bourbon County, this year. Ten years ago not ten acres were raised.

CATFISH weighing 75 pounds each are being caught out of the Kentucky river in Anderson County.

EUGENE WEATHERS, colored, aged fourteen, attempting to cross in front of a train at Louisville, the other day, was knocked down and received fatal injuries.

FOUR cases of smallpox in Blandville on the 1st.

THERE are 1,500 head of thoroughbred Short-horned cattle within a radius of ten miles from Mt. Sterling.

A VESSEL with 10,000 barrels of Kentucky whisky left Newport News the other day for Europe to escape the Federal tax.

REPORTS from many parts of the State say that tobacco plants are frenching badly, and that the crop will be a short one.

JESSE NIXON, one of the best known business men of Henry County, died suddenly of heart disease, aged sixty-nine years.

THE Kentucky Railroad Commissioners, consisting of J. P. Thompson, of Marion; A. R. Boone, of Graves, and John D. Young, of Bath County, met in Frankfort and organized by electing Mr. Thompson, Chairman, and Clarence Egbert, Secretary.

MEL WOOSLEY shot, probably fatally, Robert Goodwin, who tried to quiet him while drunk, and firing a revolver recklessly at a picnic near Bainbridge. Woosley escaped.

WILL COLLINS, a young man of Crittenden, was murdered while assisting the city marshal to arrest Al. Price, who was drunk and boisterous, and killed Collins because he attempted to arrest him. Former greatly esteemed, and it is thought Price will be lynched if caught.

DURING a negro picnic near Louisville the other day a lively riot occurred, and several were seriously cut. Three thousand negroes were in attendance at the picnic.

AT Jackson, Breathitt County, Zeck Campbell and Sylvester Tharp, who had been drinking, got into trouble over their own hilarity, when Campbell drew his revolver and shot Tharp through the bowels, from which he will die. Campbell says that he did not intend to kill Tharp; that he thought his pistol was empty.

JAMES MEARA, of Covington, went to the re-union of soldiers at Dayton, O., and stopped at the same hotel with General Rosecrans, to whom he bears a strong resemblance. Being taken for the General, he was called upon for a speech. Meara responded from the balcony in his native tongue, German, and received loud applause.

A SHOOTING affray near Burns, resulted in the death of Elisha Alexander and the serious wounding of another man and woman. The trouble grew out of Mrs. Alexander's elopement with Charles Poole, who did the shooting.

MR. A. A. ESTES, one of the leading merchants of Glencoe, died of heart disease the other night. Deceased had been ill but a few days, and his prospects for recovering were brightening, when he died very suddenly.

GRAYSON CLOSE and his son Gabe have been arrested at Greensburg, charged with the murder of C. C. Morris in that county a few weeks ago.

H. A. WEST, of Bracken County, recently returned from California, has in his possession a frog which is quite a curiosity. It has a crown of horns on its head, body and tail. It is small, but quite savage.

AT Louisville, Theodore Dempster, a painter, fell from a scaffold a distance of fifty feet, and was instantly killed.

AT Nicholasville, Pleasant Laws, colored, was sentenced to ten days' imprisonment in jail, and fined $25 for drawing a revolver on James Roff and wife, and threatening to kill them because Roff chided him for not working.

IN the Louisville Circuit Court W. Hutching and Wm. Carr, members of the Salvation Army, were fined $20 each, and put under bond of $500 for sixty days for drunkenness and disorderly conduct.

JOHN E. COOPER was nominated by the Hazel Green convention to succeed Judge Robert Riddell.

Suicide.

Saul is the first recorded suicide, but ever since his desperate end the catalogue has assumed a grim protractedness worthy of Dante. It is curious to recollect how comparatively modern and how completely Western is its estimation as a crime. Not a word in Old Testament history condemns it. In Hindoostan "suttee" still obtains, nor is the "happy dispatch" extinct in Japan. In Greece suicide was inflicted by the law. In the later Roman Empire it became almost identified with patriotism and independence: but, under the more humane development of Christianity, life assumed a sacred aspect, and to kill was to murder one's self; and so, though pathological and other considerations avoid generally, by their influence on Coroner's juries, such terrible consequences, by the common law a felo de se forfeits his property, his will becomes void as to his personality, and Christian burial is denied him. Yet, though crime it is called, and though inglorious and wicked as it certainly is, it has ever been regarded with something of an awestruck compassion. The "one more unfortunate" is beyond the reach of an earthly tribunal nor can the prime cause of such a fell act be other than extreme misery, for suicide from excess of joy is in fact unknown.

Wretchedness and death claim both our sympathy and respect, and thus it comes to pass that, whatever our abstract view may be, such a strange conjunction of the two main human ills will always evoke the pity and sorrow of frail mortality. Ophelia and Othello, alike in nothing but their suicide, are proof of this.

Indeed, there are so many kinds of suicides that they can hardly be ranked together. The irresponsible mind, unhinged either by physical or so-called mental causes, the victim whelmed by "the slings and arrows of outrageous fortune," the betrayed girl or beggared gambler, goaded to desperation, the man wantonly reckless of life, the man for a cause where "faith unfaithful keeps him falsely true," the remorseless perpetrator of some wrong or another, all differ so widely in everything but their end as to deserve a separate nomenclature. Nor is it irrelevant or irreverent to imagine a case where the sanctity of existence is more than outweighed by unmerited agony. Some poor, baffled, starving wretch, who has none to need or mourn him, who has strained every nerve in vain for work, the victim of "over-population," of "society," of what you will, may well argue, like poor Josephs in "Never Too Late to Mend," that the future can not be as bad as the present. Apart from the religious side of the question, its moral aspect mainly depends on the cowardice of an act that is the last luxury of the reckless and cowardice, where none depend on the suicide, there can be none. It is remarkable, if we bear these considerations in mind, that in the ever-increasing strain of work and competition, and the growing artificiality of civilization, suicide has not increased more than it has. Madness is far more prevalent, and madness is the nurse of suicide.

A noteworthy fact with regard to suicide is its epidemic character. In the year 1566 no fewer than sixty perished by their own hand in Rouen, and in 1793 1300 destroyed themselves at Versailles. Periods of convulsion and agitation, which unnaturally excite, often abnormally extinguish line and sensitive minds, and if an acorn be planted in porcelain it will soon break the pot. The "Werther" craze was fruitful in suicide, and Goethe had to defend himself from an imputed possibility. In the same manner forms of self-destruction seem to be familiarized by imitation. The many suicides of late years on the railroad attest this, for to submit to being run over by a steam engine must be surely the mode of death most to be dreaded and last to be planned.

Our list of suicides comprises, roughly, the ruined, the heroic and the reckless. Of the ruined it would be commonplace to speak. History, fiction, abound with examples, and both are united in the person of Chatterton. Suicide is, indeed the very shroud of failure, and, as failure is always dramatic, it is on this side of its interest that the modern French drama has so vividly seized. Not that like the ancient statuesque Greek tragedy, the suicide is wont to occur silently and off the stage. Sara Bernhardt and Croizette poison themselves vehemently, almost voraciously, and such denouements are rendered both psychically and physically sensational. Still less is it necessary here to discuss the heroic suicides that we have enumerated as one of several distinct sub-divisions. Cato and Seneca are typical instances, and there has even been a mock-heroic suicide, that of Vatel, the chivalrous chef, who killed himself in honorable despair because enough fish was not duly supplied to the royal tables and was elegized and eulogized by roleau. But the suicide who recklessly disregards his life is a rarer and more fascinating study: the voluptuary and the hypochondriac will occasionally thus end their days, and the famous story of the "Suicide Club" commemorates how an association of such callous Sybarites would meet at periodical banquets, each of which was by some poisoned viand destined to end the life of one of them, that one being kept in ignorance of his doom.—London Globe.

The Coal Pool.

During the month of October, 1883, the Philadelphia & Reading Company shipped from its mines 5... tons of coal, equal to 21,000 tons for each full day worked. That month's shipments brought to the company's treasury at least $2,000,000. And yet we are now witnessing the lamentable spectacle of no coal shipped at all during long periods of idleness; not a dollar received from these vast possessions when the company so much needs money to pay its interest, all because the pool, or conspiracy, had agreed that no coal should be mined or shipped. What is the coal pool? Five of the leading coal-producing corporations agree to keep coal out of the market; to drain it dry to compel consumers to pay a certain price for it, and by not glutting the market, to force buyers to continue paying exhorbitant rates. Coal-yard men are driven to buy at the advanced rates, and the poor consumer, the retail purchaser, the manufacturer, and the wholesale consumer pay the piper.

The Philadelphia & Reading corporation belongs to this coal pool. Its hands are tied. Its great mines are idle half the time. It owns millions of tons of coal unmined, yet it defaults its interest. Thousands of miners are on the verge of suffering because they are not allowed to work; thousands of cars are idle; hundreds of locomotives are cold, thousands of employes are either out of work or laboring at starvation wages—all because the great pool must be kept up. The coal conspiracy to hold the market must not go down. Now, as to the cost of coal: To mine it costs about $1.50 a ton. To ship it to tidewater at Philadelphia, ninety-five miles, costs about 25 cents a ton, or $1.75 in all. The same coal retails in Philadelphia at $6.50 and $7 a ton. Thirty miles from the mines it sells for $5 a ton, and the retail dealers declare they can hardly keep life and soul together on their meagre profits. Of course, the Philadelphia & Reading Railroad Company paid at least $60,000,000 for its coal lands. Coal unmined is worth a price. At 50 cents a ton, enough could be mined in thirty years to pay the entire debt, and the mines could be very profitably operated for at least thirty years more. Many say they are good for a hundred years. If, therefore, coal is worth, first cost 50 cents a ton, unmined, the value of a ton to the company at tidewater would be:

Coal	$ 50
Mining	1 50
Transportation	25
Total	$2 25

If the retailers' profit is fifty cents a ton (and that is doubtful in all cases) the company would reap a profit of at least $3 a ton on every ton of coal it sold. Making due allowance for loss, wear and tear, etc., would reduce the r profits for each ton to about $2.75 at tidewater. That is the scheme of the coal pool. They want that profit or none at all. They want more than 100 per cent. or they will default in the payment of their interest, cut down wages, shut up collieries and machine shops, and create a general panic in the section in which they operate. What is the defense of the coal pool? They say that if there are no restrictions to mining, no explicit understanding as to how much each company may mine and sell, the market will be glutted all the time, prices will be cut, coal will go begging for buyers, and prices will become so low that coal mining would soon become very unprofitable. They virtually kill all competition, consolidate into one giant monopoly, and compel the consumer to pay whatever they may see fit to ask for it. The Reading's capacity is equal to one-third the capacity of the anthracite coal mines of America; its facilities for cheap mining are unsurpassed; its coal property worth twice the money it paid for it, and yet, because it can not realize 100 per cent. on its coal mining, it prefers voluntary bankruptcy, default and a general shrinkage of all its securities.

Had the Reading been an independent coal miner and shipper it could have sent to market in the past three months enough coal, and sold it at that, to have realized sufficient money to pay its interest. Had it sent its coal to market, consumers would have been able to purchase coal at reasonable rates, a refreshing opportunity which the coal-pool does not propose to tolerate just yet. If the Reading Company were an independent coal-miner, free from all alliances, standing upon its own bottom, as all legitimate business enterprises should, by working full time, it could easily send to market and sell 1,000,000 tons of coal every year, which would be equal to a clear profit of $1,000,000 a month. But the pool says: "No, shut your mine: discharge your men; wait, wait, and compel higher prices, and there is a chance that your profits will be greater." It was while waiting for those profits that the Reading became apparently bankrupt, and reeled and fell under its heavy load. It was waiting until the time came when the buyer, the retailer, the manufacturer would be compelled to pay exorbitant rates. It was a race between the two, and the consumer won, because, in some instances, he shut up shop rather than buy, and in other instances bought only enough to run half time. The consumer understood the coal-pool, and refused to bow and buy.—Cor. Chicago Times.

Pearls Before Swine.

"I beg your pardon, sir," said the young man, stopping the old gentleman, who was on the point of speaking: "you were about to remark that boys are different now from what they used to be."

"Yes," replied the old gentleman; "they—"

"And you were intending, also, to say that when you were a boy you didn't have such an easy time as I do, for instance."

"That's exactly what—"

"Yes, I thought so. And then you were going to mention the interesting fact that when you were of my age you had to get up before daylight and milk the cows, and drive 'em to parster, and saw and split the wood, and make the fires, and clean out the horses, and curry 'em and brush 'em and harness 'em, and work from dawn till dark, a-mowing and a-hoeing and a-raking, and Heaven only knows what you didn't do, only leaving of half long enough to swallow your meals and go at it again."

"You have stated it correctly."

"Of course I have. And then you thought of adding a word or two about the money I spend for clothing incidentally remarking that all you had to cover your nakedness was a caliker shirt, a pair of overalls and a ten-cent straw hat."

"There's no denying that something of that sort was running through my mind."

"And perhaps you were considering it not entirely inappropriate to remark that if boys nowadays had a little less book larning and knew a little more about real practical common sense work, it would be a darned sight better for 'em."

"That's about my idea."

"Yes, I thought so. You all run on the same fashion. I knew just what would come if I let you begin; so I saved you the trouble—see?"

"Yes, young man; and I'm powerful glad you did."

"Glad I did? What do you mean?"

"Oh, nothing particular only, you know, 't is n't very profitable to cast one's pearls before swine—that's all."—Boston Transcript.

—At Whitby, Canada, the other day, a farmer and his horse came upon a number of dogs that were barking furiously at some sheep in a pasture. The timid ewes and their lambs were huddled together in a fence corner, but were protected from harm by a two-year-old colt. The equine shepherd displayed great skill in his battle with the dogs, striking out his fore feet at them and marching up and down in front of his self-assumed charge.—Toronto Globe.

—The horses of Palestine are shod with a shoe that covers the bottom of the foot, except a slight opening sometimes in the centre, without calks, and turned up behind. This flat shoe is nailed on with three nails, having large, projecting heads, answering as calks, on each side close together near the toe.

SCIENCE AND INDUSTRY.

—An Indianapolis man has invented a live poultry car. It has numberless partitions, storm curtains, cleansing apparatus, water and food troughs.—Indianapolis Journal.

—At the New York Convention of Deaf Mutes a pair of patent ears was shown. With them partially deaf people would hear better than with their ear trumpet.—N. Y. Sun.

—Experiments made by M. Muntz with various kinds of water—spring, river, sea and rain water, also snow—prove that alcohol may be found in all, except in pure spring water.

—Sawdust when used as a substitute for sand in house plastering is alleged to impart very desirable properties to the plaster. It makes the covering for walls light, warm, and porous. By its non-conducting qualities it causes the inner surface to retain the heat, which sand plaster allows to escape.

—It was long believed that the height of the atmosphere of the earth did not exceed forty-five miles, but from the observations of luminous meteors it is inferred that the height of the atmosphere is at least 120 miles, and that, in an extremely attenuated form, it may even reach 200 miles.—Chicago Inter-Ocean.

—A simple way to ascertain whether a sample of petroleum is dangerous or not has been recommended by a chemist of considerable standing. An ordinary tumbler is filled two-thirds full with the oil. While filling up the remaining one-third with water a flame is held over the vessel. If the vapor which rises takes fire the test indicates that the petroleum is not safe to be exposed to the atmosphere.

—The curious statement is made by a writer in the London Daily News, who has been collecting some particulars regarding diving operations on the Thames and elsewhere, that men have grown old in this particular business, though in early life they had been in danger of consumption. The theory is a simple one. Men under water in a diving dress breathe a condensed atmosphere, and are, therefore, inhaling oxygen in a concentrated form, and this, it is assumed, is conducive to the cure of consumption.—Hall's Journal of Health.

—The Iron describes an apparatus for freeing carpets from dust without beating them. It consists of a polygonal drum formed of wooden bars and fixed on a shaft revolving horizontally. The drum is twelve feet in diameter and six feet in breadth, and is enclosed in a chamber. It is driven by an Otto gas engine of twelve-horse-power, which also drives a fan for drawing off the dust from the chamber as it is extracted from the carpets. The carpets are placed in the drum, which is fitted with a series of internal rollers, and which turn the carpets over as the drum revolves. The speed is twenty-two revolutions per minute, and at this rate it is found that from two hundred to three hundred square yards of carpet can be thoroughly cleansed per hour without the possibility of damage to the fabric.

PITH AND POINT.

—A writer in a health publication advises people to "live in the sun." But how under the sun are people going to do it.—Boston Transcript.

—A little girl was trying to tell her mother how beautifully a certain lady could trill in singing, and said: "O, mamma, you ought to hear her gargle: She does it so sweetly."

—"Do you know what the board over that cow's face is for?" asked the Colonel. "No" responded the Major, "unless it is to keep her blush s from being seen when the milk man works the pump-handle."—Boston Post.

—A San Francisco showman is advertising a troupe of educated flies. If he will send one on here to teach others how to walk around the edge of a milk pitcher without falling in he will gain everlasting fame.—Chicago Times.

—"That Husband of Mine" was lying upon the lap of a young married woman on the train the other day when a base-ball dude and would-be masher leaned over the seat, read the title of the book, and then looking around in monkey pantomime, simpered out: "Ah! where is he?" "Minding his own business, I hope," was the crushing reply.

—An honest rustic went into the shop of a Quaker to buy a hat, for which twenty shillings was demanded. He offered two dollars. "As I live," said the Quaker, "I can not afford to give it thee at that price." "As you live," exclaimed the countryman. "Then live more moderately, and I change l to you!" "Friend," said the Quaker, "thou shalt have the hat for nothing. I have sold hats for twenty years, and my trick was never found out till now."—N. Y. Ledger.

—It was a case of breach of promise. The evidence being all in, the defendant was allowed to say a word in his own behalf. "Yes," he said, "I kissed her almost continually every evening I called at her house." Lawyer for the claimant—"Then you confess it?" Defendant—"Yes, I do confess it; but I had to do it." Lawyer—"Had to do it! What do you mean?" Defendant—"That was the only way I could keep her from singing." The jury give a verdict for defendant without leaving their seats.—Detroit Post.

—Friend—"Ah! glad to see you, Blank. How did your great boat race with Swift, the champion sculler, come out?" Blank (champion oarsman)—"I won." "Glad of it; glad of it. I was afraid he would beat you. What time did you make?" "An hour and a half." "Great Leonidas! An hour and a half! Why it's a ten-minute course, and I have seen you do it in eight." "Well, you see that villain Swift sold out the race and was bound I should beat him, and he rowed as slow as he could." "But why should that affect your time? Why didn't you spin over the course in eight minutes?" "Well, you see I had sold out, too, and wanted him to beat me."—Philadelphia Call.

—Ex-Marshal Maxwell, of Utah, is reported as saying that about the most effective, peaceable way to abolish polygamy in Utah would be to establish a "Home of Refuge" for Mormon wives who wish to abandon their husbands. A great many, he says, would be glad to leave their portion of a husband, but they have nowhere to go; so they suffer on, rather than be thrown upon their own resources. Could they go to a place where they would be supported and protected, thousands would throw off the yoke under which they now rest.—N. Y. Examiner.

—An English clerk in a New York dry goods store writes to the London Warehouseman that there is no such rigidity of discipline behind counters here as he used to endure at home.

THE RECORDER.

WEDNESDAY, AUGUST 6. 1884.

RIDDELL & HALL, Proprietors.

ADVERTISING RATES.

1 Column	1 year	$ 80
½ "	"	40
¼ "	"	20
"	"	20
"	"	10
"	"	6

SALT RIVER' excursions are now the order of the day.

THERE are fourteen million free-masons in the world.

YOU are sure to pull the wrong end of the shoe-string when in a hurry.

THE Superintendent of Public Schools elect can qualify and take charge of the office to-morrow if he so desire.

THE Presidential nominations are all made, and Ben Butler was the most nominated and will be the least elected.

LAST Friday night a horse thief escaped from the jail at Williamstown. That prison leads Boone's in the number of escapes.

MAUD S. trotted a mile in 2:09¾ last Saturday, being the fastest time ever made trotting, and by accomplishing the feat her driver made the nice little sum of ten thousand dollars. Who wouldn't be a driver of a fast horse?

THIS county is now among the first in the State, and with a few more good roads and schools it would take its place at the head of the column; for as to the morals of the people and fertility of the soil, no county in the State is its superior.

THE Santord, Florida, Cleveland and Hendricks club has resolved as follows in regard to the colored voters: "That while, we have no disposition to debar members of that race from voting, on their own motion, for our nominees, this club hereby declares its opposition to the solicitation of the suffrage of that race."

THE Louisville Exposition is a State institution, and every county in the Commonwealth should be represented by an exhibit, which would place Kentucky before the country in a most profitable manner. The public has read much about what Kentucky can produce, and now an opportunity is offered to verify these statements.

THE State Board of Supervisors looked over the books and decided that the property in this Congressional district was assessed about right for taxation, and consequently no change was made in the values returned by the county boards and assessors. It has been understood for many years that this part of the State was contributing its full share of the revenue to say the least.

THE fact that J. R. Clutterbuck was re-elected to the office of Sheriff without opposition, indicates that he has dischaged the duties of that office to the entire satisfaction of the whole public, which was unanimous in endorsing him for another term. Mr. Clutterbuck has made a good Sheriff, and there is every reason to believe that he will not fall from grace during his next term, but will remain faithful unto the end.

LAST Monday Charles A. Graves was in town with his patent single-tree, which is a very simple and useful patent, being so arranged that a horse can be detached from a buggy in an instant. A person having one of those single-trees on his buggy is pretty safe in case his horse should become unmanagable and start to run with him, it only being necessary to pull the strap and let him go when it is ascertained he cannot be controled. Give them a trial.

The Southern Exposition.

At a meeting of the local board of Commissioners for the Southern Exposition, held in Burlington, on last Monday, it was decided that as there are so many points in the county from which articles can be conveniently shipped to Louisville, that all persons having articles they desire to exhibit at said exposition, be requested to ship them from the most convenient point.

Articles for exhibition may consist of all kinds of products, live stock, old relics—in fact any and every thing you may desire to send.

The commissioners consider this Exposition of great benefit to the State, and regard our county able to make a display that will be a credit to her citizens, and trust that our people's State and county pride will induce them to aid in making the Southern Exposition at Louisville the largest and most attractive display of a State's productions ever witnessed in this county.

For any information, address the commissioners.

The Exposition pays all the express charges.

N. S. WALTON,
J. A. DAVIS,
JOHN STEPHENS,
J. FRANK GRANT,
W. L. RIDDELL,
Commissioners for Boone County.

HECKER, the pitcher for the Louisville Base Ball Club, is not pitching, it is said, only for his salary and the penant, but the Mayoralty of that city as well, it being promised him if his club wins the championship.

THE tobacco crop has come out a great deal within the last two weeks It has a good, healthy color, and a fair crop, at least, may be depended on if not interfered with by hail or frost. The very poor stand and the failure to get the entire crop planted will materially reduce the area anticipated in this county.

A NEW JERSEY weekly paper has undertaken the task of convincing the country that wisdom demands the election of two Presidents representing the two great political parties, and endowed with joint powers of government. Wouldn't we have political music then? Probably that paper is preparing a smooth way for its State to secede.

Francesville.

To the Editors of the Recorder:

For the benefit of those of your readers who contemplate a visit to Kansas that may be benifited by reading the glowing accounts of the same, we have been requested to give through your valuable paper a brief sketch of the sights and observations as Irwin Balsly and Charley Scothorn saw them on their recent to and from that part of the Eldorado. We will omit the preliminaries of their trip as they gave them to us, up to the time they reached Kansas City. Of this place too much can not be said as regards her enterprise and her business spirit of citizens, surpassing in nearly every particular, towns of older growth east of her.

At Kansas City they took the Ft. Scott and Gulf R. R. south into Linn county, which, by the way, adjoins the county that Mr. William Walton is located in, he being in Bates county, Mo., Linn county, from all appearances, judging from her bountiful crops is very rich and productive. In this county are located Mr. David Roberts and David Krauser, that went from this county last fall. From h/ ded a Kansas City southern train for Harper county, which lies about the middle of the State, and borders on the Indian territory. Harper City in this county lies at the terminus of the Kansas City Southern R. R., 303 miles south of Kansas City. This town has sprang from a sod house five years ago to a civilized town of 2,500 inhabtants. It contains several fine church buildings, school houses and other public buildings. The private dwellings are built after the modern style of architecture, showing refined taste and enterprise on the part of her citizens.

Eighty miles south of this place is where Mr. John W. Rice, formerly of this county, resides. The boys enjoyed his bountiful hospitality for one day and night. His beautiful residence and out building are situated in the center of his magnificent prairie farm of 640 acres, which is all under fence, and well stocked with as fine durham cattle as Kentucky or anyother State can boast of.

Crops of all kinds are excellent, the corn crop, which, by the way, was too hard for roasting ears the 20th of July, it is estimated will produce twenty bushels to the acre. The wheat crop that has just been threshed averaged forty bushels to the acre, while the oat crop produced the enormous quantity of 80 bushels per acre.

Cotton is grown quite successfully in Southern Kansas and is becoming quite an industry there.

The whole of Southern Kansas has been blessed with plenty of rain, and the effect of the drouth has not been felt there.

From Harper they went into Sedgwick county, which joins Harper on the northeast. This they say is the greatest corn growing region they met with in their travels. Wichita, the county seat, is the point from which it will be remembered that the corn came that was donated to the flood sufferers of the Ohio Valley last spring. Here they fell in the company of an old citizen of Bates county, Missouri, who was down prospecting for land. He rather discouraged the boys from going into Missouri. He said the land in Bates county would bear no comparison with that of Southern Kansas for fertility and other advantages. For fertility, the soil of Southern Kansas cannot be surpassed; the climate is mild in winter and pleasant in summer; it is pronounced exceedingly healthy by those living there. Land rates in value according to the advancement of civilization. In the vicinity of Kansas City it commands from $75 to $100 per acre, while in and around Harper, from $10 to $20 per acre.

They report game in abundance, such as antelope, deer, wolves, prairie chickens, quail and jack rabbits as large as some of our Boone county mules.

They intended visiting the middle and northwestern portions of Kansas before they returned, but being so well pleased with the southern part, they have returned to settle up their affairs and dispose of their crops and other effects preparatory to making that their future home. Charlie Scothorn will return this fall. Irwin's tobacco crop will hold him till spring, when he says he will bid adieu to the hills and knobs of old Boone, give up the cultivation of that nasty weed, tobacco, and become a cow boy of the Southwest.

WILLIAM BATTERSON.

STATE NEWS.

A mad dog was killed in Newport last week.

Bowling Green has a goose that smokes.

Clover six feet high was harvested in Bourbon county.

The rain came in time to save the crops in the State.

The Owen county colored will fair be held in September.

Many of the farmers in Clark county are building tobacco barns.

A movement has been started in Fayette county, to make the turnpikes of that county free.

"Sixty bloody graves have been filled in Louisville in three years," says the Times.

The notorious Frank James and wife will rusticate at Blue Lick Springs for a season.

A candidate for office died in the city of Louisville, and it is supposed he talked himself to death.

The Herald says the crops in the lower part of Ohio county were damaged by hail Saturday a week.

Joe C. Revill, Circuit Clerk of Owen county, has accepted the position of cashier of a bank at Fort Worth, Texas, at a salary of $2,000 a year.

There are said to be not less than fifteen hundred head of thorough bred Shorthorn cattle within a radius of ten miles from Mt. Sterling—probably a larger number than is in the same space on earth.

Last October a Robertson farmer purchased 12 ewes at $4 per head, sheared $18 worth of wool from them this spring and weaned 18 lambs from them this week. The lambs on an average weigh 103 pounds each and are worth 5 cents per pound.—Lambs and wool amount to $110 70, and the sheep are worth more to-day than the day he bought them.—Robertson County Democrat.

The grand jury in Maysville has reported an indictment against the City of Maysville "for suffering and permitting a nuisance by licensing and allowing hogs to be bred and to run at large within the city limits, and to make filth and unhealthy wallows about the streets, alleys and in vacant places, and to invade the premises, and annoy the citizens of the said place and injure their property, and refuse to enact any ordinances and provisions of law to prevent such a nuisance."

REPORT OF THE CONDITION OF THE Farmers & Traders National Bank AT COVINGTON,

In the State of Kentucky, at the close of business, June 30, 1884.

RESOURCES.

Loans and discounts		$569,718 91
U.S. Bonds to secure circulation 4 per cent		50,000 00
Furniture and Fixtures		4,668 91
Premiums paid on Bonds to secure circulation $10,437 50; Less am't previously charged to profit and loss	2,437 50	8,000 00
Due from approved reserved agents	$80,481 08
Due from banks and bankers	24,839 82
5 per cent. fund with U.S. Treasurer	2,250 00
Cash on hand	41,158 78	148,729 68
		$781,117 50

LIABILITIES.

Capital stock paid in		$300,000 00
Surplus fund	$6,000 00
Undivided profits	17,485 41	23,485 41
Circulation		45,000 00
Fund to pay tax on circulation		222 30
Due individual depositors	$385,434 94
Due banks & bank's	26,974 85	412,409 79
		$781,117 50
Undivided profits remaining January 1, 1884		$14,480 40
Gross earnings, for 6 months ending June 30, 1884		19,897 20
		$34,877 70

DISPOSED OF AS FOLLOWS:

Current expenses	$ 5,669 99
Tax on circulation	222 30
Dividend No. 8 of 3 per cent	9,000 00
Credited to surplus fund	2,000 00
Balance to undivided profits	17,485 41	$34,377 70

J. L. SANDFORD, Cashire.

For Sale!

75 high grade sheep, 65 ewes, remainder yearling bucks, all cross of Oxford and Southdown, also the lambs of this season. Will sell worth the money. They are sound and all right. Will divide them to suit buyer. W. O. KIRTLEY, Bullittsville, Ky

NOTICE.

The heirs of Maria Beemon, deceased, are hereby notified that I will be in Burlington the first Monday in each month, (County Court day) to pay them their distributable shares of said decedent's estate.

JONAS ROUSE, Adm'r.

GEORGETOWN COLLEGE

5th Annual Session begins Sept. 1st. Old and tried. Situated in the famous "Blue Grass" region unrivalled for beauty and health. Charming grounds, and shady groves. Prices low for first-class college. Full Faculty. Complete course. Degrees of B. S., A. B., and A. M. conferred. Before deciding send for catalogue to the President.

R. M. DUDLEY, D. D. GEORGETOWN, KY.

CENTRAL UNIVERSITY,

COLLEGE OF PHILOSOPHY, LETTERS, AND SCIENCE, RICHMOND, KY.

Next Session will open Wednesday, September 3d, 1884.

ADVANTAGES.—A FULL FACULTY of able and experienced instructors. Comprehensive course of study and thorough instruction. Completeness of buildings and apparatus.

Social Influence.—The community is distinguished for its refined culture and hospitality, and young men find homes in the BEST families. Not a Saloon in the city.

Healthfulness of Location.—Richmond is at an elevation of more than 500 feet above the Ohio river, and free from all malarial influences.

Accessibility.—Richmond is the geographical centre of the State, in the heart of the Blue Grass region, and is within a few hours, by rail, of Louisville, Cincinnati, Knoxville and Chattanooga.

Moderate Expenses.—Board in the New Memorial Hall, lighted by gas and heated by steam—an elegant, comfortable home—$110 per annum for everything except washing, and in the best families from $3 to $4 per week. Total necessary expenses for the ten months, from $150 to $240.

For full information and catalogue, apply to L. H. BLANTON, D. D., Chancellor.

WM. COLTER,

—DEALER IN—

Clothing, Boots, Shoes, Hats, Caps, Millinery Goods, Cloaks, Etc.

JOB LOTS OF ABOVE A SPECIALTY,

We are just now devoting our entire energy to making preparations for the ensuing season, and can promise to call your attention to a stock of Boots and Shoes, Rubber Goods, Men's and Boys' Ready-Made Clothing, Ladies' Cloaks, and Wraps, Millinery Goods, Ribbons, Mens' Hats, Buck Gloves, &c., in which, for real solid and genuine Bargains, we challenge competition. We intend to lead the market in this section much more than we have ever done before, which we can at once prove to you at your first inspection. Have already bought over 500 Overcoats, over 300 Suits, 1,000 pairs of Gloves, over 70 cases Kip Boots, 16 cases Mens' Hats and Caps, all grades. And we are not asleep if it is hot. The above line of Goods is kept in the lower half and 2nd floor of our Mammoth House. We are slashing down prices on all Summer Goods now, as we do not carry any Goods over. Thanks for past favors. Respectfully,

Wm. COLTER, Rising Sun, Ind.

SOUTHERN EXPOSITION

LOUISVILLE,

Opens August 16th. Closes October 25th, 1884.

15 ACRES UNDER ONE ROOF.

TWO CONCERTS EACH DAY

By Cappa's and Gilmore's, the most famous bands of the world.

Largest and Finest Display of Machinery in MOTION ever witnessed anywhere.

LOWEST RAILWAY RATES EVER GIVEN IN THE STATE.

ART BUILDINGS,

CONTAINING THE CHOICEST PICTURES IN AMERICA.

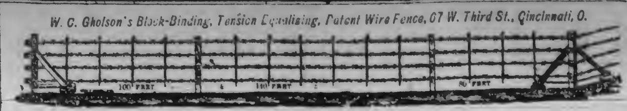
Ten works of Kentucky's great sculptor, Joel Hart, the best possible collection.

One hundred counties in Kentucky will make exhibits, displaying products which will demonstrate this State's tremendous capacities and future greatness. An occasion for Kentucky pride and glory—KENTUCKY TRIUMPHANT.

AN IMMENSE LIVE STOCK EXHIBITION

Presenting at one time in line over $1,000,000 worth of horses, comprising all the sires that have made Kentucky famous. The exhibit will surpass in extent the Royal Stock Show in London, and present to the visitor the grandest, completest, and most magnificent Stock exhibit the world has ever witnessed, and a sight that can not be duplicated in the world.

BENNETT H. YOUNG, President. J. M. WRIGHT, General Manager.



BARGAINS IN Milline'y Goods!

ALL LADIES' HATS, BONNETS AND FEATHERS NOW LEFT OVER WILL BE SOLD AT

Less Than Half Price

(Original Price.) in order to close the season. Broad-Brim Hats, called the "Cartwheel," will be closed out at 30c. each; Large Bushy Tips, three in a bunch, 88c. a bunch, worth $1 75. All other Hats and Bonnets at the same great sacrifice.

MILLINERY DEPARTMENT, at COTERL'S, Rising Sun, Ind.

As special Agent for the Gholson Fencing Company, for Boone County, I am prepared to build their patent fence at any time. This is the cheapest and best fence in use. It needs no talking up, as it is fast selling itself wherever it is introduced. Any number of wires can be used.

28-1y-84. G. C. GRADDY, Bullittsville, Ky.

CLEARING SALE!

To make room for Fall Stock I have reduced Custom-Made Suits 20 per cent. and on ready-made Men's, Boys' and Children's Clothing 25 per cent. for Cash only, until August 20.

H. F. BLASE, 540 Madison Street COVINGTON, ... KY.

DON'T FOGET THE Big Fair

TO BE HELD AT LAWRENCEBURG, AUGUST 20, 21, 22, & 23, '84.

NO ENTRY FEES CHARGED.

A NEW HOME SEWING MACHINE will be given to the lady baking the best loaf of yeast bread. Hunter & O'Brien, proprietors of the Lawrenceburg Register, will give

TEN DOLLARS IN GOLD

to the lady making the best roll of butter. Capt. George W. Terrill offers a

PREMIUM OF FIFTEEN DOLLARS

For a pound of the best tobacco grown in either Dearborn or Boone county

LIBERAL PREMIUMS ON HORSES.

LIBERAL PREMIUMS ON ALL KINDS OF STOCK.

LIBERAL PREMIUMS in the LADIES' DEPARTMENT.

LIBERAL PREMIUMS on FRUIT, GRAIN AND SEED.

TROTTING, PACING AND RUNNING RACES EVERY DAY.

Management is sparing no pains to offer all the attractions possible, and to make the exhibition a pleasant and profitable one to all visitors and exhibitors.

STEAM FERRY At Lawrenceburg on Friday & Saturday during the FAIR.

John Q. Davis,

—DEALER IN—

BOOTS AND SHOES, HATS AND CAPS

Of the very best Eastern and Cincinnati manufactures. I claim to be the best posted man in my line in this section. Goods sold absolutely on their merits, and ample willing reclamation made where goods do not come up to the "SCRATCH."

YOU CAN AS SAFELY SEND YOUR CHILDREN AS TO COME YOURSELVES.

Thankful for the very liberal patronge in the past, and hoping with increased facilities to still do the BOOT and SHOE business of this section,

Respectfully,

J. Q. DAVIS,

SIGN BIG RED BOOT, MAIN, Street, Rising Sun, Indiana.

A. M. ACRA,

—DEALER IN—

HARNESS SADDLES

Fine and Cheap Buggy Harness. BURLINGTON, KY.

I also have a full stock of BUGGY WHIPS, LAP DUSTERS, ANKLE BOOTS and TROTTING BALLS and everything else usually kept in a first-class harness shop.

REPAIRING A SPECIALTY.

Give Me A Call.

A. L. Brown,

THE HATTER,

Cor. Pike and Washington Streets COVINGTON, . . KY.

Has always on hand a large variety of Men's, Boys' and Children's Hats, and prices GUARANTEED to be as low as the lowest.

Gents' Furnishing Goods a Specialty.

GOLD for the working class. Send 10c for postage, and we will mail you free, a royal, valuable box of sample goods that will put you in the way of making more money in a few days than you ever thought possible at any business. Capital not required. We will start you. You can work part the time only. The work universally adapted to both sexes, young and old. You can easily earn from 50 cents to $5 every evening. That all who want work may test the business, we make this unparalleled offer; to all who are not well satisfied we will send $1 to pay for the trouble of writing us. Full particulars, directions, etc., sent free. Fortunes will be made by those who give their whole time to the work. Great success absolutely sure. Don't delay. Start now. Address STINSON & Co., Portland, Maine.

$66 a week at home. $5 outfit free. Pay absolutely sure, no risk. Capital not required. If you want business at which persons of either sex young or old, can make great pay all the time they work, with absolute certainty, write for particulars to H. HALLETT & Co., Portland, Maine.

A PRIZE. Send six cents for postage, and receive free, a costly box of goods which will help you to more money right away than anything else in this world. All of either sex, succeed from the first hour. The broad road to fortune opens before the workers, absolutely sure. At once address, TRUE & Co., Augusta, Maine.

AGENTS wanted for The Lives of all the Presidents of the U. S. The largest handsomest, best book ever sold for more than twice our price. The best selling book in America. Immense profits to agents. All intelligent people want it. Any one can become a successful agent. Terms free. HALLET BOOK CO., Portland, Maine.

HANOVER COLLEGE,

Fifty-second year begins Sept. 10, Classical and Scientific courses, with Preparatory Department. Open to both sexes. No saloons. Expenses small. On the Ohio, near Madison. For catalogue address President FISHER, Hanover Jefferson County, Indiana.

TESTED FOR 5 YEARS

by use in thousands of cases. Founded on scientific medical principles. ... NERVOUS DEBILITY ...

NOW IN USE—36,989;

All persons say their goods are the best. We ask you to examine our Improved Keller Positive Force Feed, Grain Seed and Fertilizing Drill and our Hay Rakes. ... Newark Machine Co., Newark, Ohio.

W. J. RICE, CARPENTER & BUILDER, BULLITTSVILLE, KY.

Is prepared to Raise or Move EITHER LOG or FRAME BUILDINGS On Short Notice. And at the Lowest Possible Figures. Your orders respectfully solicited

THE COMPLETE HOME. Agents wanted for this beautiful book. New edition—New bindings.—New illustrations ... Excellent terms. ... Apply now.

CENTRAL MEDICAL & SURGICAL INSTITUTE

OF ST. LOUIS, MO.

Successors to Dr. Butts' Dispensary. Office & Rooms, No. 920 Locust St.

This Institute has ample facilities and an experienced Faculty. ... CHRONIC DISEASES ... BLOOD IMPURITIES ... DEFORMITIES ... WEAKNESS ... FEMALE ...

HARTER'S IRON TONIC

THE ONLY TRUE

FACTS REGARDING Dr. Harter's Iron Tonic.

It will purify and enrich the BLOOD, regulate the LIVER and KIDNEYS, and RESTORE THE HEALTH and VIGOR of YOUTH! ...

LADIES ...

DR. HARTER'S IRON TONIC IS FOR SALE BY ALL DRUGGISTS AND DEALERS EVERYWHERE.

TUTT'S PILLS

TORPID BOWELS, DISORDERED LIVER, and MALARIA.

From these sources arise three-fourths of the diseases of the human race. ...

ANTIDOTE TO MALARIA. Sold everywhere, 25c. Office, 44 Murray St., N.Y.

TUTT'S HAIR DYE.

GRAY HAIR or WHISKERS changed instantly to a GLOSSY BLACK by a single application of this DYE. Sold by Druggists, or sent by express on receipt of $1. Office, 44 Murray Street, New York. TUTT'S MANUAL OF USEFUL RECEIPTS FREE.

Commercial College

Of Kentucky University, Lexington, Ky. ... WILBUR R. SMITH, Lexington, Ky.

TESTED BY TIME. STRONG'S PECTORAL PILLS

IN SUCCESSFUL USE FOR HALF A CENTURY. ...

FOUND AT LAST. THE ANIMAL SAFE GUARD.

... C. F. BROSEKE, Justice of the Peace, Falmouth, Ky.

WRIGHT'S INDIAN VEGETABLE PILLS FOR THE LIVER And all Bilious Complaints

MARRIAGE ...

FREE! RELIABLE SELF-CURE. ... Address DR. WARD & CO., Louisiana, Mo.

KENTUCKY UNIVERSITY, LEXINGTON, KY.

Three Colleges—Arts, Bible and Commercial. ... CHAS. LOUIS LOOS, President of the University, or ROBT. GRAHAM, President of the College of the Bible.

WASHINGTON & LEE UNIVERSITY

LEXINGTON, VIRGINIA.

Instructions in the usual academic studies, and in the professional schools of Law and Engineering. ... Opens Sept. 18. ... G. W. C. LEE, President.

LAW SCHOOL OF WASHINGTON AND LEE UNIVERSITY.

GEN. G. W. C. LEE, President.

Instruction by text-books and printed lectures, ... beginning Sept. 18. ... Chas. A. Graves, Prof. of Law, Lexington, Va.

Local News.

Now is the time to cut briars.

Burlington needs a good tailor.

People are beginning to come to town again.

A fine shower of rain that, Sunday morning.

Everybody is complaining of having a heavy crop of oats.

Thomas Willis it is said has the finest field of corn in the county.

Geo. Hughes has a very interesting pet in the shape of a young coon.

This part of the country was billed for the Lawrenceburg Fair last week.

The Clore boys put their steam thresher on the road the latter part of last week.

Very often a fellow gets his name on the church books, but he don't get the girl.

Elder E. Stephens will preach at the Florence X-Roads next Sunday afternoon.

There was a small crowd in town last Monday, consequently a small vote was polled.

Mit Acra has added saddlery to his business and is now running two hands in his business besides himself.

Thomas Clore, of Bellevue had twenty eight acres of wheat that threshed out twenty eight bushels per acre.

From the looks of the corn fields many of the farmers planted the early Adam variety of corn this spring.

The scarcity of blackberries put the price beyond the reach of everybody except millionaires.

J. J. Berkshire has been experimenting with cranberries, and this season his bushes are well filled with perfect berries.

Monday the Master Commissioner sold to J. A. Story, of Big Bone, 116¼ acres of the John A. Kendall farm near here for $2,600.

Petersburg rejoices to see the distillery so near ready to raise steam. We don't want to be construed as meaning that the town is dry.

The Aurora Fair is in full blast this week. To-morrow is the grand band contest, and lovers of that class of music should take it in.

The election is over, and Jim Clutterbuck is elected Sheriff, and the county never had a cleverer collector than J. R. and Uncle Billy Gorman, which is very essential.

Master Wallace Grant, son of Dr. J. M. Grant, was kicked by a loose horse in a pasture the other day. The print of the horse's foot was plainly visible on the little fellow's side.

John Berkshire has fully redeemed his reputation as a fisherman and can now go up head. His string, when he came from Woolper last Friday, showed thirty fine cats and bass, none of which were taken under a rock.

I call your attention to the fact that I now have with me a first-class saddler and carriage trimmer, and am prepared to do all kinds of first-class saddlery, harness making and buggy trimming at the lowest possible rates.

A. M. Acra.

Sheriff Leathers, of Kenton county, attempted to separate some parties engaged in a fight in Covington the other day, when they turned on him and used him pretty roughly. Their excuse was they did not know that he was an officer.

Jeddie Davis, of Hebron, got his hand injured some time since, and it continued to get worse until the bone became diseased, and amputation was necessary. The operation was performed by Dr. J. C. Terrill last Wednesday, by taking the hand and about two inches of the wrist off. Several other physicians witnessed the operation.

One night last week, Adam Dolwick heard a noise about his premises when he discovered a man who refused to halt when commanded. He returned to the house and got his shot gun and went out again, and finding the fellow gave him a load of shot as he was getting over a fence, and it not halting him he gave him the second barrel. The fellow got away but left considerable blood, which indicated he got some of the shot. The next day, a doubtful character named McNight, had a surgeon across the river from Constance, to take about thirty shot out of his side and arm.

Saturday night a mixture of negro and whisky raised a breeze on the streets and it culminated in a go-as-you please, knock-down-and-drag-out in which bar-room chairs took an active part and seemed to get the worst of the fight. Constable Sandford attempted to quell the disturbance, when the belligerants commenced flourishing their pocket cutlery and defied the officer to try to arrest them. He retired and provided himsel with a pop, but the negroes, having taken the hint, disappeared in haste.

I have sold machines to the following persons who are well pleased with them and recommend them, and to whom I refer those desiring to purchase new sewing machines or instruments:

At Florence: Dr. J. A. Corey, Henry Glenwaldt, Henry Oelsner, W. C. Tanner, Misses Grogen, Miss Annie Northcutt, J M Finch, R T German, Abel Carpenter and machine a Johnston organ. At Burlington: A G Winston, Samuel Cowen, Jesse Kirkpatrick, Mrs. A E Crisler, G Brent, Sam Pope, Miss Mamsell Morris, James Gaines.

At Bullittsville: Clinton Gaines, G M Riley machine and Johnston organ, W P Cropper, John Cropper, M T Graves, G C Gradly, Jacob Piatt. At Bellevue: Jonas Clore, Thomas Clore, machine and Johnston organ, J H Walton, Elijah Hodges and hundreds of others in the neighbor State, Indiana.

G. S. Lozier, ag't New Home. Sewing Machine.

John Cropper was ordained a deacon by the Bullittsburg church last Saturday.

A building boom has struck Florence and several new residences are looming up.

The farmers wear a more pleasing countenance since the rain visited their domains.

The election just passed was not a bonanza to the saloon keepers. No setting up done in the campaign.

Water courses have pretty generally suspended business for the season, but stock water is not scarce yet.

John T. Craven lost a pair gold, sliding frames, spectacles, in Florence, last week. They were in a tin case.

The Baptist Association will be held with the Dry Creek church this year, commencing the first Wednesday in September.

There is but one more month of the vacation season left for the urchins, but they will cut green apples right lively during that time.

The Bucktown end of this burg has collided with a building boom, and new edifices are being erected by the wealthy citizens who reside there.

Some of the corn in the north part of the county had commenced firing last week, it being several weeks since any rain has fallen in some localities out there.

Jim Hogan says he believes in Chinese immigration, and to expedite their coming he is tunneling through to the celestial shore, and will bring them up feet foremost.

Duke Finnell and Lelia J. Richey, of Boone county, Ky., were married at the Lotton House one day last week. Rev. Charles Tinsly tied the nuptial knot.—Lawrenceburg Register.

Sumner Junkins, Mrs. L. D. Houston's father and for many years a citizen of this county, died of brights disease, July 25th, at Germantown, Illinois, in the 71st year of his age.

Marce Riddell is a pro tem citizen of Lawrenceburg, where he is boarding at the Hotel de Horse on the Fair ground, eating and bunking with his father's horses that are in training there.

On the 16th of this month an afternoon and moonlight picnic will be given at La Grace Grove, near Hebron. A good band from the city will furnish music, and a nice time is in store for all who attend. See posters for particulars.

Burlington seems to be on the dividing line between the wet and the dry parts of the county, and south of here the ground was too wet to plow for several days last week, while north crops were suffering for rain. This locality was in pretty good condition as regarded rain.

Sheriff Clutterbuck brought a negro to town Thursday, whom he had arrested under a warrant charging him with bastardy, and while awaiting the arrival of the gentleman who had agreed to go on the bail bond, the prisoner gave the officer the slip and took leg bail. Mr. Clutterbuck was very much annoyed when he discovered his bird had flown. It will be a very cold day when the next prisoner serves the Sheriff a like trick.

If you desire to buy a new piano, or exchange your old one, G. S. Lozier, ag't, Lawrenceburg, Ind., solicits you to call on or write him for terms and prices. Sewing machines, pianos and organs sold for cash or on monthly installment plan, with a 5 years warranty accompanying each instrument and machine. Orders solicited. Office and sales room cor. Short and Tate streets Lawrenceburg. Ind. G. S. Lozier.

O. P. Conner related to us the following occurrence, which happened on the 29th of last month. He was talking to Joseph Riddell, who had just finished topping his tobacco, when along came one of the neighbors, with a large basket of plants which he intended setting out. Upon being interrogated upon the propriety of such very late setting, he stated that he once set out his tobacco on the 29th of July, and it made the finest tobacco he ever raised. Who knows but what the 29th of July, wet or dry, is the proper day for planting tobacco?

Attention! Attention!! Attention!!! All persons who desire to purchase a new, or exchange their old machine, should examine the Light Running New Home before purchasing, if they desire the lightest running, best made, easiest to manage and the most durable machines manufactured. A 5 year warranty given with each machine, and sales made on monthly installments. The New Home will be on exhibition at both the Aurora and Lawrenceburg Fairs. Orders solicited and promptly filled. G. S. Lozier, agent, for machines, organs and pianos.

Never did the sun shine brighter, nor the moon clearer, than they did last Saturday, when the belles and beaux from Rabbit Hash, Rising Sun, Bellevue, Burlington and the surrounding country, assembled at Walton's Grove, there to participate in the pleasure that is always found to the devotees of Terpsichore. The smiles and pleasant faces of all, attesting to the enjoyment of the participants. The throwing gallery was well attended, affording much amusement to the bystanders and those who had a few nickels to invest in that institution. Refreshments were dealt out lavishly and with skillful hands, that were kept constantly busy. Nothing occurred to mar the pleasure of any, unless it was the rapidity with which the fleeting hours passed and drew nigh the time when the many goodbys had to be exchanged. Between eleven and twelve o'clock the last one of the assemblage had gone, leaving the grove entombed in darkness and silence, which so short a time before had been bright and gay, with "eyes looking love to eyes." The crowd was chaperoned by a number of married persons who were enjoying themselves to the greatest extent.

Charles Westbay and a large party of youngsters excurted to Big Bone last Sunday.

Personal Mentions.

[If you have friends from a distance visiting you or expect to be away from home on business or pleasure, let us have the item for this column.]

Mrs. A. W. Murphy is visiting her parents at Walton.

A. W. Smith will return to Florida in about six weeks.

Mrs. A. Crisler has been somewhat indisposed for several days.

J. W. Parish has been elected principal of the Owenton Academy.

The School Commissioner was busy paying out the May draft, Monday.

Attorney Tolin took in his old stamping ground down on Woolper, Sunday

Joel C. Clore, of Hebron, started to California, last Saturday, on a pleasure trip.

George Smith and wife, of Union, were among the visitors in this neighborhood Sunday.

Mr. Hance and wife, of Big Bone, were guests at Esquire Baker's Saturday and Sunday.

S. A. Palmer and family sojurned with friends and relatives in Indiana, several days last week.

Samuel Rich and daughters, Miss Susie and Mrs. Powel, spent Sunday with Mrs. W. F. McKim.

James Conner, one of Hebron's gallant young gentleman, made our office a brief business call Saturday.

James Love and family, of Rising Sun, spent several days, last week, with their kindred in this county.

Misses Nettie Gardner and Kittie Riddell have been the guests of Miss Laura Zin, of River Side, Ohio, since last Friday.

Miss Rosa Dempsey returned from Cedarville, Ohio, Saturday, her sister, Mrs. Gray, son and daughter coming with her.

Lewis Beemon, the John Sullivan, of the Florence X-Roads, enlivened our sanctum with his smiles, not muscle, last Saturday.

The handsome figure of our gallant young friend in Williamstown, Charles Riddell, adorned the streets of Burlington Sunday Monday.

William Clore and family, of East Bend, partook of the hospitality of friends in this neighborhood last Saturday and Sunday.

Miss Orie and Irvy Conner, daughters of W. M. Conner, of Cincinnati, have been spending several days with their grandparents at this place.

Jim Conner, the chief among our local stock traders, was on the jump all last week, and we hope he scooped in many shekles in the way of profits.

Will A. Greer, the energetic secretary of the Southeastern Agricultural Association, canvassed this part of the county, last week, in the interest of the Aurora Fair.

OBITUARY.

In memory of Miss Alice Rice, who died at the home of her parents', Thos. and Amanda Rice, July 25th, 1884. She was also grandaughter of Caleb Rice and Eli Carpenter.

When fair spring, with her sweet birds and bright flowers, last greeted us, Alie was with her friends and family, radiant with health and happiness, but she has passed the unreturning gate, and gone down in all her pleasantness to the sacred city of the dead. Her memory will long be cherished as one who truly "scattered seeds of kindness," by responding to every call of duty from her own home and the homes of others; but the dark winged angel looked in upon that group, and bore her to the Spirit Land.

The warm summer may bring forth fragrant blossoms, and the winter winds sweep over the earth, but she can never return to her friends again; but if we profit by her example, we will meet her in the realms above, where there will be no more partings.

Sister, thou wast mild and lovely—
Gentle as the summer's breeze—
Pleasant as the air of evening
When it floats among the trees.

Yet, again we hope to meet thee,
When the day of life is fled—
Then in Heaven, with joy to greet thee
Where no farewell tear is shed.

M. A. C.

The Commissioner says the Teachers Institute will be held by the Superintendent-elect, commencing August 12.

The day has come when to leave the grave of the departed one unmarked by a neat stone, is not suffered by even those in the most ordinary walks of life, and all can be pleased in both design and price by Huschart & Co., of Lawrenceburg, Ind. John Beall, of Hebron, is their agent.

NEIGHBORHOOD NEWS.

Plattsburg

Miss Katy Did is spending the heated term in this neighborhood.

W. T. Crisler is home from Canton, New York looking well.

Senator J. A. Tolin is laid up with a crippled hand.

Born—To Thomas Hind and wife, a 11 pound boy.

Jake Klopp had his thumb cut off by a mowing machine, one day last week.

Mr. Sim Baldon will soon be on two legs again. Dr. Evens, of Cincinnati will furnish the artificial leg.

The Carlisles and the Speedwells will cross bats on the home team's ground next Saturday afternoon.

Sim Terrill drove 14 fine yearling mules through town one day not long since.

John J. Berkshire caught sixteen pounds of nice channel cats out of Woolper last Friday. Don't say anything to Bange about it.

At one time it looked as if we would have an immense crop of blackberries, but the dry weather has caused almost a failure.

Your scribe has eighty, fine Leghorn, roosters. So come down Messrs. Editors, to our basket meeting on the fourth Sunday, and we will have a Methodist dinner.

Our brass band has not entered the band contest at the Aurora Fair, but the boys make very fine music.

What we need now is a regular, old fashioned root wetting rain, and then the Woolper valley will come up with as fine a crop of tobacco and corn as any neighborhood in the county.

There was a basket meeting at Bullittsburg church last Sunday, and many of the brothers and sisters of this vicinity attended.

Hebron.

Harvest is ended, and the dry weather is cutting the corn crop short.

Joseph Peno's wife died on the 2nd of this month.

Jeddie Davis had his hand taken off last week. Dr. Terrill performed the operation.

Mrs. Alice Daughters is visiting in Indiana.

A picnic is advertised for La Grace Grove on the 16th inst.

William Batterson, Billy Hickey Hayes and E. E. Utz took in the Hunt's Grove picnic in Ohio.

Mrs. Mary Anderson from whom a very large tumor was removed not long since, is now well, to the delight of her many friends.

Thus far leap year has proven to be a failure. The ladies ought to make things more lively.

Several of our boys will take in the camp meeting at High Bridg next Sunday.

W. L. Aylor and wife are visiting friends at Holton, Indian.

Jeff Snyder has gone to Bellevue to Clerk for Mont Balsly.

Jimeson Aylor harvested over 100 acres of hay and 50 acres of grain.

Seveaal of the Hebron youngsters attended the picnic at Walton's Grove last Saturday.

John Aylor, Will Rouse and Charles Clore will attend the Lexington Fair.

Threshing has not yet began in this neighborhood.

Tobacco in this vicinity is firing badly. Corn will not make a half crop if rain dont't come soon.

Ed Clayton is at home on a visit from Springfield, Ohio.

Mr. Scott Cole was here last week, and applied for the fall and winter school. We wish him success.

Florence X-Roads.

M. T. Beemon is preparing to build a new barn.

Miss Seaman, of Covington, is visiting her aunt at this place.

Grain and hay about all stacked.

Tobacco has taken a fine start to grow since the rain.

No grain threshed yet.

John Aylor sports a new buggy.

Professor Cole has been visiting in this neighborhood.

After the fine rain the corn has taken another start to grow, and it looks like we will have some fat bacon yet.

IT'S FUNNY TO SEE

John Welch trying to enforce the stock law within the city limits.

Eph Utz when he gets warmed up on the election.

Lewis Beemon and George Baker sweating over the checker board.

John Aylor carrying two ice cream freezers on old Fan.

The town council when the creek is about to inundate the town.

The weather last Thursday was delightful for pleasure and out door entertainments, and was just such a bright and cheerful day as the Hebron Sunday-school had longed for from the time it conceived the idea of celebrating its Twenty-seventh anniversary. The place chosen for the celebration is in a dense forest near the Lutheran Parsonage, and was well arranged for the occasion, everybody securing comfortable positions near enough to the stand occupied by the scholars, to enjoy the entire programme.

The Hebron Sunday-school has the well merited reputation of being the largest and best conducted Sunday-school in the county, and when it was announced that it would have a celebration, everybody at once commenced putting their houses in order to attend, and at an early hour Thursday morning a very large crowd had assembled at the ground and patiently awaited the arrival of the school in procession from the church at Hebron. Promptly at 10 o'clock the procession arrived, headed by a good brass band, and marched into the stand, when the exercises were at once commenced.

John Tanner, of Ludlow, was Marshal, while Jacob Tanner, the Superintendent of the school, had charge of the singing. Many pieces were sung during the day, and were highly complimented by the audience. The recitation of the Lord's Prayer and the reading in concert by the school, deserves special mention on the account of the perfect manner in which they were executed, and add another feather to Mr. Tanner's cap as a successful vocal trainer.

J. C. Clore was the orator of the day and made a brief and well delivered oration, giving a history of the origin of Sunday-schools, their progress and the benefits derived from them. Mr. Clore has a splendid voice for out door orations, and the one delivered on this occasion was well timed and full of information.

At noon the exercises were suspended for two hours, during which time the crowd partook of a good dinner, indulged in swinging, hammocking, croqueting and social entercourse, and everybody seemed to be glad they had come, so pleasantly was the day being spent.

A two hours session afternoon, in which the crowd was again treated to several good songs by the school and fine instrumental music by the band, and the audience was dismissed, the very best order having prevailed during the day, and all agreeing it had been a day most pleasantly spent.

The Hebron Sunday-school was organized by Mr. Jacob Tanner 27 years ago, and he has served it in the capacity of Superintendent continuously since its organization, having been absent on but one Sunday. His punctuality and earnest zeal in the cause has been rewarded by good results which redound to the interest of the entire Hebron community. This school now has on its roll the names of 200 scholars, among which are to be found the names of children scarcely old enough to lisp the name of Jesus, and those of gray headed sires, who are alike interested in the progress of the school.

Mr. Tanner's success as a Superintendent is largely due his skill in so varying the exercises in school as to make them alike interesting to the young and the old, and he has the satisfaction of seeing on every hand in his community, where he has so faithfully labored, the good results derived. Truly Jacob Tanner has been a faithful worker in the vineyard, and in after years many will be his praises from the twigs he is now inclining.

Last Monday as the little steamer Charles Grant was coming through the Laughery island chute she uncoupled a shaft, which so disabled her that she floated on the Garnett bar where she capsized. Having a barge with her all on board were able to make good their escape. When the Pike came along, she tried to pull her off but faild. To what extent she was damaged, our informant did not know, but it is to be her injury is small.

There was a very light vote cast in the county Monday, and the returns were not all in when we went to press this morning. Mr. Foster's majority for Superintendent is close to 150 in the county; Al Arnold was elected constable in Walton; local option carried in Beaver. We will give the official vote next week. Postal from Florence says, Foster, 121; Snyder, 10; Daughters, 15. Adjourned for want of a quorum to transact business, to the Tuesday after the first Monday in November."

We are glad to hear that the picnic at Florence Saturday was the grandest success of the season. A good floor, a large crowd, splendid music and the best of order were sufficient to mark the occasion as the leading event of the summer's amusement. Jinny Reed never tires in his efforts to make his patrons enjoy themselves.

Chas. H. Menninger mades us a call Monday while in town repairing the Court-house gutters. We got his name wrong when we mentioned it in connection with the Chambers Lightning protector.

Read J. Q. Davis' ad. in this issue. He started East yesterday to purchase an immense fall and winter stock of boots and shoes.

The junior member of the Recorder firm has been sick ever since last Friday, so excuse haste this week.

S. P. Brady had a sever attack of cholera morbous the latter part of last week.

Prof. Stephenson is registered at the Boone House.

The whole Democratic ticket was defeated in Kenton county, Monday.

FOR SALE.

50 head of stock ewes and a fresh milch cow—will sell cheap.

J. J. Rucker, Constance, Ky.

OPIUM and WHISKY HABITS cured at home without pain. Book of particulars sent Free. B. M. Woolley, M. D., Atlanta, Ga.

WITTENBURG COLLEGE,
Springfield, Ohio.

For young men and women. Four courses—Classical, Scientific, Literary and Ladies' Preparatory and Normal departments. New building Spacious grounds. Teachers of experience. Expenses low. Students going home and returning travel at reduced rates. Fall term begins Sept. 4th. For catalogue containing full details address The Secretary of the Faculty.

SCIENCE-HILL
An English & Classical school for girls.
FOUNDED 1825 BY MRS. TEVIS.
Aims to give its pupils elements of a complete education. Faculty selected from best Eastern Coleges. Terms reasonable. Send for catalogue. W. T. Poynter, D. D., Principal, Shelbyville, Ky

Notice of Incorporation.

Notice is hereby given, that Thadius C. S. Ryle, Joseph Riddell, Solon Stephens, G. L. Smith and J. J. Stephens, have associated themselves together and become incorporated for the purpose of constructing a road on the macadamized (turnpike) plan from Rabbit Hash, following the old Rising Sun and Union graded road as near as practicable to near Gunpowder creek; thence up the said creek the most practicable route to the Middle creek and Big Bone road near Joseph Riddell's.

The name of the said corporation is the Rabbit Hash and Gunpowder Creek Turnpike Road Company.

Its principal place of business shall be at Rabbit Hash, Boone county, Kentucky.

The business of said corporation shall be the constructing, maintaining and operating a turnpike road over the route before described herein, connecting the said points given.

The amount of capital stock, $25,000, to be divided into shares of $25 each, and to be paid on calls of the directors.

The corporation to commence June 7th, 1884, and to continue for 25 years.

The affairs of the corporation to be conducted by a president and four directors, to be elected on the 1st Saturday in August, 1885, and on same day every year thereafter. The present president and directors will serve until their successors are elected.

The corporation shall at no time be indebted beyond $1,000.

Private property is to be exempt from corporate debts.

Thadius C. S. Ryle, Joseph Riddell,
G. L. Smith, Solon Stephens
J. J. Stephens.

L. KUPPERSCHMID,
—42 Walnut Street,—
Lawrenceburg. - - Ind.

Always keeps on hand a large assortment of Watches, Clocks, Jewelry, &c. Repairing Watches and Clocks a specialty. Also agent for the

Rockford Watch Company.

Which manufactures the finest movements made, and they are used by all rail-road men.

Give Me a Call.

TIME CARD OF THE

MAYFLOWER.

LEAVES PETERSBURG
For Lawrenceburg at 6¼ A. M.; 9½ A. M., and 11¼ A. M.; at 2 P. M., and at 4¼ P. M.

LEAVES LAWRENCEBURG
For Petersburg and Aurora at 8 A. M. 10 A. M., and 12 M; at 2½ P. M. and 5 P. M.

LEAVES PETERSBURG
For Aurora at 8¼ A. M., 10¼ A. M., at 1 P. M., and 8 P. M.

LEAVES AURORA
For Petersburg and Lawrenceburg at 9 A. M., 11 A. M.; 1½ P. M. and 4 P. M.

ELIHU ALDEN, Master.

County Directory.

OFFICERS.

Assessor—G. M. Riley.
County Surveyor—W. E. Vost.
School Commissioner—D. M. Snyder.
Coroner.—Dr. A. A. Murat, Constance.

COURTS.

CIRCUIT COURT meets the 2d Monday in April and first Monday in October, P. U. Major, Judge; W. L. Riddell, Clerk; A. G. DeJarnette, Commonwealths Attorney; W. L. Riddell, Trustee Jury Fund.

COUNTY COURT meets the first Monday in every month. L. H. Dills, Judge; S. W. Tolin, County Attorney; M. T. Garnett, Clerk; J. E. Clutterbuck, Sheriff, T. W. Finch and W. T. German, Deputy Sheriffs.

QUARTERLY COURT meets the first Monday in March, June, September and December. The officers of the County Court preside.

COURT OF CLAIMS meets the first Monday in November.

MAGISTRATES' COURTS are held in March, June, September and December, as follows:

Bellevue—M. B. Green, first Saturday, and T. H. Sutton, third Monday. J. M. Moody, Constable.

Burlington—E. H. Baker, Thursday after first Monday, and Oscar Gaines, fourth Monday. R. H. Sandford, Constable.

Carlton A. G. McConnell, Wednesday after second Monday, and R. H. Ryle, Saturday after third Monday. Walter Ryle, Constable.

Petersburg—Jos. Hensley, Wednesday after first Monday, and L. A. Loder fourth Saturday. Geo. Comer, Constable.

Beever—W. M. Rouse, Friday after the third Monday, and

Union—M. C. Norman, Thursday after third Monday, and H. Bannister, Thursday after second Monday. A. D. Riley, Constable.

Hamilton—F. M. Howlett, Tuesday after second Monday; W. W. Garnett, Wednesday after third Monday. B. L. Roberts Constable.

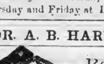
Walton—T. F. Carley, second Friday, S. T. Johnson, Tuesday after second Friday. W. C. Moxley, Constable.

H. C. CHAMBERS,
AUCTIONEER
FLORENCE, - - - KENTUCKY.

CONNER YAGER
Attorney and Counselor at Law,
FLORENCE, - - KENTUCKY

ROBERT B. REED
Attorney at Law.
OFFICE AT - UNION, KY

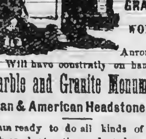
F. RIDDELL. H. P. STEPHENS.
RIDDELL and STEPHENS,
ATTORNEYS at LAW
BURLINGTON, KY.
☞Office over Dudley Rouse's Store.☜



W. E. VEST,
COUNTY SURVEYOR
WALTON, KY.
Is prepared to do all kinds of surveying. All orders sent him through the mail to Walton, will receive his prompt attention.

E. E. IGOE,

Resident Dentist,
Rising Sun, Ind.
WITH
J. P. Ulrey.
Monday and Tuesday at Rising Sun. 2nd Wednesday and Saturday at Aurora, Ind.; Thursday and Friday at Lawrenceburg.



DR. A. B. HARRYMAN,

Resident Dentist.
Office over Post-Office.
AURORA, INDIANA.

J. J. Landram. G. G. Hughes.
LANDRAM & HUGHES,
ATTORNEYS at LAW.
Will practice in the Boone Circuit Cour and the Court of Appeals. Prompt attention given to Collections, on application t G. G. Hughes, Burlington, Ky.

S. W. TOLIN,
ATTORNEY AT LAW
BURLINGTON, - - - KY.
Office in Court-house on 2d floor.
Will manage litigation in any of the Courts of the State, contracts and other legal instruments drawn up at reasonable rates. A prompt an studious attention given to business intrusted to my care. A trial solicited. 12-1y

AURORA MARBLE AND GRANITE WORKS,
Aurora. Ind
Will have constantly on hand
Marble and Granite Monuments,
Italian & American Headstones, &c.
I am ready to do all kinds of Stone Work on short notice and at low prices Hoping to receive the patronage of Boone County, I am respectfully,
F. W. KASSEBAUM.

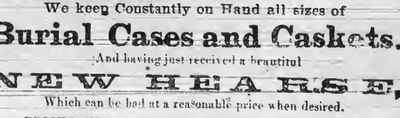
INSURE AT HOME
The Farmers' Mutual Fire
INSURANCE COMPANY
Of Boone County
Is now completely organized and receiving applications for insurance.
Its Rates are Lower
Than those of any other Company, and it gives the farmers of Boone County a
HITHERTO UNKNOWN ADVANTAGE
In keeping their property insured.
EVERY FARMER IN THE COUNTY
should take a policy at once.
J. A. GAINES, President, Burlington, Ky. | J. H. WALTON, Secretary, Constance, Ky.
R. RANDALL, Treasury.
DIRECTORS.
Legran Gaines. A. J. Utz.
Jno. Stephens.
Oscar Gaines, Agent. | C. L. Crisler, Assessor.

Good Pay for Agents. $100 to $200 per mo. made selling our Grand New History, Famous and Decisive Battles of the World. Write to J. C. McCurdy & Co., Cincinnati, O.

GREAT CLEARANCE SALE
—OF—
Spring & Summer Goods
—AT RISING SUN, INDIANA,—
COLTER, POWELL AND OWNBY'S,

Ginghams 7½ cents, worth 10 cents; Satteens 7½ cents, worth 12½ cents, Suitings 7½ cents, worth 15 cents. Lawns 5 cents, worth 12½ cents. Calicoes 5c. worth 7c. Buntings 15c. worth 30c. Aberdeen Mixtures 7½, worth 35c. All Summer Goods at prices in proportion to the above. Remember we rule the prices, and when Goods can be

SOLD LOW, WE ARE THE ONES TO SELL THEM



☞Cottonade can now be bought at 15 cents per yard, worth in any market 25 and 30 cents. A large line of Ironside Seamless Sacks, holding 2 bushels, 20 cents a piece, or $2 25 per dozen.

Colter, Powell & Ownby,
RISING SUN, INDIANA.

R. S. CRISLER,
Burlington, Ky,
WAGON MAKER AND
—MANUFACTURER OF—
ROAD WAGONS, SPRING WAGONS, HARROWS, PLOWS, WHEEL BARROWS
AND ALL KINDS OF WOOD WORK.
Also the Manufacturer of W. M. Conner's Patent Right Hay Conveyor
Saws Filed & Sharpened.
Please call and examine my prices before calling elsewhere.

JAMES S. WAYNE, President. JNO. L. SANDFORD, Cashier
CAPITAL $300,000.
FARMERS AND TRADERS
NATIONAL BANK.
Covington, Kentucky.
DIRECTORS.
James S. Wayne, M. C. Mulch, Sam Hind, S. J. Hickey, F. J. Greer, J. S. Matson, J. H. Mersman, J. L. Sandford, L. H. Dills, F. P. Helm, L. C. Stephens.
The general operations of banking transacted upon the most favorable terms, collections made on all points in the United States.
The Business and Accounts of Farmers are Especially Solicited by this Bank.

UNDERTAKING.

We keep Constantly on Hand all sizes of
Burial Cases and Caskets.
And having just received a beautiful
NEW HEARSE,
Which can be had at a reasonable price when desired.
PRICES GUARANTEED LESS THAN CITY PRICES
DAVIS BROS., - - HEBRON, KY.

City Flouring Mills
RISING SUN, INDIANA.
FLOUR EXCHANGED FOR WHEAT OR CASH. THE HIGHEST MARKET PRICE PAID FOR GOOD WHEAT.
mar7-tf28
J. W Talbott.

VANDERBILT UNIVERSITY. NASHVILLE, TENN.
Cost of grounds, buildings and apparatus $900,000. Productive Endowment $700,000. Six Departments. Tuition in Literary and Scientific Department, $65.00; in Theological, free. Special attention given to Civil Engineering. Session opens September, 1. For Catalogue (FREE) Send to Secretary.

KENTUCKY MILITARY INSTITUTE.
COL. R. D. ALLEN, Supt.

Now is the time To Subscribe for The Recorder.
Only $1 50 a Year.

THE RECORDER.

RIDDELL & HALL, Publishers.

BURLINGTON, : : KENTUCKY.

MEMORIES.

To-day—a long, dark, rainy day—
I sat me down, in silence, near
A chest of things long hid away;
Trifles to memory dear.
With gentle hand I raised the lid;
The scent of roses filled the air,
And lavender, from leaves long hid
Among my treasures there.

"Like fragrant memories," I said
Softly unto myself, and smiled.
"This rested on the sunny head
Of a loved child."
I gently touched the little cap,
And thought of the long-vanished time
When, full of glee, upon my lap
My darling used to climb.

I look up now into the face
That smiled so sweetly on me then,
And joy to see him take his place
With noble-hearted men.
Some baby shoes—that used to be
On feet that pattered to and fro—
With rent through which we'd, laughing, see
The tiny rosy toe!

The feet, grown strong, along the way
Of life are toiling—oft-times rough—
So they, dear Lord, go not astray,
We feel it is enough.
Here is a sunny tress of gold,
That shaded once the fair young brow
Of one whose summers soon were told.
She dwells with angels now.

And here, a lock of snowy white—
Oh life so full of tender grace!
We still must feel the truth, and light,
That shone from that dear face,
Round which these snowy tresses lay
Like silver crowns; so fair.
The influence of that life to-day
Speaks through this tress of hair.

Here is a soldier's cap. Ah! me—
The tears are falling thick and fast.
Shut down the lid; and turn the key:
Sweet memories are past.

—Rebecca Rutter Springer.

BETWEEN TWO STOOLS.

CHAPTER I.

"I have something to tell you, Mary."

Mary Ranley let her work fall into her lap, and looked up at the speaker. She was a tall, slim, dark-haired woman of seven or eight and twenty, with a plain, patient face, and wistful eyes. She wore a dress of a quiet gray tint, and the room in which she was seated was furnished with all good taste that now-a-days is consistent with strict economy. She had not a single claim, in feature or coloring, to any of the acknowledged forms of prettiness, and yet something about her would have compelled a second glance from those who had obtained a first.

"Well, Tom, what is it?" Her face softened as her glance fell on Tom Danvers, handsome, blue-eyed, fair-haired Tom, whom people spoke of only to praise. They had been playfellows, these two, who were alike only in years. They were lovers now, and they would be husband and wife one day: at least that hope had beautified existence for both of them during seven years. Seven years! It is a big slice out of the best part of the allotted three-score and ten, though it was only lately that one of this faithful pair had begun to think so. The other had never thought it yet. "What is it you have to tell me?"

Tom crossed the room and bent over her to stroke her hair. The movement was a caress, and then it enabled him to avoid her eyes.

"I have been offered an appointment at Rangoon."

"At Rangoon." She echoed the words without any intonation of surprise. "That is—"

"In Burmah. As if you did not know that and everything else, my little scholar; and Rangoon is a big place with openings for lots of fellows. Stephens has written, saying he needs a partner and so I think, if you don't mind that I shall go out there in a month or two."

Mary Ranley did not answer. In the pause that ensued she heard the purring of the cat on the hearth, and smelled the faint odor of the mignonette growing in the window-box. She knew quite well that the linnets outside were piping to the roses, and that Tom Danvers was waiting for her answer; but she also knew that her pulses were growing fainter and fainter, and that the weight of a long-dreaded blow had fallen.

"Are you not getting on here?" she asked after a pause. "I thought you told me that your work was increasing; I thought you expected that we might marry in the spring."

"It was all a mistake, due to my confounded hopefulness. I got a new case or two when Smithson was away for his holidays, but he holds the patients, and will go on holding them. The fact is, Mary, there is not scope here for two medical men, and I knew that, though I settled in the place when you wished it. But I have not made a hundred pounds in the past twelve months, and you know that means failure."

"But I make a good deal by my teaching, and I thought that, working together, we might get on."

"That is quite out of the question," he said, fretfully, turning away from the pleading, patient eyes. "I am not going to have my wife drudging all day long that we may not starve. I'll support her myself, or do without her."

The pale hands lying on the piece of needlework pressed each other a little, then the sweet voice spoke softly and firmly."

"I have been thinking often lately, Tom, that you would be wiser to do without me. You see we have known each other so long that we have really grown to be more friends than lovers, and I am far older than you in reality, though not perhaps in years, and so I can not help believing at times that our engagement has been a mistake."

"Oh, you do, do you," wrathfully.

"You see it has lasted seven years now, and in seven years, you know, your science teaches that we change completely, and so I think, Tom, dear, that it would be far better if you planned your future without letting any thought of me hamper you. I am safe enough, you know: the high school pays me a comfortable salary, and I have grown accustomed to the routine of life with Mrs. Gillet, and so, dear, I can offer quite honestly to set you free." She was smiling at him bravely, and her eyes were very clear and bright, but she had an idea that her heart was weeping.

"You are tired of me, I suppose? You imagine that I am likely to be a failure, and you women care only for success," he answered, bitterly.

"I suppose the working ones of us know that success comes some time to the steady and patient," she said, the first hard tone sounding in her voice."

"And have I not been either?"

"Dear Tom, don't imagine that I wish to find fault a criticise; I love you far too well for that; there is no one in all the world as dear to me as you are. But do you not think yourself that our engagement has been too protracted to seem hopeful now? You don't feel it as I do; it seems to take all my strength away to see our life together always slipping further and further off."

"If I make things worse for you, of course that alters matters." His face had lost its smiling softness, his brow was stern and angry.

"You are my youth and my happiness, the end of my dreams," she said passionately; "the want of you will leave my whole future barren."

"Then why need you give me up?"

"Because I think you will be freer without me; because you are learning to dread me, and so the love is growing imperfect."

"It was for your sake I thought of Rangoon," he said, suddenly.

"Yes, dear, and it is for your sake, Heaven knows, that I propose to give up. I am a drag on you, and what you feel for me is far more friendship than love."

"If you think so I have nothing more to say." He rose to go, stiffly, and then the tender heart in her failed.

"Oh, Tom, if it were not best for you, do you think I would have spoken?"

She wanted him to tell her that it was not best for him; she wanted him to prove to her that all her doubts were needless; but she had hurt him, and at her relenting he hardened himself.

"If it is best for you, that is enough," he said, and took his hat and left her without looking at her again.

When the door had closed behind him Mary Ranley sat five minutes motionless. The airy bubble she had spent seven years blowing was shattered by her own touch. She scarcely realized what had happened yet, but there was a numb aching at her heart, far worse than any keen, comprehending pang. Her tears began to flow heartbrokenly, as she mechanically folded the piece of the poor little trousseau on which she had been working, the trousseau that never would be needed now. Tom was gone, and Tom was the lover of her life; but—and in this capacity she would miss him far more—he had always been her pet and protege. What would her motherly nature do now, without any one to plan for or protect?

Women's sorrows seek consolation in the strangest ways. In the first hour of her loss Mary Ranley went up among the gathered treasures of seven hopeful years, and touched with reverent fondness the accumulated trifles destined for the future home. There were the little bronzes meant for Tom's study, and purchased out of the economies of her holiday time; there were pretty vases, and little brackets, and scraps of tasteful china—all the feminine trifles that would have given a home likeness to his bare lodgings. She remembered where she had gathered them up—sometimes in Tom's presence and even the words he had said in jest over one thing and another. And now Tom was out of her life, and there never would be any home for them together. She felt as though the big oak chest were a coffin containing all her youth as she locked it, shutting all the relics out of her sight; and then she went down and drank her solitary tea, and tried to realize all the emptiness of the coming years.

Would he write to her, she wondered, or would she be left always without tidings? And when would he go? And would he be relieved that they had parted after the first edge of pain had worn off?

Six days passed without even an indirect word from him, and the morning's work was acquiring a maddening monotony, and the evening's silence a despairing loneliness. Mary had few girl friends and no confidantes, and so her heart-ache missed the common alleviation of talking it over. If he never came or wrote, if she never heard of him again, there was no one in all the world to help or comfort her.

But he would not be cruel enough to treat her with silence forever; he would send her a message one day, and it would be one of peace and friendship. That faith grew in her day by day, battling with the growing despair, and then one day fact ranged itself on faith's side—a letter awaited her as she returned from the walk she had taken to escape from her thoughts.

She held it for a moment without looking at it, and all her fictitious strength gave way. She threw aside the cloak that had suddenly become a burden and sat down in her bonnet to read Tom's message.

But the letter was not from Tom; she saw that as she unfolded it. The writing was bigger, bolder, more legible. She read it all through before she reached the signature. When she had seen that she read the letter again. It was from John Hayward, the man she had always thought Mousie Graham's lover, and it contained an offer of marriage for herself.

"I have loved you always, Mary," he wrote, "and I have only refrained from telling you so because I had so little to offer till now. I did not dare ask you to share a worse home than you have been accustomed to, and so I held my peace. But at last I have attained to what I have honestly coveted so long; at last Armstrong & Co. have made me head of my department, and so I dare, after a devotion nearly as protracted as Jacob's, to ask you for my own."

It was a plain, manly statement, and it went to Mary Ranley's sore heart. There was no gush, no agony of passion in it; nothing but the simple tale of a man who had known how to be very patient and faithful. Yet his love for her startled her inexpressibly. She had never dreamed of it. There had never seemed anything but the merest good-comradeship in his attitude toward her—but of course his silence and self-restraint rendered his love all the more flattering, and John would make a good husband. Mary had an idea that the man who lived straightly and earnestly would love steadfastly, and she felt that the woman who became John Hayward's wife would have all chances of happiness in her favor. For an instant she wished this offer had come years before. Now, although Tom was not half so fine a character as John Hayward, she loved him, and that made all the difference.

When she came to think of it, it was odd that John made no mention of Tom. Surely he had known she was engaged to him; surely they had always made that patent to every one? Mary Ranley sat thinking over her offer in all its bearings, till the fire waned and her tea was ice-cold.

John Hayward's offer was unexpected, but it was very fair and manly. She almost started to find she was considering it, that opposing counsel seemed to be arguing the pros and cons, with herself for judge and jury. On one side were love and ease and pleasure; on the other side was a barren life, holding only the memory of a disappointment. She was not a heroine, and teaching for her bread during a whole lifetime seemed sad and lonely enough.

But, then, would not marriage with another than Tom seem almost sacrilege, after all they had planned together? Why, their whole future had been mapped out with each other, and union with John Hayward would be but a dreary deception.

Then she went on to think of her pupils, whom she did not and could not love. She had no theories about them. They met her as units without individuality. They obeyed her because they feared her: they would defy her if they dared. And, then, there were her fellow-teachers—Miss Griffiths, who was growing so old and odd; Miss Henderson, whom her class made a habit of tricking and deceiving, because she was short-sighted and tolerant, as the aging so often grow. Would she, Mary Ranley, ever find herself in the case of these—ever see herself lonely, uncared for, just endured for want of a better? Oh, no. Rather a hundred times a marriage into which friendship and respect at least would enter.

Her letter was written, hurriedly, at last, and when it was finished it was an acceptance. But she told John Hayward the truth. She had loved Tom Danvers honestly for years, but now that they had parted she did not think any memory of him would ever rise up between her and the husband she was prepared to accept and honor. She wrote this all quite calmly, but when it was finished she felt somehow as though she were twenty years older than she had been, and as if life had suddenly become quite humdrum and commonplace. Yet she had no thought of changing her mind. She rang the bell composedly for Bessie, the little maid-of-all-work, and gave her the letter with a hand that never faltered.

"This is your evening out, I think, Bessie. You may post this for me on your way through the village," she said, bethinking herself even of the little servant's affairs in that crisis of her life.

"Yes, Miss, surely," Bessie answered, blushing, for she too had a lover, and these evenings out meant the joy of the whole week.

Somehow Miss Ranley felt that she wanted the letter out of her reach, and vacillation out of her power.

CHAPTER II.

"I have come to make things right. I can't do without you, Mary; you are my sheet-anchor; I have felt adrift since I lost you."

So Tom Danvers spoke, hurrying after her as she came home from afternoon school.

There was a drizzling rain falling, and the landscape was blurred, and the heavy clouds hung low, and the woman knew that the face she turned to her lover was pinched and white.

"I thought you had gone, Tom, it is so long since I heard of you."

"It is a week, and perhaps you did not ask about me. I never thought of going in any mad hurry like that. There is nothing decided even yet."

"Is there not? I thought—I had an idea there was," she answered falteringly.

"Oh, no. Stephens only wrote to offer me the appointment, and I went to consult you about it when you took me up so shortly." There was a tone of reproach in his voice, for he felt still that he had been badly used.

"I did not mean to hurt you," she protested, meekly.

"Well, perhaps some fellows don't mind being thrown over after seven years' waiting and just as there is a prospect of something definite at last."

"The prospect seemed very vague to me," smiling faintly.

"Oh, because you would not listen. Stephens offers me either three hundred as a salary, or a share in the proceeds, whichever I like, and he says the climate is good and living not very high, and I had almost persuaded myself, Mary, that we might go out together married. But, still, if you prefer me to grub on here I shall do it, so as you continue to love me."

She had stopped, and they faced each other, and he saw now how pale she was.

"I would go with you to Rangoon if I could: it all seems so easy now, when it is too late," she answered, with a break in her voice.

"And why is it too late?"

"Because I have promised to marry another man."

"You have? Well, certainly, you have not lost any time."

"I have not."

She could have laughed with the dreariest, most dismal mirth. She was so contemptible in her own eyes: all she had done looked so strange and uncalled-for. Why, that very morning her senses had returned, and she knew that a brave, strong hearted, successful woman—for she was successful in her own way—has no right to throw herself on any man's charity just because he loves her and because her life-story has been mistold. If she had only waited to post her letter next day herself it would never have reached its destination. Now John Hawyard had her promise.

There was no escaping from the position in which she had placed herself; there was no possibility of showing herself even excusable; she certainly had hastened with all speed from the old love to the new.

"I had thought you so different from that," Tom said with bewildered incredulity; "I thought you would have been faithful to me even if we had parted—for a while, at least."

"But I was weaker and meaner, you see. I wanted some one to keep me in idleness and buy me fine dresses and treat me well, and, when you could not do it, I closed with the offer of the first man who could." She seemed to take a certain bitter pleasure in her self-accusation now.

"Oh, Mary, I can't believe it, it's not possible! You who were always so high and far removed from the temptations that beset ordinary women!" he burst forth groaning.

"You overrated me. I overrated myself. You see now I am not worth taking to Rangoon, not worth loving or thinking about."

"But is it really true? Are you not torturing me with a cruel jest?"

"It is quite true: I have promised to be another man's wife, and I wrote him that no thought of you would ever stand between us," she answered arraigning herself.

"Then you are a heartless woman, and I shall never forgive you!" he burst forth, pronouncing judgment on the spot and then he rushed past her and out of her sight, while she continued her solitary way with haggard steps and a heart that lay in her bosom heavy as lead.

What can she do now? She has sown the wind, and the harvest of the whirlwind has been very bitter. She has dallied with temptation, and her momentary unfaithfulness has cost her self-respect. But she will be true to herself at last: she will recall the promise that should never have been given. It will not matter as far as her happiness is concerned, but it will be the first step in the painful self restoration.

When her recantation was written there was a load off her mind: but she was not in any fever of impatience to post this letter—it would keep till she was on her way to school. After the hurried emotions of the last twenty-four hours she was physically tired, and so she sat rocking herself backward and forward in her wicker chair with a faint sensation of relief in the motion.

Twilight was fading, and timid little stars were trembling into the sky beyond the uncurtained windows, when there came a soft tap to the door, and Mousie Graham's rosy, roguish face peeped in.

"Oh, you are not busy—thank goodness for that! I was half afraid I might find you deep in the Differential Calculus, and I did so want a good long chat."

"Come in, dear. I am so glad to see you: it is an age since you were here before." Mary took the soft little face between her hands and kissed the delicious pink cheeks.

"Grannie has been worse lately, weaker and more fretful, and so I felt I could not leave her without a special errand."

"But she is better to day?"

"Oh yes, ever so much better, and then Aunt Lizzie came to pay her a little visit, so I left Grannie with her, and ran over to see you."

"That was very good of you, dear."

"Oh no, it was not: I came on business." Mousie laughed and flushed a little, then she drew a letter from her pocket. "This came addressed to me yesterday, but it is evidently meant for you. It is from that booby, John Hayward; he is always in the clouds, or among the cog-wheels of his looms, and so the result is a blunder." She unfolded the sheet as she spoke, and handed it to Mary, and this is what stood before the latter's astonished eyes:

DEAR MISS RENLEY.—In the pleasant excursion we had together last summer I remember your mentioning a book on ferns that you desired to have but could not get, as you had forgotten the author's name. I have just come across a volume by [illegible], the opening chapter of which is on the Osmunda regalis. If you think this is the work in question I shall be happy to forward it to you.
Sincerely yours, JOHN HAYWARD.

Mary Ranley was sure some complex machinery in her head had got out of order, so loud and persistent was the whirring in her ears.

When she spoke at last her voice sounded faint and far away.

"Is your name Mary?"

"Of course it is, or rather Mary Ann, but every one calls me Mousie except John Hayward. He thought Mousie no name for a girl, and so he always called me Mary—Miss Mary; it did sound so funny."

"Then, Miss Mary, I have an offer of marriage for you; it came to me, and, naturally enough, I took it to myself."

Mousie was so flurried that she did not notice her friend's perturbation.

"I fancied," she said, holding the letter in her hand, but not looking at it, "that he must have been writing to me and had mixed the covers. That is so like your very clever people! But how lucky the letter came to an engaged girl!"

"Well, I don't see the luck of it, for I wrote yesterday and accepted him."

"Oh, Mary! And Tom!"

"Tom and I had quarreled, and John's letter came at the worst moment; so I accepted him."

Poor Mousie's eyes grew dim.

"In that case, Mary, I suppose you had better keep the letter," she said, faltering a little. "It was really sent to you and, after all, I don't mind so very much."

"You are a generous little darling, but there is no necessity for your sacrifice even if Mr. Hayward would permit it. I wrote him my recantation this afternoon. There is the letter; you can send it to him with your own. He will be sure of its genuineness that way."

Then the two girls kissed and cried over each other, and after the exchange of divers confidences Mousie went away, carrying John's letter, still unread, in her hand.

After she had gone Mary took out her needlework, with an undefined feeling that chaos had come again, and that in the midst of it it was well to hold on to some commonplace, every-day employment.

By and by, Bessie came in with the tea tray, and as she flitted about the table Mary spoke with the feeling of desperation which makes us always want to lay a finger on our wound.

"You posted my letter last night, Bessie?"

Bessie paused, the picture of consternation.

"Oh, Miss, I'm afraid I forgot all about it."

"You forgot to take it out, I suppose?" speaking in a voice so high and eager that it scarcely sounded like her own.

"Oh, no, Miss; I took it and put it in my water-proof pocket, but Peter met me before I reached the office and then I forgot: but I'll run out with it now in a minute."

"Bring it to me instead, please; I don't want it posted now."

Bessie never knew till this hour why Miss Ranley gave her five shillings instead of the scolding she expected, neither does John Hayward understand why letter number one never reached him.

Tom Danvers went to Rangoon, as he had said, in much disgust and despair. Mary's unfaithfulness had turned the sunlight into darkness for him, but through his pain a certain resolution to be and do something grew daily. He would forget her, he would never speak of her, and if men uttered her name he would turn aside, but he would do so well with his own life that one day she would know him the superior of the man she had married. So, in much wrath and scorn, he sailed away to succeed or fail as might be.

As for Mary, her life was all at the dead level of the monotony now. There was always the morning work, always the evening's enforced idleness, and periodically the long empty holidays in which her loneliness grew only more assertive. Like many another she was learning that—

It is not in the shipwreck and the strife
We feel benumbed, and wish to be no more,
But in the after silence on the shore,
When all is lost except a little life.

She was growing old, she would soon be thirty, and already there were white threads in the smoothness of her hair, and she knew she was growing odder and more unsocial than Miss Griffiths or Miss Henderson had ever been. But she was a good teacher, she was a success in the high school, and she clung to that poor triumph as her last source of happiness. It was she, the strong one, who would do a small work in a small groove all her life, and Tom who would grow to success and power. But she deserved that for her wrong estimate of both of them. And everyone knew that he was doing well, and had forgotten her. Why, it was only the other day that Mr. Wheelhouse had stopped her to tell her that he had just been asking Tom by letter why he was neglecting Mary Ranley.

"It was very good of you," she had said going home with another shaft rankling in her sore heart.

It was dusk as she went wearily down the street. The early October night was closing in, and broad bands of light from open doors fell across her path. The street was very still and empty, and she felt thankful for that and for the coming peace of her solitary parlor. But she stood for an instant on the doorstep to watch the trembling stars before she rang the bell.

Bessie answered it with a beaming face. She was very fond of Miss Ranley, who had always been kind to her.

"There is a visitor for you in the parlor, Miss."

"Oh, very well." Mary expected one of the pupil teachers who wanted a certificate: so she went up stairs and put her out-door things away, and brushed her hair, and then came down to be the school-mistress at home. But it was not Jane Blakeney who rose at her entrance, but a tall, brown-bearded man, who looked into her face and then held out his hands to her without a word.

"Tom!" she said, with a little fluttering sigh; "Tom!"

"Yes, it is I. I came back as soon as ever I knew you were free."

"I have not deserved it."

"Perhaps not: but then, you see, I could not do without you. I need some one to scold and keep me right."

"Oh, no, Tom, never again; old things and old habits are all ended."

"And you threw the other fellow over."

"No, not that exactly; it was all a mistake—all my pride and his stupidity: but I have been well punished for everything. I never thought you would come back."

"I did not mean to come back, till I found there was no getting on without you."

And then Mary burst into tears, and stood sobbing against his shoulder:

"Oh, Tom, I have missed you so!" she said.

"Well, I am here now to take care of you; won't that be reversing the old order of things?" smiling at her fondly.

And so it came about that Mary Ranley, despite her dangerous hesitation between two stools, found a comfortable seat on one of them, after all.—All the Year Round.

—Adown the sloping country lane
The wheelman wheeled him on his wheel. With speed of a wild hurricane,
As spun the pedals like a reel.
Crouched in the corner of the fence,
The ambushed foe lay low in wait,
Ready to suddenly spring thence And hurl the victim to his fate. The wheelman came—"Boo-hoo, boo-hoo!" The old hog jumped into the way. Full ninety feet the wheelman flew, And wheeled his wheel no more that day.—
Wheelman's Gazette.

—Hoodlums demolish vacant houses at Walla Walla, W. T., for pastime.

Preserving Manure.

The value of manure depends upon the manner in which it is preserved and the quality of the material from which it is created. No two manure heaps are alike in composition, nor are the results from manure uniform, as many suppose. Farmers may not always be in a position to control the quality of the feed they allow, but whether it be good or bad it is important that all manure be carefully preserved in order that it may benefit the crops and enrich the soil. On nearly all farms the manure and litter are thrown in a heap in the barnyard, the cornstalks and straw being added to increase the bulk, and to assist in absorbing the liquid and volatile substances.

It is a well-known fact that no manure can supply plant food until it undergoes a change and returns to its primitive elements. In assuming its first forms the original substances combine, creating salts and volatile matter. In the soil the salts decompose and the volatile matter is either absorbed or assists in creating salts. As the manure must undergo these changes in the barnyard, the energy of the materials in assuming new forms is made manifest by the presence of heat, which implies decomposition, but decomposition is not only the tearing asunder of the atoms, but the creation of new substances therefrom. In the crude condition such materials as cornstalks and straw are of no value until decomposed, as they are insoluble in water. All plant food must become soluble to be available. The object in heaping the materials, or spreading them in the barnyard to be tramped, is to have them become fine and thoroughly disintegrated. Nature, through chemical agency, by the interchange of atoms, performs her work in a much better manner than can be done artificially, and the process of decay is the farmer's method of rendering materials for the manure heap fine, soluble and ready for use as plant food.

But while the manure is made fine and soluble it must not be overlooked that the process is a gradual one, and hence every rain that saturates the heap carries downward the soluble parts as fast as the manure is decomposed. The jet black liquid which flows off from the heap is the riches of the farm, and as it passes away the ready plant food which is dissolved in it is lost, leaving behind a mass of matter, often supposed to be the most valuable because of its bulk, but which really is not worth the labor of hauling to the fields. Unless the manure, therefore, be carefully preserved it will be valueless. It should be protected from drenching rains and the influence of the heat from the direct rays of the sun. Plenty of absorbent material should be added to absorb the volatile material, and water is beneficial to the heap also, provided it does not drench or flow off. The coarse material should always be prepared by first being passed through a cutter, or made fine in some other manner, rather than by spreading in the barnyard to be trampled. It should also be worked over once in a while in order to prevent fire-fanging. This may require additional labor, but the saving of the essential elements of the manure will be more than a compensation for the time so expended. The principal rules to be observed are to prevent loss by rains, preservation of volatile matter with moisture and absorbents, rendering the manure fine, and endeavoring to have it thoroughly decomposed.—Farm, Field and Fireside.

Benedict Arnold.

In your city, during the present week, there will be a gathering of the descendants of the U. E. Loyalists, at which time there will be gathered many of the descendants of those who from various motives left the rebellious colonies and settled principally on the St. Lawrence, the Bay of Quinte, and the Niagara district.

I for one have no love for Tories of those times no more than I have for those of to-day, who now in this enervated country, through the timid and patient and long-suffering nature of the mass of the people, are allowed to rob and rule.

It may be of interest to your readers at this time to be informed who some of the descendants are, and other facts collected from various sources by one who with eager interest sympathizes with all the past conflicts of the mass of the people for natural rights, against prerogatives, privileges, and uncontrolled authority, and trusts to see yet history repeat itself even here, for we would be discouraged had we not faith in the spirit of justice to some day soon assert itself, peaceful if possible, if not, otherwise.

The distance of one hundred years or more and the wonderful results accomplished in that time in that country add charm to the characters who were active in the American cause, while on the other side the hundred years has nearly buried in the dust of obscurity the names of those who landed by the waters in the wilderness of Canada.

Near what is now the Rideau Canal, at Kilmarnock Lock in the Township of Montague, County of Leeds, are buried the mortal remains of Hannah Arnold, who wrote the following lines from her home in Connecticut to the most intrepid, daring, and outrageous General in the Army of the Americans:

Dear Brother.—Take this opportunity to congratulate you on your late success in reducing Ticonderoga and making yourself master of the vessels on the Lakes. The cause is undoubtedly a just one. Hope you may have health, strength, fortitude and valour for whatever you may be called to, &c., &c.
Your affectionate sister,
HANNAH ARNOLD.

These lines were addressed to General Benedict Arnold, whose services to the cause of the Americans it is hard to estimate.

It is not my intention to go over his life, to justify any of his acts, or to draw him as an example.

I might say if the ball that broke his leg when leading on the Americans at Saratoga, which deformed him for life, had struck a mortal part, to-day his name would be honored, his remains would be stored in mausoleum, and his memory would be cherished by his countrymen; but, sad fate, he died not soon enough to be honored.

While it is not necessary to extenuate his crime, or to call it other than treason, we must not forget that there has been parallels in the world; also, that he was a man who, if circumstances had been different, might have been one of the highest honored names of 100 years ago.

After varying conditions Benedict Arnold died and was buried in London in 1801, aged sixty years. His sons, Richard, Henry and John, came to Canada about 1798, to look after the land granted their father, consisting of 13,400 acres in the counties of Leeds and Greenville. The sons engaged in business and married, and were leading citizens, and left large families, who are now some of our most valued and honored friends and countrymen, and, like their grandfather, are generous and sympathetic.

I have in my possession General Arnold's military coat, owned by his grandson, which I consider of interest to the curious and antiquarian, or your York pioneers.

There are other names of note which are of interest, but at present space will not admit. The ancestor of our present Governor of Ontario was an important factor in that time. If the papers of the family are preserved would be of interest, particularly concerning the meetings of Arnold, Andre and Robinson, at Robinson House on the Hudson.
—Cor. Toronto Globe.

HOME AND FARM.

—Never use a large sized pot for a small rooted plant. If you do, the soil will sour and the plant sicken and die.—Exchange.

—Trim fruit trees any time after June up to winter, and especially if there be a superabundance of blossoms or fruit.—N. Y. Herald.

—If brooms are dipped in boiling suds weekly, they will become so tough that they will last much longer, sweep like a new broom until they are nearly worn out, and will not cut the carpet.—Boston Globe.

—A very little cream of tartar in the frosting of a cake will hasten the hardening process. If the knife is dipped into water when spreading the frosting it will give a gloss or polish greatly to be desired.—Boston Post.

—To restore rubber rings for fruit cans, let them lie in water in which you have put one part ammonia to two parts of water. Sometimes they do not need to lie in this more than five minutes; but frequently a half hour is needed to restore their elasticity.—Albany Journal.

—Cows that are watered from stagnant ponds or from wells in the barnyard will give milk more or less tainted, and from which it is impossible to make the best butter. So large a part of milk is water that the drink of the cow is of quite as much importance as her food.—Cleveland Leader.

—The practice of placing lime or ashes around peach trees, to exclude the grub, is partly effectual, but the most certain remedy is to remove a portion of the earth from the base of the stem, and dig out the grubs with the point of a knife, carefully following the hole till the insect is found. The eggs are commonly laid in the bark from early summer till August.—N. Y. Herald.

—Creamed Eggs: Boil six eggs twenty minutes. Make one pint of cream sauce; have six slices of toast on a hot dish; put a layer of sauce on each one and then part of the whites of the eggs, cut in thin strips; rub part of the yolks through a sieve on to the toast, repeat this, and finish with a third layer of the sauce; place in the oven for about three minutes; garnish with parsley and serve.—The Household.

—The Farmers' Review says: "Orchards on dry, poor ridges, where no effort has been made to enrich the soil, have, during the last few years, suffered for nutriment, and are therefore incapable of perfecting a crop. It is a question of condition rather than of elevation. Flat, low land contains in a much greater degree than rolling land the elements of tree growth, and also retains moisture much longer, and as these are the two great factors in successful orcharding, we can readily see why low, flat orchards have been so fruitful of late."

—One of the most intelligent and prosperous Michigan farmers has entirely abandoned the practice of shoeing his horses. He says that if never shod his horses rarely have tender feet, their feet keep in good shape, and he finds they are far less apt to be lame. He even finds that those which have never been shod have such sharp hoofs that unless the roads are very icy they stand to draw quite a load. When so icy as to make it dangerous to drive, which is seldom more than two or three days in a year, he can well afford to let his team rest, or draw wood or manure on the farm, where they can almost always travel safely.—Detroit Post.

Woman.

Woman, owing to her proposed enfranchisement, occupies at the present moment a considerable share of public attention, and all that relates to her is of special interest. Man, although he has had the pleasure of her acquaintance for nearly six thousand years, is, or professes to be, entirely ignorant as to her political temperament, and apparently knows very little about her beyond the fact that she was originally produced from one of Adam's ribs. Some interesting observations on this point were made by Jean Raulin in the beginning of the sixteenth century. "Observe the result," he preached; "man, composed of clay, is silent and ponderous; but woman gives evidence of her osseous origin by the rattle she keeps up. Move a sack of earth and it makes no noise; touch a bag of bones and you are deafened with the clitter-clatter." Woman, however, was not without an advocate of her right in those days. The following remarks made on the "Excellency of Women," written by Cornelius Henry Agrippa in 1509, are such as might have been uttered by Mr. John Stuart Mill: "Unjust laws," he says, "do their worst to repress women; custom and education combine to make them nonentities. From her childhood a girl is brought up in idleness at home, and confined to needle and thread for sole employment. When she reaches marriageable years she has this alternative—the jealousy of a husband or the custody of a convent. All public duties, all legal functions, all active ministrations of religion are closed against her." Agrippa looked upon woman as the practical sex. "What arithmetician," he asks, "could deceive a woman in a bargain?" Anyone who has had experience of a modern British landlady at a seaside lodging-house will confirm Agrippa's opinion on this point. Whether woman will ever get into Parliament remains to be seen; but that Eve would have found some difficulty in entering the house as at present constructed is beyond a doubt, if any reliance is to be placed on a calculation made of her size by the French Orientalist Henrien, member of the academy. In a table given by him of the relative heights of several eminent historical personages, he puts that of our great mother at 118 feet 9.75 inches. The dwindling of a woman's stature is probably owing to her wrongs. When she obtains her rights she will perhaps regain her former somewhat formidable proportions.—St. James' Gazette.

Heroism at Home.

How useless our lives seem to us sometimes! How we long for an opportunity to perform some great action! We become tired of the routine of home life, and imagine we would be far happier in other scenes. We think of life's great battle-field, and wish to be heroes. We think of the good we might do if our lot had been cast in other scenes. We forget that the world bestows no such titles as noble a father, mother, sister or brother. In the sacred precincts of home who has many chances of heroism. The daily acts of self-denial for the good of a loved one, the gentle word of soothing for another's trouble, the care for sick, may all seem as nothing; yet who can tell the good they may accomplish? Our slightest word may have an influence over another for good or evil. We are daily sowing the seed which will bring forth some sort of harvest. Well will it be for us if the harvest will be one we will be proud to garner. If some one in that dear home can look back in after years and, as he tenderly utters our name, say: "Her words and example prepared me for a life of usefulness; to her I owe my present happiness," we may well say: "I have not lived in vain."—National Presbyterian.

—Pipe-smoking in lieu of cigars is fashionable among the prominent swells at the watering-places this summer. The English aristocracy, it may be observed, smoke black "cutty" pipes.—Chicago Times.

The British Army.

The British army just now closely resembles that commanded by the illustrious Bombastes Furioso; it grows more and more like a skeleton day by day. Its sources of supply from causes still somewhat obscure are all but closed. Recruiting is nearly at a standstill. Every regiment on the regular establishment is below its strength. As for the militia, taking it in the aggregate, it is already short some 30,000 men, and the deficit is daily increasing.—Exchange.

—Japan has at present 155 miles of railway, of which 117 miles belong to the government.

For Half a Life-time.

Mrs. John Gemmill, Milroy, Mifflin Co., Pa., in the Spring of 1864 injured her spine and partial paralysis ensued. For nearly twenty years she was unable to walk. In the Spring of 1883, she was advised to use St. Jacobs Oil, the great conqueror of pain. The first application gave instantaneous relief. Before the second bottle was exhausted she was able to walk and is cured.

THE man who called another a dog, apologized by saying he did not do it purposely.—Gouverneur Herald.

CURE OF PAIN IN BACK AND STIFF NECK.

104 ADELPHI STREET, BROOKLYN, N. Y., February 20, 1884.

I have had pain in my back for years and it troubled me nights, [illegible] I could get no relief, not even for an hour. At last, hearing so much of ALLCOCK'S PLASTERS, I tried two. In three hours the pain began to decrease; in twelve hours I was entirely relieved. I continued wearing the Plasters a week, and was entirely cured. I also used them for a stiff neck, which ALLCOCK'S PLASTERS cured in four hours.

N. A. MULLAY.

CURE OF LUMBAGO.

160½ SUMMIT AVE., JERSEY CITY, N. J., February 18, 1884.

This is to certify that I have been troubled with lumbago for a long time, and have tried everything, and could not get relief until I used ALLCOCK'S POROUS PLASTERS.

I have also used BRANDRETH'S PILLS in my family for the last five years for biliousness, and would have no other, as they give me the best satisfaction.

M. VREELAND.

AFTER all, the bean pole is more useful to this country than the North Pole.—Philadelphia Chronicle.

LADIES of all ages who suffer from loss of appetite, from imperfect digestion, low spirits and nervous debility, may have health renewed and life extended by the use of Mrs. Lydia E. Pinkham's remedies for all complaints specially incident to the female constitution. We not only have a living faith in Mrs. Pinkham, but we are assured that her remedies are at once most agreeable and efficacious.

"I DO business on a large scale," said the public weigher, "but I don't give it a weigh."—Boston Star.

ERYSIPELAS, Ringworm, Carbuncles, Boils and Pimples cured with Papillon Skin Cure. Try it.

"OUT on the fly!" is now the cry of the infuriated bald-headed citizen.—Lowell Citizen.

Farmers' Folly.

Some farmers adhere, even against the full light of fact and discovery, to the old fashioned folly of coloring butter with carrots, annatto, and inferior substances, notwithstanding the splendid record made by the Improved Butter Color, prepared by Wells, Richardson & Co., Burlington, Vt. At scores of the best agricultural Fairs it has received the highest award over all competitors.

"SOLED again," remarked the cobbler, as he repaired an old pair of boots.—Boston Post.

Better Than Diamonds,

And of greater value than fine gold is a great tonic and renovator like Kidney-Wort. It expels all poisonous humors from the blood, tones up the system and by acting directly on the most important organs of the body stimulates them to healthy action and restores health. It has affected many marvelous cures and for all Kidney diseases and other kindred troubles it is an invaluable remedy.

IF a dog knows a good thing when he sees it, will he seize it when he nose it?—Portland Transcript.

"$10,000 would not purchase from me what Swift's Specific has done for me. It cured me of Rheumatism caused by malaria."
ARCHIE THOMAS, Springfield, Tenn.

GETTING sun-struck is a rather summary fashion of disposing of a man.—Merchant Traveler.

☞ In the Diamond Dyes more coloring is given than in any known Dyes, and they give faster and more brilliant colors. 10c. at all druggists. Wells, Richardson & Co., Burlington, Vt. Sample Card, 32 colors, and book of directions for 2c. stamp.

A WARM day for the ladies—Fry day.—N. Y. Mail.

IF your breath is offensive, your nostrils fetid and filled with putrid matter, and you are rapidly becoming consumptive, use Papillon Catarrh Cure; you will be purified and permanently cured.

A BUSINESS that is run into the ground—Artesian well boring.—N. Y. Journal.

Colden's Liquid Beef Tonic

Will cure indigestion, dyspepsia or loss of appetite. Colden's, no other.

FLIRTING on pleasure-yachts is a marry-time custom.—Philadelphia Call.

PISO'S CURE for Consumption is not only pleasant to take, but it is sure to cure.

A SIGN of good breeding—Getting the prize in a dog-show.—Philadelphia Call.

IF afflicted with Sore Eyes, use Dr. Isaac Thompson's Eye Water. Druggists sell it. 25c.

THE MARKETS.

CINCINNATI, August 5, 1884.

LIVE STOCK—Cattle—Common	$2 00	@	3 25
Choice butchers	4 50	@	5 25
HOGS—Common	4 50	@	5 25
Good packers	5 30	@	5 70
SHEEP—Good to choice	3 75	@	4 50
FLOUR—Family	3 75	@	4 15
GRAIN—Wheat—Longberry red		@	85
No. 2 red		@	85½
Corn—No. 2 mixed	54	@	54½
Oats—No. 2 mixed	36	@	36½
Rye—No. 2	64	@	65
HAY—Timothy No. 1	11 50	@	12 50
HEMP—Double dressed	8 75	@	9 00
PROVISIONS—Pork—Mess	16 25	@	16 50
Lard—Prime steam		@	7 30
BUTTER—Fancy Dairy	15	@	17
Prime Creamery	20	@	23
FRUIT AND VEGETABLES—
Potatoes, new, per barrel	1 50	@	1 75
Apples, prime, per barrel	1 50	@	2 00
NEW YORK.
FLOUR—State and Western	$2 65	@	3 80
Good to choice	3 70	@	6 00
GRAIN—Wheat—No. 2 Chicago	89½	@	90½
No. 2 red	94	@	94½
Corn—No. 2 mixed	56	@	64½
Oats—mixed	37	@	38
PORK—Mess	16 50	@	16 75
LARD—Western steam		@	7 60
CHICAGO.
FLOUR—State and Western	$3 50	@	5 00
GRAIN—Wheat—No. 2 red	81½	@	82½
No. 2 Chicago Spring	81½	@	82½
Corn—No. 2	54	@	55
Oats—No. 2	30	@	30½
Rye		@	61
PORK—Mess	16 00	@	16 50
LARD—Steam	7 80	@	7 82½
BALTIMORE.
FLOUR—Family	$4 25	@	5 25
GRAIN—Wheat—No 2	91½	@	91¾
Corn—mixed		@	61½
Oats—mixed	43	@	45
PROVISIONS—Pork—Mess		@	17 00
Lard—Refined		@	9¼
INDIANAPOLIS.
WHEAT—No. 2 red		@	88
CORN—mixed		@	51½
OATS—mixed		@	32½
LOUISVILLE.
FLOUR—A No. 1	$4 15	@	4 25
GRAIN—Wheat—No. 2 red	80	@	85
Corn—mixed	55	@	66
Oats—mixed		@	34
PORK—mess		@	17 00
LARD—steam		@	8¼

PILES ITCHING PILES. Symptoms—Moisture, Intense itching, most at night. SWAYNE'S OINTMENT sure cure. IS EQUALLY EFFICACIOUS in CURING ALL SKIN DISEASES such as Pimples, Blotches, Rash, Tetter, Itch, Salt Rheum, no matter how obstinate or long standing. Box, by mail, 50c. Dr. SWAYNE & SON, Phila., Pa. Sold by Druggists.

He Fell in the Streets.

KENNEDY'S FAVORITE REMEDY

Cures a Terrible Case of Gravel.

Nothing is more urgently needed than a reliable medicine for Gravel, as the disease seems on the increase, and we are glad to say that such is DR. DAVID KENNEDY'S FAVORITE REMEDY, of Rondout, N. Y. We put in evidence the following letter, selected from many similar communications:

PITTSFIELD, Mass., March, 1884.

Dr. David Kennedy:

DEAR SIR: You have a right to know, and I desire the public to know my experience with Gravel and my remarkable recovery through the use of your "FAVORITE REMEDY." I am a carpenter living in this place, and there are plenty of witnesses to the truth of what I say. My first comparatively slight attack of Gravel was in the year 1878. It passed away, and I had little more trouble until last July, 1883. One day when at work in my shop I was suddenly seized with a keen and terrible pain in my left side. I consulted two physicians at once. One said: "I can do nothing for you! Your case is incurable!" I was frightened and went to the second, who said little, but gave me a prescription. It did no good.

Then began a series of experiences the agony and horror of which words can not depict. Think of it! I was sometimes taken in the street, and would fall, writhing with agony, upon the sidewalk. It was death in life. Thank Heaven, I then heard of "KENNEDY'S FAVORITE REMEDY," through Mr. F. P. Cooley. I had not used half a bottle when I passed three stones in succession, one of which was nearly one-half an inch long. I persevered with the medicine, the symptoms gradually abated, and I have had no more trouble since. I am well, thanks to you and "FAVORITE REMEDY."

Yours most gratefully,

JAMES D. KENNEDY.

What "FAVORITE REMEDY" did in this case it has done in many others. If you desire to do so Address Dr. David Kennedy, Rondout, N. Y.

PAPILLON

CATARRH CURE.

Has received the commendation of thousands afflicted with that dreadful disease, CATARRH. It is a positive cure, and so pleasant to use, that when once applied, the effect is so apparent, that the treatment is continued with confidence. It does not smart or irritate, but soothes and heals.

E. M. HORTON, car accountant of the I. C. R. R., writes, under date of Nov. 19, 1877: "Papillon Catarrh Cure, cured me of an obstinate offensive catarrh of fifteen years standing."

JNO. W. STREETER, M. D., 30 Aldine Square, Chicago, writes July 15, 1881: "Papillon Catarrh Cure, cured me of my recurring Rose Cold in a few days. I have suffered for years, tried every remedy I knew without benefit; finally tried this remedy and the effect surprised me. I shall prescribe it for Rose Cold, Catarrh and Hay Fever, being confident it will cure."

JAMES S. COOK, 12 Rockville Place, Boston, Mass., writes Sept. 18, 1881: "Papillon Catarrh Cure cured me of catarrh after all kinds of remedies had failed. I insufflated a few days and must say the disease commenced to cure at once."

PETER G. THORPE, 179 Vine street, Cincinnati, O., writes Sept. 10, 1881: "Papillon Catarrh Cure cured me of hay fever. I have recommended it to a great many, and all have been benefited wonderfully."

Papillon Catarrh Cure is purely vegetable, and is a positive cure for catarrh, rose cold and hay fever.

For sale by all druggists.

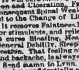
P WITH P

MAY mean "Poisoned with Potash." This is the case with hundreds who have been unwise enough to take Sarsaparillas, Potash mixtures, etc., until digestion is almost fatally impaired. Swift's Specific is a vegetable remedy, and restores the system to health and builds up the waste made by these poisons.

"I was suffering with Blood Poison and treated several months with Mercury and Potash, only to make me worse. The Potash took away my appetite and gave me dyspepsia, and both gave me rheumatism. I then took Sarsaparillas, etc. All these Sarsaparilla mixtures have Potash in them. This made me still worse, as it drove the poison farther into my system. A friend insisted I should take Swift's Specific, and it cured me of the Blood Poison, drove the Mercury and Potash out of my system, and to-day I am as well as I ever was." GEO. O. WELLMAN, Jr., Salem, Mass.

Treatise on Blood and Skin Diseases mailed free to applicants. SWIFT SPECIFIC CO., Drawer 3, Atlanta, Ga.

N. Y. Office, 159 W. 23d St., bet. 6th and 7th Aves. Philadelphia Office, 1205 Chestnut St.



CATARRH

HAY-FEVER

HAY-FEVER. I have been a great sufferer from Hay-Fever for 15 years. I read of the wondrous cures by Ely's Cream Balm and thought I would try once more. After one application I was wonderfully helped. Two weeks ago I commenced using it and now I feel entirely cured. It is the greatest discovery known.—DUMAREL CLARK, Farmer, Lee, Mass.

Ely's Cream Balm is a remedy based upon a correct diagnosis of this disease and can be depended upon. 50 cts. at druggists; 60 cts. by mail. Sample bottle by mail 10 cts. ELY BROS., Druggists, Owego, N. Y.

LYDIA E. PINKHAM'S VEGETABLE COMPOUND IS A POSITIVE CURE FOR All those painful Complaints and Weaknesses so common to our best FEMALE POPULATION.

Price $1 in liquid, pill or lozenge form.

Its purpose is solely for the legitimate healing of disease and the relief of pain, and that it does all it claims to do, thousands of ladies can gladly testify.

It will cure entirely all Ovarian troubles, Inflammation and Ulceration, Falling and Displacements, and consequent Spinal Weakness, and is particularly adapted to the Change of Life.

It removes Faintness, Flatulency, destroys all craving for stimulants, and relieves Weakness of the Stomach. It cures Bloating, Headaches, Nervous Prostration, General Debility, Sleeplessness, Depression and Indigestion. That feeling of bearing down, causing pain, and backache, is always permanently cured by its use.

Send stamp to Lynn, Mass., for pamphlet. Letters of inquiry confidentially answered. For sale at druggists.

NOW IS THE TIME.

To prevent and cure all "Skin Diseases," and to secure a white soft and beautiful Complexion, use

BEESON'S Aromatic Alum Sulphur Soap.

Sold by Druggists. One cake will be sent on receipt of 25 cents to any address. WM. DREYDOPPEL, Manufacturer, 208 North Front Street, Philadelphia, Pa.

BEST and most economical Laundry Soap for Washing, especially Merino, Woolens and Undergarments (cleans perfect and easy; makes clothes white and sweet) is DREYDOPPEL'S Borax Soap. Sold by all wholesale grocers and first-class retailers.

CHICAGO SCALE CO.
3 TON WAGON SCALE, $40. 4 TON $50.
4 Ton $60, Beam Box Included.
240 lb. FARMER'S SCALE, $5.
The "Little Detective," ¼ oz. to 25 lb. $3.
300 OTHER SIZES. Reduced PRICE LIST FREE.
FORGES, TOOLS, &c.
BEST FORGE MADE FOR LIGHT WORK, $10.
40 lb. Anvil and Kit of Tools, $10.
Farmers save time and money doing odd jobs.
Blowers, Anvils, Vices & Other Articles AT LOWEST PRICES, WHOLESALE & RETAIL.

U.S. STANDARD. JONES OF BINGHAMTON 5 TON WAGON SCALES, Iron Levers, Steel Bearings, Brass Tare Beam and Beam Box, $60 and JONES he pays the freight—for free Price List mention this paper and address JONES OF BINGHAMTON, Binghamton, N. Y.

PISO'S CURE FOR CONSUMPTION CURES WHERE ALL ELSE FAILS. Best Cough Syrup. Tastes good. Use in time. Sold by druggists. 25 CTS.

BLAINE AGENTS Wanted to sell the Lives of Blaine and Logan, by J. C. Ridpath, LL. D., the eminent historian. Send 50 cts. for complete Agents' Outfit. Extra liberal terms to Agents. JONES BROS. & CO., Publishers, CINCINNATI, CHICAGO, ST. LOUIS.

"THE BEST IS CHEAPEST." ENGINES, Horse Powers THRESHERS SAW-MILLS, Clover Hullers (Suited to all sections.) Write for FREE Illus. Pamphlet and Prices to The Aultman & Taylor Co., Mansfield, Ohio.

GUNS Shot Guns Revolvers, Rifles, Etc.

Large Ill. Catalogue free. Address Great Western Gun Works, Pittsburgh, Pa.

$250 A MONTH. Agents Wanted. 90 best selling articles in the world. 1 sample FREE. Address JAY BRONSON, Detroit, Mich.

HAIR Wigs & Waves sent C.O.D. anywhere. Wholesale & Retail Price-list free. Goods guaranteed. B.C. STREHL, 157 Wabash av., Chicago.

EDUCATIONAL.

Young Men If you want to become Telegraph Operators, and be guaranteed employment, address P. W. BEAN, Ada, O.

$40 PAYS for a Life Scholarship in the COLEMAN BUSINESS COLLEGE, Newark, New Jersey. Positions for graduates. National patronage. Write for Circulars. COLEMAN & PALMS.

YALE LAW SCHOOL. 6 Professors, 10 Instructors. Fall term commences September 25th. For circular address PROF. FRANCIS WAYLAND, Yale College, New Haven, Conn.

CHICAGO MUSICAL COLLEGE. CENTRAL MUSIC HALL. DR. F. ZIEGFELD, PRESIDENT. All Instruments and Voice taught by the most skillful instructors. Fall Term opens September 8th, 1884. Send for Catalogue.

A. N. K.—E. 990

WHEN WRITING TO ADVERTISERS please say you saw the advertisement in this paper.

BOONE COUNTY RECORDER.

VOLUME IX. BURLINGTON, KY., WEDNESDAY, AUGUST 13, 1884. NUMBER 41.

TOPICS OF THE DAY.

Mrs. Senator Sabin has adopted no less than three orphan children.

Free Masonry, the world over, it is said, embraces 14,160,543 members.

The comet discovered by Barnard, of Nashville, will not become visible to the naked eye.

The Chinese are commencing to go. An Oregon Chinaman was blown sky-high by a can of dynamite the other day.

The False Prop[h]et seems to have his hands full in fighting the negro tribes who have deserted him. He will give Gordon a rest.

It requires the sum of $2,500,000,000 to furnish the people of Great Britain with the common articles of food and drink for a year.

The Washington Pension-office clerk who has fitted up lodgings in the top of a tree should be interviewed as to how the campaign looks.

Mrs. Greely, the wife of the explorer, is only twenty-eight, is a small brunette of most pleasing, though now somewhat car[eworn] features.

The great and frequent changes of the season have kept comfort-seekers rushing to and from the seashores, and up and down the mountain sides.

A fair girl resides in Normandy who is not ashamed to say she is 123 years old. A hundred years ago, we presume, she was more sensitive about her age.

The marble blocks used in building the Washington monument weigh three tons each, and cost $40 when received rough and $60 when dressed ready for use.

A deaf and dumb couple near Rochester, N. Y., have a baby that squalls at the top of a very vigorous pair of lungs, but as neither of the parents can hear it, their sleep is undisturbed.

The future Queen of the Netherlands will be the richest woman in Europe, being heiress to the $4,000,000 of her late brother and the vast private possessions of her father, the present King.

James McDermot, of Washington City, now in his ninetieth year, is said to be the oldest printer in the United States. He says he has set type every year during seventy-seven years.

Among the imports from the United States to Japan last year were three hats at $5 a piece and half a dozen barometers at $3. American fashions makes slow headway among the orientals.

Swimming is growing in popularity among women. Miss Benedict is to try to swim across the British Channel this month. For a time mariners will forget sea-serpents and see nothing but mermaids.

A correspondent, writing from Marseilles, says: "A fearful heart makes a faint stomach. Consequently anything that tends to interfere with assimilation is the worst thing possible for a patient suffering from cholera."

The Washington Star thinks it "a little curious that the police always find it easier to arrest soldiers of the salvation army than to arrest the officers and privates of the great army of thieves, drunks and disorderlies."

At a recent garden party given by the Prince of Wales at his residence, one of the guests was Valentine Baker. This remarkable circumstance is taken to be a sign of the speedy restoration of Baker to his place in the English army.

A cheerful report comes from New York that a better feeling prevails in wholesale trade circles, and that there are substantial reasons for believing the improved aspect of the financial situation will be followed by increased activity in business all over the country.

The simple green painted door of Washington Irving's quaint home at Sunnyside is nearly covered with Virginia creeper, Kenilworth ivy, and blooming trumpetvine, which cling firmly to the fast crumbling structure as if determined not to let it fall to pieces.

The paper plates used by the grocers have been elevated into the dignity of regular table service by a Berlin landlord. Ornamented with a border and colored to simulate porcelain, they serve as bread, cheese, butter and cake plates. Instead of washing, after service at the table, they are used as kindling wood.

California is to vote in November next upon the question of amending the Constitution so as to permit the State to print all the text books used in the schools. The opponents of the change suggest that it will simply transfer the jobbery from the regular publishers to the State officials.

A newspaper carrier in Philadelphia has a route which he values at $9,500. He serves about four thousand papers daily, the profit being over $6,000 a year, the expenses for five assistants not over $1,500 and losses by bad debts small. A considerable number of the carriers have comfortable fortunes.

Of the wonderful girl somnambulist of Montreal it is said that on an evening recently, when she was found walking in her sleep, a gentleman, procuring pen and paper, requested her to write a letter. She obeyed mechanically, and, sitting down, wrote a note to an absent friend, correct in every respect, although her eyes at the same time were closed. A singular fact is that the writing throughout was excellent, the words being written precisely along the lines, and all correctly spelled.

FIRE AND DEATH

Visit Catlettsburg, Ky., With Destruction.

Three Dead and Four Injured Persons Taken From Under a Falling Wall—Business Property Swept Away.

Catlettsburg, Ky., August 10.—At two o'clock the citizens were aroused from their slumbers by the cry of fire, which proved to be in the wareroom of Patton Bros., adjacent to their drug-store. The room was filled with oils and combustible, and was rapidly consumed. The flames soon communicated with the three story brick building of Messrs. Patton, which, with most of the contents, was destroyed. The losses sustained by the Messrs. Patton are $30,000, with $15,000 insurance. The fire communicated to adjoining property and the following losses were sustained: Wellman & Prichard, grocers, stock $5,000, insurance $2,000; C. Pritchard, brick building, $4,000, insurance $2,000; N. P. Andrews, dry goods stock, $7,000, insurance $5,000; N. P. Andrews, building $3,500, insurance $3,000; C. H. Carpenter, clothing stock, $10,000, insurance $10,000; building $7,000, insurance $5,000; C. A. Wellman, office, $500, no insurance; Vinson, Gebls & Prichard, $500, no insurance. Total loss, $76,000; insurance $44,000. The fire engine from Huntington, W. Va., did excellent service. While the citizens were engaged in carrying out the goods of N. P. Andrews, one of the walls of Patton Bros.' house fell in, burying a number in the ruins. Bob Miller was taken out alive, but died immediately. John Graham died after his rescue. David Kinner had his feet burned off, and was dead when found. James McKenzie, Sam Kelly, John Berger and Chas. Haler were rescued in a precarious condition, and others are thought to be buried under the ruins.

New Postal Notes.

Washington, August 10.—The Post-office Department is issuing a new style of postal note. It is of the same style as the old one, but differs in color and in the method of indicating the number of dollars to be paid. The old one was made of bright yellow paper, with a broad design on the back printed in green. The amount to be paid was indicated by punching figures in the margin. The new one is made of paper of a faded lilac color, and is printed in black on the face and in blue on the back. The number of dollars is indicated by the number of stubs attached to it after it is torn from the book. The chief reason for making the change was the poisonous character of the ink on the back of the old notes. The new notes will entirely supercede the old ones in few weeks.

Deaths From Cholera.

Toulon, August 10.—Four deaths from cholera have occurred here since last night to ten this morning. There have been no deaths since that hour. The record of the hospitals here is: Admitted, 7; cured, 13; deaths, 1; under treatment, 80. One death to-day at Le Beaussent, that of a prisoner from Toulon.

Rome, August 10.—One death from cholera to-day at each of the following places: Vignurolo, Sivignano and Corignano.

Marseilles, August 10.—Fourteen deaths here from cholera within the past twenty-four hours. Twelve deaths from cholera occurred at Gigeon on Saturday; at Aries two, and at Montpelier one. The number of cases under treatment in the Pharo Hospital has decreased forty-three.

A Rumor Denied.

Washington, August 9.—During to-day a rumor originated in somewise that it had been discovered that cannibalism had been practiced by the Greely party before their rescue, they having been reduced to such a state of starvation as to drive them to it. The officers at both the War and Navy Departments deny it. Admiral Nichols, Acting Secretary of the Navy, said there was not a syllable of truth in it. It was absolutely false, there had never been an intimation that there was ever even an approach to such a thing. The story, he said, was a base invention.

Too Heavily Loaded.

Wheeling, W. Va., August 10.—On Friday night a young men living in the lower portion of Braxton County, named Willis Given, was fatally injured by the bursting of a gun barrel. He had been with a serenading party, and on returning home fired off his gun. It was heavily charged with slugs, and these, with pieces of the barrel, struck him in several places when it burst. One very bad gash was made in his side, and it, with the wound in the head, will cause death.

Fatal Base Ball Accident.

Van Wert, O., August 9.—Last evening Sigmund, an eleven-year-old son of General A. Jacobs, was catching behind the bat in a ball game, and was struck on the head, felling him to the ground. He walked to his home, a distance of five squares, and died in a quarter of an hour afterward.

Gold-Brick Swindler Arrested.

St. Louis, August 10.—John Holcomb, a gold-brick swindler and noted confidence man, was arrested here this afternoon. He was trying to work off some gold bullion, which he represented to be worth $15,000, on S. Van Raelte, a pawnbroker. When arrested $250 in counterfeit receipts for making gold bricks were found on him, and in his valise at the Everett House several bars of bogus gold and some $500 in genuine gold were found. He is believed to be one of the confidence men who worked a $50,000 job successfully in Baltimore a short time ago.

A Talisman for Cleveland.

Albany, N. Y., August 10.—The left hind foot of a graveyard rabbit, which has a potent influence among the Southern negroes, has been presented to Governor Cleveland as a talisman in the campaign. The rabbit from which the foot was taken was shot on the grave of Jesse James. The foot was superbly mounted and engraved in solid silver by jewelers in Eufaula, Ala. It was mounted to wear as a watch charm.

Serious Fall from a Roof.

Wheeling, W. Va., August 10.—Last evening Alex. McElroy, while engaged in placing a slate roof on a new building in the southern part of town, slipped and fell to the ground, a distance of twenty-five feet, striking on his side. Several ribs were broken and a bad gash was cut in his head. He also sustained other internal injuries that will probably cause his death.

Suicide of a Prominent Iowan.

Council Bluffs, Iowa, August 10.—Marshall Key, Clerk of the United States Court, blew his brains out this morning in his bed-room, in the presence of his family physician. He had been suffering from mental aberration for several weeks. He was very wealthy and well-known throughout Iowa.

BATTLE WITH HORSE THIEVES.

The Thieves Surprised and Nine out of a Party of Fourteen Killed.

Helena, Montana, August 9.—Meager particulars are received of another slaughter of horse-thieves in the Musclesbell region, 150 miles northeast of here, last week, by cowboys. While in pursuit of stolen horses, a log-house was discovered in the timber on the mountain side. It was secretly watched a day or two, during which time several small parties of men came and went, some by day, others by night, having in possession horses, evidently stolen. It becoming evident that it was a horse thieves' rendezvous, cowboys congregated, and last Monday night crawled close up to the house and attacked fourteen horse-thieves, about the premises at the time. Nine were killed and five escaped. The cabin was set fire to and burned. No particulars are yet received of the fight of Granville Stuart's cowboys with a band of thieves at the mouth of the Musclesbell, though the fight must have occurred several days ago. The locality is over two hundred miles from Helena, with no telegraph communication. There never was a period in the history of this or any other Territory when so much horse thieving was going on. Citizens are determined to effectively stop it. Fully fifty thieves have been hanged or shot in the past month.

Crop Reports.

Washington, August 9.—The Department of Agriculture reports the condition of cotton improved in Virginia, Tennessee, Mississippi, Louisiana and Arkansas. The improvement is especially manifest in Mississippi and Louisiana. In North Carolina and Georgia its average status is unchanged since the July report. In South Carolina, Florida and Alabama the excessive rains caused a weedy growth and the shedding of forms, and has prevented cultivation. In Texas the drouth has caused a loss of one point, and has raised serious apprehensions for the future. Cotton moth has appeared in the Gulf States, and worms are reported in a few counties, but no damage as yet has resulted. The plant is generally reported late and deficient as yet in fruitage, but in a condition to give good results with favorable weather and deferred frosts, or to show heavy depreciation with continued excess of rain in one section and drouth in the others. The average condition advanced from 86 in July to a little above 87. So far this is favorable, as in six years of the past ten, the August report has shown a decline from the record of the preceding month, exceptions being 1876, 1880 and 1882. State averages are: Virginia, 88; North Carolina, 87; South Carolina, 91; Georgia, 90; Florida, 97; Alabama, 92; Mississippi, 89; Louisiana, 85; Texas, 79; Arkansas, 87; Tennessee, 92. Advices since the first of the month indicated an improvement from seasonable rains in Texas. The condition of the corn averages are the same as in the July report, and is higher than in any August since 1880. It has been exceeded but three times in ten years—in 1875, 1879 and 1880, when it was 99 in each instance. There has been an improvement in Iowa, Missouri, Kansas, Nebraska, Georgia, Alabama, Kentucky, New Jersey and the Pacific Coast. A slight decline is reported in Ohio, Indiana, Illinois, and in some of the Southern States. Drouth has prevailed in portions of the Ohio Valley and in Texas with considerable severity, reducing the condition of corn six points. The averages of the principal States are: New York 91, Maryland 94, Virginia 95, North Carolina 97, South Carolina 94, Georgia 97, Alabama 99, Mississippi 90, Louisiana 78, Texas 83, Arkansas 91, Tennessee 99, Pennsylvania 90, Kentucky 91, Ohio 81, Indiana 84, Illinois 92, Iowa 103, Missouri 102, Kansas 101, Nebraska 105. The report for wheat includes only the spring wheat region. The average is 98, one point higher than in two of the last good spring wheat years, and higher than in any year since 1877. The average for the condition of oats is 94, one point lower than in 1883. The crop has been harvested in lower latitudes, and promises a fine yield in most of the Northern States. The condition of rye averages 97, same as last month, as harvested and ripening. Barley also maintains its high condition, and buckwheat promises a full crop on an area of about the same as last year. Tobacco promises a large crop. The averages for the principal States are: Massachusetts 85, Connecticut 92, Pennsylvania, 82, Maryland 102, Virginia 97, North Carolina 99, Tennessee 103, Kentucky 97, Ohio 74. The prospect is favorable for another large crop of potatoes; not so full as last year on an area three per cent. smaller. The present indications point to a crop about ten per cent. less than that of 1883, with a larger difference if the future conditions should be less favorable.

Lease of Natural Gas Territory.

Pittsburg, August 10.—George Westinghouse, representing the Philadelphia Natural Gas Company, yesterday purchased the leasehold of four-fifths of all the natural gas territory in Western Pennsylvania. The sale includes the Butler and Tarentum fields, and five farms in the vicinity of Homewood and this city. The purchase was made from and through J. M. Guffey, and the aggregate area of the tracts is seven thousand acres. The terms of the sale are withheld.

Damaging Frosts.

East Tawas, Mich., August 9.—Heavy frost here last night ruined the potato and buck-wheat crops.

Detroit, August 9.—Reports just received from a number of points in the State, indicated that the frost of last night was general throughout the State. The damage is chiefly to garden stuff, which suffered severely.

Over the Falls.

Niagara Falls, August 10.—A man, who is supposed to be Woodke, and from Buffalo, jumped into the rapids and was carried over the falls.

Under a Tile-Kiln.

Lima, O., August 10.—A tile-kiln, near Gomer, seven miles north of here, caved in this afternoon, burying five men beneath the debris. John Burnell and John Thomas are both internally injured, and it is thought can not recover. The other three are not seriously injured.

Died, Aged 111.

Paris, Ky., August 10.—Millie Owen, colored, died here last night at the Biblically authenticated age of 111 years. She was the property of the Wilkerson family during the slavery period. She never during her life claimed to have nursed or even having seen George Washington.

The Washington Monument.

Washington, August 9.—The last layer of stone was placed on the Washington Monument to-day. It is now five hundred feet high. Workmen will immediately begin erecting the framework for the roof, which will be fifty-five feet high.

Crushed to Death.

Mattoon, Ill., August 9.—A young son of Samuel Ashbrook, of this city, was killed this evening by accident. He fell from a wagon loaded with sand, and before the team was stopped the wagon passed over his body, crushing him to death.

WAR ON MORMONS.

Wholesale Slaughter of Mormon Elders.

A Meeting Broken up in Tennessee by a Band of Masked Regulators.

Nashville, Tenn., August 11.—An organization established by Mormon elders in Lewis and Hickman Counties, this State, about three years ago, was broken up on Sunday by the killing of all the elders by a band of masked men. Mr. Depriest, U. S. mail-carrier between Ivy Mills and Centerville, Hickman County, gives the following account of the massacre: Three elders were holding a meeting at Conder's farm, Cane Creek, Lewis County, Sunday morning, when twelve masked men, on horseback, rode up to the house and ordered a young man named Hutson and young Conder to surrender. They showed fight, when one of the masked men knocked Conder down, breaking his skull. Hutson fired at one of the masked men, who fell dead, and was afterwards found to be Dave Hinson, a citizen of Hickman County, and lived at Brush Fork, on Beaver Dam. The masked man then shot and killed two of the Mormon elders. The third elder ran toward the [woods], from which firing was soon heard. The elder, not having been seen since, is supposed also to have been killed. It has since been ascertained that the masked men, before going to Conder's house, stopped at the house of a man named Garrett, near Conder's house, found a Mormon elder there, and left two masked men there in charge of the elder. Shooting was heard there shortly afterward, and the elder has not been seen since. When the firing commenced at Conder's house, one of the elders hid behind Mrs. Conder, and in shooting at him Mrs. Conder was wounded.

BURIAL OF A GIANT.

Fifteen Men Required to Lift the Coffin Into a Wagon.

Washington, August 11.—The death of a giant named Dawson in this city, who was over seven feet high and weighed 480 pounds, caused many difficulties at his burial yesterday, which were finally surmounted by an ingenious undertaker. The body was laid out in the rear yard adjoining the house, where, under a large grape arbor, the coffin was placed. The casket was of gigantic dimensions, being seven feet six inches in length, three feet wide and two feet deep. It was of plain black walnut, with silver handles and trimmings, and weighed, exclusive of these, 270 pounds, making the entire weight of the casket and body 750 pounds. At a signal from the undertaker twelve muscular men stepped forward and raised the coffin from the rests, a choir chanting the Masonic requiem. The men with the coffin then proceeded through the yard, followed by the honorary pall-bearers, composed of two representatives of each Masonic body. The rear gate, leading to a large alley, was hardly wide enough to admit the passage of the men and the coffin. In the alley was a funeral wagon, draped in black, and drawn by two white horses, this being necessary, as there was no hearse in the city or the country, so far as known, large enough for the purpose. The coffin was put into the wagon by the efforts of fifteen men, and covered with the floral emblems.

Storm in England.

London, August 11.—Severe thunder storms prevailed throughout England yesterday. At Accrington hail stones fell three inches long and an inch thick. Houses, churches and mills within an area of two miles were wrecked as by a riot. Church windows were riddled as if volleys of shot had been fired into them. The water in the river Arwell rose five feet within twenty minutes. The lightning was terrific. Two persons were struck dead at Burnley two at Barnsley, one at Darwen and one at Nottingham.

That Earthquake.

Long Island City, August 11.—The earthquake yesterday caused the brick chimneys of two houses to fall at East Norwich. The Presbyterian Sunday School at Jamaica had its walls cracked from one to two inches in width, extending from the roof to the foundation. A colored camp meeting in Fleet's Woods was broken up by the shock. All in attendance being on their knees at the time, they jumped up, shouting, and ran from the woods to their homes.

Drowned in the Danube.

Pesth, August 11.—Later reports regarding the great storm of yesterday show that it was more severe than at first anticipated. In addition to the damage reported in the previous dispatch comes the intelligence that the villages of Zebezony and Orozy have been partially demolished and twenty persons drowned by the rapidly rising water of the Danube, while a number of barns, outhouses, cattle, horses, and other live stock were swept away.

Half Rates to Clerks.

Washington, August 11.—The heads of the various departments have been informed that the trunk lines throughout the country have made arrangements to take Government clerks home to vote at half rates. The tickets will be good for thirty days and the clerks' families will be allowed to accompany them at the same rate.

Stationery to be Tested.

Washington, August 11.—The stationery used in the various branches of the department is to be tested. Already registered packages and dead-letter envelopes have been tested and found to resist but about fifteen pounds pressure when they should resist thirty pounds.

Heavy Embezzlement.

Philadelphia, August 11.—Henry A. Haworth, a member of the Common Council of this city, has disappeared and is charged with the embezzlement of trust funds to the amount of $80,000, his mother and brother being among the victims. It was a system of petty swindling.

—A young married man in this city was asked by his wife to order some kindling-wood. During the forenoon he met a wood-vender, and ordered a dollar's worth to be delivered. Suddenly remembering that his wife had not change to that amount, and not wishing to pay the vender before he had delivered the eight barrels, he very wisely sent the dollar to his wife by the dealer. The precise condition of affairs did not dawn upon him till he asked his wife in the evening if she received the money. The dealer said the wood was paid for.—Hartford Times.

—In some parts of England bees are never sold for money. They are exchanged for fruit, grain, vegetables and animals, but their owners believe that "bad-luck" attends persons who sell their bees for money.

—Captain Condor, of the Palestine exploration fund, says he has found the real Holy Sepulcher. It is a solitary tomb without the city and made with a shelf, where the two angels might have sat.

—Rich veins of amethyst have been discovered in the Silesian Mountains, Germany.

AN EARTHQUAKE.

The Earth in New York and Vicinity Violently Shaken for Ten Seconds.

Great Panic Among the Denizens of the Tenement Districts—Ceilings Cracked, and Dishes Shaken from Their Shelves—Brooklyn Bridge Piers Reported to Have Been Visibly Oscillated.

New York, August 10.—At about eleven minutes past 2 o'clock this afternoon New York was visited by an earthquake. The shock lasted from two to five seconds, though many persons estimate it at a much greater period, and was perceptible not only in New York proper, but in all the adjoining cities, from Long Branch and Jersey City to Brooklyn and Coney Island, and up the Hudson to Yonkers. There were three distinctly perceptible shocks, proceeding in a lateral direction from north to South. Men and women hurried into the street and on the tops of houses, while windows in every direction were filled with anxious and excited people. Many women fainted, and others ran into the streets, wringing their hands in the most hysterical manner, declaring that the end of the world was at hand.

The greatest excitement prevailed in the Jewish and Bohemian quarter, on the East Side. The houses, which are mostly high and lightly-constructed tenements, were violently shaken, and the terrified inmates rushed out into the streets, carrying with them whatever of their household effects they could move. Children, screaming with fright, were born out by parents, who were hardly less panic-stricken, and the whole population were soon massed in the center of the street.

In Ludlow street between Hester and Canal the panic was at its height. The streets were swarming with people, men, women and children huddled together, evidently thinking their last hour had arrived, and expecting every moment to see the walls of their dwellings fall upon them. Women were shrieking and children were bawling, while men were either swearing or praying. This was kept up for nearly half an hour, when the commotion finally subsided, and the police persuaded the people to return to their houses. Similar scenes were witnessed in Mulberry, Jersey and Mott streets, where Italians have their colonies. The fright, however, was not so intense, and after a little their loud shouts and wild gesticulations ceased.

Operator Hoffman, at the arsenal, was thrown from his chair, but was not hurt. The globes of lamps in his office were cracked. The ceilings of the Tenth Precinct Station-house were badly cracked, and a frame house at 147 Lewis street cracked in several places, and one of the women who lived in the house became unconscious from fright. A street car in Avenue B was lifted from the track several times, and several horses are reported thrown down. At a drug store at Ninety-ninth street and Tenth avenue several bottles were thrown from the shelves.

The policemen on the Brooklyn bridge report that the shock was distinctly felt there, and the great towers at either end oscillated visibly, while the bridge itself rocked. The shock was felt generally along the river fronts, and piers were shaken as if by heavily loaded trucks passing over them. At the iron steamboat pier, a structure of solid masonry, the motion was so violent that the ticket-takers rushed from their offices to ascertain the cause.

Late in the afternoon boats brought back crowds from Coney Island. There the shock seemed to be much more violent than in the city. The piazzas and dining-rooms of the great hotels were well filled, when a rumbling noise was heard, followed by a rocking of the ground, which made the windows rattle, and shook dishes and wine glasses from the tables. There was a general rush for open air, and for some time great excitement prevailed. At the new piers there was a similar shock, and even chairs rattled about. There was a general rush toward the main entrance, people being under the impression that the structure was giving way. As the shock did not recur, apprehensions on this score were soon allayed.

The sensation experienced on board the receiving ship Vermont, at Brooklyn navy yard, was similar to that felt when a broadside is discharged from a ship at some distance, according to the story of one of the sailors. There was a distinctly felt jar, and noticed by all on board. Persons traveling in street cars felt the vibration, and in many instances the wheels of the cars seemed to leave the track, producing the same effect as when they pass over a loose switch. The bell of the Presbyterian Church in Greenpoint swayed back and forth, and rang several times loud enough to be heard by all the people living in the neighborhood.

Among other evidences of the violence of the agitation in Brooklyn may be mentioned the stopping of clocks, throwing down of a high pile of bricks, swinging of lamps and pictures and the like. Many Sunday-schools were in session at the time, and teachers had in some instances great difficulty in allaying the terror of the children, and preventing a panic.

From reports received from Long Island it appears that the earthquake visited that region with greater severity than this city. Along the Atlantic coast of Long Island, the shock was very violent, and the vibrations seemed to increase in power as they traveled eastward. In Jamaica the vibrations lasted ten seconds, and chimneys on several houses toppled over.

Reports from many parts of this State, Connecticut, New Jersey and Pennsylvania show that the shock was felt about as in this city, and was attended with no graver damage than the trembling of old chimneys or rattling of dishes. Some women at different points are said to have fainted, but no one, so far as known, died of fright.

Philadelphia, Penn., August 10.—The city was visited at ten minutes past two o'clock this afternoon by an earthquake, which caused the greatest excitement, and is the sole topic of conversation. It was preceded by a low rumbling noise, resembling distant thunder. There were two distinct shocks, continuing about five seconds each. No material damage was done in the city, but several chimneys were toppled over. The vibrations were so heavy that windows were rattled and bells were rung all over the city.

York, Penn., August 10.—At 2:15 this afternoon a slight earthquake shock visited this city, shaking houses, rattling crockery, banging doors and causing other unusual noises. No damage was done so far as can be learned. The shock was felt over this county, and especially along the Susquehanna River.

—The pilots of all lake steamers have been enjoined by the Secretary of the Treasury to admit no passengers into the pilot-houses. This regulation is intended to guard against distracting the attention of the wheelsman from his business, which the chattering of visitors often does, thereby increasing the chances of accident.—Chicago Journal.

—In Queensland, immunity from punishment induces the white men to think nothing of taking the lives of natives, and the latter are killed for stealing a few pieces of tobacco, as was the case with a skipper at Dufaure Island. For a trifling theft he shot three men whom he suspected.

—A correspondent of the New York World says that at a sheep ranch in Montana a lamb which had been bitten by a rattlesnake was cured by the application of baking soda. It is, also, usual in that vicinity to apply the same remedy to horses, and is usually followed by complete cure.

—Pierre Lorillard has built in Jersey City a library for the free use of the 3,500 operatives in his employ.—N. Y. Times.

THE COMMONWEALTH.

Louisville Leaf Tobacco Market.

Dark and heavy styles have been strong for Italian and French types, while low lugs have been somewhat irregular. Redried Greenriver tobaccos have been active and firm, having one or two lapses which were healed by rejections. It is believed that the outlook for manufactured goods is somewhat better, chiefly on account of the fact that jobbers' and retailers' stocks are exceedingly light. We quote full-weight packages new crop sound tobacco as follows:

	Dark and Heavy.	Burley.
Trash	$6 50 @ 8 75	$4 50 @ 8 00
Common lugs	7 00 @ [illegible]	7 00 @ 8 00
Medium lugs	7 50 @ 7 75	8 50 @ 9 50
Good lugs	8 00 @ 8 50	10 00 @ 11 00
Common leaf	8 00 @ 8 50	18 00 @ 12 50
Medium leaf	8 75 @ 9 50	13 50 @ 16 00
Good leaf	10 00 @ 11 00	17 00 @ 20 00
Fine and fancy leaf	12 00 @ 16 00	22 00 @ 23 50

Miscellaneous Items.

A young lad of Covington went crazy from reading Jesse James and Buffalo Bill stories, and imagining himself both a desperado and Judge Lynch, attempted to hang himself in his bed-room.

A woman named Ellen Endries attempted suicide at Louisville the other day by jumping from the Cincinnati mail-boat. Her husband, who was standing near her, jumped in to rescue her, but had it not been for the Life Savers they both would have been drowned. They were drawn out of the water and stated that they were from Cincinnati. Despondency from the effects of a spree is said to be the cause of the woman's attempt.

A Louisville paper complains because, while Louisville is making granite streets on which the rattle of a baby carriage can be heard a square, London is trying an improved wooden pavement which makes London as quiet as a New England village.

Wm. Goosey and a man named Ramsey, at Kidville, had a knife fight over the illegal selling of whisky. Their two brothers ran up with shot guns, and by a cross fire, both the knifers were mortally wounded. No arrest.

The returns indicate that the Kentucky election resulted in the election of Judge Holt.

At Smithland, Myers, alias Myrick, who claimed to have been the real murderer of old man Morris, was discharged from custody, it being proven that he was in the penitentiary at the time the murder was committed.

Kentucky crop reports show the yield of wheat to be about 20,000,000 bushels, or 3,000,000 more than any previous crop.

Mr. John Brosee, and old an valued citizen of Maysville, died at his home in that city the other night at the age of sixty-eight years.

Miss Mary Rouse, aged fifty-seven years, died the other day, at her home in Boone County. She has been an invalid for a number of years, and died while sitting in a chair. The deceased had not laid in a bed for four years previous to her demise, and her limbs had become so accustomed to a sitting posture that it was impossible to straighten them.

Judge G. H. Milliken, an old and respected citizen of Franklin, is dead, of cancer of the stomach.

In Louisville Abe Franks and Jake Hasselwander, both fat men, made a foot-race around a block, on a bet of $25. Franks was the favorite, says the Post, and would have won the race had not a large dog assailed the seat of his pants, thinking him a burglar.

Geo. Router, a well-to-do young men of Woodbine, was found in a log murdered. John Saxton was arrested, and some of Router's property found on him.

Cale Norton, colored, accidentally shot himself at Carlisle the other day, and died in an hour.

The official election returns of Owen County give Ward, Democrat, for Superior Judge, $2,290; Little, Independent, 128. J. W. Raison's majority for School Superintendent is 1,003. R. C. Greene was re-elected Sheriff without opposition. The vote for liquor license is 1,230; against license 1,761.

Anthony Hall, of Ballard County, died a few days ago with smallpox. His wife died a few days before him with the same disease, and a daughter is lying very low.

Wm. McDowell, a farmer of Nicholasville, has lost a valuable brood-mare, some enemy having stolen into his stable during the night and succeeded in cutting the animal's throat.

An old feud has resulted in a shooting affray at Bradfordville, and the wounding of four men and two horses. Another similar affair at South Fork, resulted in one death and three woundings.

H. J. Whitehead, of Carroll County, had fifteen acres of wheat which yielded him six hundred bushels.

Samuel Hayes was elected Marshal and Gus Harris Mayor of Bellevue, for the next year.

The survivors of the First Kentucky brigade of the Confederate army will hold a re-union at Elizabethtown September 19.

Two gentlemen at Boonesboro, who are rivals for the heart and hand of a beautiful young lady, have each bet $25 that the other does not marry her within the next twelve months.

At the election in Ballard County, a proposition to move the county seat from Wickliffe to Blandville, was lost by 400 majority.

Wm Abner, while returning to his home from Carlisle, election night, was attacked and terribly beaten by fifteen or twenty negroes. He is in a very critical condition. The assault was entirely unprovoked.

Mrs. David Meriwether, Jr., of Louisville, is dead. This most estimable lady died of puerperal fever. She was grand neice to the late Zachary Taylor, and a lady well and popularly known in Kentucky society.

At Hopkinsville, Mose Miller engaged in a fight with Wm. Rodes, and was fatally stabbed by Rodes' son. Politics was the cause of the trouble.

The new officers of Dayton are: Mayor, Heim; Marshal, Havelin; Magistrate, Henry Doerling.

Bowling Green is agitating the founding of a Conservatory of Music.

John Burton, aged fifteen years, while fooling with a pistol in his father's cornfield, near Eminence, got into a scuffle with a colored boy named Sam Jackson, about his own age, during which the weapon was discharged, the ball entering the colored boy's side, and penetrating the stomach. Physicians pronounce the wound fatal.

Alfred Holcroft, of Carrollton, has a newly arrived son, Grover Cleveland.

Zachariah Wheeler lost $28 by highwaymen at Louisville the other night.

D. P. Hamilton has been commissioned Postmaster at Donerail, and H. L. Putnam, at Johnson's.

According to the statisticans the three cities of Cincinnati, O., Covington and Newport, produced twenty-seven million one hundred and nineteen thousand two hundred and three gallons of beer. This would give one-half gallon to every man, woman and child in the United States.

The Republicans carried Rowan County the first time for years.

Allen Parr, of Nicolasville, named a new-born boy, Grover Cleveland, the other day. Mr. Parr has two children born in 1876, and named Tilden and Hendricks.

The postoffice at Cardwell, Butler County, has been abolished.

The Order of the Coif.

The world is well aware of the antiquity and dignity of the degree of a sergeant-at-law, which all the sages of the bench and bar were at one time compelled to attain, and will greet with kindly interest the appearance of this stately monument set up in memory of departed and departing glories of the long-robed brothers of the coif. Their learned spokesman would even claim for them to have existed as an order in the true sense of the term among the brotherhoods of the world of chivalry, such as the Knights of the Bath, the Hospitalers, and the Militia of the Temple of Solomon. We [may] admit, at any rate, that they were constituted for several centuries as a privileged society or estate, taking the same place in the profession of the law as the doctors of the learned faculties among the members of the greater universities. The sergeants are believed to have formed the whole practicing bar while the King's Court was still undivided; and after its separation into several branches they retained a right of exclusive audience in the Courts of Common Pleas, which was only abolished in 1832 after a long and angry controversy. Their privileges in our own time have gradually dwindled away, though the order was saved from extinction by the rule, existing until recently, that every judge was bound, before his appointment, to take upon him the estate and degree of the coif. On the fusion of the courts under the judicature acts this ancient regulation was abrogated, in order, as we may suppose, to relieve the equity judges from an unexpected and burdensome obligation. Since that time no new sergeants have been appointed, though it is believed that there is no reason why the crown should not renew the grant of the dignity if the bar were desirous of that honor.

When a sergeant reached his appointment, he bade farewell to the inn of court where he had served as reader and bencher, and was usually presented with a handsome contribution of gold pieces hidden in a pair of gloves under the name of a "regard," with the view of helping him toward the greater charges of taking his new degree. The expenses of installation were very heavy; the new sergeant had not only to provide a great number of persons with colored cloth for liveries, but to give rings of fine "angel gold" to the King and Queen, the great officers of state and various officials about the law courts. Besides all these expenses, he had to join with the other newly appointed sergeants in giving a feast or banquet of the most extravagant kind. An old chronicler tells us that at one feast in his time there were present "all the Lords and Commons of the Parliament, the Mayor and Aldermen, and a great number of the commons of the city of London." At the feast of 1755 we find such expensive items as swans and roast bustards, chewet pies and great jowls of sturgeon, salmon and all kinds of game, besides multitudes of plovers and larks. Mr. Walpole sent in as his contribution, besides a quantity of venison, twenty-four swans, a crane at ten shillings, and two turkeys at four shillings apiece. Each sergeant's share of the provisions amounted to about £37, without counting the venison. There is no space left for describing their other feastings and revelings. They took part in the brawls at Christmas under the lord of misrule, when judges and sergeants danced "round about the coal fire" to a quaint and mock stately tune; and they joined in the students' diversions when a cat and a fox were hunted in the Middle Temple hall "with nine or ten couple of hounds" just before the second course of the Christmas banquet. Those were the merry days when the Londoners refused "to work like an ass from morning unto night," and the judges got their work over by eleven o'clock in the forenoon, and, after taking their refreshment, spent the rest of the day in studies or innocent amusements, free from all care and worldly avocations."—Academy

Hope as a Remedy Against Disease.

Dr. J. Mortimer Granville has been lately rather severly handled by the medical press of London, because he wrote a letter on this subject to one of the daily papers. He is criticized as having performed an unethical act in thus advertising himself in an unprofessional manner in a lay journal. This question we will leave to our transatlantic brethren, while we say a few words upon the matter of his letter.

But little touched, hope as a remedy against disease is, if wisely and judiciously employed, one of the most valuable and useful means that the physician can employ. Call it what we may, and reason about it as we please, no man of experience will for an instant question that imagination, the prejudices, the mental condition, the conviction of the patient, in many cases, exerts a most powerful and most real influence upon the progress and termination of diseased conditions. Has it not happened to every one of our readers (it repeatedly has to us) to discover accidentally, so to speak, a condition of chronic disease, which has evidently been present for years, and yet the patient has maintained fairly good health, and is, at the time of the discovery, in no immediate apparent danger: yet when told that he is afflicted with an incurable disease that may carry him off in a few days, or that he may live for months, immediately wilts, like the sensitive plants when touched, and dies in a day or two?

Again, do we not all know of cases of chronic disease, in persons with a happy, hopeful, contented disposition, disease that we felt sure would soon prove fatal? And yet we see them go on day after day and year after year enjoying apparently good health. Of course we are familiar with and thoroughly recognize the fact that worry, that mental anxiety, is diametrically opposed to good health and long life: and in this fact we recognize the explanation of the influence of depressing opinions and advice; for if we tell a man with a nervous temperament that he may die in a few days, from that moment all peace and contentment vanishes from his life, while anxiety, worry and unrest take possession of his whole being.

The practical point to be deduced from these reflections is that it will redound not only to your patient's advantage, but also to your own professional reputation, to make it a rule always to take the most hopeful view that is possible of the patient's condition, especially when the man or woman is one of the "nervous, worrying kind," and always to remember that "hope kept alive" is the great secret of success among quacks. Let us steal their thunder.—The Med. and Surg. Reporter.

—Benjamin Lee, M. D., in the Sanitarian, suggests to the American Tract Society the issue of a tract on the duty of wearing well-fitting shoes as a preventive of profanity.

SCIENCE AND INDUSTRY.

—Experiments in England show that gaslight has greater penetrating power in a fog than electric light of the same intensity.

—An Australian has devised a scheme for bringing down rain to order. He has a balloon charged with dynamite underneath it, which is fired off by wire connecting with the earth when the balloon reaches the clouds.

—Ildo Camsdell, the editor of an Atlanta (Ga.) journal, has discovered a process in photo-lithography, which, according to Mr. Howell, of the Atlanta Constitution, "will introduce into the art of printing possibilities never yet dreamed of."

—In skinning calves the French mode is to make a hole, insert the nozzle of a bellows, and blow the skin from the flesh. For this reason alone, it is said, French calf-skin is superior to that made in this country, where knives are used in the skinning process.

—Every one has heard of condensed milk, but condensed, or rather, solidified drinks of a more potent nature are a novelty. An ingenious French chemist has discovered a method by which any wine, spirit or malt liquor can be solidified into a cake, like chocolate, and so conveniently carried about in the pockets of the thirsty.

—A merchant of Sandy Hill, N. Y. has completed a curious ten-stringed musical instrument said to have been constructed after the model of one found in the ruins of Pompeii. The frame is made from wood of a chair owned by General Philip Schuyler, a century ago, and a piece of cherry two hundred years old.—N. Y. Times.

—Dry pocket-glue is made of twelve parts of good glue and five parts of sugar. The glue is boiled until it is entirely dissolved, the sugar is then put into the glue, and the mass is evaporated until it hardens on cooling. Lukewarm water melts it very readily, and it is excellent for use in causing paper to adhere firmly, cleanly, and without producing any disagreeable odor.—Exchange.

—An improved fishhook has been invented by a Southern sportsman. About midway up the shaft of the hook he places a small crossbar, which serves three purposes. First, it prevents the fish from swallowing the hook; second, it increases the chances of capture, for the reason that when a fish strikes its nose against the projection it involuntarily closes its mouth, and so is securely caught; and third, it prevents the bait from slipping up the hook.

—That the small coins of all nations may be a most potent factor in disseminating disease is a discovery due to the researches of Dr. Peinch. Taking specimens of coin which had been long in circulation, he scraped off the thin organic incrustations, which he then divided into small pieces and dissolved in distilled water. Microscopic inspection of the solution disclosed abundance of bacteria and vegetable fungi. After this there is ample reason for caution in handling money made of metal; of the danger of filthy paper currency the public has long been aware.

PITH AND POINT.

—The cheaper the cigar the more persistently does the cheap smoker puff it in the faces of his fellow travelers.—Lowell Courier.

—A writer in a health publication advises people to "live in the sun." But how under the sun are people going to do it.—Boston Transcript.

—The census proves that the number of persons in a family in this country is a small fraction over five. In some families the husband is the small fraction over.—Boston Transcript.

—"The Pies My Mother Made" is a new song, it is said, but it is not. Every young husband has sung it for the last two centuries.—Philadelphia Call.

—Some one has discovered that the high-heeled shoes worn by women produce softening of the brain. It was not generally known that the brains of women who wear such shoes was located so low, but it seems plausible enough.—Norristown Herald.

—A tree in Milford, Mass., to which George Washington tied his horse in about 1760, was recently cut down and will be converted into mementoes. Although not a very large tree, it is estimated that it will produce about 150,000 canes, several hundred arm chairs, about the same number of lounges, four score of bedsteads, and 1,000 piano stools. The rest will be converted into toothpicks and umbrella handles.—Exchange.

—A Dude was one day having great sport at the expense of a Donkey, whose Long Ears seemed to amuse the Dandy Fellow very much. "Laugh on, vain Thing," quietly rebuked the Donkey; "I thank Heaven that there is one distinguishing Mark between us. Make merry of mine. Ears if thou wilt, but that is the only protection I have from being classed with Dudes, and thereby insulted." Moral—A man's most ridiculous feature is often his greatest protection.—Atlanta Constitution.

—A would-be society beau, whose grandfather had been a successful shoemaker, impertinently remarked upon Miss Aurelia H—'s feet, and said they were very pretty. Miss H— met the young braggart soon after at a party, and taking occasion to be heard by the bystanders, she said "I hear that you have been making remarks about the fit of my boots. If you intend opening a shoe shop I shall be delighted to continue the patronage which was begun by our family when your grandfather was a shoemaker."—Harper's Bazar.

—He was seated across the room. "George," she said, "if a fire were suddenly to break out in the house, what would be your first impulse, do you think." "Well, my first thought would be of you, of course. I would get you to a place of safety, and then do what I could to extinguish the flames." "That would be very nice of you, George, to think of me first; but if a fire were to break out now for instance, wouldn't you lose valuable time reaching me from way across the room?" "I don't know but I would," said George, as he changed his seat.

—An ingenious Southerner has conceived the idea of opening a hotel for suicides. He acts upon the American idea of the largest liberty for the largest hallucinations. He proposes to let rooms and furnish board to gentlemen and ladies who contemplate self-destruction, and will furnish all modern conveniences. Each room will be supplied with a finely ornamented brass hook, upon which the guest can get up and hang himself at any hour. Gas, of course, will be furnished, that can be blown out before retiring, and pistols will be kept in the billiard-room.—Boston Post.

THE RECORDER.

WEDNESDAY, AUGUST 13. 1884.

RIDDELL & HALL, Proprietors.

ADVERTISING RATES.

1 Column	1 year	$80
1 "	"	40
1 "	"	20
1 "	"	20
1 "	"	10
1 "	"	6

For announcing candidates, $5. Obituary poetry, 5 cents per line. Obituary notices 20 lines free; over that number (except the announcement of the death) 3 cents per line.

Tributes of respect from lodges, &c., $1 50

RATES OF SUBSCRIPTION.

One year	$1 50
Six months	75
Three months	40

We are authorized to announce

DR. JAMES S. BROWN.

of Warsaw, as a candidate for the State Senate, from this, the 23d Senatorial District, subject to the action of the Democratic party.

THE Republicans got a Holt in the first Appellate district in this State.

GOV. KNOTT will pull the string and let the Louisville Exposition go on the 16th of this month.

WHILE the Republicans were capturing Kenton county, they failed to hold the fort over in Campbell, where the Democrats swept the platter.

WHEN Cleveland and Hendricks present their letters of acceptance, all the preliminaries will be complete, and then the picnic will commence.

WHEN Governor St. Johns hears what happened in Owen county on the first Monday in this month, he may begin counting on some assistance in this State.

SOME of the Greenbackers are going back on Butler because he attended the Chicago convention as a delegate. Ben has not got all his alleged followers under the hollow of his hand.

HENRY WARD BEECHER had the charges against Cleveland's private character investigated for his own satisfaction, and is now intimating that he will take the stump for the Governor.

THE Owen County Democrat is very much opposed to local option, and declares it to be plainly in opposition to the enunciations of the national Democratic platform. Nevertheless whisky had to go, Jerry.

NEARLY all the Republican papers in New York being opposed to Mr. Blaine, Murrat Halstead, of the Cincinnati Commercial Gazette, will start a paper there which will make a specialty of Mr. Blaine's canvass.

IN Owen county local option carried the day Monday week, and bug-juice is now denied sale in any part of the county, which makes another large slice of Kentucky territory surrendered to prohibition, which is rapidly gaining favor in this State.

The Boone County, Kentucky, Fair, lasting from August 18th to 22d inclusive, promises to be one of the best ever held by the society.—Sunday's Enquirer.

Now, if the Enquirer will tell us where that Fair is to be held, it will confer an everlasting favor.

A PRICE was held in eight hundred dollars bond for his appearance before the Grant county Circuit Court, for killing William Collins at Crittenden. He evidently does not want to escape or he would allowed the officers to lodge him in the jail at Williamstown.

W. H. Tucker has a crop of 900 bushels of wheat that is seriously damaged from being mixed with garlic. The wheat was sown after clover and the clover seed contained the garlic. Mr. Tucker is unable to dispose of the wheat at any price.—Clark County Democrat.

BUTLER has declared his intention to stand by the nominations he has received for the Presidency, and as soon as Cleveland's letter of acceptance is made public, he will commence his double barreled epistle to the public. Butler is of the opinion that he can arouse the sovereigns with less than a six thousand word letter.

THE old witchcraft days of Massachusetts are being outdone at Mount Morris, Michigan, where a whole family of sixteen persons has gone crazy over the belief that their premises are bewitched, and are even cutting nicks in the ears of their pigs and cows to let the devil out, while in Danbury, Connecticut, they are curing long-standing rheumatism by the charms of live black snakes.

THE Teachers' Institute will be held the 2d, 3d, 4th, and 5th of next month. The new law requires that the Institute be held four days, and the teachers should endeavor to make them as profitable as possible. The objects of the Institute are commendable, and if the teachers will cooperate with the County Superintendent of Schools in his efforts to make the Institute what it should be, we dare say that in a few years its sessions will be hailed with delight by the teachers, and the reluctance with which they now attend will give way to a willingness to be present the entire four days.

The State's appropriation for the purpose of encouraging and providing for a State exhibit at the Louisville Exposition has made easy and paying positions for a favored few. Instead of the funds that were donated by the Legislature being so placed that the commissioners in the several counties would have means with which to operate, the Governor has appointed commissioners to canvass the State, while the local boards are handicapped by a want of funds. The State commissioners will ride over the State on the railroads, see the country, talk politics, draw their pay and accomplish but little when compared with what the county commissions could do were they provided with the wherewith to operate on. But few men will devote both their time and money to the work necessary to get up a county exhibit.

STATE NEWS.

Kentucky will have plenty of biscuit this winter.

The Sheriffs can now go to collecting taxes again.

Full crops are now assured, says the Owen News.

The Republicans made heavy gains in the first Appellate district.

T. J. Megibbin's race horse, Audrain, has won over $18,000 this season.

The prohibitionist voted whisky out of Hopkins county on the fourth of this month.

Sheep raising has developed into a great industry in this State within the past few years.

The prospects for a large tobacco crop in Christian county was never better says the Era.

Rattlesnakes and huckleberries are reported as the largest crops in Cumberland county.

The Lexington Gazette reports a sale of 100 barrels of new corn at $2 per barrel, delivered.

Wash Fletcher, convicted of killing his mother-in-law, will be hung in Paducah October 3d.

A gosling in Franklin county, three months old, measures five feet three inches from tip to tip.

A mare belonging to J. W. Brown of Bourbon county, valued at $2,500 was killed by lightning.

The crops generally in the State are doing much better since the rain visited the various localities.

It cost a man in Mayfield $60 last week for giving another man a drink of whisky—a pretty dear treat.

The Tribune wants the next grand jury to elevate some fellows in Mt. Olivet who have been soaking boys with whisky.

Hay and wheat crops in Gallatin county are the finest for years past, and the corn and tobacco crops are very promising.

The State Board of Supervisors reduced the assessed value of land in Gallatin county 22 per cent. and personalty 6 per cent.

The State Board of Equalization decreased the assessed valuation of real estate 11 per cent., and personalty 5 per cent. in Grant count.

George L. Douglas, Fayette county, raised 525 bushels of wheat on 12 acres of measured ground, which is an average of 43¾ bushels per acre.

The State Board of Equalization increased the assessed valuation of real estate 3 per cent. in Kenton county, and personal property 5 per cent.

The Lincoln county jail has 28 prisoners, and the Interior Journal says, "a motley looking set they are, accused of almost every crime imaginable."

Jimmie Warren, of Lincoln county, in his eightieth year, in one day put up two large stacks of heavy wheat, besides making one of two hands in hauling up the wheat.

Dewees & Golden's warehouse at Milton, burned last week with forty thousand pounds of tobacco. It is thought that the fire was the work of an incendiary. Insurance, $5,000.

From 1870 to 1880 the population of Hardin county increased from fifteen thousand seven hundred and five to twenty-two thousand five hundred and sixty four.

Since the heavy rains, the tobacco and corn prospect has greatly brightened. We think now, there will be at least three-fourths of a crop of each.—Owen Democrat.

The Board of Equalization reduced the assessed value of real estate in Owen county 22 per cent., and the personalty 2 per cent. for State taxes; the real estate in some sections of the State was raised 40 per cent. This speaks pretty well for Owen assessors, and the owners of property listed in the county.—Owen Democrat.

The late rains have improved the crops wonderfully, and many of our farmers report the finest crops raised in this county. The worms are not at all troublesome and the indications now point strongly in favor of a first-class crop in point of quality. Many farmers are through topping their crops, and cutting will commence in about four weeks.—Clark County Democrat.

Saturday last Dr. Murray removed a watermelon seed from the ear of Uncle Moses Howell, of Green Hill neighborhood, that had been in his ear 46 years. The seed when removed was somewhat shriveled, but perfectly natural. Mr. Howell is now 67 years old, and one of the staunchest farmers in Green Hill neighborhood. Dr. Murray says this seed was shot into Uncle Moses' ear by his sweetheart when they were courting, a long time ago, to which accusation this venerable gentleman subscribes.—Bowling Green Gazette.

R. M. Johnson, of Trimble county, is low with paralysis.

WANTED.

400 good feeding hogs—For Sale. 500 good stock ewes. J. M. CONNER, Burlington, Ky.

FOR SALE.

50 head of stock ewes and a fresh milch cow—will sell cheap.
J. J. RUCKER, Constance, Ky.

L. KUPPERSCHMID,

—42 WALNUT STREET,—

Lawrenceburg. - - Ind.

Always keeps on hand a large assortment of WATCHES, CLOCKS, JEWELRY, &c. Repairing Watches and Clocks a specialty. Also agent for the

Rockford Watch Company.

Which manufactures the finest movements made, and they are used by all railroad men.

—Give Me a Call.—

SCIENCE-HILL

An English & Classical school for girls. FOUNDED 1825 BY MRS. TEVIS.

Aims to give its pupils elements of a complete education. Faculty selected from best Eastern Colleges. Terms reasonable. Send for catalogue. W. T. Poynter, D. D., Principal, Shelbyville, Ky.

OPIUM and WHISKY HABITS cured at home without pain. Book of particulars sent Free. B. M. WOOLLEY, M. D., Atlanta, Ga.

REPORT OF THE CONDITION OF THE Farmers & Traders National Bank AT COVINGTON, In the State of Kentucky, at the close of business, June 30, 1884.

RESOURCES.

Loans and discounts		$569,718 91
U.S. Bonds to secure circulation 4 per cent		50,000 00
Furniture and Fixtures		4,668 91
Premiums paid on Bonds to secure circulation	$10,437 50
Less am't previously charged to profit and loss	2,437 50	8,000 00
Due from approved reserved agents	$80,481 08
Due from banks and bankers	24,839 82
5 per cent. fund with U.S. Treasurer	2,250 00
Cash on hand	41,158 78	148,729 68
		$781,117 50

LIABILITIES.

Capital stock paid in		$300,000 00
Surplus fund	$6,000 00
Undivided profits	17,485 41	23,485 41
Circulation		45,000 00
Fund to pay tax on circulation		222 30
Due individual depositors	$385,434 94
Due banks & bank's	26,974 85	412,409 79
		$781,117 50
Undivided profits remaining January 1, 1884		$14,480 40
Gross earnings, for 6 months ending June 30, 1884		19,897 20
		$34,877 70

DISPOSED OF AS FOLLOWS:

Current expenses	$ 5,669 99
Tax on circulation	222 30
Dividend No. 8 of 3 per cent	9,000 00
Credited to surplus fund	2,000 00
Balance to undivided profits	17,485 41	$34,877 70

J. L. SANDFORD, Casbire.

For Sale!

75 high grade sheep, 65 ewes, remainder yearling bucks, all cross of Oxford and Southdown, also the lambs of this season. Will sell worth the money. They are sound and all right. Will divide them to suit buyer. W. O. KIRTLEY, Bullittsville, Ky

NOTICE.

The heirs of Maria Beemon, deceased, are hereby notified that I will be in Burlington the first Monday in each month, (County Court day) to pay them their distributable shares of said decedent's estate.
JONAS ROUSE, Adm'r.

GEORGETOWN COLLEGE

5th Annual Session begins Sept. 1st. ... Situated in the famous "Blue Grass" region ... Prices low for first-class college. ... A. B., and A. M. conferred. Before deciding send for catalogue to the President
R. M. DUDLEY, D. D. GEORGETOWN, KY.

CENTRAL UNIVERSITY,

COLLEGE OF PHILOSOPHY, LETTERS, AND SCIENCE, RICHMOND, KY.

Next Session will open Wednesday, September 3d, 1884.

ADVANTAGES.—A FULL FACULTY of able and experienced instructors. Comprehensive course of study and thorough instruction. Completeness of buildings and apparatus.
Social Influence.—The community is distinguished for its refined culture and hospitality, and young men find homes in the BEST families. Not a Saloon in the city.
Healthfulness of Location.—Richmond is at an elevation of more than 300 feet above the Ohio river, and free from all malarial influences.
Accessibility.—Richmond is the geographical centre of the State, in the heart of the Blue Grass region, and is within a few hours, by rail, of Louisville, Cincinnati, Knoxville and Chattanooga.
Moderate Expenses.—Board in the New Memorial Hall, lighted by gas and heated by steam—an elegant, comfortable home—$110 per annum for everything except washing, and in the best families from $3 to $4 per week. Total necessary expenses for the ten months, from $140 to $230.
For full information and catalogue, apply to L. H. BLANTON, D. D., Chancellor.

WM. COLTER,

—DEALER IN—

Clothing, Boots, Shoes, Hats, Caps, Millinery Goods, Cloaks, Etc.

JOB LOTS OF ABOVE A SPECIALTY.

We are just now devoting our entire energy to making preparations for the ensuing season, and can promise to call your attention to a stock of Boots and Shoes, Rubber Goods, Men's and Boys' Ready-Made Clothing, Ladies' Cloaks, and Wraps, Millinery Goods, Ribbons, Mens' Hats, Buck Gloves, &c., in which, for real solid and genuine Bargains, we challenge competition. We intend to lead the market in this section much more than we have ever done before, which we can at once prove to you at your first inspection. Have already bought over 500 Overcoats, over 300 Suits, 1,000 pairs of Gloves, over 70 cases Kip Boots, 16 cases Mens' Hats and Caps, all grades. And we are not asleep if it is hot. The above line of Goods is kept in the lower half and 2nd floor of our Mammoth House. We are slashing down prices on all Summer Goods now, as we do not carry any Goods over. Thanks for past favors. Respectfully,

Wm. COLTER, Rising Sun, Ind.

SOUTHERN EXPOSITION

LOUISVILLE,

Opens August 16th. Closes October 25th, 1884.

13 ACRES UNDER ONE ROOF.

TWO CONCERTS EACH DAY

By Cappa's and Gilmore's, the most famous bands of the world.

Largest and Finest Display of Machinery in MOTION ever witnessed anywhere.

LOWEST RAILWAY RATES EVER GIVEN IN THE STATE.

ART BUILDINGS,

CONTAINING THE CHOICEST PICTURES IN AMERICA.

Ten works of Kentucky's great sculptor, Joel Hart, the best possible collection

One hundred counties in Kentucky will make exhibits, displaying products which will demonstrate this State's tremendous capacities and future greatness. An occasion for Kentucky pride and glory—KENTUCKY TRIUMPHANT.

AN IMMENSE LIVE STOCK EXHIBITION

Presenting at one time in line over $1,000,000 worth of horses, comprising all the sires that have made Kentucky famous. The exhibit will surpass in extent the Royal Stock Show in London, and present to the visitor the grandest, completest, and most magnificent Stock exhibit the world has ever witnessed, and a sight that can not be duplicated in the world.

BENNETT H. YOUNG, President. J. M. WRIGHT, General Manager.

BARGAINS IN

Milline'y Goods!

ALL LADIES' HATS, BONNETS AND FEATHERS NOW LEFT OVER WILL BE SOLD AT

Less Than Half Price

(Original Price.) in order to close the season. Broad-Brim Hats, called the "Cartwheel," will be closed out at 30c. each; Large Bushy Tips, three in a bunch, 88c. a bunch, worth $1 75. All other Hats and Bonnets at the same great sacrifice.

MILLINERY DEPARTMENT,

at COTERL'S,

Rising Sun, Ind.

W. C. Gholson's Block-Binding, Tension Equalizing, Patent Wire Fence, 67 W. Third St., Cincinnati, O.

As special Agent for the Gholson Fencing Company, for Boone County, I am prepared to build their patent fence at any time. This is the cheapest and best fence in use. It needs no talking up, as it is fast selling itself wherever it is introduced. Any number of wires can be used.

28-1y-84. G. C. GRADDY, Bullittsville, Ky.

CLEARING SALE!

To make room for Fall Stock I have reduced Custom-Made Suits 20 per cent. and on ready-made Men's, Boys' and Children's Clothing 25 per cent. for Cash only, until August 20.

H. F. BLASE,
540 Madison Street
COVINGTON, - - - - - KY.

DON'T FOGET THE Big Fair

TO BE HELD AT

LAWRENCEBURG, AUGUST 20, 21, 22, & 23, '84.

NO ENTRY FEES CHARGED.

A NEW HOME SEWING MACHINE

will be given to the lady baking the best loaf of yeast bread. Hunter & O'Brien, proprietors of the Lawrenceburg Register, will give

TEN DOLLARS IN GOLD

to the lady making the best roll of butter. Capt. George W. Terrill offers a

PREMIUM OF FIFTEEN DOLLARS

For a pound of the best tobacco grown in either Dearborn or Boone county

LIBERAL PREMIUMS ON HORSES.

LIBERAL PREMIUMS ON ALL KINDS OF STOCK.

LIBERAL PREMIUMS in the LADIES' DEPARTMENT.

LIBERAL PREMIUMS ON FRUIT, GRAIN AND SEED.

TROTTING, PACING AND RUNNING RACES EVERY DAY.

Management is sparing no pains to offer all the attractions possible, and to make the exhibition a pleasant and profitable one to all visitors and exhibitors.

STEAM FERRY

At Lawrenceburg on Friday & Saturday during the FAIR.

John Q. Davis,

—DEALER IN—

BOOTS & SHOES,

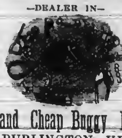
HATS AND CAPS

Of the very best Eastern and Cincinnati manufactures. I claim to be the best posted man in my line in this section. Goods sold absolutely on their merits, and ample willing reclamation made where goods do not come up to the "SCRATCH."

YOU CAN AS SAFELY SEND YOUR CHILDREN AS TO COME YOURSELVES.

Thankful for the very liberal patronage in the past, and hoping with increased facilities to still do the BOOT and SHOE business of this section,

Respectfully,



J. Q. DAVIS,

SIGN BIG RED BOOT, MAIN, Street, Rising Sun, Indiana.

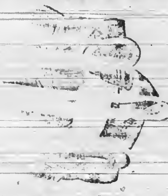
A. M. ACRA,

—DEALER IN—

HARNESS

SADDLES.

Fine and Cheap Buggy Harness.



BURLINGTON, KY.

I also have a full stock of BUGGY WHIPS, LAP DUSTERS, ANKLE BOOTS and TROTTING BALLS and everything else usually kept in a first-class harness shop.

REPAIRING A SPECIALTY.

Give Me A Call.

A. L. Brown,

THE HATTER,

Cor. Pike and Washington Streets

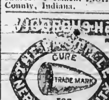
COVINGTON, - - KY.

Has always on hand a large variety of Men's, Boys' and Children's Hats, and prices GUARANTEED to be as low as the lowest.

Gents' Furnishing Goods a Specialty.

GOLD for the working class. Send 10c for postage, and we will mail you free, a royal, valuable box of sample goods that will put you in the way of making more money in a few days than you ever thought possible at any business. Capital not required. We will start you. You can work part the time only. The work universally adapted to both sexes, young and old. You can easily earn from 50 cents to $5 every evening. That all who want work may test the business, we make this unparalleled offer; to all who are not well satisfied we will send $1 to pay for the trouble of writing us. Full particulars, directions, etc., sent free. Fortunes will be made by those who give their whole time to the work. Great success absolutely sure. Don't delay. start now. Address STINSON & Co., Portland, Maine.

$66 a week at home. $5 outfit free. Pay absolutely sure, No risk. Capital not required. If you want business at which persons of either sex young or old, can make great pay all the time they work, with absolute certainty, write for particulars to H. HALLET & Co., Portland, Maine.



A PRIZE Send six cents for postage, and receive free, costly box of goods which will help you to more money right away than anything else in this world. All of either sex, succeed from the first hour. The broad road to fortune opens before the workers, absolutely sure. At once address, TRUE & Co., Augusta, Maine.

AGENTS wanted for The Lives of all the Presidents of the U. S. The largest handsomest, best book ever sold for more than twice our price. The best selling book in America. Immense profits to agents. All intelligent people want it. Any one can become a successful agent. Terms free HALLET BOOK Co., Portland, Maine.

HANOVER COLLEGE,

Fifty-second year begins Sept. 10, Classical and Scientific courses, with Preparatory Department. Open to both sexes. No saloons. Expenses small. On the Ohio, near Madison. For catalogue address President FISHER, Hanover Jefferson County, Indiana.

VIGOROUS HEALTH FOR MEN

TESTED FOR 5 YEARS

by use in thousands of cases. Founded on scientific medical principles, it has been growing in favor and reputation while its numerous competitors have invariably failed. The direct application of this remedy to the seat of the disease makes its specific influence felt without delay. The natural functions of the human organism are restored. The animating elements of life which have been wasted are given back. The buoyant energy of the brain and muscular system renders the patient cheerful; he gains strength with rapidity.
NERVOUS DEBILITY, organic weakness, and numerous obscure diseases, baffling the skill of best physicians, result for youthful indiscretion, too free indulgence, and over brain work.
Do not temporize while such enemies lurk in your system. Take a remedy that has cured thousands, and does not interfere with attention to business or cause any pain or inconvenience.
(Send for a Descriptive Pamphlet giving Anatomical illustrations, which will convince the most sceptical that they can be restored to perfect manhood, and fitted for the duties of life, same as if never affected. Sent free to any one. Remedy sold ONLY by the)
HARRIS REMEDY CO. MF'G. CHEMISTS. 306½ N. 10th St. ST. LOUIS, MO.
One Month's treatment $3. two months $5. three months $7

WITTENBURG COLLEGE,

Springfield, Ohio.

For young men and women. Four courses—Classical, Scientific, Literary and Ladies' Preparatory and Normal departments. New building. Spacious grounds. Teachers of experience. Expenses low. Students going home and returning travel at reduced rates. Fall term begins Sept. 4th. For catalogue containing full details address, The Secretary of the Faculty.

W. J. RICE,
CARPENTER & BUILDER,
BULLITSVILLE, KY.

Is prepared Raise or Move EITHER LOG or FRAME BUILDINGS On Short Notice. And at the Lowest Possible Figures.
33-tf Your orders respectfully solicited

THE COMPLETE HOME. Agents Wanted for this beautiful book. New edition.—New bindings.—New illustrations from new designs. Superbly gotten up. Same low price. Adapted to all classes. Sells at sight. Agents doing big work. EXCELLENT TERMS. The handsomest prospectus ever issued. Apply now.
WM. GARRETSON & CO., Lexington, Kentucky. Also other grand new books and Bibles.

INCORPORATED UNDER THE LAWS OF MISSOURI.

CENTRAL MEDICAL & SURGICAL INSTITUTE OF ST. LOUIS, MO.

SUCCESSORS TO DR. BUTTS' DISPENSARY. OFFICE & ROOMS, No. 920 Locust St.
CHAS. L. LeBARON, M.D., Pres't & Physician in Charge.
NELSON CHEESMAN, Treas. & Business Manager.

This Institute has ample facilities and an experienced Faculty. While it succeeds to a large business, which has been established for years, it will aim to extend its medical and surgical practice, giving skillful and scientific treatment to CHRONIC DISEASES of the Head, Spine, Lungs and Air Passages, Heart, Liver, Stomach and Bowels, Rheumatism, Dyspepsia, Consumption and Asthma.

BLOOD IMPURITIES, inherited or caused by impure association, Scrofula, Fever Sores, Ulcers, etc.
DEFORMITIES of the Limbs, Spinal Curvature, Wry-Neck, Diseases of the Joints, Piles, Fistula, Rupture, etc.
WEAKNESS and wasting diseases in old and young men, also all diseases of the genito-urinary organs.
FEMALE irregularities and weaknesses, causing pain in the back or side, etc.
Personal interviews with patients are always preferred. Those unable to visit the Institute will be furnished with blank lists of questions that will aid them in making a full statement of their cases and if not requiring a surgical operation they can be successfully treated by correspondence, and medicines sent by mail or express. To enable us to send proper list of questions applicants should give a brief statement of their trouble.
(The Treasurer of the corporation is of Nelson Cheesman & Co., Advertising Agents, and refers to the publisher of this or any other newspaper in the United States or Canada regarding responsibility.)
Consultation at Office or by mail free and invited.

TUTT'S PILLS

TORPID BOWELS, DISORDERED LIVER, and MALARIA.

From these sources arise three-fourths of the diseases of the human race. These symptoms indicate their existence: Loss of Appetite, Bowels costive, Sick Headache, fullness after eating, aversion to exertion of body or mind, Eructation of food, Irritability of temper, Low spirits, A feeling of having neglected some duty, Dizziness, Fluttering of the Heart, Dots before the eyes, highly colored Urine, CONSTIPATION, and demand the use of a remedy that acts directly on the Liver. As a Liver medicine TUTT'S PILLS have no equal. Their action on the Kidneys and Skin is also prompt; removing all impurities through these three "scavengers of the system," producing appetite, sound digestion, regular stools, a clear skin and a vigorous body. TUTT'S PILLS cause no nausea or griping nor interfere with daily work and are a perfect

ANTIDOTE TO MALARIA.

Sold everywhere, 25c. Office, 44 Murray St., N.Y.

TUTT'S HAIR DYE.

GRAY HAIR OR WHISKERS changed instantly to a GLOSSY BLACK by a single application of this DYE. Sold by Druggists, or sent by express on receipt of $1.
Office, 44 Murray Street, New York.
TUTT'S MANUAL OF USEFUL RECEIPTS FREE.

For A Business Education Attend the

Commercial College

Of Kentucky University, Lexington, Ky.
Students can begin any week-day in the year. No vacation. Time to complete the Full Diploma Business Course about 10 weeks. Average Total Cost, including Tuition, Set of Books and Board in a family, $90. Telegraphy a specialty. Literary Course free. Ladies received. 5,000 successful graduates. Over 500 pupils last year from 15 to 45 years of age, from 23 States. Instruction is practically and individually imparted by 10 teachers. Special courses for Teachers and Business Men. University Diploma presented to its graduates. This beautiful city is noted for its healthfulness and society, and is on leading Railroads. Fall Session begins Sept. 8th. For circulars and full particulars, address its President, WILBUR R. SMITH, Lexington, Ky.

NO NEW THING.

STRONG'S SANATIVE PILLS

Used throughout the country

FOR OVER 40 YEARS,

And thus proved

The Best Liver Medicine in the World.

No Griping, Poisonous Drugs, but purely Vegetable, safe and reliable. Prescribed even by Physicians. A speedy cure for Liver Complaint, Regulating the Bowels, Purifying the Blood, Cleansing from Malarial Taint. A perfect cure for Sick Headache, Constipation and all Billious Disorders. Sold by Druggists. For Pamphlets, etc., address C. E. HULL & CO., 16 Cedar St., N.Y. City.

FOUND AT LAST.

THE ANIMAL SAFE GUARD.

Patent applied for. Absolute cure for all breachy stock. Simple and safe appliance; always at hand. No Rope, no Yoke, no pole used to injure stock. No animal will jump a fence when this is used. Send One Dollar for Farm-right and full instruction. Address
C. F. BROSEKE, Justice of the Peace, Falmouth, Ky.

WRIGHT'S INDIAN VEGETABLE PILLS FOR THE

LIVER

And all Billious Complaints

Safe to take, being purely vegetable; no griping. Price 25 cts. All Druggists.

SANITARIUM, Riverside, Cal. The dry climate cures Nose, Throat, Lungs, ... 36 p., route, cost ...

MARRIAGE AND HEALTH GUIDE. 260 pages. Illustrated.
All that the curious ... want to know. Cloth and gilt bound 50 cts., paper 25c. Marriage Guide, 164 pages, sent sealed, ...
DR. WHITTIER 300 RACE STREET, CINCINNATI, O.
The great specialist, Nervous Debility, Impediments to Marriage, Consultation and Pamphlet free.

FREE! RELIABLE SELF-CURE.

A favorite prescription of one of the most noted and successful specialists in the U. S. (now retired) for the cure of Nervous Debility, Lost Manhood, Weakness and Decay. Sent in plain sealed envelope free. Druggists can fill it.
Address DR. WARD & CO., Louisiana, Mo.

PISO'S CURE FOR CONSUMPTION

CURES WHERE ALL ELSE FAILS. Best Cough Syrup. Tastes good. Use in time. Sold by druggists.

25 CTS.

KENTUCKY UNIVERSITY, LEXINGTON, KY.

Three Colleges—Arts, Bible and Commercial. College of Arts has two courses, Classical and Scientific with twelve professors and teachers; fees, $12 per session of nine months. College of the Bible, no tuition fees. Students of the College of the Bible have access without charge to the classes of the College of Arts, and those of the College of Arts to the classes of the College of the Bible. Session opens the Second Monday in September. For catalogues, address CHAS. LOUIS LOOS, President of the University, or ROBT. GRAHAM, President of the College of the Bible.

WASHINGTON & LEE UNIVERSITY

LEXINGTON, VIRGINIA.

Instructions in the usual academic studies, and in the professional schools of Law and Engineering. Location healthful. Expenses moderate. Session opens Sept. 18. For catalogue, address Clerk of the Faculty. G. W. C. LEE, President.

LAW SCHOOL

OF WASHINGTON AND LEE UNIVERSITY.

GEN. G. W. C. LEE, President.

Instruction by text-books and printed lectures, with courses of lectures on special subjects by eminent jurists. Tuition and fees, $80 for session of nine months; beginning Sept. 18. For catalogue and full information address CHAS. A. GRAVES, Prof. of Law, Lexington, Va.

Local News.

Fall draweth nigh.

The RECORDER will be on both wheels next week.

Why have the ladies of the town abandoned horseback riding?

Mrs. F. Riddell and Judge Hawes are visiting Mrs. Light, of Covington.

Boone county came in for her share of the premiums at Aurora last week.

The County Attorney has renewed his suit against T. W. Finch and his bondsmen.

The Aurora Fair was favored with delightful weather and a very large attendance.

Mrs. Virginia Huey has bought J. W. Duncan's house and lot, paying $1,100 therefor.

Mr. Richey, who lived near Walton, died Monday. His age was well up in the nineties.

Elijah Scott, of East Bend, lost his house and nearly all its contents by fire, the other day.

LOST—A fine, heavy, gold watch key. The finder will be rewarded by returning it to S. P. Brady.

One of John M. Moody's daughters took the premium for the best lady driver at the Aurora Fair.

A. M. Acra's harness was awarded the premium over several competitors at the Aurora Fair last week.

Keen Robbins was on the sick-list several days last week, but he is up and as lively as a cricket again.

Riddell & Norris' horses were very successful at the Aurora Fair last week, capturing many premiums.

The Harvest Home will be held at Parlor Grove, and we understand that the 6th of next month is the day set.

On account of the poor health of his wife, A. J. Utz has declined the office of ringmaster at the Lawrenceburg Fair

The gipsy camp had numerous callers Sunday. James Westbay run a special train out and back in the afternoon.

A train of wagons passed through Burlington, Saturday, loaded with men women and children, supposed to be gipsies.

F. Riddell is evidently preparing for pleasure in this world, having provided himself with two vehicles for that purpose.

The boys went down on Gunpowder the other day and caught a fine lot of fish, but it is not necessary to say how they did it.

The chicken thief is abroad in the land, and one night last week Mr. A. G. Winston's coop contributed fourteen nice, fat spring chickens, to his support.

We are glad to learn that our young friend, A. W. Gaines, is well pleased with his new location, Chattanooga, and that his prospects are flattering.

We learn from the Bates County (Mo.) Democrat, that Herbert, Paul and Everett Walton are distinguishing themselves on the diamond out West.

If the farmers who have crop and stock items will send them to us on a postal we will publish the same with pleasure, and all parties will be profited thereby.

J. F. Blythe has rented the house in which W. E. Piper resides, and where, until lately, he had his store, and will open a first-class boarding house the first of next month.

Joe Reed run out a long string of buggies and wagons, Saturday morning, which indicates that he and Kirb have been shoving the paint brushes pretty lively the past few weeks.

The G. and R. H. T. Co. will endeavor to put its road through by reducing the width of the grade and quantity of metal to be used, to correspond with the amount of money subscribed.

Cy Crisler has hired a colored man to sing for Joe Hitter every morning. He begins about five o'clock and continues till six. The song is entitled, "O, Joe, Get up, Dear Joe." It's all chorus.

Johnny Huey came into town the other morning robed in smiles that indicated he was enjoying the happiest moments of his life. Inquiry developed that he was "pap," it being a fine boy.

Professor Stephenson is endeavoring to make a school at the Morgan Academy. He reports considerable encouragement. The school, if made, will probably commence about the first of next month.

NOTICE—The Boone County Teachers' Institute will commence on the 2d day of September, and continue four days. Programmes will be distributed in due time. H. J. FOSTER, Co. Sup't. of Common Schools.

Errata—In William Batterson's letter last week, in speaking of the yield of corn in Kansas the types made us say 20 bushels per acre when it should have been 80, and that J. W. Rice lives 80 miles from Harper, when it should have read 8.

A few days since, Mr. Cloud who, lives on the headwaters of Gunpowder, had a very fine mare to drown herself by falling headlong into a pool of water while attempting to drink. The yoke she wore threw her and prevented her extricating herself.

A letter from Dr. Smith to his son at this place, A. W. Smith, says that the lightning struck a telephone wire the other day, in Sanford, and ran into the store where Henly is employed, knocked him down and demoralized things generally. Look out, Henly.

One day last week Mrs. Nicholas Carpenter and her little girl, aged about two years, were spending the day at Uncle Noah Utz's, and while out playing the little girl molested a hive of bees, and was very badly stung, about thirty stings being taken out of her person.

The day has come when to leave the grave of the departed one unmarked by a neat stone, is not suffered by even those in the most ordinary walks of life, and all can be pleased in both design and price by Huschart & Co., of Lawrenceburg, Ind. John Beall, of Hebron, is their agent.

The State Board of Supervisors decreased the assessed valuation of personal proyerty 2 per cent. in this county, while the valuation of real estate remains as returned. You can now waltz up and pay your tax. A proposition in that direction will not offend the Sheriff, but will rather make him smile.

The other day, Mex Cleveland, who lives just across the line in Kenton county, was driving a very fine mare, the property of Rev. Spears, when she became frightened, and commenced kicking, and before she could be controled she broke both hind legs below the hocks. With one of Charles A. Graves' patent single trees on his buggy Mex may have been able to prevent such calamity.

If you desire to buy a new piano or exchange your old one, G. S. Lozier, ag't, Lawrenceburg, Ind., solicits you to call on or write him for terms and prices. Sewing machines, pianos and organs sold for cash or on monthly installment plan, with a 5 years warranty accompanying each instrument and machine. Orders solicited. Office and sales room cor. Short and Tate streets Lawrenceburg, Ind. G. S. LOZIER.

The choir met at the Baptist church Sunday evening, and rehearsed a number of new songs, viz: Rock of Ages, Over There, Hold the Fort, O, How I Love Jesus, Nearer, My God to Thee, and others. The choir has made quite a change in its selections within the last five years, at the beginning of which period it sang such familiar pieces as Nearer, My God to Thee, Over There, Hold the Fort and Rock of Ages. It is well enough to learn new pieces occasionally.

Attention! Attention!! Attention!!! All persons who desire to purchase a new, or exchange their old machine, should examine the Light Running New Home before purchasing, if they desire the lightest running, best made, easiest to manage and the most durable machines manufactured. A 5 year warranty given with each machine, and sales made on monthly installments. The New Home will be on exhibition at both the Aurora and Lawrenceburg Fairs. Orders solicited and promptly filled. G. S. LOZIER, agent, for machines, organs and pianos.

Last Monday a little daughter of F. H. Russell, of Florence X-Roads, was trying to go up into her father's saw mill at that place, by walking a skid that passed over a very large pile of hot embers and ashes which were removed from the furnace but a few minutes before, and when immediately over this mass of fire, as it were, she lost her balance, and fell feet foremost into the hot ashes and embers, where she remained until her screams attracted assistance. When taken out, both legs to the knees and one hand presented a horrible appearance. Dr. Furnish was sent for and administered to the relief of the little sufferer so far as in his power. This is the saddest accident that ever occurred in that neighborhood.

I have sold machines to the following persons who are well pleased with them and recommend them, and to whom I refer those desiring to purchase new sewing machines or instruments:

At Florence: Dr. J. A. Corey, Henry Gdenwaldt, Henry Oelsner, W. C. Tanner, Misses Grogen, Miss Annie Northcutt, J M Finch, R T German, Abel Carpenter and machine a Johnston organ. At Burlington: A G Winston, Samuel Cowen, Jesse Kirkpatrick, Mrs. A E Crisler, G Brent, Sam Pope, Miss Munsell Morris, James Gaines.

At Bullittsville: Clinton Gaines, G M Riley machine and Johnston organ, W P Cropper, John Cropper, M T Graves, G C Graddy, Jacob Piatt. At Bellevue: Jonas Clore, Thomas Clore, machine and Johnston organ, J H Walton, Elijah Hodges and hundreds of others in the neighbor State, Indiana.

G. S. LOZIER, ag't New Home Sewing Machine.

The citizens of Hebron were shocked last Sunday about 7:30 p. m. by the announcement that Hubble Davis, one of their favorite townsmen, had been found dead, by his little son, in a room to which he had gone but a few minutes before to take a nap. Mr. Davis was engaged as a clerk in the store of his brothers at Constance, from which place he returned home Saturday about midnight apparently in his usual health, and on Sunday he entertained his venerable mother who went home but a short time before the awful discovery was made. The deceased was lying on a bed with the lower limbs extended and the hands crossed on the breast, everything indicating that death ensued without a struggle, and it is supposed that it was the result of heart disease. The funeral was preached Monday afternoon by Elder H. J. Foster, in the presence of a large concourse of sorrowing friends. At the conclusion of the funeral services the body was placed in the Hebron vault.

Last Wednesday evening the celebrated musical trio, Messrs. F. D. Kirkpatrick, C. A. Fowler and O. F. Bange, with two attendants, J. W. Hughes and G. F. Piper, visited Dr. Scott's, of Florence, where they met a hearty welcome, and also the Misses Emma Groger, Jennie and Florence Mitchell, Lillie Howell, of Covington, Nellie McGregor, Kate Bradford, Kate Delmazo and Eva Scott. The evening was an extremely enjoyable occasion to all in attendance, being spent in social conversation interspersed with music both vocal and instrumental. The venerable hostess contributed to the pleasurs by playing a number of songs that were popular in her younger days, and the doctor will never be forgotten for his kindness, which contributed so much to the pleasures of the evening. Although not in accordance with our desire, we think it necessary to give the negative occurrences, which were the forlorn appearance of Dr. Bange when the hour for departure drew nigh, and the reiterated desire of Charles Fowler to visit Florence again.

THE ELECTION.

Precincts	Judge J. Q. Ward	Judge D. J. Little	Clutterbuck For Sheriff	Supt School H. J. Foster	Supt School D M Snyder	Supt School I J Daughts
Burlington	106	7	141	101	55	2
Florence	133	0	153	121	10	15
Taylorport	21	0	20	3	14	0
Petersburg	72	0	71	38	41	8
Bellevue	25	1	19	23	38	8
Carlton	48	1	36	5	68	3
Hamilton	63	0	79	27	33	13
Verona	40	0	61	30	0	12
Walton	98	0	121	80	15	2
Beaver	85	0	91	43	7	31
Union	103	0	116	22	75	10
Bullittsville	59	0	58	7	44	6
Total	853	9	966	508	400	119

Constables were elected as follows: Burlington, R. H. Sandford; Florence, O. H. Conrad; Taylorsport and Bullittsville, Jeddie Davis; Petersburg, Harry Gray; Bellevue, J. M. Moody; Carlton, Walter Ryle; Hamilton, B. B. Allphin; Verona, J. H. Callahan; Walton, Al. Arnold; Beaver, Joe Rich; Union, A. D. Riley.

Thos. Dixon was elected to fill the vacancy in the office of Justice of the Peace in Florence district.

In Beaver there were 76 votes against the sale of whisky to 21 in favor of it.

Bellevue gave Lafe Riley 12 votes for Sheriff.

The Southern Exposition.

The Legislature of Kentucky, at its last session, appropriated $10,000 for a State exhibit at the Louisville Exposition, (or, as it might have been termed Kentucky's Exposition) to be held at the City of Louisville from August 16th to October 25th. The object was to show to the citizens of the different parts of the State, to other States, and to the world, something of the great resources of Kentucky. It was thought to be a judicious and profitable expenditure; that it would be the means of inviting enterprising men and capital to our State. It was, in part, the outgrowth of a State pride. State pride is commendable. Kentucky justly stands high and prominent in the galaxy of States. Wherever her citizens may be, they have no cause to feel ashamed of their State. They have reason to be proud of her fertile hills and valleys—her picturesque mountains, abounding in minerals rich, rare and undeveloped. Proud of magnificent cities and towns, her fine horses, cattle, sheep and hogs; her fair women, and honest, chivalrous, hospital and progressive sons.

Congress, through the instrumentality of Senator Beck, appropriated twenty five thousand dollars more, making thirty five thousand, an amount sufficient of the people's money to enable them to make a creditable exhibit.

The State committee agree to pay expenses of shipping articles for exhibition to and from the Exposition and for storage while there. Every county in the State is invited to send anything that will reflect credit on county and State.

The Exposition will doubtless be a grand success. Will Boone county make an exhibit commensurate with her wealth and importance? Any citizen of the county desiring to send anything will address it to J. M. Wright, General Manager of the Southern Exposition, Louisville, Kentucky. They will be furnished with a tag by either of the commissioners of the county.

The President, Mr. Bennett Young, wrote to me to send him names of citizens of the county that he might commission them. I sent him names from every precinct in the county. That they were not differently located is no fault of mine. Free admittance is all the pay commissioners get. Admission is twenty-five cents. They are expected to draw largely on their State pride.

Hurrah for Boone county and for Kentucky! N. S. WALTON.

The Boone County Infirmary

The following is the report of the Superintendent of the Boone County Infirmary, on expenses and other matters, for the month ending July 31, '84:

Inmates remaining in, June 31	23
Received July 11	2
Birth	0
Deaths	1
Discharged	4
Remaining July 31	23
Cost of provision and clothing	$53 23
" " Fuel	3 50
Coffin and burial expenses	8 00
Sending inmate to Paris	3 45

A. O. HALL, Superintendent.

Personal Mentions.

[If you have friends from a distance visiting you or expect to be away from home on business or pleasure, let us have the item for this column.]

Mrs. Lucy Lightner has been quite sick for several days.

H. M. Piper broke bread with his brother at this place two days this week.

Miss Sallie Hyatt, of Newport, is the guest of her sister, Mrs. Dr. Grant, of this place.

J. W. Robbins, of Hanover, Indiana, is the guest of David Blythe. He is trying to make a school at Bullittsburg.

Miss Susie Tew, of Jamestown New York, a cousin of Miss Julia Dinsmore, is the guest of Mr. S. P. Brady and wife

Joseph McGarvy and wife, and Mrs. John Sherrill, of Cincinnati, spent last Sunday with James Westbay and family.

Miss Pinkie Cowen, one of Burlington's charming belles, recently returned from a very pleasant visit to her relatives at Hebron.

Mr. Cad Williams, of Louisville, and Miss Abbie Bond, of Warsaw, were the gusts of H. P. Stephens and wife the latter part of last week and the first of this.

NEIGHBORHOOD NEWS.

Florence X-Road.

Mrs. Harriet Strefer, of Cincinnati, is visiting her sister at this place.....Last Saturday Russell & Co. beat their former record by sawing sixty-one hundred feet of lumber—Robert Rouse sawyer... Hafer & Tanner, of Hebron, are gathering the wild cherry crop in this section—John Aylor and Ed Anderson, subs......Miss Alice Souther is having a wire fence built along in front of her premises in the suburbs.

Longstreet.

Our corn and tobacco crops are fine and are growing nicely.

John E. Walton drove 220 fine lambs from here last Thursday.

Mr. John E. Walton will build a large barn on the Hunt farm.

Miss Smith, of Hebron, was the guest of Miss Bee Goodridge on the 3d inst.

Mrs. Hunley attempted suicide last Friday morning, but was prevented by her husband.

Judge Dills and wife spent one day last week with his brother-in-law, Mr. Alfred Cason.

The Plattsburg band serenaded Longstreet one morning last week, or at least the noise of their horns did.

A brother of Mr. Lemmons was taken from here to his home in Petersburg very sick one day last week.

Someone visited Uncle Bob Acra's meat and poultry houses, and appropriated largely of the contents of both.

Longstreet was out in full force on Gunpowder, the other day, fishing, and there is certainly plenty of fish down there, as part of the force went back on Saturday.

Some of our young men who attended the Aurora Fair were so pleased with the lassies they met, that they could not tear themselves away in time to get home before Sunday evening.

Florence.

Mr. William Piper and family and Miss Gusty Kirkpatrick, paid us a visit Sunday.

P. A. Hampton and attorney Yager went to Independence, Monday, on legal business.

W. C. Tanner, who spent the winter in the South for his health, is erecting a palatial residence on the border of town.

We can hear the whistles of the steam threshers at all points of the compass, and occasionally one drives through town with the steam as an auxiliary to locomotion, which reminds us of a lost railroad.

Dr. S. S. Scott's residence in the suburbs was the scene of an amateur sangerfest one evening last week. Burlington had several gallant representatives. We noticed Frank Kirk, Charley Fowler, J. W. Hughes, Mr. Bange and Georgie Piper and others on their way. Miss Kate Delmazo, of Ghent and a neice of the doctor, was present on a visit; also Miss Beard, a gay little belle who is staying with her uncle Scott during the vacation of her school at Lexington. Other ladies were present but I had no opportunity to learn their names; but from my knowledge of the affair I have no doubt but sweet music was discoursed, and enjoyment was the order of the evening.

The principal excitement of our place for the last week was the arresting of about one dozen rowdies, who made the night of the 4th inst, hideous by their fighting, drunkenness and profanity on our streets. The trial was set for Saturday in the Police Court, and the publicity of the occasion attracted a large crowd. Attorney Tolin was on hand and labored hard to bring the offenders to justice. Only the trials of two were called, and resulted in a mere nominal fine. Some were dismissed, and others were held for further developments. It is a lamentable fact that witnesses will behold all this riotous conduct, and when put upon the stand to testify, they are perfectly ignorant of anything having transpired.

Nothing more till we read Cleveland's letter of acceptance. GAS OMETER.

Beaver Lick.

Mr. Thomas Miller, of Holden, Mo., is visiting relatives at Big Bone Springs.

Mr. Joe Rich, who is attending school at Lebanon, is at home at present spending vacation.

Quite an interesting revival has been in progress at Hamilton school-house during the past two weeks. Rev. ... Our tobacco buyers are a little encouraged by the appearance of a short crop, and have hope that they may yet come out whole.

Thomas Coyle recently sold to John H. Sleet, a fine two year-old horse for $180. It is considered a fine animal, and if properly trained, is expected to make a shover.

John Cleek has erected, in the past week, on his farm, a large frame barn; also, George Ossman has built him a fine tobacco barn. Several more are going up in the neighborhood.

George Froh conducted the meeting, preaching every night, and occasionally holding meeting in the day time. There were 19 additions. Mr. Froh is an active worker in the cause and well liked among the people wherever his lot is cast.

Our base ball club, the Braisers, will play the Warsaw club at Warsaw, Gallatin county, next Saturday. Our club are fixing a kind of excursion rate business with the "Tom Ross," of Patriot, to carry them to and from Warsaw. All aboard!

Our farmers are beginning to complain about the dry weather, which, coupled with the unusual cold nights, is doing big damage to the crops. It corn in this locality makes a half a crop it will surprise many agreeably. Tobacco is also doing but little good during this cool, dry weather.

Our election passed off quietly Monday week. Local Option carried by a majority of 55. There was a light vote polled. "Uncle Joe" Rich, sen., our present constable, was elected over his competitor, James P. Parsons, by a majority of twenty eight. Jim Clutterbuck, for sheriff, ran far above the ticket, distancing everything. The county seems to like Jim as sheriff, and they don't hesitate to tell him so

Union.

The whooping cough seems to have subsided.

The Baptist church is being painted, Nat Patterson doing the work.

Rev. J. A. Kirtley preached here on the afternoon of the 9th inst.

Little Lester Thornton is very sick with inflammation of the stomach.

Miss Kate Bradford and brother, Will passed through Union the other day, in a new cart, on their way to Mrs. Jno. Elstun's.

The present cool weather is unprecedented in the remembrance of the oldest people in the community. So far we have not had one summer day in August.

Everyone seems pleased with Mr. Foster's election. If Mr. Snyder had done more electioneering, the race would have been very close between the two, as each one is deemed equally competent to fulfill the duties of the office.

The young gentlemen gave a very pleasant little picnic in "Rice's Woods" last Saturday afternoon, followed by a party at the town hall. Among those present from other points were Misses Octavia Snyder, Vie Dulaney, Veranda Laile and Minnie Stephens, and Messrs Pearson, Respass, Garvey and Baxter, of Florence, and Hughes and Fowler, of Burlington, and probably others I did not know.

Miss Mary Duffie, an interesting young lady of Covington, is spending several weeks with Miss Sallie Bannister.....Mrs. J. A. Huey, jun., is visiting her parents near Warsaw...Mrs. J. W. Taliaferro is quite ill with malarial fever...Miss Lallie Kennedy, of Covington, is the guest of her aunt, Mrs. Sarah Dickey......Mrs. Rose Converse and daughters, of Louisville, are spending several weeks with her parents....Miss Bessie Talbott's horse was very much frightened by a bicycle last Sunday afternoon. Bicycle riders should dismount when they meet anyone.....B. L. Rice and family, of Big Bone, spent last Sunday with J. G. Bradford...Mrs. Patterson was visiting relatives in the country last week...Miss Nannie Burkitt visited friends in Florence last week

Francesville.

After a lapse of several months we again dedicate a few items from this burg.

The shrill whistle of the steam thresher can be heard in the distance.

Miss Abbie Sammons, of Dent, Ohio, is visiting her aunt, Mrs. Batterson.

We hope to meet everybody in the county at the Harvest Home at Parlor Grove Sept., 6th, 1884.

Charlie Scothorn has been suffering with an attack of malarial fever the past week, but is better at this writing.

Mr. Walter Stone, of Delhi, Ohio, and Mr. Ed Webb, jr. were calling on some particular friends here last Sunday.

Wm. Goodridge's house is nearing completion. He will have one of the most convenient cottages anywhere in this vicinity.

Billy Hayes has began butchering again. He is killing some extra fine beeves and has more customers than he can supply.

Johnny Cave has just finished remodeling Mr. Muntz's house. He has fitted it up so that it presents quite a nice appearance.

There is some talk of organizing a Ben Butler club here, one that can be used on him in case he should call on us for our silver spoons.

A bountiful harvest of small grain and hay has been gathered in our neighborhood. The continued drought has injured the corn and potato crops. The tobacco crop is reported about an average with other seasons.

Considerable of a water famine is prevailing throughout the country. This can be remedied by calling at our office and purchasing a cistern. We keep a supply on hand of all sizes and no well regulated household should be without one.

Politics is the all important topic of the day with us, and it is quite common to hear warm discussions on our streets, especially if they should occur in the middle of the day. The Cleveland and Hendricks party are predominant though there are a few that will support Blaine.

Considerable anxiety is felt for fear that there should come a rain and potatoes take the second growth. For our part, we would like to see it come as our crop will have to take the second and likely the third growth to make anything this season. Garden truck is scarce and what there is is a very inferior quality. Tomatoes are rottening on the vines. Our sugar corn has shot but did not hit the stalk, so we are left.

W. H. Soards and G. J. Allen made us a brief business call yesterday. Mr. Soards will return to the city about the 28th of this month.

Notice of Incorporation.

Notice is hereby given, that Thadius C. S. Ryle, Joseph Riddell, Solon Stephens, G. L. Smith and J. J. Stephens, have associated themselves together and become incorporated for the purpose of constructing a road on the macadamized (turnpike) plan from Rabbit Hash, following the old Rising Sun and Union graded road as near as practicable to near Gunpowder creek; thence up the said creek the most practicable route to the Middle creek and Big Bone road near Joseph Riddell's.

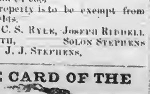
The name of the said corporation is the Rabbit Hash and Gunpowder Creek Turnpike Road Company.

Its principal place of business shall be at Rabbit Hash, Boone county, Kentucky.

The business of said corporation shall be the constructing, maintaining and operating a turnpike road over the route before described herein, connecting the said points given.

The amount of capital stock, $25,000, to be divided into shares of $25 each, and to be paid on calls of the directors.

The corporation to commence June 7th, 1884, and to continue for 25 years.



The affairs of the corporation to be conducted by a president and four directors, to be elected on the 1st Saturday in August. 1885, and on same day every year thereafter. The present president and directors will serve until their successors are elected.

The corporation shall at no time be indebted beyond $1 000.

Private property is to be exempt from corporate debts.

THADIUS C. S. RYLE, JOSEPH RIDDELL,
G. L. SMITH, SOLON STEPHENS
J. J. STEPHENS.

TIME CARD OF THE

MAYFLOWER.

LEAVES PETERSBURG
For Lawrenceburg at 6½ A. M., 9½ A. M., and 11½ A. M., at 2 P. M., and at 4½ P. M.

LEAVES LAWRENCEBURG
For Petersburg and Aurora at 8 A. M., 10 A. M., and 12 M.; at 2½ P. M. and 5 P. M.

LEAVES PETERSBURG
For Aurora at 8½ A. M., 10½ A. M., at 1 P. M., and 8 P. M.

LEAVES AURORA
For Petersburg and Lawrenceburg at 9 A. M., 11 A. M.; 1½ P. M. and 4 P. M.

ELIHU ALDEN, Master.

County Directory.

OFFICERS.

Assessor—G. M. Riley.
County Surveyor—W. E. Vest.
School Commissioner—D. M. Snyder.
Coroner.—Dr. A. A. Murat, Constance.

COURTS.

CIRCUIT COURT meets the 2d Monday in April and ... Monday in October, P. U. Major, Judge; ... L. Riddell, Clerk; A. G. DeJarnette, Commonwealths Attorney; W. L. Riddell, Trustee Jury Fund.

COUNTY COURT meets the first Monday in every month. L. H. Dills, Judge; S. W. Tolin, County Attorney; M. T. Garnett, Clerk; J. R. Clutterbuck, Sheriff, T. W. Finch and W. ... German, Deputy Sheriffs.

QUARTERLY COURT meets the first Monday in March, June, September and December. The officers of the County Court preside.

COURT OF CLAIMS meets the first Monday in November.

MAGISTRATES COURTS are held in March, June, September and December, as follows:

Bellevue—M. B. Green, first Saturday, and T. H. Sutton, third Monday. J. M. Moody, Constable.

Burlington—E. H. Baker, Thursday after first Monday, and Oscar Gaines, fourth Monday. R. H. Sandford, Constable.

Carlton A. G. McConnell, Wednesday after second Monday, and B. H. Rylo, Saturday after third Monday. Walter Ryle, Constable.

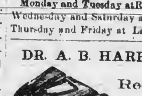
Petersburg—Jos. Hensley, Wednesday after first Monday, and L. A. Loder fourth Saturday. Geo. Comer, Constable.

Beever—W. M. Rouse, Friday after the third Monday, and

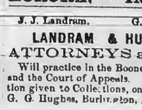
Union—M. C. Norman, Thursday after third Monday, and H. Bannister, Thursday after second Monday. A. D. Riley, Constable.

Hamilton—F. M. Howlett, Tuesday after second Monday; W. W. Garnett, Wednesday after third Monday. R. L. Roberts Constable.

Walton—T. F. Carley, second Friday, S. T. Johnson, Tuesday after second Friday. ... Moxley, Constable.



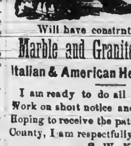
H. C. CHAMBERS,
AUCTIONEER
FLORENCE, - - - KENTUCKY.



CONNER YAGER
Attorney and Counselor at Law,
FLORENCE, - KENTUCKY

ROBERT B. REED
Attorney at Law.
OFFICE AT - UNION, KY

F. RIDDELL. H. P. STEPHENS.
RIDDELL and STEPHENS,
ATTORNEYS at LAW
BURLINGTON, KY.
Office over Dudley Rouse's Store.



W. E. VEST,
COUNTY SURVEYOR
WALTON, KY.
Is prepared to do all kinds of surveying. All orders sent him through the mail to Walton, will receive his prompt attention.

E. E. IGOE,

Resident Dentist,
Rising Sun, Ind.
WITH
J. P. Ulrey.
Monday and Tuesday at Rising Sun. 2nd Wednesday and Saturday at Aurora, Ind.; Thursday and Friday at Lawrenceburg.

DR. A. B. HARRYMAN,

Resident Dentist.
Office over Post-Office,
AURORA, INDIANA.

J. J. Landram. G. G. Hughes.
LANDRAM & HUGHES,
ATTORNEYS at LAW.
Will practice in the Boone Circuit Cour and the Court of Appeals. Prompt attention given to Collections, on application to G. G. Hughes, Burlington, Ky.

S. W. TOLIN,
ATTORNEY AT LAW
BURLINGTON, - - KY
Office in Court-house on 2d floor.
Will manage litigation in any of the Courts of the State, contracts and other legal instruments drawn up at reasonable rates. A prompt an studious attention given to business intrusted to my care. A trial solicited. 12-1y

AURORA MARBLE AND GRANITE WORKS,
Aurora, Ind
Will have constantly on hand
Marble and Granite Monuments,
Italian & American Headstones, &c.
I am ready to do all kinds of Stone Work on short notice and at low prices Hoping to receive the patronage of Boone County, I am respectfully,
F. W. KASSEBAUM.

INSURE AT HOME
The Farmers' Mutual Fire
INSURANCE COMPANY
Of Boone County
Is now completely organized and receiving applications for insurance.
Its Rates are Lower
Than those of any other Company, and it gives the farmers of Boone County a
HITHERTO UNKNOWN ADVANTAGE
In keeping their property insured.
EVERY FARMER IN THE COUNTY
should take a policy at once.
J. A. GAINES, President, Burlington, Ky. | J. H. WALTON, Secretary, Constance, Ky.
R. RANDALL, Treasury.
DIRECTORS.
LEGRAN GAINES, A. J. UTZ.
JNO. STEPHENS.
OSCAR GAINES, Agent. | C. L. CRISLER, Assessor.

Good Pay for Agents. $100 to $200 per mo. made selling our Grand New History, Famous and Decisive Battles of the World Write to J. C. McCurdy & Co., Cincinnati, O.

GREAT CLEARANCE SALE
—OF—
Spring & Summer Goods
—AT RISING SUN, INDIANA,—
COLTER, POWELL AND OWNBY'S,
Ginghams 7½ cents, worth 10 cents; Satteens 7½ cents, worth 12½ cents, Suitings 7½ cents, worth 15 cents.
Lawns 5 cents, worth 12½ cents. Calicoes 5c. worth 7c. Buntings 15c. worth 30c. Aberdeen Mixtures 7½, worth 35c.
All Summer Goods at prices in proportion to the above. Remember we rule the prices, and when Goods can be SOLD LOW, WE ARE THE ONES TO SELL THEM
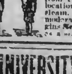
Cottonade can now be bought at 15 cents per yard, worth in any market 25 and 30 cents. A large line of Ironside Seamless Sacks, holding 2 bushels, 20 cents a piece, or $2 25 per dozen.
Colter, Powell & Ownby,
RISING SUN, INDIANA.

R. S. CRISLER,
Burlington, Ky,
WAGON MAKER AND
—MANUFACTURER OF—
ROAD WAGONS, SPRING WAGONS, HARROWS, PLOWS, WHEEL BARROWS
AND ALL KINDS OF WOOD WORK.
Also the Manufacturer of W. M. Conner's Patent Right Hay Conveyor.
Saws Filed & Sharpened.
Please call and examine my prices before calling elsewhere.



JAMES S. WAYNE, President. JNO. L. SANDFORD, Cashier
CAPITAL $300,000.
FARMERS AND TRADERS
NATIONAL BANK.
Covington, Kentucky.
DIRECTORS.
James S. Wayne, M. C. Motch, Sam Hind, E. J. Hickey, E. J. Greer,
J. S. Matson, J. H. Mersman, J. L. Sandford, L. H Dills, F. P. Helm
L. C. Stephens.
The general operations of banking transacted upon the most favorable terms, collections made on all points in the United States.
The Business and Accounts of Farmers are Especially Solicited by this Bank.
dec. 20-6m

UNDERTAKING.

We keep Constantly on Hand all sizes of
Burial Cases and Caskets.
And having just received a beautiful
NEW HEARSE,
Which can be had at a reasonable price when desired.
PRICES GUARANTEED LESS THAN CITY PRICES
DAVIS BROS., - - HEBRON, KY.

City Flouring Mills
RISING SUN, INDIANA.
FLOUR EXCHANGED FOR WHEAT OR CASH. THE HIGHEST MARKET PRICE PAID FOR GOOD WHEAT.
mar7-tf23
J. W. Talbott.

VANDERBILT UNIVERSITY NASHVILLE, TENN.
Cost of grounds, buildings and apparatus, $500,000. Productive Endowment, $700,000. Six Departments. Tuition in Literary and Scientific Department, $65.00; in Theological, free. Special attention given to Civil Engineering. Session opens September 1. For Catalogue (FREE) Send to Secretary.

KENTUCKY MILITARY INSTITUTE.

At Farmdale P. O., Franklin Co., Ky., six miles from Frankfort. Has the most healthful and beautiful location in the State. Lit by gas as well as heated by steam. A full and able College Faculty. Expenses as moderate as any first-class college. Fortieth year begins September 1st. For catalogues, etc., address COL. R. D. ALLEN, Supt.

CUMBERLAND UNIVERSITY LEBANON, TENN., has had near Half a Century of unabated success. More than TEN THOUSAND Young men from the South and West have been educated here. ... Catalogues sent free on application. Address ...

Now is the time
To Subscribe for
The Recorder.
Only $1 50 a Year.

THE RECORDER.

RIDDELL & HALL, Publishers.

BURLINGTON, : : KENTUCKY.

TOILERS.

O, children of the brawny arm,
Men by the grace of muscle,
Ye toilers on the feeding farm,
Or in the workshop's bustle,

Hold up your heads into the light,
And step with pride of bearing,
For ye a crest, emblazoned bright,
Have won the right of wearing.

The anthems of progress' roll,
And every stroke of hammer
Is but the dotting on the scroll
That punctuates its grammar.

Though petty souls may cringe and fawn,
Conceding higher station
To parasites that live upon
The things of your creation;

And some may claim a richer dower
Than you, in sense of seeing,
The soul of beauty is the power
That brings it into being.

What though they plume themselves and strut,
And prate of higher breeding!
And scorn your lives? Still are they but
The puppets of your feeding.

Of life now petty is the part
Of supercilious praters,
About the altar-rails of art
Of which ye are creators.

Ye stand within her sanctum's screen,
High fruits of arts' appointing,
Where shining on your brow is seen
The sweat of your anointing.

A grander homage ne'er was paid
To fall of knighting saber
Than is your bent obeisance made
To accolade of labor.

O, low-bowed head, that hath not swerved
From labor's path of duty,
Thy stooping form, however curved,
Is still the line of beauty!

—Ben. D. House, in Indianapolis Journal.

MRS. BOLTON'S NURSEMAID.

A short stretch of beach. Rocks beyond on one hand, a deep inlet on the other, and on the sand the only living objects in sight—two figures, one grave and one merry; one a girl of twenty, one a boy of five, stooping attentively over an embankment which the girl is carefully shaping. Her lower lip pouts, and her white forehead wrinkles in the earnestness of her effort to meet the requirements of her hard master, who, laughing gleefully, volubly issues his commands and suggestions in a shrill, clear voice.

"Higher in the middle, Auntie Kate! Make it big and high like a truly fort. Is it like a truly fort—say, Auntie Kate, is it?"

"Yes, Ray; I'm sure it must be," replies the girl, sinking back as far as possible in her kneeling posture and putting up her hands to her loosened hair as she studies her edifice.

A hearty, ringing masculine laugh causes her to glance quickly up, and see a man with a child enthroned on his shoulder come riding down among the rocks at her left. He springs out upon the sand and swings the child, a puny little creature, down upon the beach, then takes his hand and leads him slowly toward the other couple, who are already reabsorbed in their building operations.

"What are we going to do here, pop?" asks his charge in a querulous, plaintive voice. "Oh, see there," catching sight of the damp sand-fort. "Make one like that me, please."

"It shall be done, your highness," responds his champion, not without a regretful glance, which compares the feeble little fellow by his side with the sturdy Ray, who throws an indifferent look over his shoulder at the new-comers.

The latter settle down at a respectful distance from the fascinating fort, and the gentleman essays to copy the same, being put on his mettle by the rather discouraging comments of his charge.

"Come, now, Bertie, that isn't going to be so bad," he says at last; and the child claps his hands, while his tired little face lights up with pleasure.

"It's splendid, pop! It's better than theirs. It's higher."

"Theirs is higher than ours, Auntie Kate," admits Ray, in a dissatisfied tone, hearing the joyful remark, and keeping one eye on the rapid building.

"Never mind, dear," responded the girl; "ours is going to have little windows—see?—for the guns to be fired through at the enemy."

"O yes! hurrah!" shouts the rehabilitated Ray.

"Ours"—very loudly and with a side glance at his rival—"has little windows to shoot the enemy with."

"Then ours must, pop—ours must," urges the sick child, eagerly.

"Must what, child?"

"Have windows to shoot."

"Certainly; five hundred, if you like. I brought my stick on purpose to make port holes in a fort."

"He makes them rounder than yours, Auntie Kate," objects Ray, ungratefully; and the girl glances furtively at her fellow-builder, gravely engaged in poking holes in the damp surface. "Pooh! I guess I'll go and watch him," continues Ray, by way of striking spurs into his willing steed.

"No, no, darling. See, we will have men marching up and down behind ours;" and she stands short sticks upright in single file at the back of the hill.

"Yes, sir—men marching!" echoes Ray, beating a triumphant tattoo with his heels on the sand.

"Oh, see there, pop," cries Bertie, plaintively; "he says they've got men marching."

"Well, we'll have some soldiers, too, my boy. Just wait a minute." And lo! the masculine builder, taking a match-safe from his pocket, sounded a brave row of figures, stiff and soldierly, though not very tall. "Now, where is that empty spool you had this morning, Bert?"

The child produces it from the pocket of his jacket, and his companion places it between the two match companies, and mounts a cigar upon it. "There is a cannon," he remarks, and a shriek of ecstacy goes up from Bertie, echoed by a groan of deep despair from Ray, who has watched the proceedings with jealous scrutiny.

"O, now!" he ejaculates, in the fullness of his disgust; "you haven't any cigar, Auntie Kate. What's the use of your trying to build a fort. Let's pull it all down."

"For shame, Ray!" cries the girl, softly, catching his destructive hand. She is now fully in the spirit of rivalry. "You are easily beaten. See what I was going to do," and, pulling a loop of red ribbon from her dress, she attaches it with a pin to a stick, and in another moment it is floating gaily in the salt breeze from the summit of the fort. The effect is so triumphantly gay, that a simultaneous cheer bursts from the lips of both children, followed by vehement demands from Bertie that "Pop" shall furnish him a similar embellishment.

"But I tell you I can't do it, Bert," repeats the badgered man, while Ray's shouts and jeers enliven the air.

"But I want a flag," cries the sick child, piteously. "It isn't nice without a flag," with a longing look at his rival's flying pennon.

"All right," assents the gentleman, good-humoredly. "Needs must when you drive. I've learned that to be a stern fact;" and, taking a knife from his pocket, prepares to cut ruthlessly down through the blue border of his silk handkerchief.

"O, stop, don't do that!" exclaimed a soft voice, and he looks up to meet the laughing eyes of his sister-architect, who holds out one hand in warning, while with the other she smoothes the wind-tossed hair back from her flushed, triumphant face. "If you will let your little boy come over here, I will give him a piece of ribbon."

The man's face breaks into a pleased, kindly smile, and he lifts his hat as he answers:

"You will have to let us both come, I am afraid. Bert isn't much of a society man yet. Come, brace up, old fellow; I'll back you."

But Bert is not to be persuaded. He hangs back, and cannot be induced even to look at the young lady.

"Never mind," she cries, observing the struggle; "Ray and I will come to him."

"You are very good," replies her new acquaintance, who grows younger as she comes nearer to him.

The vague, general effect of his black and white hair and pale face had made her decide him to be fifty. Now she sees that his dark moustache is scarcely touched with the white that so thickly covers his head, and that his strong, white teeth and humorous eyes belong to a man whose age must fall at least fifteen years short of her estimate.

Ray trots sturdily beside her, not unwilling to have the finishing touch bestowed upon the enemy's fort, provided that the favor comes from his side; but poor, nervous, little Bertie can scarcely venture forth from behind his stalwart protector.

"Come, come, Bert, just see this flag," coaxes the gentleman, his hand on the little shoulder.

"Come out," adds Ray, patronizingly. "Auntie Kate's just as kind; you needn't be afraid."

"Bertie is not afraid," remarks the girl, kneeling down to her work; "he is waiting until I get it done. He wants to be surprised."

This artful speech wins the day. The streamer is not flying in the breeze before one eye and then the whole dark little face emerges from retirement, overspread with unconscious pleasure.

"How is that?" and the gentleman stoops, encircling the boy in his arms. "Now, what shall we do for them in return?"

"I'll tell you what you can do," bursts spontaneously from Ray, and his aunt's pretty hand laid over his mouth is not quick enough to drown the distinctness of the observation.

"What is it, sir?"

The boy looks with tardy shyness up into the girl's face, and then at his new friend. "You see——" he hesitates, "Auntie Kate hasn't any cigars, and——"

"And you want one, Mr.—— What is your name?"

"Ray Bolton."

"Ah, Mr. Bolton," proferring his cigar case, "take a cannon! and let me introduce Bertie Carew, who will be very glad to help you set it up, as he usually has a collection of spools in his pocket."

The children run gaily off, and Mr. Carew follows the frail one of the pair with a pleased expression in his eyes.

"I am sure I cannot thank you enough, Miss——"

"Breeze," she adds promptly, and what with sunburn and the general dishevelment incident upon being sole companion of a rollicking boy for half a day, he thinks her name suits her look of perfect health and happiness.

"I shall be delighted if it proves that Bertie has found a playfellow.

"Provided my nephew is not too rough for him," remarks Miss Breeze, dubiously, as she ties on her hat with a sudden recollection of her flying locks. "I assure you he gives me all the exercise I want. Still I thrive on it, as one must in the air."

"You like the sea?"

"Oh, best of all things. I was never at the shore but once before, and that was two years ago. I have always been eager to come again, and this season my sister's nurse fell ill, and left her almost at the moment of starting, so I applied for the position."

Here she laughs a little, and flashes her bright blue eyes at her companion, who smiles sympathetically.

"You were daring."

"Yes, I was. I knew what an autocrat Ray is, and how terribly alive he is, nevertheless I begged to come."

"And you do not regret it? This can hardly be called a very gay place."

"Ah, so much the better for me. What agonies I should suffer if my office of nursemaid prevented me from entering into gayeties of any kind. No, indeed, I like very well to romp about all day with Ray and to sleep ten hours of every night."

Mr. Carew looks meditatively at the speaker, and rather admires the freckles across her pretty nose. Indeed his thought as he surveys her is wholly complimentary, although to put it into words would be equally disconcerting to both parties. He is thinking: "What a perfect young animal it is!" What he finally says is:

"I hope you will let us romp, too, Bertie and me. It will do him worlds of good to have such lively playfellows"—with a troubled look across the sands in the direction of the children.

"Is he here for—for his health?" inquires the girl, gently.

"Yes, he and his mother also. Mrs. Carew is a great invalid—too ill, in fact, to reside at the hotel, quiet as it is there; so we are staying in a private house about a quarter of a mile distant, and to make it quieter still for her, Bertie and I take ourselves off the chief part of every day. He doesn't get on well with the ordinary nurse; and unfortunately"—here the speaker stops digging holes in the sand with his cane and looks with the slightest smile at his companion—"Mrs. Carew has no sister to throw herself into the gap."

"I like children," the girl replies, simply, meeting him with her frank, full gaze. "Let Bertie come to play with Ray whenever he likes. We are always either here or on the hotel piazza. I am sure we can enliven him."

"Thank you. I am sure of it, too," responds her companion, with such cordial gratitude that spontaneously their hands met in a warm clasp which suddenly transforms the slight acquaintance into friendship.

Mr. Carew, during the week that follows, is very careful not to impose upon Miss Breeze—so careful that in spite of her oft-repeated suggestions that he shall go away and amuse himself in a more congenial fashion, he insists upon remaining and sharing with her the surveillance of the two children. They sit on the beach together by the hour, the boys with their shovels and pails playing amicably near by, while their elders converse, or rather while one converses and the other, for the most part, listens.

That steady, rhythmic sound of the surf, that steadily, softly-blowing salt wind, that blindingly clear sky, with the sun pouring hotly down, and these will have but one association for Kate Breeze in future. They will but serve to remind her of a pleasant voice talking well on all sorts of subjects, laying down the law in an agreeable fashion, while she drinks in, with eagerly receptive mind, every new idea, accepting all this traveled man will tell her as undoubted truth, and responding, when called upon, with a manner as animated as unconscious, and wholly amusing and pleasing to her companion.

"You are teaching me so much," she says one day, when they are parting at noon; and Ray is pulling her dress in his eagerness to respond to the summons to dinner.

Mr. Carew only smiles into the vivacious, sweet face for answer.

"Now do, pray, let me do something for you," she adds, earnestly. "Let me take Bertie for the rest of the day. You must grow so weary of us all."

His face changes slowly and becomes grave. "I believe for once, and only once, I will accept your kindness, Miss Breeze. Mrs. Carew——"

"I hope she is not worse," says the girl, gently, as he hesitates.

"No, she is better; so much so that perhaps I could read to her a little this afternoon if we were alone."

"Then by all means let me keep Bertie. You see yourself that the children are less trouble taken together than separately," and she reaches out her pretty brown hand for the boy, who takes it willingly. "Have you heard what is going to happen at the hotel?"

"No; something in the line of dissipation?"

"Yes; a dance at last."

"You sigh. Don't you like dancing?"

"I love it; but Mr. Bolton cannot come down."

"Then, of course, you will let me escort you."

This proposition comes with laudable promptness, considering that to the speaker the prospect can offer nothing but boredom.

Miss Breeze colors brightly. "I never thought of your going," she says, sincerely. "I thought, under the circumstances——"

"Oh, circumstances need not prevent me at all. Pray make use of me if you will. I assure you, if I can have the sensation of contributing in any way to your pleasure, it will make me infinitely easier in accepting your kindness to Bertie."

So it is settled, and the girl moves off to the hotel, leading the delicate child, who clings to her affectionately, while Ray runs and jumps ahead. She feels as happy as the sunshine. Not a doubt, not a question disturbs her innocent peace. When Mr. Carew spoke of contributing to her pleasure, no conscious thrill enlightened her as to the blankness that would fall on beach and sky and sea if he were suddenly to withdraw himself from her daily companionship. He is a cultivated, kind friend, whom she has been fortunate in meeting. She sees nothing dangerous in the full contentment which his presence affords her.

After dinner, when the children are playing on the piazza outside her window, Miss Breeze is about to compose herself for a nap, when her sister comes into the room.

Mrs. Bolton is tall and very fair, slender and delicate in appearance, and intensifies every generous and wholesome feature of the robuster woman as she faces her.

"Mercy, Kate!" holding up both hands in spontaneous though languid protest, "how black you look in that white wrapper. A few more days of this and you will pass for an Indian."

The girl laughs and turns to the mirror, viewing her white forehead and dark cheeks, framed by the abundant brown hair that waves down over her dress.

"Why don't you take a little more pains to stay in the shade?"

"Mr. Carew likes it best down on the beach, and so do the children."

This brings Mrs. Bolton to her errand. She bites her lip, and regards her young sister this time with a scrutiny more than skin deep.

"And why should you consult Mr. Carew?"

"Why, because," and the girl turns around with ingenuous surprise, "because he is a great deal older than I, and beside, it doesn't make any difference to me, and—I want him to be comfortable, so he will talk. O Rose! you should hear him! He is the most interesting man in the world."

"What does he talk about?" Mrs. Bolton has drawn her sister down upon the edge of the bed, where she can study the transparent face at her leisure.

"Oh, what doesn't he talk about? Pictures, books, music, poetry——"

"Poetry?" Mrs. Bolton interrupts sharply.

"Yes; he recites beautifully. There is nothing he has not read."

"Ah!" replies the elder sister, slowly. "It must be a liberal education to listen to him."

"That is what it is," replies the girl, eagerly, not noticing the touch of irony.

Mrs. Bolton hesitates. She has sought her young sister with the intention of pointing out the danger of being too much in the company of this Mr. Carew. Now it seems to her a pity so brush the bloom from the girl's innocent ideas. She has interested motives for abstaining from disturbing Kate's unconsciousness. The present arrangement gives her more free time to indulge her ease-loving nature than she could have the conscience to require if her nurse girl pro tem were not also amused. It really is a very comfortable arrangement. But knowledge of her unsophisticated sister's inexperience spurs her on a degree farther.

"Well, my dear, one's first thought naturally is that Mr. Carew had better be making all this exertion to entertain his invalid wife."

Miss Breese colors, but only with earnestness.

"Indeed, Rose, he is only too glad when she is able to listen to him. He is reading to her this afternoon because she is better. That is why I brought Bertie here."

Oh! very well, Kate, very well," rejoins the other, relieved, casting an affectionate glance at the novel in which she is marking the place with her finger.

"Now," continues the girl, drawing a strand of hair through her hand and looking thoughtfully into space, "if only he is a good dancer!"

"Well, he won't be that if he is clever," replies Mrs. Bolton. "Why? Is he coming to the hop?"

"He has offered to take me. Didn't I tell you? I meant to the instant I came in. I told him Harry couldn't come down."

"That was not nice, Kate—to hint to him! I wasn't nice at all. Now, I shall have to chaperone you, and it is the stupidest thing in the world to sit in that hot room all the evening when one is not dancing."

"Poor Rose!" exclaims the girl, gaily. "You need only stay a few minutes. It is sure to give you the headache—anything you dislike to do always does—and then you can make your escape."

It is the second night after that the dance takes place. As a matter of course, Master Ray Bolton is particularly wakeful and hard to please on this evening; but by dint of great patience and ingenuity the desired end is at last accomplished, and his aunt has the felicity of seeing his eyelids droop and fall. For fear of waking him she dresses in a dim, religious light and with hurried fingers. She has but two costumes to decide between—a white and a black. She abjures the former, with a timely remembrance of her nut-brown cheeks, and soon comes down stairs, shading her eyes a little from the bright light, to meet her escort.

His rather somber, dignified face lights up at sight of the girlish figure so well-dressed in black, the airy costume so well lit up by his flowers, and the shining blue eyes so full of naive anticipation.

"How kind you were to send them!" she exclaims, touching the splendid roses in her breast with her gloved fingers.

"You are going to enjoy yourself," he replies, looking at her meditatively.

She laughs at his tone, and taps her foot in time with the waltz, whose strains come to them where they stand. "Of course. What do you mean?"

"Nothing. I was only envying you."

"I am afraid I am subjecting you to a sort of martyrdom."

"No; you are refreshing me," he replies, quietly, moving away in the waltz with his light young partner, whose breast fills with keen delight as they go.

"There!" she thinks, "clever people can't dance. I shall tell Rose."

Neither of the two has half a dozen friends in the room, so it happens that they dance often together. Mrs. Bolton's headache carries her off early, as was anticipated. She soothes her conscience in the moment of excusing herself by exhorting Kate not too get too tired.

"As if such a thing were possible!" thinks the girl, scornfully.

As for her companion if he would prefer talking to dancing, under the present aspiring condition of the thermometer, he nevertheless favors her pleasure as if it were his own.

"I believe I never had so good a time in my life," she says, with undiminished vivacity, when it is over. "It has been very kind of you. I wish you would let me take care of Bertie, all day to-morrow, in return."

He looks into the charming blue eyes. "But that would not be kind to myself. I don't think you have been very generous with your flowers, Miss Breeze."

The quick color flushes over her face. "O, would you have worn one? How dreadful of me."

"It's never too late to mend," he observes.

She is lifting each drooping flower, while he watches the quick, characteristic movements of her hands.

"Would you like one now? There is one bud that looks pretty well, but what do you want of it now?"

Still she disengages it from her dress, and fastens it in his coat.

"Thank you," he says in a low tone, "until to-morrow morning on the beach, then. Good night," and they separate.

The girl goes up to her room, breathing fast, excited, tired, happy. O, for some other girl, even Rose, to talk it over with! But Rose is not to be had, and as Kate is particularly anxious not to talk it over with Ray, she ventures to light only a candle, and, throwing herself down on a chair by the window, proceeds to take off her gloves. While she is thus employed, heavy steps come along the piazza, and pause outside the closed blinds.

"Sit down, Carew," she hears a masculine voice say. "I didn't know you were here until to-night, and pretty stories I've been listening to. Have a cigar, anyway, before you go. You might as well be hung for an old sheep as a lamb."

"Thanks. I do not anticipate being hung for mutton, young or old."

It astonishes Kate Breeze that the voice which frames this reply has the power to make her heart bound. She begins to feel vaguely frightened.

"Well, illness must have altered Emily," remarks the first voice, "if she has no comment to make on this sort of thing."

"Perhaps you had better be more explicit," suggests Mr. Carew, good-humoredly.

"Why, this pretty girl whom, they tell me, you are with from morning until night—I saw her, I suppose, this evening. She is charming, and you are a lucky fellow; but what does Mrs. Carew say to it?"

The other laughs.

"Mrs. Carew knows nothing about it," he remarks, deliberately; "and 'where ignorance is bliss, 'tis folly to be wise.'"

The listening girl hears no more. She finds herself shrinking against the wall in the corner of the room farthest away from the window; her lips white, her eyes staring and terrified, and her whole form trembling.

It is the habit of Mrs. Bolton's heir to waken at an unrighteously early hour of the morning. Usually he struggles manfully to resist the temptation to disturb his relative; but on the following morning he is pleasantly surprised, upon opening his eyes, to discover that his faithful nurse is not slumbering, but awake and dressed, and, in fact, busily engaged in packing a trunk before which she is kneeling.

"Why—why, Auntie Kate," he stammers, sleepily, "what are you doing?"

"Packing."

"But why don't you look at me? Why don't you kiss me? Why——" one great wonder suddenly mastering and swallowing the rest, as the observant child looks about him; "you haven't been in bed?"

"No, dear, I—it was up very late last night. I—wouldn't you like to hop up, Ray, and have a little run on the piazza before breakfast?"

This proposition meeting with favor, she soon has the child safely disposed of, and then opens the door which communicates with her sister's room.

Mrs. Bolton is turning rather petulantly in bed.

"I should think, Kate, you might keep Ray a little quieter, early in the morning," she remarks, rubbing her eyes. "For mercy's sake, child," catching sight of her sister's face, and suddenly sitting up, "what has happened!"

Miss Breeze comes no nearer than the door, and leans a little upon it. She justifies the other's exclamation. Her sweet eyes are heavy and sunken, and her face drawn with pain.

"I must go home this morning, Rose. My trunk is ready, and the train goes in an hour."

"Why in the world——" cries Mrs. Bolton, bewildered. "Who will take care of Ray?"

"You—anybody—nobody," returns the girl, desperately.

"Then all I can say is that it is very shabby of you, Kate—very dishonorable to break our compact so. What am I to do? You must stay!"

"Oh, have ever pity or thought for any one but yourself?" exclaims the other, for one moment covering her wretched face with her hands and then dropping them. "Do not worry," she continues in a changed tone. "I will see that you have a girl. I will send one to you."

"Kate, wait a minute," but Kate is gone, and Mrs. Bolton has only one more opportunity of speaking with her alone. It when they are parting. "Kate," she says, holding both the girl's hands in hers, "isn't there something I ought to know?"

"Nothing, Rose, indeed."

Mrs. Bolton feels exceedingly uncomfortable. She sincerely wonders whether her pangs are of indigestion or conscience.

"O, course, child, I know it is something about that handsome scamp, Carew," she continues, holding tight to the fluttering hands. "I worried last night a great deal watching you together; but what ought I to have done?"

"Nothing. You are entirely blameless," responds Kate, bitterly. "Let me go. I shall be late."

An hour after her departure Mr. Carew comes strolling toward the hotel. Bertie runs before him to the piazza, where he descries his playmate climbing over railings and up pillars with a recklessness of life and limb appalling to his mother, who sits near, in a ferment of nervous apprehension, from time to time issuing reproof and command, to which the child pays no attention. She bows stiffly to the gentleman as he approaches.

"Good morning, Mrs. Bolton," he responds, cheerily. "I hope that Miss Breeze is not indisposed after last evening."

"She did seem severely indisposed, Mr. Carew. Ray, don't you climb that railing again. Do you hear me? Not only that, but she has left me."

Mrs. Bolton, in spite of her recollection of Kate's changed face, can but feel herself an extremely injured woman; and it is a palpable solace to her now to observe the blankness which overspread her visitor's countenance at her words.

"Left you!—left the place!"

"Exactly," with a slight and dignified smile.

"Why? Was it not very sudden?"

"Exceedingly."

"I am sorry. I am very sorry not to see Miss Breeze again. Will you kindly give me her address?"

At the courteous question Mrs. Bolton rises. All the possible wrongs to her sister and all the real wrongs to herself crowd tumultuously for her in her brain, and bring the hot, angry color to her face.

"No, sir, I will not. It is the height of effrontery in you to ask it. I was told last evening that your attentions to my sister have been remarked. I do not know why she has left me, but presume, innocent country girl that she is, that she has found you out for what you are—a married flirt. Her address, indeed! Ray come here," and seizing the child by the arm, drags him, protesting lustily, into the house.

At noon of the next day, Kate Breeze arrives the village which is her home. She has yearned to reach it as though there, in the familiar, pleasant quiet, she should surely find the peaceful, light heart she left behind her.

"It is home, sweet home," she thinks, walking up the garden path. "Here I can live it down. I can learn to forgive myself in time."

She stoops mechanically to pick a red rose, but shrinks as a thorn pierces her finger. Then she perceives how like the flower is to those who lie scorching on the sand far away, and refrains from touching it again.

She excuses her sudden return on the plea of homesickness, and her mother, scanning her face with grave, anxious eyes, accepts the explanation quietly while seeking in vain for the eager child she sent from her side a little fortnight ago.

The Summer wanes, and autumn winds sigh through the little garden; charming, happy days, full of soft, dreamy sunlight, alternate with clouds and gusty weather, and dead leaves are whirling and piling in fence-corners and among the bare rose-bushes. Kate Breeze has recovered from the low fever that seized upon her soon after her return from the sea-shore. Sympathizing friends exclaim that it was fortunate she was moved to come home. How forlorn it would have been to be ill in a summer hotel, with its noise and thin partitions. The girl is grateful for that illness. It is a shield behind which she can retire from all but her mother. She has not confided in her at once, but there comes a day during her convalescence when Mrs. Breeze puts a direct question:

"Who is Mr. Carew, Kate?"

The pale face flushes violently.

"Have I been talking about him?"

"Yes, dear. He and the hot sun beating down upon the beach seemed your chief causes of distress. You said nothing of him which need worry you. You need not speak of him now unless you wish."

"I ought to tell you, mother. Perhaps you can help me." The girl's brown hair lies braided on the pillow. She pulls the plaits nervously as she speaks with evident effort.

"I met him with his little boy on the beach. We saw a great deal of one another while the children played. He had a sick wife. I did not think of its looking ill or being any harm. At last he took me to a dance at the hotel, and afterward I heard him talking with a friend outside my window. He said—O, I can not repeat what they said, but it opened my eyes and I knew my own heart. I was as guilty as he, only I had been blind and he had seen all the time. O, mother, mother," and with the cry of pain wrung from her very heart the girl bursts into an agony of weeping. Her mother kneels beside her, soothing her with loving words. "No, no, that is not the worst," murmurs Kate. "The worst is that I can not hate him. We were together so much and he was so lovely, one could not help loving him, could not help it."

"What was Rose doing, dear," asks the mother, simply.

Kate makes a helpless, impatient gesture. "A half sister is not like a whole sister," she says.

As the weeks pass by she arrives at a comparatively restful state of mind, but the vivacious, gay girl who has enlivened the cottage for so many years does not return. Instead a sedate young woman comes and goes, an absent-minded creature who sometimes fails to respond immediately when she is addressed, and who loves to go away by herself to a nook in the woods not far from home where she can read and think for hours, undisturbed. She seeks this retreat on one of the last of the Indian Summer days. The sky, the foliage, offer such vivid coloring she cannot keep her eyes upon the book she has brought with her. She falls into the old train of thought and drifting on and on, forgets the flight of time.

A light touch is suddenly laid on her arm. She starts violently as she meets Bertie Carew's dark, thoughtful eyes.

"Why, Bertie!" she manages to utter, and begins to tremble.

"Aren't you glad to see me, Auntie Kate? Why don't you kiss me? It's pretty here," looking about critically on the lonely surroundings.

She just touches the child's cheek with her lips but holds his little hand eagerly.

"Where did you come from, dear? You surprised me so. How is your—your mamma?"

"O, she's lots better, she's most well."

"And—your papa?" she breathes.

The child looks solemnly surprised "Oh, didn't you know? He's gone to Heaven. Why, what's the matter, Auntie Kate, you look so funny! O, Pop, Pop!"

Mr. Carew hurries forward at the cry of alarm. The sight of him revives the fainting girl.

"Why—Bertie—Mr. Carew—Bertie told me—" She lifts her pale face proudly but does not raise her eyes.

"Kate, can it be possible that you believe it still—that I am Bertie's father? My poor sister has been very near the gates of death since I saw you. This is the first minute that I have been free to come to you."

"Your sister!" She looks at him now eagerly, incredulously, joyfully.

"And he's talked about you all the way," remarks Bertie, in some disgust. "I'd rather see Ray. Where is Ray? Why, Pop, don't hug her so tight," he adds, opening his eyes to their widest extent and using a deeply aggrieved tone. "Do you love her better than me?"

"Better than you, better than the whole world, Bertie!"—Clara Louise Burnham, in the Continent.

Bismarck's War Levy on Paris.

A story which was told of certain important diplomatic services rendered by the latter nobleman at a critical moment during the Franco-German war reminded Prince Bismarck of an episode connected with the same event which has never yet appeared in print. "After the capitulation of Paris," remarked the Chancellor, "I met M. Thiers on the staircase at Versailles, and said, 'I quite forgot to claim any war contribution from Paris. I think so large and wealthy a capital would feel offended if I demanded less than a milliard.' M. Thiers looked completely thunderstruck, and wanted to evade giving me any reply at that moment, but, accompanying him, I continued the conversation, and before we had reached the foot of the staircase we had agreed that the indemnity to be paid by the city of Paris should be $200,000,00. I had asked a milliard, of course, only to be able to make a large reduction in the amount. This sum I had intended to employ wholly or in part to repay the indemnities paid to Prussia by the smaller German States, especially by Bavaria after the war of 1866, but the Paris contribution somehow found its way into the military chest, and that, of course, never returns anything. I had actually received the Emperor's consent to apply the Paris contribution in the way I have mentioned, but was compelled to abandon the idea, as the matter had passed into the hands of the Emperor's Military Cabinet, from whom since that time I have heard nothing more on the subject.—London Standard.

HOME AND FARM.

—Flowering annuals of all kinds will keep in bloom much longer if not allowed to ripen their seeds.

—The stems of roses having borne blooms should be cut back to a strong bud, which will soon push out new stems.

—We have read of wooden seeds so perfectly made as to deceive the husbandman. But there never was one so perfectly made as to deceive the soil.—Prairie Farmer.

—Fried Bananas: Peel and slice lengthwise, fry in butter, sprinkle with sugar and serve. Thus prepared they make a nice dessert. The bananas must be ripe.—Boston Globe.

—Dogs do not always kill sheep for the purpose of procuring food. The best fed dogs, when once they begin the practice, will continue it till they are caught in the act.

—Durable and pretty skirts for every day wear are made of ticking; the wide stripes are the prettiest. If these skirts are starched they will hold it for a long time, and dust can be shaken from them.—Exchange.

—When horses are fetched in off the grass and given dry oats they will often choke. As a remedy, with a dipper or cup pour a little water in one ear; the animal will shake the oats out of his throat in half a minute. It works like a charm.—Albany Journal.

—There is no danger whatever that apples, peaches, pears or any other useful fruit will be produced in excess of the demand. The truth is the demand keeps pace with production. People will use a great deal more fruit when it is plentiful, and when they can acquire the habit of using, they retain it.—Cleveland Leader.

—The small, red spiders which infest house-plants may be destroyed by dusting them with fine Scotch snuff or sulphur, or by dipping them in tobacco water. The common kerosene emulsion, made by dissolving four ounces of soap in a quart of hot water and adding one tablespoonful of kerosene oil and beating all up until thoroughly mixed is a good remedy for all the pests which infest house-plants, whether on the leaves or in the soil at the roots.—N. Y. Times.

The result of feeding potatoes and bran to horses is thus given by the Farm Journal: "The ration was half a peck of raw potatoes and two quarts of bran twice a day, to which was added a small quantity of clover hay. They were as fat and sleek as moles. They carried us five miles in fifty minutes, through stiff, muddy roads, and when we drove up to the station they were as cool as cucumbers."

—There are not so many good plowmen now as formerly, in part, doubtless, a result of using the sulky plow, with which extra skill in plowing does not count. Another reason, probably, is that few hired men now understand the art of setting a plow so that it will run easily for both team and holder. The plow should run level, the point neither digging downward nor pointing up. It is but the work of a minute to set the plow right for one who understands the business. Good plowing is an art.—Chicago Journal.

Productive Powers of a Hen.

The productive powers of a hen depend upon her constitutional capability and the feeding. The statement that a hen has a certain number of germs of ovules in the ovary at birth and that these mature during certain periods of her life, is simply bosh. It is a baseless, imaginary supposition, and quite inconsistent with what is known as the laws of animal growth. If these 600 ovules exist, at what time were they formed? They must have existed in the young chicks, and if so they must have been in embryo in the egg. This is not possible. It might as well be said that every fat globule in the milk of a cow has been numbered and provided for at the birth of the calf, because these globules are produced by cell growth in precisely the same manner as the ovule in the ovary of a hen. It was once said years ago that the whole of a tree existed in embryo in the seed—the roots, stem, branches and leaf. This is a parallel misstatement to that in regard to the hen. The absurdity is apparent to anyone who thinks about it, and one is absurd as the other. The fact is, the hen at birth has no apparent ovules, nor is the ovary fully formed. This grows and matures as the chick grows and increases in age and size, from the ordinary cell growth, by which the bone, muscle and other parts of the fowl are produced from the blood, which is made from the food. The food is eaten and digested and changed into blood; the blood forms the matter from which the cellular tissue of the animal is built up. If the food is not sufficient for all the demands of the animal, its life is first sustained, then its sustenance is added to, but its reproductive functions are not completed or set in action. For this full purpose of a living creature, whether plant or animal, full and sufficient nutriment must be provided. A hen will not lay eggs unless fully fed, simply because the ovules in the ovary can not be formed without the necessary substance, which must come from the blood; and these ovules are formed by an abundant growth of tissues in proportion to the supply of food. The better a hen is fed and the more judicious care bestowed upon her, the more eggs she will produce. As some hens have been known to lay over 2,000 eggs in the course of a long life, it is very clear that a large number of ovules must have been produced somehow, although she was provided with 600 at her birth. The whole statement is one of those foolish "facts" of "popular" science of which so many are turned out of the science mills. Common sense is very much needed in the investigation of every subject, and it is a great pleasure to observe that truth is being elicited from day to day. Ignorance and superstition are gradually passing away. The light of learning is advancing, keeping pace with the telephone, and, like England's drum beat, is keeping time with the hours, and the thunder psalm of victory will yet be heard round the globe. Shall we not all labor to this end and do all we can upon the great drama of our life? And our efforts will surely be crowned with abundant success.—N. Y. Times.

Castelar Compares Gordon to Jesuits.

The following estimate of General Gordon appears in Senor Castelar's "Review of the Month." He says: "Only when I turn back to ancient times do I find those to whom to compare General Gordon. I certainly do not compare him to the first discoverers of the New World, among whom the element of the warrior was predominant; I compare him, though you may greatly marvel, to the first Jesuit missionaries, and among them to those who first went to India and China. The missionary and the explorer are marvelously united in the Pasha and the Briton, as they were united in them. He resembles them in their incomprehensible mixture of motives, their mingled worldliness and asceticism, their extraordinary blending of prophetic sentiments with mathematical calculations, their enormous individual sacrifice, and their keen eye to commercial advantages. A pure morality, a positive theology, a practical mind, are three of his great qualities, and no one can read the history of Gordon without drawing parallels between him and the early Jesuits."—Pall Mall Gazette.

The People of Normandy.

The people of Normandy, as seen from the car window, are an honest, sober folk, little given to the vanities and frivolities of life, and, in fact, seem to have very little chance to know about them—which is probably a fortunate thing for them. The men wear broad hats and blue frocks when at work, and either wooden shoes or of leather with wooden soles, some of which look like heirlooms in their owner's family, as, indeed, their evident durability might well cause them to be. They are not handsome, but they are useful, and, I doubt not, never afflict their wearers with corns. The women wear a multiplicity of spreading skirts, which make them look like partially collapsed and inverted balloons, and are imposing as to their heads with huge, sky-menacing caps, made of white linen or cambric, and stiffly starched, and running up to a point which bends forward high above their brows like the haughty crest of the helmet of Achilles. I can not imagine any such imposing creatures being wooed and won, yet they evidently are so—a fact which shows that the sufficient spirit of courage in the warriors of William's time has not altogether died out in their descendants. Frequently one sees in the field huge Norman horses, with great, padded collars, dragging heavy, two-wheeled carts behind them, and occasionally a cure striding through a meadow path, his black gown flapping around him, a seeming larger brother to the crows that feed unconcernedly on either side. In other fields are flocks of gray sheep, attended by the boys in blue frocks, whom we have all seen in the pictures by Jacque and other modern painters, and in the wheat-fields scarlet poppies in abundance, together with other beautiful blooms in blue, and purple and gold. The landscape is cut up into farms, between which no fences appear, but instead streams of water and low, well-trimmed hedges. The land is moist and loamy and fertile, and over green meadow, and black and white and brown and yellow cattle, and weather-stained thatched roofs and picturesque costumes and bits of ancient ruin, lies a clear, gray sky, which sheds a cool and mellow light over all the prospect.—Cor. Boston Journal.

The Street Cars of Hong Kong.

The next interesting thing to the san pan is the jin rika sha on shore. This is the principal mode of conveyance for persons. They are merely man carriages—as the name signifies in the native tongue—upon two wheels. Their capacity is for two persons generally, but some will only seat one comfortably. Like the san pan upon water, they are the principal thing to be seen upon shore. A large size baby carriage with two wheels and a pair of shafts would come nearer to a resemblance than anything I can think of in our land. It is something astonishing to witness the endurance of these rika sha men as they trot for miles about the city and throughout the country without a rest or slackening of pace. Their excellent training and constant muscular exercise is exhibited in the well developed muscles of the leg and arm, which are exposed. The fare for each passenger is ten cents per hour under ordinary circumstances, with a few differences for various occasions, all of which is regulated by a tariff fixed by the authorities. Thus, you see, it is cheaper and more convenient than our street cars. The danger question is obviated, and the facilities for stopping and starting, with many other attendant advantages, are obviously better than any system we have. For transportation of people it has the advantage, but for things it is quite different.—Nashville American.

Balm of Gilead.

Balm of Gilead is a plant of the genus amyris. Its leaves yield, when bruised, a strong, aromatic scent. From this plant is obtained the Balm of Gilead of the shops, the balsam of Mecca or of Syria. This has a yellowish or greenish color, a warm and somewhat bitter taste, and a fragrant smell. It is valued as an odoriferous ointment or cosmetic by the Turks, who possess the country in which it is produced, and from its scarcity and value often adulterate it for the market. The amyris is a low tree or shrub growing in several parts of Abyssinia and Syria. It has spreading, crooked branches, small, bright green leaves growing in threes, small white flowers on seperate footstalks. The petals are four in number, and the fruit is a small, egg-shaped berry, containing a smooth nut. To obtain the juice the bark of the tree is cut with an ax at the time when its sap is in its strongest circulation. As the juices ooze through the wounds they are received into small earthen bottles, every day's produce being poured into large bottles and corked. When fresh, the smell of the balsam is exquisitely fragrant, but if left exposed to the atmosphere or in a bottle uncorked, it loses this quality. The quantity of balsam yielded by one tree is said never to exceed sixty drops in a day. It is, therefore, very scarce, and can with difficulty be procured in a pure and unadulterated state even at Constantinople. Its stimulating properties upon the skin are such that the face of a person unaccustomed to use it becomes red and swollen after its application and continues so for several days. Josephus states that the Balm of Gilead was one of the trees given by the Queen of Sheba to King Solomon.—Farm, Field and Fireside.

—An odd instance of the combination of workmen is found in an organization of the street laborers of Newark, N. J., their object being to maintain good wages and keep out cheap Italian laborers.—N. Y. Herald.

THE MARKETS.

CINCINNATI, August 12, 1884.

LIVE STOCK—Cattle—Common	$3 00	@	3 75
Choice butchers	4 50	@	5 35
HOGS—Common	4 70	@	5 85
Good packers	5 50	@	6 00
SHEEP—Good to choice	3 75	@	4 50
FLOUR—Family	3 50	@	4 00
GRAIN—Wheat—Longberry red	80	@	83
No. 2 red	80	@	83
Corn—No. 2 mixed	57	@	58
Oats—No. 2 mixed	35	@	35½
Rye—No. 2		@	58
HAY—Timothy No. 1	11 50	@	12 50
HEMP—Double dressed	8 75	@	9 00
PROVISIONS—Pork—Mess	17 25	@	17 50
Lard—Prime steam		@	7 50
BUTTER—Fancy Dairy	18	@	20
Prime Creamery	25	@	27
FRUIT AND VEGETABLES—
Potatoes, new, per barrel	1 25	@	1 50
Apples, prime, per barrel	1 50	@	2 00
NEW YORK.
FLOUR—State and Western	$2 65	@	3 80
Good to choice	3 70	@	6 00
GRAIN—Wheat—No. 2 Chicago		@	87
No. 2 red	90¼	@	91
Corn—No. 2 mixed	53	@	62
Oats—mixed	37	@	41
PORK—Mess		@	17 50
LARD—Western steam		@	7 80
CHICAGO.
FLOUR—State and Western	$3 50	@	5 00
GRAIN—Wheat—No. 2 red	78	@	78½
No. 2 Chicago Spring	78	@	78¼
Corn—No. 2	50¾	@	51¼
Oats—No. 2	25	@	25½
Rye		@	58
PORK—Mess	17 00	@	18 00
LARD—Steam	7 40	@	7 47½
BALTIMORE.
FLOUR—Family	$4 25	@	5 25
GRAIN—Wheat—No 2	88¼	@	88¾
Corn—mixed		@	62¼
Oats—mixed	42	@	44
PROVISIONS—Pork—Mess		@	17 75
Lard—Refined		@	9¼
INDIANAPOLIS.
WHEAT—No. 2 red	$	@	78½
CORN—mixed		@	52
OATS—mixed		@	33
LOUISVILLE.
FLOUR—A No. 1	$ 4 15	@	4 25
GRAIN—Wheat—No. 2 red	77	@	78
Corn—mixed		@	55
Oats—mixed		@	34
PORK—mess		@	18 00
LARD—steam		@	9½

"I USED Swift's Specific on my little daughter, who was afflicted with some Blood Poison which had resisted all sorts of treatment. The Specific relieved her permanently, and I shall use it in my practice." W. E. BRONTE, M. D., Cypress Ridge, Ark.

AN authority on bees says that the age at which a bee gathers her first honey is sixteen days. "Sweet sixteen," as it were.—Boston Post.

Farmers—Try It!

Wells, Richardson & Co.'s Improved Butter Color will be found to be the only oil color that will not become rancid. Test it and you will prove it. It will not color the butter-milk; it gives the brightest color of any made, and is the strongest and therefore the cheapest.

THE vice which never sticks to young people, though they are more exposed to it than any other—Advice.—The Judge.

LYDIA E. PINKHAM'S Vegetable Compound strengthens the stomach and kidneys and aids digestion. Is equally good for both sexes.

THE liveliest girl this summer is Polly Ticks.—Oil City Derrick. But the sharpest is her sister, Tac Ticks.—Through Mail.

PAPILLON Cough Cure cured an infant only a few weeks old, of whooping cough after a consultation of physicians pronounced it beyond recovery. It stops the whoop and allows the breath to return.

"WAITER, did I not see your thumb in this soup as you were bringing it to me?" "Yes, sir; it thumb-times happens."

IF you want a fine looking Face,
And a Skin rosy and clear,
Use "BEESON's" Sulphur Soap; all Trace
Of disease will disappear.
☞ Sold by druggists, etc., everywhere.

THE moon is a sort of matrimonial overseer. She is mistress of the tied.—Scissors.

Skinny Men. "Wells' Health Renewer" restores health and vigor, cures Dyspepsia, $1.

INTERESTING TO ANTIQUARIANS.—The oldest cup on record: The hic-cup.

"Buchu-paiba." Quick, complete cure, all annoying Kidney and Urinary Diseases, $1.

THE moon was full the other night and painted the sky red.—N. Y. Graphic.

Glenn's Sulphur Soap

Communicates freshness and purity to the complexion. Hill's Hair Dye, black or brown, 50c.

NOTHING "strikes all" so effectively as lightning.—Lowell Courier.

"Mother Swan's Worm Syrup," for feverishness, worms, constipation, tasteless. 25c

"WHEN the leaves begin to turn"—When you commence to read a book.

"Rough on Corns." 15c. Ask for it. Complete cure, hard or soft corns, warts, bunions.

A SAD miss take—Marrying a high-tempered girl.

DYSPEPSIA, Stomach-ache, Biliousness and Kidney complaints are cured with Papillon Blood Cure.

A BANK-TELLER belies his name when he conceals his defalcations.

"Rough on Coughs," 15c., at Druggists. Complete cure Coughs, Hoarseness, Sore Throat.

HEADACHE is immediately relieved by the use of Piso's Remedy for Catarrh.

St. Jacobs Oil

THE GREAT GERMAN REMEDY
For Pain!
Relieves and cures
RHEUMATISM,
Neuralgia,
SCIATICA, LUMBAGO,
BACKACHE,
Headache, Toothache,
SORE THROAT,
QUINSY, SWELLINGS,
SPRAINS,
Soreness, Cuts, Bruises,
FROSTBITES,
BURNS, SCALDS,
And all other bodily aches and pains.
FIFTY CENTS A BOTTLE.
Sold by all Druggists and Dealers. Directions in 11 languages.
The Charles A. Vogeler Co.
(Successors to A. VOGELER & CO.)
Baltimore, Md., U. S. A.

CATARRH HAY-FEVER.

My brother Myron and myself were both cured, to all appearance, of Catarrh and Hay-Fever last July and August. Up to this date, Dec. 28, neither have had any return of these troubles. Ely's Cream Balm was the medicine used. GABRIEL FERRIS, Spencer, Tioga Co., N. Y.

Ely's Cream Balm is a remedy based upon a correct diagnosis of this disease and can be depended upon. 50 cts. at druggists; 60 cts. by mail. Sample bottle by mail 10 cts. ELY BROS., Druggists, Owego, N. Y.

HAY-FEVER

PISO'S CURE FOR
CURES WHERE ALL ELSE FAILS.
Best Cough Syrup. Tastes good.
Use in time. Sold by druggists.
CONSUMPTION

"THE BEST IS CHEAPEST."
ENGINES, Horse Powers THRESHERS SAW-MILLS, Clover Hullers
(Suited to all sections.) Write for FREE Illus. Pamphlet and Prices to The Aultman & Taylor Co., Mansfield, Ohio.

WANTED Ladies and Gentlemen in City or County to take light work at their own Homes. $3 to $4 a day easily made. Work sent by mail. No canvassing. We have good demand for our work, and furnish steady employment. Address with stamp CROWN M'F'G. Co., 290 Race St., Cin'ti, O.

SUPERFLUOUS HAIR, Moles, Warts, Freckles, Moth Patches, Eruptions, Scars, and all Disfigurements and Imperfections of the Face, Hands and Feet, and their treatment, by Dr. John H. Woodbury, 37 N. Pearl St., Albany, N. Y. Send 10c. for book.

GUNS, $15.—DOUBLE Barrel Breech Loaders, Rebounding Locks and Pistol Grip, with outfit complete. Send for price list. C. E. Overbaugh & Co. 285 & 287 Broadway, New York.

HAIR Wholesale and retail. Send for price-list. Goods sent C. O. D. Wigs made to order. E. BURNHAM, 71 State Street, Chicago.

EASILY CURED BOOK FREE OPIUM HABIT
DR. J. C. HOFFMAN, JEFFERSON, WISCONSIN.

It is a well-known fact that most of the Horse and Cattle Powder sold in this country is worthless; that Sheridan's Condition Powder is absolutely pure and very valuable. Nothing on Earth will make hens lay like Sheridan's Condition Powder. Dose, one teaspoonful to each pint of food. It will also prevent and cure
MAKE HENS LAY
CHICKEN CHOLERA, Hog Cholera, &c. Sold everywhere, or sent by mail for 25 cents in stamps. Also furnished in large cans, for breeders' use, price $1.00; by mail, $1.20. Circulars sent FREE. I. S. JOHNSON & CO., Boston, Mass.

$1,000

WILL be paid to any one who will find a particle of Mercury, Potash, Iodine, Arsenic, or any poisonous substance in

SWIFT'S SPECIFIC

"I have cured Blood Taint by the use of Swift's Specific after I had most signally failed with the Mercury and Potash treatment." F. A. TOOMER, M. D., Perry, Ga.

"Swift's Specific has cured me of Scrofula of 12 years standing. Had sores as large as my hand, and every one thought I was doomed. Swift's Specific cured me after physicians and all other medicine had failed." R. L. HIGH, Lonoke, Ark.

Our Treatise on Blood and Skin Diseases mailed free to applicants.

THE SWIFT SPECIFIC CO.,
Drawer 3, Atlanta, Ga.
N. Y. Office, 159 W. 23d St., bet. 6th and 7th Aves. Philadelphia office, 1205 Chestnut St.

EDUCATIONAL.

UNION COLLEGE OF LAW, Chicago, Ill. The Fall Term will begin September 24. For circular, address H. BOOTH, Chicago, Ill.

LEARN TELEGRAPHY, or SHORT-HAND and TYPE-WRITING HERE. Situations furnished. Address VALENTINE BROS., Janesville, Wis.

SPECIAL Inducements to Young Men to Learn Telegraphy. Send for terms. Commercial and R. R. Telegraph College, Ann Arbor, Mich.

YALE LAW SCHOOL. 6 Professors, 10 Instructors. Fall term commences September 25th. For circular address PROF. FRANCIS WAYLAND, Yale College, New Haven, Conn.

A Great Problem.

—Take all the Kidney and Liver Medicines,
—Take all the Blood purifiers,
—Take all the Rheumatic remedies,
—Take all the Dyspepsia and indigestion cures,
—Take all the Ague, Fever, and billious specifics,
—Take all the Brain and Nerve force revivers,
—Take all the Great health restorers.
—In short, take all the best qualities of all these, and the —best
—Qualities of all the best medicines in the world, and you will find that —Hop
—Bitters have the best curative qualities and powers of all —concentrated
—In them, and that they will cure when any or all of these, singly or —combined
—Fail. A thorough trial will give positive proof of this.

Hardened Liver.

Five years ago I broke down with kidney and liver complaint and rheumatism.

Since then I have been unable to be about at all. My liver became hard like wood; my limbs were puffed up and filled with water.

All the best physicians agreed that nothing could cure me. I resolved to try Hop Bitters; I have used seven bottles; the hardness has all gone from my liver, the swelling from my limbs, and it has worked a miracle in my case; otherwise I would have been now in my grave. J. W. MOREY, Buffalo, Oct. 1, 1881.

Poverty and Suffering.

"I was dragged down with debt, poverty and suffering for years, caused by a sick family and large bills for doctoring.

"I was completely discouraged, until one year ago, by the advice of my pastor, I commenced using Hop Bitters, and in one month we were all well, and none of us have seen a sick day since, and I want to say to all poor men, you can keep your families well a year with Hop Bitters for less than one doctor's visit will cost. I know it."—A WORKINGMAN.

☞ None genuine without a bunch of green Hops on the white label. Shun all the vile, poisonous stuff with "Hop" or "Hops" in their name.

KIDNEY-WORT

DOES WONDERFUL CURES OF KIDNEY DISEASES AND LIVER COMPLAINTS, Why?

Because it acts on the LIVER, BOWELS and KIDNEYS at the same time.

Because it cleanses the system of the poisonous humors that develope in Kidney and Urinary Diseases, Biliousness, Jaundice, Constipation, Piles, or in Rheumatism, Neuralgia, Nervous Disorders and all Female Complaints.

☞ SOLID PROOF OF THIS.

IT WILL SURELY CURE CONSTIPATION, PILES, and RHEUMATISM, By causing FREE ACTION of all the organs and functions, thereby

CLEANSING the BLOOD restoring the normal power to throw off disease.

THOUSANDS OF CASES of the worst forms of these terrible diseases have been quickly relieved, and in a short time PERFECTLY CURED.

PRICE, $1. LIQUID OR DRY, SOLD BY DRUGGISTS. Dry can be sent by mail. WELLS, RICHARDSON & Co., Burlington, Vt. Send stamp for Diary Almanac for 1884.

KIDNEY-WORT

Among Railroad Men.

Popularity and Usefulness of Dr. Kennedy's Favorite Remedy—A Thrilling Letter from a Master Mechanic.

MASTER MECHANIC'S & SUPERINTENDENT'S OFFICE, Lowell Repair Shops of the Boston & Lowell R. R., LOWELL, Mass., March 25, 1884.

Dr. David Kennedy, Rondout, N. Y.:

DEAR SIR: I think it is due to you that I should make the following statement, and I make it voluntarily and willingly: On the 6th day of June, 1881, I was taken with what was called paralysis of the bowels. The seizure was unexpected and terrible. The stomach and other organs seemed to sympathize with it and to have lost all power of action. For a long time my life was despaired of, but at length I recovered so far as to be able to get out. By the advice of my physician I visited Poland Springs (Vt.), hoping to benefit from the waters. But they did me no good. Nor were the best physicians of Lowell and Boston, whom I consulted, able to afford me more than transient relief. I gained no strength and my case appeared almost hopeless. In the Fall a friend advised me to try KENNEDY'S FAVORITE REMEDY, and although opposed to patent medicines, I made the trial. To make a long story short—FAVORITE REMEDY, in my opinion, saved my life. I consider it the best preparation in the world for stomach difficulties, as well as of the Liver and other organs. I am glad to say it is in general use among the R. R. men in this vicinity.

Yours, etc., A. J. GIFFORD.

Mr. Gifford is the Master Mechanic of the Lowell division of the Boston & Lowell Railroad, and his illness and recovery are known to many who can testify to the facts in his letter.

Use this medicine for all diseases of the Blood, Kidneys, Liver, Stomach, Bowels and Skin. It may save you or yours from pain and death.

Address, if desired, Dr. David Kennedy, Rondout, N. Y.

PAPILLON

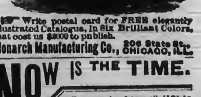
VOICE OF THE PEOPLE.

A. MANVEL, ESQ., formerly of Chicago, and now residing in St. Paul, Minn., and connected with the C., M. & St. Paul R. R. Co., writes under date of Feb. 2, 1877: "Papillon Skin Cure cured me of salt rheum of twenty years standing. I had the disease so violently that from fall to spring, my hands were helpless, and were kept continuously gloved."

HANNAH YOUNG, Hebbel street, near Thirty-third street, Chicago, writes under date of Nov. 21, 1877: "To the praise of your remedy, (Papillon Skin Cure), I will simply say that I was afflicted with salt rheum for years; two bottles cured me over four months ago, and not a sign of recurrence since."

DR. JNO. W. STREETER, an eminent Homeopathic physician of Chicago, writes under date of April 19, 1880: "I have used Papillon Skin Cure on a number of cases of chronic Eczema with most gratifying results. Some very obstinate cases have been cured by its use. I recommend it as a safe and certain remedy."

THOMAS R. WARLOCK, of Shanghai, China, Jan. 13, 1880, sends for one dozen bottles of Papillon Skin Cure, and says "we can not do without the remedy for skin eruptions."



J. S. TAYLOR, M. D., Kankakee, Ill., writes April 20, 1880: "I have prescribed Papillon Skin Cure for salt rheum and inordinate itching of the body, with remarkable results. I recommend it highly and consider it a certain remedy. No remedy equals Papillon Skin Cure, for all skin diseases; it is a safe and positive remedy."

For sale by all druggists.

CANCER INSTITUTE. Established, 1872; Incorporated, 1880. For the Cure of Cancers, Tumors, Ulcers, Scrofula and SKIN DISEASES, without the use of knife or Loss of Blood, and little pain. For INFORMATION, CIRCULARS AND REFERENCES, address DR. F. L. POND, Aurora, Kane Co., Ill.

Fast Potato Digging
THE MONARCH POTATO DIGGER
Saves its cost yearly, FIVE TIMES OVER, to every farmer. Guaranteed to Dig Six Hundred Bushels a Day!
SENT ON 60 Days' Test Trial. Agents Wanted.

☞ Write postal card for FREE elegantly illustrated Catalogue, in Six Brilliant Colors, that cost us $2000 to publish.
Monarch Manufacturing Co., 206 State St., CHICAGO, ILL.

NOW IS THE TIME.
To prevent and cure all "Skin Diseases," and to secure a white soft and beautiful Complexion, use
BEESON'S
Aromatic Alum Sulphur Soap.
Sold by Druggists. One cake will be sent on receipt of 25 cents to any address.
WM. DREYDOPPEL, Manufacturer, 208 North Front Street, Philadelphia, Pa.

BEST and most economical Laundry Soap for Washing, especially Merino, Woolens and Undergarments (cleans perfect and easy; makes clothes white and sweet) is DREYDOPPEL'S Borax Soap. Sold by all wholesale grocers and first-class retailers.

BOONE COUNTY RECORDER.

VOLUME IX. | BURLINGTON, KY., WEDNESDAY, AUGUST 20, 1884. | NUMBER 42.

TOPICS OF THE DAY.

SORAKICHI, the Japanese wrestler, thinks Lulu Hurst, the magnetic wonder, can not floor him.

FISHING is so brisk in the vicinity of Salt Lake City that angle-worms readily bring fifty cents a pint.

A LADY at Saratoga carries a parasol which is reported to have cost $1,000 and her costume is said to correspond.

THE summer of 1884 in the United States will go upon record as a rare one—cool, dry, pleasant, and healthy, in town and country.

IN Prussian villages orphan children are let out by Boards of Selectmen to the lowest bidders for their education and general care.

THE absence of caterpillars from the trees is said to be due to the cool weather in July, unfavorable to the hatching of eggs. No credit is given the English sparrows.

A FRENCH physician has discovered a new disease called "stremia." The most pronounced symptom of the disease, he says, is an unconquerable aversion to getting out of bed in the morning.

AN old farmer cures balky horses by lonesomeness. He leaves them to stand just where they are until they are ready to go. Probably that is the tactics adopted by Mr. Keely towards his motor.

AT the greenhouse of L. W. Coe, of Torrington, Conn., there is now in bloom a blue pond lily, which attracts more attention than all the flowers in the place. It is about four inches in diameter and a novelty.

THE race for population between St. Paul and Minneapolis is about as interesting as that for speed record between Maud S. and Jay-Eye-See. St. Paul's last directory contains 39,729 names, and that of Minneapolis 39,583.

THE House of Lords has 518 members in all, of whom five are members of the royal family, forbidden by custom from acting on political questions. Of the remainder 288 rank as Tories and 218 are usually classed as Liberals.

AT Gloucester, N. J., is a pear tree that is about two hundred years old, still in full vigor, and bears fruit every year. It was brought from England by Captain Samuel Harrison in the latter part of the seventeenth century.

JOHN W. WHEELER, secretary of the California Viticultural Commission, who has been travelling through the State, reports that the grape crop will be unusually large, and that from 12,000,000 to 15,000,000 gallons of wine will be made this year.

ACCORDING to the meteorological summary for July, compiled at the signal office, Washington, last month was exceptionally cool, being in fact the coolest July in thirteen years. In July, 1871, the average temperature was 74 degrees; last month it was 74½.

THE average power of Niagara Falls is estimated at seven million horse-power, and the cost of a plant necessary to utilize this power, transform it into electricity and transmit it anywhere within a radius of five hundred miles, at $5,000,000,000.

THOMAS JEFFERSON'S tomb, on which the United States Government recently spent $10,000, suffers again at the hands of relic hunters. The breaking of the lock and the defacing of the railing of the inclosure, as well as the chipping of the tomb, are mentioned.

THE oldest Democrat in the country is Captain Jotham Johnson, of South Durham, Me., born September 20, 1784, who voted for Jefferson and every subsequent Democratic candidate. He is so old and blind as to render useless any attempt to change his political views now.

GENERAL CARROLL TEVIS, of Philadelphia, who served in the armies of the United States, Turkey and France, is one of the finest swordsmen to be found either in this country or in Europe. One of his feats is to fling a silk handkerchief into the air and cut it to pieces with a Turkish saber before it drops to the ground.

THE early closing movement is spreading in Toronto. The dry goods merchants commenced it, then the booksellers, the jewelers, the butchers, the fancy goods dealers, and a number of other tradesmen fell into line. This year the retail boot and shoe dealers close at seven on every day, except Saturday, during August.

WM. ZIMMERMAN, owner of the ostrich farms in California, has arranged with the Mexican Government for the establishment of extensive ostrich farms in the northern part of Mexico. The Government grants him a concession of 70,000 acres of land, well watered and adapted to ostrich farming, together with other special privileges.

THE mighty West follows bogus mines with bogus cattle companies. Enterprising men get them up on paper and go eastward and sell stock. One called the "Iowa and Colorado Cattle Company" has been doing business right and left among the gullible, but on the spot no such concern can be found at all.

THERE are dishonest Germans in New York, who, when their countrymen land at Castle Garden on their way to the great West, tell them that the train does not stop anywhere before reaching Chicago, and then they sell each immigrant six yards of sausage, so that he may have something to eat on the long road.

BLOODY DUEL

In a Corn-Field Near Lexington, Ky.

Two Escaped Convicts Surrounded by a Posse, and Both Sides Engage in a Desperate and Deadly Conflict—One of the Posse Shot in the Forehead and Killed, and the Desperadoes Riddled With Bullets.

LEXINGTON, KY., August 17.—The recent outbreak of convicts and tragedy at the penitentiary, in which two of the convicts, George Alsop and Theophelus Graves, escaped, had its bloody sequel, near this city, this afternoon. Mr. Muir reported to Sheriff Rhodes that two of the convicts had been to his house, and to-day about noon a Sheriff's posse of eight men armed went out to arrest them. They went down the Walnut Hill pike, and were informed by a Mr. Estill, who drove up, that he had seen two armed men pass back of the McFadden place. Sharp took Estill's horse and Estill got into the buggy. They turned into Mr. Walter Scott's place and separated, Sharp going to the right of the house, and discovering the two men, he galloped up, but when within sixty yards of them, both leveled their guns, and Sharp slipped from his horse and took to a tree, the convicts doing likewise. Graves ran out and Sharp fired at him, and tried to get a shot at Alsop, who followed Graves across a stubble-field, in the direction of George Cassell's woods. As Alsop ran, Sharp rested, fired and hit Alsop in the left shoulder. The posse then came up. Sharp again followed them, and galloping around, sighted the fugitive gang in a cornfield. He rode along the corn to Shelby's house, and on past the next cornfield, but discovered no tracks coming out and reported the men were still within. About this time, two farmers, James Veal and George Cassell, came up and joined the posse. Men were posted all around the field, and Sharp, Veal and Cassell followed the trail through the first cornfield and an intervening ravine and to the next cornfield, where they again struck the track. Sharp was watching the trail while the others kept a lookout, but the first intimation of the presence of the convicts were a couple of shots, and Cassell fell to his knees. A second shot from the convicts passed through his head and he fell to the ground dead. Veal fired both barrels of his gun, and Sharp dropped to the ground. Lifting his head, he sighted one, who afterwards proved to be Graves, and fired. All became still, and Sharp crawled down in the hollow to the ravine and waved his hat to the posse, but, receiving no response, crawled through the ravine to the woods and joined them. The whole party now took the trail through the cornfield towards the bodies. They first found Cassell lying between the rows, quite dead, the wounds in his abdomen and head having bled profusely. As they approached the place one of the convicts, Alsop, raised himself on his arm and presented pistols at the Deputy Rogers, but was foiled in his revenge. The weapon snapped, and it was afterwards discovered to be empty. Rogers and three of his posse, Wilkerson, Maguire and Bullock, fired a volley, and then all rushed to the scene. One of the infuriated men, enraged at the death of his friend Cassell, would have clubbed the dying Alsop, but was kept away by the others. Although riddled with balls and buck-shot, Alsop's wonderful vitality kept him alive for a few minutes, but his eyes were fast glazing in death. He could not speak, but he still looked defiance, and had kept his oath never to be taken alive. His comrade Graves was already dead. The scene was sickening, the men literally swimming in gore, the blood and brains spattering their weapons. On their persons were found five Colt's navy revolvers, five U. S. needle guns, and two large knives. Alsop had also an improved Smith & Wesson 38-caliber pistol.

Distressing and Tragic Accident.

BLOOMINGTON, IND., August 16.—Word has just been received here from the southern part of the county of a most distressing accident, resulting in the death of Allen Lawder, one of the most respected young man of the community. A young man named McDowell was coming over to Lawder's house; when he was noticed, and, it is supposed, to have a little fun, Lawder ran out from among some weeds at him, when McDowell shot Lawder, the ball entering his forehead. Lawder fell to the ground unconscious, and died a few hours later. The sad occurrence is much regretted. Lawder was engaged to be married in a short time.

Natural Gas at Crestline.

CRESTLINE, O., August 17.—The Miller Company, prospecting for natural gas in this city, had their labor crowned with success a few days ago, but were somewhat disappointed by the drill getting fast in the wall. At a late hour last evening the tool was drawn out, and to-night a bright light about seven feet long by four inches wide is shining from the top of the seventy-five foot derrick. A pipe is being put up for this purpose to-day. The people in this vicinity are greatly excited.

Fighting Aerial Telegraph Wires.

CHICAGO, August 16.—The officials of the Western Union Telegraph Company were fined to-day $250 for violating the ordinance prohibiting the erection of poles and swinging wires in the streets. An appeal was taken and the case will be made a test one.

Seventy-Eight Buildings Destroyed.

GRENADA, MISS., August 17.—A fire last night destroyed the greater portion of the business part of the town. The fire burned three hours, consuming seventy-eight buildings and contents. Loss, $300,000; insurance, $65,000.

Coroner Furnishes His Own Subject.

ST. JOE, MO., August 16.—Henry Evans, a colored barber, was shot and killed this evening by Dr. R. J. Kirshner, County Coroner. The latter surrendered to the police. The killing was done on account of Evans abusing the Doctor's father, sixty-four years of age. The general impression is it was justifiable homicide. Evans was an ex-convict, and a dangerous crank.

Effect of the Greely Revelations.

LONDON, August 17.—The Greely revelations have been a startling sensation throughout Europe all the week. The Pall Mall Gazette has had long interviews with Arctic explorers on the subject. The effect of the whole affair is a deep sentiment against any more expeditions in search of higher latitudes.

Saw-Mill Demolished by a Boiler.

LACROSSE, WIS., August 16.—A boiler in Wm. Polley's saw-mill exploded at 6 this morning. The mill was demolished and four men hurt, one fatally. Loss, $10,000; insurance unknown.

Jews Killed by a Mob.

ST. PETERSBURG, August 16.—At Dembovitz a mob attacked the Jews, plundering their dwellings and killing seven.

A TERRIBLE FIRE.

The Washburn Opera-House, High School Building, and Almost Every Business House and Manufactory in Ashes.

ST. PAUL, MINN., August 16.—Shortly after two o'clock this morning the alarm of fire was sounded at Anoka, Minn. The cause of the alarm was found to be a fire in the skating rink of Kinner & Vanderveide, situated in the rear of the Post-office and High School buildings. Although the department was quickly at work, it was soon evident that the flames were beyond control, and that the adjoining buildings must go, and in a few moments the Campbell-Foote brick block, in which the Post-office was situated, was in flames, followed almost simultaneously by the appearance of fire in the High School adjoining the Dowdell Bros. restaurant. The flames then communicated with the elegant new brick block belonging to H. L. Tickner, and from there across Second avenue to H. S. Plumber's dry goods store and across Main street to a row of wooden structures, occupied by various branches of trade; up Second avenue, taking several residences and the Merchants' Hotel, down Main on the south side, destroying Plummer's dry goods store, Cutter's dry goods store Tickner & Co., drugs; Ryan, boots and shoes, and so on till the river barred its course in this direction. While devastation was being wrought in this direction appalling flames leaped from the wooden buildings on the north side of Main street, and enveloped the handsome and stately structure lately erected by W. D. Washburn, and in which was situated the First National Bank, and the elegant Washburn Opera-house. The whole city seemed ablaze at once. Up and down both sides of Main street, from Third Avenue to the river, and along both sides of Second Avenue, from Van Buren to Monroe streets, the pitiless flames swept irresistably. From the Washburn Block to the brick hardware store of Putnam, Chester & Lindsay, and the First National Bank to the Bridge square, the fire speedily made its way, and thence along Bridge square, on the east side, sweeping away Daniel's boot and shoe store; Abear & Wicklund's dry goods; Anoka Union brick block; Peters' drug store, and thence across Jackson street, diagonally, to the great Lincoln flouring mill and elevator, consuming, also, a smaller flouring mill near the bridge, two planing mills, one shingle, dry kiln, lumber shed and office, all belonging to W. D. Washburn & Co., the flames being brought to a stand-still at the lane, ninety feet from the mammoth Washburn saw and shingle mills. From the point where the fire communicated to the Lincoln mills it went eastward to the corner of Second Avenue and Jackson street, there joining forces with the section which jumped Main street, and tackled Jackson's hotel and stables, blacksmith shop, engine-house and jail, exhausting itself at the corner of Jackson street and Third Avenue. That branch of the conflagration which took its way south on Second Avenue destroyed everything to Monroe street, where it was brought under control. No lives were lost and no very serious accidents occurred, though it was a scene of the wildest and most uncontrollable confusion. Men fell exhausted by the heat and smoke, while women fainted, appalled by the terrible visitation. The ruins is wide-spread and extensive. At this time it is impossible to more than roughly approximate the great loss, but is placed by the most conservative at $1,000,000. Assistance was summoned from St. Paul and Minneapolis, but it reached the doomed city too late to be of service, except in saving General Washburn's mammoth saw and shingle mill.

Failure of a Dynamite Scheme.

BURLINGTON, IOWA, August 16.—Early yesterday morning W. E. Blake, who has been active as an attorney in the prosecution of saloon-keepers since the prohibitory law went into effect, was startled from his bed by a bright flash of light and a sharp explosion. He thought but little of the matter at the time, but on examination later in the day found a machine of destruction filled with dynamite, which he now believes was prepared with a view to blowing up his residence, but which failed to explode. Mr. Blake says he has no known enemy, and that in the prosecutions he has been courteously treated by the saloon-keepers.

Hunting Accident.

PAXTON, ILL., August 16.—A fatal hunting accident occurred near this city this morning. While Oscar Weiburg and a companion, of Chicago, were hunting prairie chickens on the farm of Gust Frederickson, accompanied by Andrew Bremer, an old friend with whom they were stopping, Bremer's gun was accidentally discharged, blowing the right side of Weiburg's head away, and causing instant death. An inquest was held, and the verdict was in accordance with the above facts. Bremer is nearly insane over the affair.

Death of a Large Land-Owner.

AKRON, O., August 16.—Everett Fernam, owner of 2,300 acres of land in Summit County, O., died at his home Friday night. He is said to have been the largest landowner in Ohio.

Subscription for Cholera Sufferers.

NEW YORK, August 16.—The Courier des Etats Unis, of this city, forwarded 20,000 francs to Jules Ferry, Minister of Foreign Affairs, Paris, as the second subscription opened at its office for the relief of cholera victims in France. The total subscriptions to this paper amounted to-night to $8,668.

Accidentally Hung Himself.

MILLERSBURG, O., August 16.—A little eleven-year-old son of John Cutter, living just over the line in Wayne County, while playing show with some other little boys, accidentally hung himself while playing with a rope.

Mexican Revolutionists Shot.

MEXICO CITY, August 17.—It is reported authoritatively that General Ramirez, Mejia and two others implicated in the recent foolhardy conspiracy, have been shot by order of the President. The Diario officially publishes a proclamation to the conspirators, which decrees that Gonzales, Kias, and all others engaged in Government affairs since the revolution of Tuxtapec, in 1876, shall forfeit their lives and property.

Work of a Buzz-Saw.

MUNCIE, IND., August 16.—While working yesterday evening in Rontinge's saw-mill at Gillmen, eight miles west of this city, William Pritchett, head sawyer, was thrown by a belt across a buzz-saw and cut to pieces. Pieces of the body were thrown in different parts of the building. His death was necessarily instantaneous. He was about twenty-eight years of age, and leaves a young wife in limited circumstances.

Pulverising Giant Powder.

WHEELING, W. VA., August 17.—Edward Brown, of Martin's Ferry, O., tried to grind some giant powder in a coffee mill. The powder exploded, blew the coffee mill to atoms, terribly burned Brown, and set the house on fire.

CROP PROSPECTS.

Reports From the State Agents of the Agricultural Department.

A Severe Drought Prevalent in Ohio in July—In Indiana Wheat Turns Out Much Better than was Expected.—Tobacco Crop Promising.

WASHINGTON, August 18.—The August crop reports contain the following from the State agents of the Agricultural Department: Ohio—A very severe drought prevailed all over Ohio in July, especially severe in the eastern and northeastern parts, which damaged the pastures, tobacco and early potatoes. Wheat and oats were too far along to be seriously injured. Abundant rains came all over the State July 24, 25, 26 and 27, which will save the corn and early potatoes on good ground that had been well tended. Wheat as far as thrashed is yielding rather better than was expected, and is of fine quality. On the whole the agricultural situation is encouraging. Indiana—Wheat is turning out much better in quality and quantity than was expected. The yield of 1882 will be equaled, if not surpassed. Corn, tobacco, and pasture have suffered from drought. The rains during the past ten days, however, have improved the condition of each, and the prospects are good for an average crop. Illinois—The condition of corn is rated three points lower than on July 1. Drought prevailed during the greater part of July in a majority of the thirty-four counties in the Southern division of the State, and during the last week of July heavy rains generally prevailed throughout the State, and in many sections strong wind prostrated the crops. In parts where the drought prevailed, the recent rains, it is believed, will more than compensate for the damage by winds. Tennessee—In a few counties in East and Middle Tennessee the month of July has been too dry for corn. In many localities, also, in the early and last days of the month and first of August, storms of rain and wind, varying in extent and severity, have occurred in many places, prostrating growing crops and doing considerable local damage. The corn, as well as other crops, was planted late, but the injuries from the above causes are not sufficient to materially affect the condition for the whole State, which at present indicates a full yield, as compared with that of the last two years. Wheat, oats, rye and barley turned out well in yield and quality. The yield of Irish potatoes is quite up to that of last year, which was extra large. Sweet potatoes promise somewhat better than a month ago. Tobacco in the middle and western divisions has not been so promising at this date for several years. The bulk of the crop of the State is grown in these sections. While bad condition in East Tennessee reduces the State's average, most of the crop is one to six per cent. above an average. The season for cotton, since it began to grow into branching, has been favorable for its development, and present condition of farms (blooms and balls) indicate a good yield. There has been a decided improvement in the condition all over the State in July. Fruits do not show as well as a month ago. Apples are small, and in many pieces are dropping off badly. The new peaches in Middle and West Tennessee are in fair condition.

All About a Little Flag.

PITTSBURG, PA., August 18.—Max Schemberg, Austro-Hungarian Consul in this city, this morning hoisted a small Austrian flag over the door of the Consulate in honor of the fifty-fourth birthday of the Emperor of Austria, and Chief of Police Braun, who had been making a vigorous fight against swinging signs and street obstructions, immediately ordered it down. Schamberg refused to comply with the order and Braun entered suit to compel its enforcement. Schamberg claims this order is a direct violation of the treaty between the United States and Austria, which states explicitly that Consuls can hoist a flag over the main entrance of the consulate, in any city.

Cruelties to the Insane.

PHILADELPHIA, August 18.—The exposures recently of ill-treatment of insane in this State are bringing other cases to light. In the Berks County Alms-house a young man was found in a cell with a ball weighing fifty pounds tied to his leg. He was recognized as the son of a neighbor, who had been sent to the asylum as a punishment for waywardness, rather than mental aberration.

The Living Skeleton Dead.

WHEELING, W. VA., August 18.—J. B. Garrison, the living skeleton, who attracted so much attention a few months ago by his marriage with a young lady of Philadelphia, died at the residence of his mother, Ritchie County, a day or two ago.

Fast Travel.

NEW YORK, August 18.—The ocean race between the Arizona, Austral and Servia was won by the former vessel, which arrived this afternoon, having made the passage from Liverpool in seven days, six hours and fourteen minutes.

Eight Prisoners Escape from Jail.

ST. JOSEPH, MO., August 18.—At 10 this morning eight prisoners broke out of the County Jail here. They went through the sewer-pipe of the water-closet. One was captured. The others are still at liberty.

Mary Clemmer Dead.

WASHINGTON, August 18.—Mrs. Edmund Hudson, the correspondent, known as Mary Clemmer, died in this city to-night.

Hot Wave in New Hampshire.

DOVER, N. H., August 18.—A torrid wave to-day caused the suspension of out-door work. The mercury was 100° at 11 o'clock. Several people were prostrated.

Death of Dr. Woodward.

PHILADELPHIA, August 18.—Dr. Woodward, U. S. A., one of the physicians who attended President Garfield, died here to-day.

A Plague of Locusts.

MADRID, August 18.—A terrible plague of locusts has visited Central Spain. The damage to crops about Cindad will reach $10,000,000.

—A man in Edwards, N. Y., recently advertised that, as his wife had "left his bed and board," he would not be responsible for any debts she might contract. In the next issue of the paper appeared a counterblast signed by the wife, declaring that her husband "never owned a bed; and, as for board, he never paid for anything she had eaten since their marriage."—Buffalo Express.

—There are two English laws which, if they were adopted in this country, would afford great pleasure to many disheartened people. One law is that no man has a right to keep a dog in his back yard that howls and barks; another that it is unlawful for hand-organs to be played if forbidden by any one.—Chicago Times.

—The City of Rome is the largest of the European steamers. She burns 2,230 tons of coal between New York and Queenstown, or an average of 304 tons daily.—N. Y. Herald.

—By a new electric headlight for locomotives thirty-five telegraph poles can be counted ahead of the engine on a dark night. Thirty-three poles cover about one mile.—Chicago Herald.

THE COMMONWEALTH.

FAYETTE County jail has fifteen inmates.

CHOLERA is killing many hogs in Warren County.

WM. H. GRAVES, of Scott County, lost nine fine Southdown sheep killed by dogs the other night. This is the third time in a few weeks that his flock has been raided.

A CATFISH weighing forty-one pounds was caught below Ludlow the other night.

A TRAIN on the Louisville and Cincinnati Short Line, jumped the track and went over an embankment near Zion Station the other day. The accident was caused by a broken flange of the engine wheel. The engineer, named Hufnage, is reported killed, and Jim Carr, fireman, badly injured. Three cars and the engine left the track and were badly smashed, but so far it is not known that any passengers were seriously injured.

THE Clark County Rifles have received elegant new uniforms.

WORK on the public building at Frankfort is progressing satisfactorily.

JAS. TROWBRIDGE, undertaker and furniture dealer at Winchester, is dead.

MONTGOMERY COUNTY has planted a larger acreage of tobacco than ever before.

MRS. M. A. PERHAM, of Woodford County, shows samples of her present ten-acre crop of White Burley, the leaves of which are three feet three inches long, and twenty inches wide.

BENJ. F. DAVIS, a well known stock-trader, died at Nicholasville, the other day, of consumption.

ROBERT O'BRYAN, postmaster at St. Mary's, is dead, aged seventy years. At the beginning of his last illness he weighed 375 pounds.

OFFICIAL returns indicate that Judge Holt will be elected in the First Kentucky Appellate District by a majority of nearly 1,400.

A FLAGE on the front truck of a southbound engine on the Cincinnati Short Line broke and derailed the whole train near Ten-mile Bridge. No passengers were injured but the engineer and fireman were badly mangled.

GOVERNOR KNOTT has granted a pardon to James Morrison, who was sent to the penitentiary from Frankfort for life, for the murder of William Bush, which occurred in that county twelve years ago. Morrison served about ten years in prison.

AT Nicholasville, John Turpin, charged with selling liquor on the High Bridge Camp-meeting grounds, was fined $50 and costs.

JOHN ALLISON, charged with horse stealing at Nicholasville, has asked for a change of venue, claiming he can not get justice there.

MRS. MARY NOONAN, who was visiting at the house of William R. Doyle, in Covington, the other day, went to the vault, when the floor unexpectedly sank in, carrying down the woman with it. She was extricated by the efforts of J. H. Thien, Monk James and Matt Hunt, who were obliged to tear down the building. She was senseless for some time, and it was feared that she was fatally injured. Under the necessary restoratives she has recovered.

A SINGULAR accident befell Aug. Gretnal, a grocer, doing business at the south end of Preston street, Louisville, and his life was saved only by the most remarkable presence of mind under the most agonizing circumstances. Suspended from the rafters in the shed at the rear of the store he had a very large cotton sack, which he used for concentrating feathers bought in small lots, thus making one big bag hold all. He had gone to the loft to empty out some small packages, and while so engaged lost his balance, and fell head foremost in the smothering mass, and the tortures he went through for the brief time he was thus imprisoned would be difficult to describe with a pen. Finding that, asphyxiation and death were fast crowding upon him, Gretnal managed to get his knife from his pocket, and by a superhuman effort sent it through the bulk and succeeded in cutting a large hole into the side of the bag, through which, as a life-saving effort, he thrust his head out gasped fresh air. His face was discolored, and he was so thoroughly exhausted that he fell prostrate and helpless to the floor, where an hour later Mrs. Gretnal found him. Restoratives were applied, and in a short time the merchant was behind his counter again. Mr. Gretnal says that no man could imagine the horrors of his feelings while he was going through his trying ordeal.

A NEW eight-page Democratic paper, called the Capital, has made its appearance in Frankfort. The editors are John D. Woods and George V. Triplett.

LEE JOHNSON, colored, while painting at Howe & Gaitskill's new warehouse, Mt. Sterling, fell from the roof, a distance of forty feet, receiving injuries from which he will die.

THE people of Oldham County are much excited over the antics of a wild man who is roaming about through the woods. The women especially are alarmed. The man is undoubtedly crazy.

TEN thousand people attended the camp-meeting at High Bridge the other day to hear Francis Murphy, the great temperance lecturer.

DR. GEO. T. GOULD, who lately had charge of the Female College at Millersburg, has accepted the Presidency of a college at Los Vegres, New Mexico.

A GANG of offenders have been causing considerable annoyance to the managers of the high bridge camp-meeting. An act of the Legislature prohibits the sale of intoxicating liquors upon the grounds; besides local opinion is in vogue in the precinct. In spite of this a gang of men have been selling slyly. The other evening John Turpin, a carpenter, was arrested at Nicholasville, as he alighted from the evening train. It is believed he is the head and front of the offenders. Turpin in default of bail was locked up.

GEORGE HOLLIDAY, a Deputy Marshall of Maysville, was shot late the other night by Edward Delyle, of Bracken County, and seriously wounded in the month and left cheek. Delyle was drunk and was being taken to the lockup by Holliday when the shooting was done. Five shots were fired. Delyle was recaptured and lodged in jail.

FEARING his engine was about to collide with another near the depot at Danville, the other day, Robert Rose, an engineer on the Cincinnati Southern Railroad, reversed his engine and jumped off. His right leg near the ankle struck the track and broke it badly.

JOHN WALL, a prominent farmer of Logan County, was fatally shot by his farm hand.

DAN PHILLIPS, a farmer twenty-five years old and married, attempted suicide late the other evening at his home, near Rectorville, Mason County, by shooting himself through the head with a pistol. He had been drinking to excess for some time, and this is given as the cause. He will probably recover.

BRECKINRIDGE COUNTY adopted Local Option by about 400 majority.

LOCAL OPTION was defeated in the Forks of Elkhorn district, Franklin County, by fifty majority.

Lunch With the Celestials.

If the multitudinous dishes inscribed on the menu of the trial lunch with which the Chinese restaurateurs lately opened their campaign at the Health Exhibition are set before the British public next week it is easy to foresee that the British public will be at a great loss which to choose. It is right, therefore, to give a little advice. The hungry sightseer may with confidence order bird's-nest soup. As served in a tiny slop-basin, it is excellent. It will have a great success in London and will probably be naturalized in England from and after 1884. Not one of the porty order. Shaoshing wine. It is warm like the soup, and also served in a tiny slop-basin. But a taste of it will be enough for each of the guests. It is made from rice and its flavor is indescribable. Besides bird's nests the Chinese eat many things which we do not eat. Either of the two following dishes, called respectively in Franco-Chinese jargon, "Timbale Biche-de-Mer au Madere," or "Shark's fin a la Bagration," will give to any curious barbarian some notion of the skillful manner in which they utilize treasures of the deep which we waste. This so-called "Biche-de-Mer" is a sea-slug two and one-half inches long by three-quarters of an inch thick. It lies at the bottom of the deep seas off the Chinese coast, and looks when dried like a piece of India-rubber, from which protrude rows of short spikes. When cut open it is found to consist of an alimentary canal, surrounded by a tough gelatinous substance of the consistency and color of India-rubber. This unprepossessing little animal keeps a long time in a dried state. It is cut up and cooked in minute pies. The British public will not find these sea-sing pies as bad as might be imagined, their taste being not unlike that of turtle. The shark's fin, however, is for the more audacious only. It is cartilaginous and eaten with rice. And here the chopsticks which lie beside your plate may be tried. It is to be hoped that a real Chinaman may be deputed to show the use of chopsticks. That alone would make a visit to the Chinese restaurant deeply interesting. There is another dish never seen in London before, the seeds of the sacred Lotus. This is what the Lotus-eaters lived on. The seeds are soft, white and about the size of a bean, and may be recommended to the Poet Laureate and others interested in the subject. The French chef who directs the energies of the five Chinese cooks and who interprets their dishes calls them "Noisettes de Lotus a la Heliantus." The Helianthus, however, is, we understand, merely thrown in "pour arrondir la phrase." Such is the effect of the genius of France acting upon the material resources of China. There are other dishes too numerous to mention. They are all served in small saucers. Last comes the Imperial tea. This tea costs in Pekin eight shillings a pound. It never comes to Europe, because no one would pay so dear for it. It is made from the choicest leaves and dried in the sun, instead of over a fire. It is of the color of barley water, and the leaves, which half fill the cup, are light green in color. The aroma and taste are both excellent.

A word now as to the room in which these dainties are dispensed. Its construction is Chinese from top to bottom. A Chinese artist has painted a wisteria and a bamboo tree on one wall, with birds flying about among the leaves. The gay patterns of artificial flowers have been arranged by Lady Hart, the wife of the well-known inspector-general of Customs, to whose influence and exertions the action of the Chinese Government in sending over so many Chinese products at an expense of many thousand pounds is mainly due. We understand that not only are all these artificial flowers brought from Pekin, but their arrangement is thoroughly characteristic. Lotus blossoms, roses and pinks seem the favorites. In a gallery are a number of Chinese musicians. Their music is so excruciating that they play only for two minutes at a time, being limited by a sand glass. When they begin it is as if all the dishes and saucers in the establishment were being smashed at once. When they end with a great flourish the sensation is as of a terrific railway accident. The most skilled ear can detect no tune except in the case of "God Save the Queen," with which they conclude the entertainment. This tune they have learned out of compliment to England, being instructed in it by Mrs. Campbell, the wife of the Secretary to the Chinese Customs, in whose house they have been taking lessons. Considering that they have only five notes to work with instead of our octave, their proficiency in the one English tune with which they are acquainted is very creditable to their industry and to the ability of their instructress. It is said that they like England very much. They are a representative body, including shop-keepers (who at their own risk have brought over large amounts of goods for sale at the exhibition, including curios, jade, soapstone, books, tissues, etc.), artisans, musicians and cooks. No fewer than thirty are now in London in connection with the Exhibition. They are taken great care of, and are housed on the premises. The other day they were all vaccinated, when it was found—and the circumstance is interesting because it shows how formidable a scourge small-pox is in countries where vaccination is not general—that out of these thirty men belonging, it may be supposed, to the middle and lower-middle classes, no fewer than twenty-four bear the marks of having already had the small-pox. We venture to prophesy that these Chinamen, with their restaurant, their music and their shops filled with all sorts of commodities, will become favorites with the sight-seeing public of London.—Pall Mall Gazette.

The Rage for Being Gulled.

There are few things more discouraging to the friend of humanity and its progress than the apparent fondness of a large sect on of the human family for being "gulled." There is hardly anybody, with wit enough to go in when it rains, but knows that nothing is gotten in this commercial world without paying for it. Yet the promise to give something for nothing is an irresistable and never-failing attraction. No matter in what form the offer is made, thousands come blindly up at the beck of the promiser; and even when they have been swindled over and over again, are quite as ready to give in allegiance to the last new humbug as they were to the first. If the victims came only from among the ignorant there would be nothing surprising about the matter, but they do not. The wheel of fortune at the agricultural fair catches the farmer, but he is weak and simple minded. But the policy shops, the patent right swindles, and the "hippodrome" horse races and wrestling matched reach classes that are certainly well taught and are ordinarily looked upon as sharp and shrewd. And the biggest charlatan of all, the quack, does his most thriving trade with people of intelligence.

Let a long-haired individual with a broad-brimmed hat, an Indian name, a brass band and a peddler's wagon set himself up at the street corner and proclaim himself a wonderful physician, with a panacea for all the ills that flesh is heir to, and he will attract hundreds of intelligent persons, who will pay their money to a man they never saw before for a compound concerning which they know nothing beyond his boastful assertions. The same persons who put no trust in the advice of a physician whom they have known for years, and whose interest it is to advise them fairly and for the best, will swallow with avidity the advice and the nostrum of any loud-voiced quack who forces himself upon their attention. In some cases, no doubt, it is because the quack promises, having no responsibility, what the educated physician with a reputation at stake does not promise. But in the vast majority of cases it seems as if the impelling motive—the ruling passion on which the quack plays so successfully—is the desire to be gulled.

How far society can or ought to go in protecting its members from the evil consequences of this craze is an open question. So long as people insist upon being swindled and resent any invasion of their inherent right to be swindled, the swindler will undoubtedly be on hand to gratify them: and as they are free agents, the law is probably powerless to protect them against their will. But it does seem as though there should be better protection than there is for the weaker members of society. When an imposing charlatan plies his wretched trade and jeopardizes the health and life of his victims, there ought to be some means of reaching him promptly and effectually, not merely with fine or imprisonment after the offense has been committed, but with sure prevention of the offense.

The liberty of the individual is a sacred thing, even when it is the liberty to be swindled. But in securing the welfare of the whole even that may be curtailed with propriety.—Detroit Free Press.

A Constantinopolitan Fire Company.

We soon caught sight of the Captain of the company. He was a tall athletic fellow, wearing short, loose trousers of white cotton cloth. His legs were bare below the knees; he wore Turkish red pointed shoes on his feet, without stockings—a loose jacket of brown felt over a white cotton shirt, and his head was covered with a metallic bowl, which shone brightly. A leather belt encircled his waist, and was clasped with a large brass buckle in front. He was coming toward us in a double quick trot, brandishing, in a proud manner, the brass spout that belonged to the hose. He was followed by the engine and the firemen that belonged to it. Oh, what a sight! Most of them were scantily clothed, and some did not even have caps upon their heads, but I noticed that all wore the regulation belt with the large buckle in front. They were evidently of the class which composed the riffraff of the city. The engine itself was nothing more than a big-sized garden pump, carried on the shoulders of eight men, four in front and four behind. They relieved one another every now and then with great dexterity and alertness.

They soon swept by us, followed by the hose, which was coiled over a long pole, the ends of which rested on the shoulders of another file of men. Just as they reached the next corner, there emerged from a side street another engine, whereupon a squabble for the right of way immediately arose. The two companies ostled and pushed forward, each party trying to get ahead of the other. After a long harangue and bluster, accompanied by constant yelling, screaming and hard words, they lowered their respective engines to the ground and fell into a regular fight, wrestling, pushing and knocking one another down in a ferocious manner. Their looks and actions were frantic, and they fought like madmen.

"Ah. There comes the Ser-Asker, the Minister of War! He'll soon settle their dispute," cried a voice near us. And he did.

He was preceded by a nconbetjee who cleared the way for him, and when he came up, he promptly ordered the companies to take up their engines and follow him, which they did with the utmost meekness and alacrity. There was no chance now for either party to claim the victory, but they kept up a subdued rattle of words all the way.—St. Nicolas.

The Cavalry Bit and Curb.

Lacerated, torn, bruised, and paralyzed tongues, lips, bars, enlarged submaxillary bones (chins) come from the use of that cruel abomination, the present cavalry bit and curb. I venture the statement that not one horseman in a thousand is sufficiently light-handed to use this huge piece of iron without torturing the horse. It is fashioned on the faultiest principles of mechanism suitable to the purposes it should perform see [illegible] or Dwyer on "Bits, Bridle, Seats and Saddles," the only common-sense work extant on these subjects, so that the fulcrum is thrown on the horse's chin instead of mouth, pressing his head into the position it should not occupy, and where it is completely removed from the rider's control viz., upward and toward. The biped who handles this so-called controlling power being instructed to "stick to him," clings to his reins—1,000 pounds to the square inch pressure, if it were possible for him to do so with the usual result, viz., loss of control, and tearing, lacerating and wounding the horse's mouth and chin; his idea of controlling his horse by means of the bits and reins being included in the expression, "A long pull and strong pull the stronger the better." I have frequently been amused at the order from those who ought to know better to the rider of an uneasy horse on the drilling ring, "Throw away your sabre and stick to him." So he does, tooth and nail, both horse and man disappearing over the neighboring bluffs, full-speed the rider braced in his stirrups tugging and tearing with both hands at the poor tortured mouth the horse, maddened from the pain and ill-treatment, head in the air to avoid the instrument of torture in his mouth, runs until he is thrown by some obstacle he can't see his road from pain and the elevated position of his head) or stops from sheer exhaustion only. I never saw an [illegible] horse controlled by this treatment, [illegible] brought home and man into their place in the ranks in a short time.

SCIENCE AND INDUSTRY.

—Pomegranates are being cultivated in the South. They yield $700 per acre.

—A company has been formed in New England for the purpose of converting water into fuel.—Boston Post.

—During the first six months of the current year the sum of $89,221,000 has been invested in new industries in the South—Chicago Times.

—The sawdust and refuse of the saw-mill is now made to yield fourteen gallons of turpentine, three to four gallons of resin, and a quantity of tar per cord.—St. Louis Post.

—A Hazelhurst (Miss.) man has started a new industry. He ships toads to Louisville florists, who use them to rid their plants of insects, which, it is said, they do very effectually.

—Three years ago the Buffalo authorities offered $20,000 for some invention that would utilize the current of the Niagara River for power at their water-works; and William H. Britton of that city, has the model of a horizontal turbine wheel which he thinks will do it.—Buffalo Express.

—Blasting paper is a recent Austrian invention. It is described as being unsized or ordinary blotting paper, coated with a mixture of prussiate of potash, of charcoal, saltpeter, potassium, chlorate and white starch. On its being dried it is cut into strips, which are rolled into cartridges.

—The bog peat of Mexico is now being used on a considerable scale as fuel for locomotives, stationary engines, smelting purposes, smiths' fires and household use. The peat is mixed with a proper proportion of bitumen, and is said not only to burn freely, and without smoke in much quantity, but to give a higher dynamic equivalent of heat than the same amount of wood.—Chicago Times.

—An Atlanta (Ga.) publisher has invented a new method of photo-lithographing by which it is claimed perfect copies of the finest steel engravings may be taken on the lithographic stone, ready for printing, in less than five minutes' time. The process, it is said, is very simple, and can be performed by a boy as well as an expert. By means of it, too, the inventor claims that he can make zinc and other metal printing plates. The original picture, it is said, is not injured by the process.—Chicago Herald.

—The growing vegetable world breathes carbonic acid gas through its leaves, using the carbon to build up its structures, setting oxygen free for the use of the animal world, which interchange is constantly going on. The carbon so appropriated is found in the ash of plants after combustion, combined with lime or some other mineral, but the larger proportion is again driven off during the combustion, in which progress it is again united to oxygen in the shape of carbonic acid gas.—N. Y. Times.

—If, says M. C. Montigny in L'Electricite, we cast a rapid glance over the progress that has been made in electricity in less than half a century, we shall see that after presenting itself suddenly under an entirely new form in the Volta pile, after manifesting its surprising action upon magnets and currents at a moment when the science of the phenomena engendered by the pile seemed to some to be exhausted, electricity is again presenting itself under a new light in induction apparatus wherein it is excited by the most surprising means.

PITH AND POINT.

—She advertised:

Little Bopeep she lost her sheep,
And didn't know where to find 'em;
She advertised, and they came home,
Dragging gold dollars behind 'em.
—Philadelphia Call.

—"Boys, don't leave the farm." No, boys, just take the farm right along when you go anywhere. You will find it handy if you fail to get a situation in the city, as you probably will.

—A scientific journal discusses "eggs as food." This strikes us as being a rather sensible idea and productive of much more good than discussing eggs as bonquets.—Oil City Blizzard.

—"Good morning, Uncle Jim." "Good morning." "Well, you got your daughter married off, have you?" "Yes." "Really. Providence smiles upon you." "Smiles! No, bless you, she snickered right out!"—N. Y. Sun.

—New Girl—Oh, Missus, there's something the matter with the milk. Mistress—Mercy me! What is it? New Girl—A yellow scum has gathered on top of it. I'm 'feared it's spoiled. Mistress—Where were you brought up? New Girl—In New Yorrick. Mistress—I thought so.—Philadelphia Call.

—"I am choost as full ash a bag of flour," remarked an inebriate to a sober friend. "There is a difference between you and a sack of flour, however." "What ish dat difference?" "When a sack is full it can stand up, but when you are full you can't even lie down on the ground without holding on."—Texas Siftings.

—An exchange thinks "the time may come when the thunder-storm may be called up by artificial means." Come? Why, bless you, it is here. The only artificial means necessary is to get up a Sunday-school picnic. There may be an occasional failure, but it is about as reliable as anything on this ever-changing globe—save death and taxes.—Norristown Herald.

—"Is my shaving agreeable to you, sir?" a locus ious barber asked a customer whom he had been shaving alive. "My wife would admire it very much," rather indefinitely responded the man under torture. "Ah," said the barber, with great complacency, "ladies are often excellent judges of their husbands being well shaved. And you think mine will suit, sir?" "No doubt of it in the world. It was only this morning she became angry because I told her I could not afford to buy her a spring bonnet and said I ought to be skinned alive." The barber lost himself in reflection."—Pittsburgh Chronicle.

Home Comfort.

Upon the wife and daughter of a family really depend much of the comfort and happiness of home. The peace, happiness and harmony of life are made or marred by what some people call trivial things. Is it a trivial thing to a man when he comes home wearied and harassed by the toils of the day to find a cheerful, neat home, everything in order, a dainty set tea table, with its inviting display of well cooked food, and his wife and daughters arrayed in their best, with smiles of gladness on their faces to welcome him? No, it is not trivial to him, for his health and comfort depend, in a great measure upon his home. Therefore it is very important that the daughters of our land should be trained [illegible]. Taught not only to keep a neat house, but how to cook, for [illegible] knowledge and skill in these duties.—Atlanta Constitution.

THE RECORDER.

WEDNESDAY, AUGUST 20. 1884.

RIDDELL & HALL, Proprietors.

For announcing candidates, $5. Obituary poetry, 5 cents per line. Obituary notices 20 lines free; after that number (except the announcement of the death) 3 cents per line.
Tributes of respect from lodges, &c., $1 50

RATES OF SUBSCRIPTION.

One year	$1 50
Six months	75
Three months	40

We are authorized to announce
DR. JAMES S. BROWN,
of Warsaw, as a candidate for the State Senate, from this, the 23d Senatorial District, subject to the action of the Democratic party.

THE protracted dry weather has induced many of the farmers to curtail their supply of live-stock, grass and water both getting scarce.

MR. CONKLING has but little to say in the present Presidential campaign. It may yet be necessary to have him toot his "conk" before the melancholy days are gone.

FOR some time past Boone has been behaving very nicely in regard to cutting and shooting scrapes, until within the past few weeks, when lawlessness seems to be revived.

LAST week Craddock undertook to inform his readers as to the proper time to top tobacco, and from his article it can be inferred that the proper time for topping is when a plant needs it.

OUR jail contains a series of what should be forcible temperance lectures. Within its walls are confined three, stout, able-bodied men, each of whom owes his misfortune to the too free use of whisky.

WHAT kind of whisky do they manufacture up north? The other day a fellow not accustomed to drinking it took what was considered an ordinary horn, and in fifteen minutes he had a perfectly developed case of hydrophobia.

THEY account for the fact that so little complaint is heard in Iowa concerning the liquor law on the ground that all the old topers laid in a three months' supply before the law went into effect. When that is exhausted a loud howl is expected.

WE have before us the Capital, the new paper launched by Dr. J. D. Woods, at Frankfort. It is a seven column quarto, brim full of news. Dr. Woods is an accomplished journalist and we welcome the new venture to our exchange list.

THAT public institution behind the jail in the County Clerk's office yard should be disinfected. Its odor, at times, renders some portions of the town very unpleasant. A few broken doses of lime would be a great help to it.

THE Burlington jail is a dismal place in which it is no credit to a fellow to be confined, but a much more bright, and promising future would be before young Thorp had he been lodged behind its rusty bars several hours before he was.

THE Indianapolis Sentinel has incurred the displeasure of Mr. Blaine by publishing charges which he pronounces libelous and reflecting upon his family, and has sued the editor of that journal in the United States Court for fifty thousand dollars damages. If he gain his suit and collects that amount off of the editor, it will inflate Mr. Blaine's campaign fund in the Hoosier State.

NEXT Saturday is the last day before December, provided by law for the examination of teachers for the common schools in this county, and if those who desire to teach this fall do not apply for certificates next Saturday, they may not have another opportunity before December. Our advice to the would-be teachers is to be on hand early Saturday morning and stay late unless they get certificates.

THE Kentucky Central Railroad wants to cross the river into Cincinnati, and for that purpose it contemplates extending its road to Ludlow, and crossing on the Southern bridge. It looks very much like Covington is finally to be left out in the cold, and will have only the immediately surrounding country from which to draw her trade. If the Kentucky Central gives Covington the shake, many of her business men will probably desert her, and cross the river.

THE knocking of the guards down and running to the armory, arming themselves and fighting their way out as the three prisoners did at the Frankfort penitentiary the other day shows how desperate men will become. Alsop was a notorious scoundrel for many years before he developed into a red-handed murderer and killed the constable who arrested him for forgery. Public opinion denounced the jury which sent him to the penitentiary instead of hanging him as deserved. The out-break at the penitentiary should be a warning to Kentucky's timid juries, and let them call a halt in the practice of assigning such death deserving scoundrels to any place except the gallows, for that only can securely protect society against their depredations.

IF a few editors were made to pay right well for publishing some of the dirty campaign lies with which the county is just now flooded, it would, no doubt, redound to the good of the entire metropolitan press. Those papers, eager for matter of a sensational character, throw their columns open to the very dirtiest scandals that the foul-mouthed scandal mongers can originate, and while attempting to besmirch the characters of those aspiring to the highest official position in the land, they degrade themselves and create a contempt for the profession.

WE understand that the proposition to revive the Boone Fair is being agitated, and if the aid anticipated from Covington pans out, there is a strong probability of success. The people of Boone have never abandoned the idea of having another Fair since the North Kentucky Agricultural Association became defunct, and have been awaiting an opportune time for putting the matter in motion. The counties of Boone, Campbell and Kenton are fine live-stock and agricultural districts, with many wealthy citizens, and if the proposition is properly submitted to them they will respond liberally. It is well enough, however, for those who are at the head of the move, to realize from the first that the society will have to be conducted on business principles, by which means it will avoid being handicapped by liabilities it cannot meet. Let the Fair proceed.

THE Democratic defection in the first Appellate District proved fatal to the success of the regular nominee, and Holt, the Republican defeated Riddell, Democrat, by about 100 majority. The Republicans charged Riddell with being implicated in the Reid-Corneilson trouble to which was due much of the opposition in his own party. Holt will be the first Republican ever on the Appellate bench in this State, and has the reputation of being an able lawyer and conscientious man, well calculated to discharge the onorous duties of the position. Of course the Republican party is much elated over the victory which the deserters from the Democratic ranks won for them, but when a race comes in which local dissentions cut no figure, they will find the usual Democratic majority prevailing in the first Appellate District. But let them laugh while they can.

THE County Superintendent of Public schools has gotten up the best programme for an Institute that we have seen, making a careful selection and assignment of subjects, and with proper industry on the part of those to whom the various subjects are assigned, the next Institute can be made both interesting and profitable. The position that school teachers occupy is one of vast importance, and they should accept every opportunity offered for their improvement. Too many teachers fail to realize the responsibility with which they are entrusted, and only appreciate the dollar and cent feature of their vocation, adopting the profession of teachers that they may avoid pursuits that demand too much manual labor to be congenial. They do not seem to realize that the shaping of both the moral and intellectual character of the rising generation and the future controlers of this country is, to a very great extent, under their supervision. Until they properly estimate their responsibilities, the tone of the schools will not be perceptibly improved. Teachers' Institutes are designed to disperse the lethargy that so often finds it way to the teacher's desk, and to elevate and improve his or her proficiency, that they may achieve the honor commensurate with their calling. It matters not how assiduously the County Superintendent labors to make an Institute the success it should be, he can accomplish but little without the hearty co-operation on the part of the teachers and those interested in good schools. It therefore devolves upon each one whose name is on the programme to prepare to advance the cause in behalf of which he or she claims to be enlisted, remembering that the field of labor is large, and reform is needed. Attend the Institute, and be prepared to "act well your part, for there the honor lies."

STATE NEWS.

But few worms infest tobacco fields this year.

The Cynthiana Fair commenced yesterday.

The Owen county teachers have a five days Institute.

Several tobacco barns have been burned in the State lately.

The Ten Mile Association of Baptist meets near Glencoe, Gallatin county on the third of next month.

About eighty counties will have exhibits at the Louisville Exposition, leaving thirty-four not represented.

John Williams, who was indicted by the grand jury of Owen county last May for complicity in the murder of W. J. Rothwell, and who has been a fugitive from justice since that time, surrendered himself, week before last, to the County Judge at Owenton and made a confession, implicating two other men. According to his statement it was a very brutal murder.

TIDI'GS FROM THE WEST

What Our Young Man Observes as He approaches the Rockies.

RED CLOUD, NEB., Aug. 8, 1884.

To the Editors of the Recorder:

Remembering the fact that your paper has been recently increased in size, and that coincident with this change you solicited news items from various sources, I take advantage of the opportunity afforded for giving your readers a brief account of the most interesting things that fell under my observation between Cincinnati and Chicago, and more especially in the latter city.

As our people are generally well acquainted with our sister State, Indiana, a few words concerning her crops will suffice. No material difference between the crops in our own county and those in Indiana, was noticed until Indianapolis was passed. Here we observed that instead of the dry weather which we have experienced this summer, too much rain had injured the corn to such an extent that land which is not thoroughly drained, will scarcely produce a half crop. Wheat in some places was growing in the shock.

We crossed the line between Indiana and Illinois 120 miles south of Chicago. Going due north through the eastern portion of this State, we passed through a flat, swampy region, where no corn is raised, and where a very poor crop of hay and oats was being harvested. After traversing three counties of this description, the scene suddenly changed. The meadows and oats fields had vanished and vast gardens in which were growing all kinds of vegetables had taken their place, giving us warning that we were nearing a large city. Another hour's ride brought us to Chicago, the city of National Conventions and the metropolis of the West numbering 600,000 souls. To one who has not visited Chicago, with her fresh water lake upon the east, her parks containing hundreds of acres of the most beautiful lawn intersected by miles of improved drives, and adorned with almost innumerable beds of the rarest plants and flowers cultivated in this climate, a very faint idea can be given of her attractions. In Lincoln Park there are 500 acres. South Park, when completed, will contain 1057 acres, all of which five years since was a swamp. The boulveards comprise 50 miles of drives equal to any race track in the country. On these drives any agreeable afternoon one may see the elite of the city, arrayed in all the pomp their wealth affords, out with coachman for a drive. The most fashionable vehicle is the two wheeled, with driver's seat elevated above, and to the rear of the top, something after the English style. Tuesday and Thursday afternoons the sporting element comes out with their "steppers," and test the speed of their favorite animals. In fact, no estimate can be put upon the amount of amusement and recreation furnished to the people of a large city by means of public parks. No city should be without them.

But, as "variety is the spice of life," we will repair from the sweet-scented zephyrs of the parks, and wend our way to that portion of the city where our olfactory nerves may feast for a time upon the "aromatic" odors that emanate from the stock-yards and the slaughter-houses. The yards, together with the three principal slaughter-houses in the city, cover an area of 350 acres. The Stock-yard Company has $13,000,000 capital invested, and realiz 15 per cent. over and above all expenses. They have their own fire department and water-works. The greatest number of cattle ever received at these yards in one day was 12,000; the greatest number in one week, 52,000. The receipts for 1883 were 1,300,000. Armour & Co. and the Chicago Packing House, and Fowler Bros. each butcher about 15,000 hogs daily in the fall and winter season. At present there are being butchered at least 5,000 head of cattle daily.

The process of butchering hogs, which I witnessed but shall not attempt to describe here, has been brought to such perfection that the hair of the hog pays the expense of the killing and the dressing. These figures and statements may appear extravagant to some, but Mr. Charles Reding, a weighmaster at the yards and whom I know to be a truthful gentleman, said that he would give his affidavit that these statements are all facts.

The Cable Street Railway system is another interesting sight to one visiting Chicago for the first time. The cable machinery is on the corner of State and 22d streets. At present there are over 20 miles of the system in operation and about 10 miles under process of construction. The principal line is on State street, the others on Wabash and Cottage Grove avenues. When traffic is extensive, you frequently see from 3 to 5 cars hitched tandem, loaded with men and women, going to or coming from their daily employment. The car running in front is called the "grip car," in the center of which are two levers, one for applying the brakes, the other for setting and keeping the cars in motion. This is done by means of two wooden blocks which are attached to the "grip lever" several inches under ground. By using this lever the blocks may be made to clamp the cable very tightly, and thus set the cars in motion. They may be run at the rate of 8 miles per hour.

The Pullman Palace Car Works, at the town of Pullman, a suburb of Chicago, are also worth visiting. There are 3,000 men employed here manufacturing Pullman Sleepers, and paper car wheels. The engine which is the motive power of all the machinery used here is the largest in the world. The Geo. H. Corlis engine which was on exhibition at the Centennial, and kept in motion the hundreds of machines there for a period of six months. It is the most magnificent piece of machinery ever conceived by the human mind or constructed by human hands.

The entire town of Pullman, comprising a population of 8,000, is owned and controlled by George and Albert Pullman. The hotel, the opera house, the public school building, the arcade and all the dwellings have their fronts built of pressed brick. The employes all reside in the town, and rent houses from the Pullman Bros. It is decidedly the neatest and most orderly place I ever visited. There is not a saloon in the town. The citizens are governed by a code of laws drawn up and enforced by the proprietors. When you go to Chicago do not fail to visit Pullman, for you will feel yourself well repaid for the time and money spent in so doing.

Many more things in and about Chicago of interest and instruction to the traveler might be mentioned here, but we wish neither to encroach upon your space, nor abuse the patience of your readers. At our next writing we shall attempt to tell you something of Illinois, Iowa and Nebraska.

J. C. CLORE.

FOR SALE,

50 head of stock ewes and a fresh milch cow—will sell cheap.
J. J. RUCKER, Constance, Ky.

WANTED.

400 good feeding hogs—For Sale, 500 good stock ewes. J. M. CONNER, Burlington, Ky.

For Sale!

75 high grade sheep, 65 ewes, remainder yearling bucks, all cross of Oxford and Southdown, also the lambs of this season. Will sell worth the money. They are sound and all right. Will divide them to suit buyer. W. O. KIRTLEY, Bullittsville, Ky

SCIENCE-HILL

An English & Classical school for girls. FOUNDED 1825 BY MRS. TEVIS.
Aims to give its pupils elements of a complete education. Faculty selected from best Eastern Colleges. Terms reasonable. Send for catalogue. W. T. Poynter, D. D., Principal, Shelbyville, Ky

WITTENBURG COLLEGE, Springfield, Ohio.

For young men and women. Four courses—Classical, Scientific, Literary and Ladies' Preparatory and Normal departments. New building Spacious grounds. Teachers of experience. Expenses low. Students going home and returning travel at reduced rates. Fall term begins Sept. 4th. For catalogue containing full details address The Secretary of the Faculty.

L. KUPPERSCHMID,
—42 WALNUT STREET,—
Lawrenceburg. - - Ind.

Always keeps on hand a large assortment of WATCHES, CLOCKS, JEWELRY, &c. Repairing Watches and Clocks a specialty. Also, agent for the

Rockford Watch Company.

Which manufactures the finest movements made, and they are used by all railroad men.

—Give Me a Call.—

LUMBER.

Geo. M. Bedinger & Co.,
Erlanger, - - Ky.

We keep constantly on hand all kinds of Lumber, Laths and Shingles. Also Builder's supplies of all kinds.
—Come and see Us.—

Subscribe for the RECORDER.

CENTRAL UNIVERSITY,
COLLEGE OF PHILOSOPHY, LETTERS, AND SCIENCE, RICHMOND, KY.
Next Session will open Wednesday, September 3d, 1884.

ADVANTAGES.—A FULL FACULTY [illegible] Comprehensive course of study and thorough instruction. Completeness of buildings and apparatus. Social Influence.—The community is distinguished for its refined culture and hospitality, and young men find homes in the BEST families. Not a Saloon in the city. Healthfulness of Location.—Richmond is at an elevation of more than 500 feet above the Ohio river, and free from all [illegible] influences. Accessibility.—Richmond is the geographical centre of the State, in the heart of the Blue Grass region, and is within a few hours by rail of Louisville, Cincinnati, Knoxville and Chattanooga. Moderate Expenses.—Board in the New Dormitory Hall, lighted by gas and heated by steam—an elegant, comfortable home—$120 per annum for everything except washing, and in the best families from $3 to $4 per week. Total necessary expenses for the ten months, from $150 to $240.
For full information and catalogue, apply to L. H. BLANTON, D. D., Chancellor.

WM. COLTER,
—DEALER IN—
Clothing, Boots, Shoes, Hats, Caps, Millinery Goods, Cloaks, Etc.
JOB LOTS OF ABOVE A SPECIALTY.

We are just now devoting our entire energy to making preparations for the ensuing season, and can promise to call your attention to a stock of Boots and Shoes, Rubber Goods, Men's and Boys' Ready-Made Clothing, Ladies' Cloaks, and Wraps, Millinery Goods, Ribbons, Mens' Hats, Buck Gloves, &c., in which, for real solid and genuine Bargains, we challenge competition. We intend to lead the market in this section much more than we have ever done before, which we can at once prove to you at your first inspection. Have already bought over 500 Overcoats, over 300 Suits, 1,000 pairs of Gloves, over 70 cases Kip Boots, 16 cases Mens' Hats and Caps, all grades. And we are not asleep if it is hot. The above line of Goods is kept in the lower half and 2nd floor of our Mammoth House. We are slashing down prices on all Summer Goods now, as we do not carry any Goods over. Thanks for past favors. Respectfully,
Wm COLTER, Rising Sun, Ind.

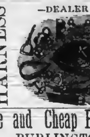
SOUTHERN EXPOSITION
LOUISVILLE,
Opens August 16th. Closes October 25th, 1884.
15 ACRES UNDER ONE ROOF.
TWO CONCERTS EACH DAY
By Cappa's and Gilmore's, the most famous bands of the world.
Largest and Finest Display of Machinery in MOTION ever witnessed anywhere.
LOWEST RAILWAY RATES EVER GIVEN IN THE STATE.
ART BUILDINGS,
CONTAINING THE CHOICEST PICTURES IN AMERICA.
Ten works of Kentucky's great sculptor, Joel Hart, the best possible collection
One hundred counties in Kentucky will make exhibits, displaying products which will demonstrate this State's tremendous capacities and future greatness An occasion for Kentucky pride and glory—KENTUCKY TRIUMPHANT.
AN IMMENSE LIVE STOCK EXHIBITION
Presenting at one time in line over $1,000,000 worth of horses, comprising all the sires that have made Kentucky famous The exhibit will surpass in extent the Royal Stock Show in London, and present to the visitor the grandest, completest, and most magnificent Stock exhibit the world has ever witnessed, and a sight that can not be duplicated in the world.
BENNETT H. YOUNG, President. J. M. WRIGHT, General Manager.

BARGAINS IN Milline'y Goods!
ALL LADIES' HATS, BONNETS AND FEATHERS NOW LEFT OVER WILL BE SOLD AT
Less Than Half Price
(Original Price.) in order to close the season. Broad-Brim Hats, called the "Cartwheel," will be closed out at 30c. each; Large Bushy Tips, three in a bunch, 88c. a bunch, worth $1 75. All other Hats and Bonnets at the same great sacrifice.
MILLINERY DEPARTMENT, at COLTER'S, Rising Sun, Ind.

As special Agent for the Gholson Fencing Company, for Boone County, I am prepared to build their patent fence at any time. This is the cheapest and best fence in use. It needs no talking up, as it is fast selling itself wherever it is introduced. Any number of wires can be used.
28-1y-84. G. C. GRADDY, Bullittsville, Ky.

CLEARING SALE!

To make room for Fall Stock I have reduced Custom-Made Suits 20 per cent. and on ready-made Men's, Boys' and Children's Clothing 25 per cent. for Cash only, until August 20.



H. F. BLASE, 540 Madison Street COVINGTON, - - - - KY

DON'T FOGET THE Big Fair
TO BE HELD AT
LAWRENCEBURG, AUGUST 20, 21, 22, & 23, '84.
NO ENTRY FEES CHARGED.
A NEW HOME SEWING MACHINE
will be given to the lady baking the best loaf of yeast bread. Hunter & O'Brien, proprietors of the Lawrenceburg Register, will give
TEN DOLLARS IN GOLD
to the lady making the best roll of butter. Capt. George W. Terrill offers a
PREMIUM OF FIFTEEN DOLLARS
For a pound of the best tobacco grown in either Dearborn or Boone county
LIBERAL PREMIUMS ON HORSES.
LIBERAL PREMIUMS ON ALL KINDS OF STOCK.
LIBERAL PREMIUMS in the LADIES' DEPARTMENT.
LIBERAL PREMIUMS on FRUIT, GRAIN AND SEED.
TROTTING, PACING AND RUNNING RACES EVERY DAY.
Management is sparing no pains to offer all the attractions possible, and to make the exhibition a pleasant and profitable one to all visitors and exhibitors.

STEAM FERRY
At Lawrenceburg on Friday & Saturday during the FAIR.

John Q. Davis,
—DEALER IN—
BOOTS & SHOES, HATS AND CAPS
Of the very best Eastern and Cincinnati manufactures. I claim to be the best posted man in my line in this section. Goods sold absolutely on their merits, and ample willing reclamation made where goods do not come up to the "SCRATCH."
YOU CAN AS SAFELY SEND YOUR CHILDREN AS TO COME YOURSELVES.
Thankful for the very liberal patronage in the past, and hoping with increased facilities to still do the BOOT and SHOE business of this section,
Respectfully,
J. Q. DAVIS,
SIGN BIG RED BOOT, MAIN, Street, Rising Sun, Indiana.

A. M. ACRA,
HARNESS —DEALER IN— SADDLES.

Fine and Cheap Buggy Harness.
BURLINGTON, KY.
I also have a full stock of BUGGY WHIPS, LAP DUSTERS, ANKLE BOOTS and TROTTING BALLS and everything else usually kept in a first-class harness shop.
REPAIRING A SPECIALTY.
Give Me A Call.

W. J. RICE, CARPENTER & BUILDER, BULLITSVILLE, KY.
Is prepared Raise or Move EITHER LOG or FRAME BUILDINGS On Short Notice.
And at the Lowest Possible Figures.
38-tf Your orders respectfully solicited

THE LEADING CAMPAIGN BOOK!
History of Growth, Development and Resources of the Republic. Review of past Administrations. Biographies of Candidates, 1884. 800 Pages Fine illustrations. Send 50 cts. for full outfit and begin work. Circular free. Address J. C. McCURDY, Cincinnati, O.

HARTER'S IRON. TONIC
[illegible] Dr. Harter's Iron Tonic will purify and enrich the BLOOD, regulate the LIVER and KIDNEYS, and RESTORE THE HEALTH and VIGOR of YOUTH! [illegible]
LADIES [illegible] DR. HARTER'S IRON TONIC [illegible]
Send your address to The Dr. Harter Med. Co. St. Louis, Mo., for our "DREAM BOOK." Full of strange and useful information, free.
DR. HARTER'S IRON TONIC IS FOR SALE BY ALL DRUGGISTS AND DEALERS EVERYWHERE.

For A Business Education Attend the Commercial College Of Kentucky University, Lexington, Ky. [illegible] WILBUR R. SMITH, Lexington, Ky.

NO NEW THING.
STRONG'S SANATIVE PILLS
Used throughout the country FOR OVER 40 YEARS, And thus proved The Best Liver Medicine in the World.
No Griping, Poisonous Drugs, but purely Vegetable, safe and reliable. Prescribed even by Physicians. A speedy cure for Liver Complaint, Regulating the Bowels, Purifying the Blood, Cleansing from Malarial Taint. A perfect cure for Sick Headache, Constipation and all Bilious Disorders. Sold by Druggists. For Pamphlets, etc., address C. E. HULL & CO., 18 Cedar St., N. Y. City.

FOUND AT LAST.
THE ANIMAL SAFE GUARD.
Patent applied for. Absolute cure for all breachy stock. Simple and safe appliance; always at hand. No Rope, no Yoke, no pole used to injure stock. No animal will jump a fence when this is used. Send One Dollar for Farm-right and full instruction. Address C. F. BROSEKE, Justice of the Peace, Falmouth, Ky.

SANITARIUM, Riverside, Cal. The dry climate cures [illegible]

MARRIAGE AND HEALTH GUIDE. 200 pgs. Illustrated. [illegible] DR. WHITTIER 290 RACE STREET, CINCINNATI, OHIO. [illegible]

PISO'S CURE FOR CONSUMPTION. 25 CTS. CURES WHERE ALL ELSE FAILS. Best Cough Syrup. Tastes good. Use in time. Sold by druggists.

KENTUCKY UNIVERSITY, LEXINGTON, KY.
Three Colleges—Arts, Bible and Commercial. College of Arts has [illegible] Classical and Scientific with twelve professors and teachers; fees, $12 per session of nine months. College of the Bible, no tuition fees. Students of the College of the Bible have access without charge to the classes of the College of Arts, and those of the College of Arts to the classes of the College of the Bible. Session opens the Second Monday in September. For catalogues, address CHAS. LOUIS LOOS, President of the University, or ROBT. GRAHAM, President of the College of the Bible.

LAW SCHOOL OF WASHINGTON AND LEE UNIVERSITY.
GEN. G. W. C. LEE, President.
Instruction by text-books and printed lectures, with courses of lectures on special subjects by eminent jurists. Tuition and fees, $80 for session of nine months; beginning Sept. 18. For catalogue and full information address CHAS. A. GRAVES, Prof. of Law, Lexington, Va.

THE COMPLETE HOME. Agents Wanted for this beautiful book. New edition.—New bindings.—New illustrations from new designs. Superbly gotten up. Same low price. Adapted to all classes. Sells at sight. Agents doing big work. EXCELLENT TERMS. The handsomest prospectus ever issued. Apply now. WM. GARRETSON & CO., Lexington, Kentucky. Also other grand new books and Bibles.

OPIUM and WHISKY HABITS cured at home without pain. Book of particulars sent Free. B. M. WOOLLEY, M. D., Atlanta, Ga.

Local News.

A CALL.

In pursuance of a resolution adopted by the Democratic State Central Committee, a mass meeting of the Democrats of this county will be held in the Court-house in Burlington, Saturday, August 23d, 1884, at 1 o'clock p. m., for the purpose of selecting a new County Committee or confirming the one now in commission. J. G. FURNISH, Ch. Dem. Co. Ex. Com't.

Hot, dry and dusty.

Perry Stephens is engaged in alligator culture.

Cy Crisler is the water-melon broker of the town.

The water supply is getting very short in and about this town.

Riddell & Hammond, carpenters and builders, is the style of the new firm.

Thanks to M. S. Rice for a sack containing four varieties of nice early apples.

Lozier, the sewing machine and organ man, spent several days here this week.

Mr. Joseph Reed will recite one of his select pieces one day during the Institute.

If you want to buy a cheap custom made saddle, call on A. M. Acra, Burlington, Ky.

E. W. Duncan will attend lectures at the Ohio Medical College again this fall and winter.

Morgan Rice was in town Monday and says that his section is suffering badly for rain.

Mrs. Passons was baptised by Rev. E. N. Dicken in Mr. A. G. Winston's pond last Sunday.

Two beef shops in Burlington now, and how it makes the beef eaters smile as they think of it.

Professor Stephenson will commence the fall term of school in Morgan Academy September 8th.

We have just learned why chewing gum is so much used. It is recommended for dyspepsia.

We understand that the shot gun has appeared on the scene again at Constance. No particulars.

The Yeoman says that White Burley has made the farmers of Central Kentucky "gilt edged."

Jim Westbay has entered for the Indiana circuit of Fairs, which he will make without a hop, skip or jump.

Mr. Gordon, who has lived in Petersburg for thirty years, was in Burlington his third time last Saturday.

F. P. Walton has purchased the I. G. Hamilton homestead in Burlington, and will put it in first-class order.

Charles Westbay took a big load of the fifteenth amendment to a basket meeting in the environs of Bellevue, last Sunday.

The north-bound mail train on the Southern railroad gets behind time very often, and the mail sack comes in empty in consequence.

I will open a beef shop in the basement of A. M. Acra's building next Saturday morning. All desiring fresh meat are requested to give me a call.
R. C. RICE.

The burning of the large drift piles in the Indiana bottoms opposite McVille, night before last, made those in this section who saw the light, think some large building was being destroyed.

Judge Riddell has a hen that takes a pleasure in devouring snakes, having disposed of two in that manner within the past few days. After swallowing a snake fifteen inches long she becomes very light-hearted and indulges in singing.

Professors Stephenson and Newton compose the board of School Examiners for this county, and they had quite a number of pedagogues before them last Saturday, and on examination for certificates to teach the young ideas how to shoot.

Two men struck the town the other day, and wanted to buy dogs, for which they said they would pay liberal prices, as high as seven dollars being offered for one old fashioned, bellowing hound. At that rate Burlington has about $2,500 worth of dog flesh.

The day has come when to leave the grave of the departed one unmarked by a neat stone, is not suffered by even those in the most ordinary walks of life, and all can be pleased in both design and price by Huschart & Co., of Lawrenceburg, Ind. John Beall, of Hebron, is their agent.

Last Thursday evening, Miss Amanda Popham, who lived with Frank Crisler on Gunpowder, started to prayer meeting at John C. Mitchell's, a neighbor, and before she had gone far she dropped dead. It is supposed that her death was the result of heart disease. Her remains were interred at Lystra Aylor's.

Last Saturday Constable Rich, of Beaver, brought Richard H. Marks to jail, charged with breaking into and robbing C. J. Houston's store at that place. When Marks was captured he was very drunk, and denies that he is guilty of robbing the store, but being found drunk near the premises was taken on suspicion.

The citizens of Lawrenceburgh offer a special prize of fifty dollars for the best Ladies' Riding at the Lawrenceburg Fair. The contest will take place on the closing day of the fair, Saturday, August 23d. The purse will be divided as follows: First premium, $25; second $15; third, $10. No charge for entry in the contest.

The Boone county, (Kentucky) fair has been merged into the Lawrenceburgh Fair, and there will be no fair in Boone county, as stated in one of the Cincinnati papers. Directors Terrill, Stephens, Grant, Lillard and Walton say that Boone county will furnish a big attendance at the Lawrenceburg Fair this week.—Lawrenceburg Register.

CAUSED FROM WHISKY.

Henry W. Thorp while in a Drunken Rage, Stabs his aged Father with a Knife.

About one mile and a half from Burlington, on the road leading from the Burlington and Bullittsville road to the North Bend road, and near Absalom Aylor's, is located a small, dilapidated log hut which has been occupied by old man Thorp, his son and son-in-law and their wives since about the first of last May, at which time they moved there from Kenton. The little shanty is in an obscure locality, being shut out from the rest of the world by the towering beech forest which surrounds it. Its appearance betokens poverty, but its retired location would lead one to believe that naught else than peace and love would pass the threshhold to visit the humble occupants. But not so. One of the members of what should have been a happy family, Henry Thorp who is about 25 years old, is addicted to drink, and when under the influence of liquor is a perfect demon in human form. Last Saturday he and his brother-in-law Henry Ratcliff came to town in the afternoon and at once visited the bars. A few drinks set him wild and he at once wanted to paint the town red, and became so disorderly that Esquire Baker was about to have him jailed, when some one interceded, and upon a promise he would be immediately taken out of town the order to imprison was countermanded. Thorp's brother-in-law took charge of him, and by main strength and persuasion got him started, but he continued to pour forth a volley of oaths and terrible threats of what he would do, so long as he was in hearing.

Old man Thorp, the father of the above described would-be annihilator, has about, or quite, passed on this earth the time allotted to man; has lost the sight of one eye, while that of the other is greatly impaired. It was this aged and infirm parent, who was quietly at home that Saturday afternoon unconciously awaiting the approach of probably the most dangerous experience of his long life, and that, too, to be brought about by one who should have honored him and been willing to lay down his own life for his protection in these, his declining years.

When young Thorp reached home he was still bent on devilment, and proceeded to demolish the scanty supply of furniture in the house. His father protested to no effect, and finally saw that to allow him to remain in the house was to suffer the destruction of all the furniture. Summoning all his strength the old man took the unruly son by the nape of the neck and succeeded in ejecting him, applying the toe of his shoe to the seat of his pants as he went out the door. This prompt action on the part of the father made bad worse, and the young man whipped out a large pocket knife and closed with his father, giving him a very ugly stab near the nipple of the right breast puncturing the lung, and a second gash on the right arm, before the terror stricken females, who witnessed the bloody encounter, could separate them, after which they had to carry the old man some distance from the house to prevent another attack from the unnatural and blood thirsty son.

From fear or some other cause, the son-in-law rendered little or no assistance, and had it not been for the heroic efforts of the female, the old man would, doubtless, have been literly cut to pieces.

The son-in-law hastened back to Burlington to summon medical aid and reported the facts to Esquire Baker who at once issued a warrant for the arrest of young Thorp and placed it in the hands of Constable Sandford, who, accompanied by deputy Sheriff German lost no time in hastening to the scene of the attempted murder to arrest the perpetrator, whom they found lying on the ground near the house. They arrested him without trouble and in a short time brought him to Burlington, when the County Judge ordered him to jail to await his examining trial on Monday morning.

When Dr. Grant arrived he found the wounded man some distance from the house, bleeding freely from the above described wounds. He had him taken to the house, where he dressed the wounds and made the old man as comfortable as possible.

Monday morning the prisoner was taken to his father's and an examining trial held by Judge Dills, the facts brought out on the trial being substantially as above set out, but while the old man was not so certain that the boy would not have knifed him had he been sober, it is plain to be seen by the testimony of some of the other witnesses that they want to excuse the young man as far as possible, and although the old man was taken some distance from the house, it was done not because they apprehended a further attack from young Thorp, but feared he might fall against him while staggering about with the knife in his hand. It is said that Saturday's trouble is not the first young Thorp has had with his father. The examining trial resulted in young Thorp's being committed to jail in default of $800 bail for his appearance at Circuit Court.

The last report as to old man Thorp's condition before closing the forms is that his life is hanging by a very slender thread and that the chances are decidedly against him.

Henry, the young man who did the cruel work is not a married man as might be inferred from the wording of the first of this article. He is very quiet in jail, and there are none who have much sympathy for him, and if his father dies he will have a chance for severe punishment.

On the 30th inst., the young men of Florence, will give another of those delightful picnics in Carpenter's woods near that place, in the afternoon, and at night.

"The dance will go briskly on
As on the afternoon it started;
Each dancer bent on fun
And each one happy hearted."

Hayden Stephens, of the Big Bone neighborhood, was in town Monday and says in his immediate neighborhood they are not so dry as they are just across the creek from him, where vegetation is literally burning up.

What Local Option has Done.

The editor of the Owen Co., Democrat went to Louisville Monday week, and contracted a distressing case of "solemncolies." Hear him:

The business men of Owenton have comparatively little to do these dog days, in fact, nothing at all, except to gape and stretch and long for the good old days long since gone.

Owenton is not in a comatose state as many suppose. She is, as Mr. Berryman would say were he living "absolutely" dead, and she only waits the Coroner's verdict for interment.

There are now two business houses in town unoccupied, and in a couple of weeks there will be two more of the finest business rooms in the place, in the same deserted condition.

There is no hallucination about seeing snakes in Owenton. They are real snakes, small snakes, large snakes and numerous. There isn't enough spiritous frumenti in town since the election to make the average Owenton man see even a little baby snake, in imagination.

There is an Owen county doctor within hearing of the court-house bell, who solemnly declares and swears that a bite from a rattlesnake or copperhead will improve the health of the average Owentonite; but will prove death to his snakeship. It has been tried on that doctor, and he knows whereof he speaks.

Personal Mentions.

[If you have friends from a distance visiting you or expect to be away from home on business or pleasure, let us have the item for this column.]

Prof. I. J. Daughters was in town Saturday.

J. W. Miller, of Covington, made Burlington a flying visit last Thursday.

Miss Kate Bradford, of Florence, has been the guest of her cousin, Mrs. Lillie Hall, for several days.

Misses Jennie and Florence Mitchell, of Florence, were visiting friends here the latter part of last week.

Mr. James A. Webb and wife, of Philadelphia, are being entertained by Mr. S. P. Brady and wife.

James Waller, the popular proprietor of the Stone Wall House near Covington took in Burlington last Thursday.

Perry Carpenter, one of Florence's popular and gallant young men, struck hands with friends in Burlington last Thursday.

Mrs. J. G. McGarvey and Mrs. John J. Sherrill, of Cincinnati, after a pleasant visit with friends at this place, returned home last Thursday.

Mrs. Vina Wagner, who has been the guest of her sister, Mrs. R. S. Crisler, for several days, at this place, has returned to her home, 144 Harrison Avenue, Cincinnati, Ohio.

The Johnston organ took the premium over all competitors at the Aurora Fair. G. S. Lozier sold Mrs. James Conner a New Home sewing machine, and H. P. Stephens, a very fine Johnston organ while here this week.

Dr. Murat, of Constance, was in Burlington last Saturday, and on the question of Coroner, the doctor holds that he is the legal occupant of that office, his sojourn in Ludlow being only temporary, he, all the time of his absence from this county, claiming Constance as his home. He is building a new residence at Constance.

Last Wednesday W. R. Varney, widower, and Kate E. St Clair, widow, both of Covington, desiring a quiet wedding came to Burlington, secured license and repaired to the residence of Elder H. J. Foster, where they were united in the solemn bonds, after which they partook of the hospitality of the Boone House, and returned to surprise their friends.

If you desire to buy a new piano, or exchange your old one, G. S. Lozier, ag't, Lawrenceburg, Ind., solicits you to call on or write him for terms and prices. Sewing machines, pianos and organs sold for cash or on monthly installment plan, with a 5 years warranty accompanying each instrument and machine. Orders solicited. Office and sales room cor. Short and Tate streets Lawrenceburg, Ind. G. S. LOZIER.

No previous Fair at Lawrenceburg commenced with more flattering prospects than that of this year. The competition in all the departments will be sharp and very creditable. Several special premiums are offered and will be drawing cards. Of course Boone county people will mingle with their Hoosier neighbors, in large numbers, and enjoy their Fair this week. A steam ferry will accommodate the people at Lawrenceburg next Friday and Saturday.

Attention! Attention!! Attention!!! All persons who desire to purchase a new, or exchange their old machine, should examine the Light Running New Home before purchasing, if they desire the lightest running, best made, easiest to manage and the most durable machines manufactured. A 5 year warranty given with each machine, and sales made on monthly installments. The New Home will be on exhibition at both the Aurora and Lawrenceburg Fairs. Orders solicited and promptly filled. G. S. LOZIER, agent, for machines, organs and pianos.

I have sold machines to the following persons who are well pleased with them and recommend them, and to whom I refer those desiring to purchase new sewing machines or instruments:

At Florence: Dr. J. A. Corey, Henry Gdenwaldt, Henry Oelsner, W. C. Tanner, Misses Grogen, Miss Annie Northcutt, J M Finch, R T German, Abel Carpenter and machine a Johnston organ. At Burlington: A G Winston, Samuel Cowen, Jesse Kirkpatrick, Mrs. A E Crisler, G Brent, Sam Pope, Miss Mamsell Morris, James Gaines.

At Bullittsville: Clinton Gaines, G M Riley machine and Johnston organ, W. P Cropper, John Cropper, M T Graves, G C Graddy, Jacob Platt. At Bellevue: Jonas Clore, Thomas Clore, machine and Johnston organ, J H Walton, Elijah Hodges and hundreds of others in the neighbor State, Indiana.

G. S. Lozier agent New Home Sewing Machine.

NEIGHBORHOOD NEWS.

Hebron.

There is a good many of our citizens attending the Lawrenceburg Fair.

Misses Dora, Jennie Rouse and Zena Aylor visited Miss Clara Aylor Sunday.

A Cleveland and Hendricks club will be organized here, with a brass band to lead it.

Tobacco will not make half a crop. Some corn will not make 5 bushels to the acre.

The farmers have commenced feeding their stock, in this locality, the pastures being burned up.

The La Grace Grove picnic was a big success. About 300 persons attended the moonlight, and seemed to enjoy it immensely. The best of order prevailed.

Rabbit Hash.

Mrs. Joseph Riddell was in town Thursday.

Lookout for that wedding that has been talked of.

Miss Della Piatt was the guest of Mrs. Laura Wilson, Thursday.

Tom Marshall is excavating for the foundation of his new house.

We are needing rain very badly. The drought has cut the crops short.

J. P. and O. F. Craig shipped several stands of plums, Thursday night.

Joseph Walton shipped a nice drove of hogs from the landing at this place, Tuesday night.

The RECORDER still increases in circulation here. It is the only county paper and ought to be supported.

Picking and shipping plums is the order of the day. C. G. Riddell and Z. T. Holmes have purchased several crops.

Uncle Billy Steel and wife and Miss Susie Rater, of Rising Sun, spent the day, Thursday, with Mrs. Hattie Morrison......Little Jetta Morrison is quite sick, but not dangerous......W. H. Pope, of Huntsville, was the guest of James A. Wilson last Wednesday.....W. L. Acra, of Petersburg, and Archie Acra, of Huntsville, spent Friday with their brother.

Union.

Glena Rosa Shouse, infant granddaughter of L. B. Stephens, of Richwood, is convalescent.

The oat and wheat yield the county over is excellent. The Union precinct because of fine rains, has the best general crops in the county.

John Bradford, of Union, claims to have the best tobacco crop in Boone county, and exhibits 11 acres of magnificent White Burley in proof of it.

Charles P. Baker, the most industrious man in Boone county, shows up 1,500 bushels of wheat, and other crops in proportion. Charles, down on the brakes, or you will ditch the youthful engine into the waters of premature old age through the derailed bridge of over exertion.

Washington Huey, of Big Bone is dangerously ill with flux at Thomas Jenkins', near New Liberty, Owen Co., being taken ill while attending the Baptist Association. We learn that Mr. Huey has been in poor health for a year, and fears are entertained that he will not recover.

Among the attractive sheep flocks of Boone county, none are more so than that of J. Lynn Frazier, which numbers in it some of the finest cotswool and Southdown bucks and ewes in Kentucky, being direct purchases and progeny of Alexander and other celebrated breeders of the Blue-grass region. Farmers would profit by seeing and buying such breeds.

A few days since, one John Frazier, a trusty servant of Esquire Frazier, was assaulted without provocation other than jealousy, and seriously hurt by a hired hand of Wallace Garrison's. It is time a halt was called on dark devilment, and local magistrates can now summons evidence and look into such flagrant violations when brought to their attention by hearsay, newspapers or otherwise, come short of the binding force of their obligations and oath of office, when they fail or refuse to have arrests and investigations made. More official backbone is requisite to keep straight the moral body of old Boone.

Florence.

Mrs. Richardson, wife of Sinclair Richardson, died at her home in Kenton county August 11, after a protracted illness. The remains were interred in Florence cemetery on the 13th. Mrs. R. was about 36 years of age, was the daughter of the late John Swetnam, a most estimable lady, a good wife and mother, and will be much missed by the family and community in which she moved.

Our enterprising merchant, Floyd Wilson, has proven himself to be an inventor as well as merchant. He is the first man in the history of this country who conceived the idea of fruit-gathering by the light of lamps. About 9 o'clock at night I noticed his plum trees full of lanterns, with boys picking, while Floyd stood on the street with clubs to keep the outside boys from stoning his hands out of the trees. I don't know whether he intends to take out letters patent or not.

Capt. Joe Hunt's house is at present made more attractive by the presence of several fair lassies from the city of Covington, who came out to rusticate in the balmy air of the country, and also to meet with their friends. Among the number we notice Miss Lizzie Drumond and two Misses Maley. From my limited observation I am of the opinion that when these fair visitors return to their homes some of the country youths will be found rusticating in the city.

We were disturbed in our dreams a few nights since by a party of serenaders from Independence, that filled the town with music from brass and string bands. Capt. Hunt's seemed to be the objective point, and, of course, Joe didn't allow them to out do him with entertainment. They also visited the Grant House and exchanged music; then repaired to Dr. Slater's, who always keeps good old wine and cake for sickness; next to Mr. Hoggin's, and were cordially received. Then they were obliged to come back by Capt. Hunt's, for Dr. Rice was pilot and he knew the ropes.

A bomb bursts in the camp of the young bloods of Florence. For some months past a rivalry amounting almost to a feud has existed between the young gallants as to which was the favored suitor with a certain young demure little belle of our place, when to their great dismay a young well-to-do farmer just on the environs, and whom for short, I will call Billy G. whose only aspiration, seemed to be in his gun and dogs. But as the sequel has shown has a taste for choicer game than the field affords, and he suddenly makes his "grand debut" in the social circle, and the little belle is now cooing to Billy's stories of the chase, while the boys occupy a back seat. I think as soon as Uncle Ed Stephens gets home from the association that Clerk Garnett will have an application. GAS OMETER.

Last Sunday, Thomas O Cowen and George Piper, Burlington's two handsome and popular young counter-jumpers and heart pulverizers, took advantage of an excursion and "done" the capital city of Hoosierdom. To say that they were delighted with their trip does not express it.

Live Stock Market.

CINCINNATI, Aug. 18, 1884.

CATTLE.

Receipts liberal with about 1400 head on sale to-day, 15 to 25c, lower on all grades.

Best Shippers	5 90 to 6¼
Good Shippers	5½ to 5 85
Extra Oxen	4½ to 5
Fair to good Oxen	3¾ to 4½
Extra Butchers	4½ to 5
Common to Fair	3¼ @ 3¾
Roughs and Scalawags	2 @ 2¾

COWS.

Milch cows dull and overstocked.

Extra	4 @ 4½
Common to Fair	3 @ 3½
Fair to Good	3½ @ 4

BULLS.

Extra	3¼ @ 3½
Fair to good	3 @ 3¼
Heavy feeding steers	4½ @ 5½
Good stockers	4 @ 4½

COWS and CALVES.

Common	18 @ $30
Fair to good	35 @ $40
Choice	45 @ $55
Extra	$60
Jerseys	50 @ $90

VEALCALVES.

Best	6 @ 7¼
Common	4 @ 5¼

HOGS.

Receipts liberal—about 1900 on sale to-day. Good hogs in fair demand.

Select butchers, heavy shippers	6 15 @ 6 40
Good lights, 180 to 220...	5 50 @ 5 75
" " 150 to 175...	5 15 @ 5 50

SHEEP.

Dull and slow, with 3,500 on sale.

Best weathers	4¼ @ 4½
Fair to good	3¾ @ 4
Ewes and wethers mixed	3¼ @ 4
Stock wethers	2½ @ 3¼
Common	75 @ 1 50

LAMBS.

Dull—especially common which are very dull.

Best shippers	4¾ @ 5 35
Fair to good	4 @ 4½
Lights	3 @ 3¾

COMMISSIONER'S SALE.

Boone Circuit Court, Ky.

W. E. Anderson, Plaintiff,
Against | Notice of sale in Equity.
Daily Masters, &c., Defendants.

By virtue of a judgment and order of sale of the Boone Circuit Court, rendered at the April term thereof, 1884, in the above cause, the undersigned will, on Monday the 1st day of Sept., 1884, at 1 o'clock p. m., or thereabout, (being County Court) proceed to offer for sale at public auction, on a credit of 6 months, at the Courthouse door, in the town of Burlington, the property mentioned in the judgment, to wit:

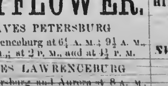
Lying in the town of Constance, beginning at a stone on the bank of the Ohio river, lower corner of Daily Masters' lot; thence with a line thereof s.20 1-4w 90 1-4 poles to a stone, another corner of said lot in John Hood's line; thence with said line n. 69 1-2 w. 61 7-11 feet to a stone in said line; thence n. 20 1-4 e. 90 1-5 poles to a stone under the river bank witnessed by a stone in the line on the band; thence s. 70 e. 61 7-11 feet to the beginning, containing 2 acres and 26 4-11 poles. It will be offered in two lots, one north and one south of the road and then as a whole, the bid or bids making the most money will be accepted.

The purchaser will be required to give bonds with approved security for the payment of the purchase money, to have the force and effect of a judgment, bearing legal interest from the day of sale, according to law. Bidders will be prepared to comply promptly with these terms. Bonds payable to the undersigned.

W. L. RIDDELL, M. C. B. C. C.

GOLD for the working class. Send 10c for postage, and we will mail you free, a royal, valuable box of sample goods that will put you in the way of making more money in a few days than you ever thought possible at any business. Capital not required. We will start you. You can work part the time only. The work universally adapted to both sexes, young and old. You can easily earn from 50 cents to $5 every evening. That all who want work may test the business, we make this unparalleled offer; to all who are not well satisfied we will send $1 to pay for the trouble of writing us. Full particulars, directions, etc., sent free. Fortunes will be made by those who give their whole time to the work. Great success absolutely sure. Don't delay. Start now. Address STINSON & Co., Portland, Maine.

A. L. Brown.



THE HATTER,

Cor. Pike and Washington Streets
COVINGTON, - - KY.

Has always on hand a large variety of Men's, Boys' and Children's Hats, and prices GUARANTEED to be as low as the lowest.

Gents' Furnishing Goods a Specialty.

TIME CARD OF THE

MAYFLOWER.

LEAVES PETERSBURG
For Lawrenceburg at 6¼ A. M.; 9¼ A. M., and 11¼ A. M.; at 2 P. M., and at 4½ P. M.

LEAVES LAWRENCEBURG
For Petersburg and Aurora at 8 A. M., 10 A. M., and 12 M; at 2¾ P. M. and 5 P. M.

LEAVES PETERSBURG
For Aurora at 8¼ A. M., 10¾ A. M.; at 1 P. M., and 3 P. M.

LEAVES AURORA
For Petersburg and Lawrenceburg at 9 A. M., 11 A. M.; 1½ P. M. and 4 P. M.

ELIHU ALDEN, Master.

County Directory.

OFFICERS.

Assessor—G. M. Riley.
County Surveyor—W. E. Vest.
School Commissioner—D. M. Snyder.
Coroner.—Dr. A. A. Murat, Constance.

COURTS.

CIRCUIT COURT meets the 2d Monday in April and first Monday in October, P. U. Major, Judge; W. L. Riddell, Clerk; A. G. DeJarnette, Commonwealths Attorney; W. L. Riddell, ... Jury Fund.

COUNTY COURT meets the first Monday in every month. J. H. Dills, Judge; S. W. Tolin, County Attorney. M. T. Garnett, Clerk; J. E. Clutterbuck, Sheriff, T. W. Finch and W. T. German, Deputy Sheriffs.

QUARTERLY COURT meets the first Monday in March, June, September and December. The officers of the County Court preside.

COURT OF CLAIMS meets the first Monday in November.

MAGISTRATES' COURTS are held in March, June, September and December, as follows:

Bellevue—M. B. Green, first Saturday, and T. H. Sutton, third Monday. J. M. Moody, Constable.

Burlington—E. H. Baker, Thursday after first Monday, and Oscar Gaines, fourth Monday. R. H. Sandford, Constable.

Carlton A. G. McConnell, Wednesday after second Monday, and B. H. Ryle, Saturday after third M... Walter Ryle, Constable.

Petersburg—Jos. Hensley, Wednesday after first Monday and L. A. Loder fourth Saturday. Geo. Comer, Constable.

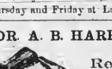
Beaver—W. M. Rouse, Friday after the third Monday, and

Union—M. C. Norman, Thursday after third Monday, and H. Bannister, Thursday after second Monday. A. D. Riley, Constable.

Hamilton—F. M. Howlett, Tuesday after second Monday; W. W. Garnett, Wednesday after third Monday. R. L. Roberts Constable.

Walton—T. F. Curley, second Friday, S. F. Johnson, Tuesday after second Friday. W. C. Moxley, Constable.

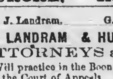
H. C. CHAMBERS,
AUCTIONEER
FLORENCE, - - - KENTUCKY.



CONNER YAGER
Attorney and Counselor at Law,
FLORENCE, KENTUCKY

ROBERT B. REED
Attorney at Law.
OFFICE AT - UNION, KY

F. RIDDELL. H. P. STEPHENS.
RIDDELL and STEPHENS,
ATTORNEYS at LAW
BURLINGTON, KY.
Office over Dudley Rouse's Store.



W. E. VEST,
COUNTY SURVEYOR
WALTON, KY.
Is prepared to do all kinds of surveying. All orders sent him through the mail to Walton, will receive his prompt attention.

E. E. IGOE,

Resident Dentist,
Rising Sun, Ind.
WITH
J. P. Ulrey.
Monday and Tuesday at Rising Sun. Ind.
Wednesday and Saturday at Aurora, Ind.
Thursday and Friday at Lawrenceburg.

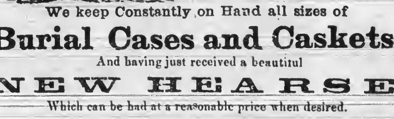
DR. A. B. HARRYMAN,

Resident Dentist.
Office over Post-Office.
AURORA, INDIANA.

J. J. Landram. G. G. Hughes.
LANDRAM & HUGHES,
ATTORNEYS at LAW.
Will practice in the Boone Circuit Court and the Court of Appeals. Prompt attention given to Collections, on application to G. G. Hughes, Burlington, Ky.

S. W. TOLIN,
ATTORNEY AT LAW
BURLINGTON, - - - KY
Office in Court-house on 2d floor.
Will manage litigation in any of the Courts of the State, contracts and other legal instruments drawn up at reasonable rates. A prompt and studious attention given to business intrusted to my care. A trial solicited. 12-1y

AURORA MARBLE AND GRANITE WORKS,
Aurora, Ind.
Will have constantly on hand
Marble and Granite Monuments,
Italian & American Headstones, &c.
I am ready to do all kinds of Stone Work on short notice and at low prices. Hoping to receive the patronage of Boone County, I am respectfully,
F. W. KASSEBAUM.



INSURE AT HOME
The Farmers' Mutual Fire
INSURANCE COMPANY
Of Boone County
Is now completely organized and receiving applications for insurance.
Its Rates are Lower
Than those of any other Company, and it gives the farmers of Boone County a
HITHERTO UNKNOWN ADVANTAGE
In keeping their property insured.
EVERY FARMER IN THE COUNTY
should take a policy at once.
J. A. GAINES, President, Burlington, Ky. | J. H. WALTON, Secretary, Constance, Ky.
R. RANDALL, Treasury.
DIRECTORS.
LEGRAN GAINES, A. J. UTZ.
JNO. STEPHENS.
OSCAR GAINES, Agent. | C. L. CRISLER, Assessor.

THE DRY GOODS DEPARTMENT!
— IS NOW COMPLETE AT —
COLTER, POWELL AND OWNBY'S,
New Styles of Sicilenia Fancy Plaids and other elaborate styles just received.
Over One Hundred New Pieces just opened, from the best goods, marked down to
THE LOWEST PRICES.
Special Prices on a new lot of Black Dress Silks at 50c, $1, $1 25 and $1 50. New Fall Styles in Prints at wonderfully Low Prices. Muslins and all Domestics a Specialty.
Ladies' Dusters at 75c, 90c, $1, $1 25, $1 50 and $2. Ladies' Lap Dusters, 38c. Our Flannels, Yarns and Blankets are elegant. Over 200 doz. Hose at 8½ and 10 cents.
OVER ONE HUNDRED DIFFERENT STYLES OF DRESS BUTTONS, JUST OPENED AT LOW PRICES
Colter, Powell & Ownby.
Rising Sun, Indiana.

R. S. CRISLER,
Burlington, Ky,
WAGON MAKER AND
—MANUFACTURER OF—
ROAD WAGONS, SPRING WAGONS, HARROWS, PLOWS, WHEEL BARROWS
AND ALL KINDS OF WOOD WORK.
Also the Manufacturer of W. M. Conner's Patent Right Hay Conveyor.
Saws Filed & Sharpened.
Please call and examine my prices before calling elsewhere.

JAMES S. WAYNE, President. JNO. L. SANDFORD, Cashier
CAPITAL $300,000.
FARMERS AND TRADERS
NATIONAL BANK.
Covington, Kentucky.
DIRECTORS.
James S. Wayne, M. C. Motch, Sam Hind, E. J. Hickey, E. J. Gres, J. S. Matson, J. H. Mersman, J. L. Sandford, L. H. Dills, F. P. Helm, L. C. Stephens.
The general operations of banking transacted upon the most favorable terms, collections made on all points in the United States.
The Business and Accounts of Farmers are Especially Solicited by this Bank.
dec. 20-6m

UNDERTAKING.

We keep Constantly on Hand all sizes of
Burial Cases and Caskets.
And having just received a beautiful
NEW HEARSE,
Which can be had at a reasonable price when desired.
PRICES GUARANTEED LESS THAN CITY PRICES
DAVIS BROS., - - HEBRON, KY.

City Flouring Mills
RISING SUN, INDIANA.
FLOUR EXCHANGED FOR WHEAT OR CASH. THE HIGHEST MARKET PRICE PAID FOR GOOD WHEAT.
mar7-tf28 J. W. Talbott.

VANDERBILT UNIVERSITY. NASHVILLE, TENN.
Cost of grounds, buildings and apparatus, $500,000. Productive Endowment, $700,000. Six Departments. Tuition in Literary and Scientific Department, $65.00; in Theological, free. Special attention given to Civil Engineering. Session opens September 1. For Catalogue (FREE) Send to Secretary.

KENTUCKY MILITARY INSTITUTE.

At Farmdale P. O., Franklin Co., Ky., six miles from Frankfort. It is the most healthful and beautiful location in the State. Lit by gas as well as heated by steam. A full and able College Faculty. Expenses as moderate as any first-class college. Fortieth year begins September 1st. For catalogue, etc., address COL. R. D. ALLEN, Supt.

GEORGETOWN COLLEGE. 58th Annual Session begins Sept. 1st. Old and tried. Situated in the famous "Blue-grass" region unrivalled for beauty and health. Charming ... Degrees of B. ... and A. M. conferred. Before deciding send for catalogue to the President. GEORGETOWN, KY.

Now is the time
To Subscribe for
The Recorder.
Only $1 50 a Year.

THE RECORDER.

RIDDELL & HALL, Publishers.

BURLINGTON, : : KENTUCKY.

FROM THE MOUNTAIN TOP.

Dear World, looking down from the highest of heights that my feet can attain,
I see not the smoke of your cities, the dust of your highway and plain;
Over all your dull moors and morasses a veil
the blue atmosphere folds,
And you might be made wholly of mountains for aught that my vision beholds.

Dear World, I look down and am grateful that so we all sometimes may stand
Above our own every-day level, and know that our nature is grand
In its possible glory of climbing; in the hill-tops that beckon and bend
So close over every mortal he scarcely can choose but ascend.

Though here, O my World, we miss something
—the sweet multitudinous sound
Of leaves in the forest a-flutter, of rivulets
leaping around,
The smell of wild pastures in blossom, of fresh earth upturned by the plow—
The uplands and all the green hill-sides lead the way to the mountain's brow.

One world; there is no separation; the same earth above and below;
Up here is the river's cloud-cradle; down
there is its fullness and flow.
My voice joins the voice of your millions who upward in weariness grope,
And hills bear the burden to heaven—humanity's anguish and hope!

Dear World, lying quiet and lovely in a shimmer of gossamer haze,
... the soft films of your mantle I can feel your heart beat as I gaze.
I know you by what you aspire to, by the looks that on no face can be
Save in moments of high consecration; you are showing your true self to me.

Dear World, I behold but your largeness; I forget that aught petty or mean
Ever marred the vast sphere of your beauty,
over which as a lover I lean;
And yet by our laws will God judge us; His love keeps our loftiness in sight:
Dear World, our low life sinks behind us; we look up to His infinite height!

—Lucy Larcom, in Harper's Magazine.

THE UNWILLING GUEST.

The old Baron did not require much pressing, but soon began his story:

I think, my friends, you have all heard of the Countess Repey—the younger, of course—the bewitching little sprite, my little black-eyed Princess.

Mine! I only wish she were mine. You must all know her. I suspect you have all lost your hearts to her, as I have done; yet I, insignificant as I am, have been most favored. I drove in the same carriage with her for a whole night! True, there was a chaperon present, but I will not have my good luck disparaged.

One evening, in an evil hour, it occurred to her that her presence was indispensable at a ball which was to take place at Arad on the following night. She immediately ordered her carriage. I was the only person near at hand. "Please, dear Baron," she cried, "escort me to Arad."

"Dear Baron, dear Baron!" What answer could I give her?

"Countess ... Erebus; the carriage will be upset; we have to cross three rivers—it will be a wonder if even two have safe bridges. We shall be drowned, Countess; our road lies through a forest of vast extent, lonely as the grave, and infested with thieves and murderers. We shall be assassinated—I could not protect you alone! Besides, why should we hurry so? Let us have an early cup of tea and set out in the morning; we shall reach Arad by noon, and you will have the whole afternoon for your toilet. Let us start to-morrow, Countess."

My representations were futile—she would start instanter. You know how obstinate she is. She said she "did not wish to postpone everything till the last moment," she wished "to recover from the fatigue of the journey." "How can I step straight out of the carriage into the ball-room after being heated, jolted, crushed and tumbled by the drive."

And, besides, she has a mania for driving at night—it is "so lovely, so romantic; the stars, the frogs, the moonbeams." These were all pretexts—she was determined to satisfy her whim at any cost.

Enfin, what should I do? accompany her, or stay alone in the castle—a sweet alternative. I chose the former course; in her gratitude she allowed me the privilege of sitting opposite her in the carriage.

The truth will out: it was mighty pleasant; I was almost oppressed with marks of the Countess' favor. First, she confided a bandbox to my care, then her muff, then her traveling bag; lastly, a pair of goloshes. Next, she fell asleep—deaf to all conversation, she slumbered soundly; occasionally when the carriage jolted over a stone she would wake with a start: "Where is the traveling-bag? Where is the muff? Are you sure you are not sitting on the bonnet box? For heaven's sake take care, dear Baron!" Then she fell asleep again; then the chaperone, who was suffering from migraine, began a querulous conversation, whimpering piteously the while. I closed my eyes feigning sleep. Suddenly the carriage stopped and began to heel over on one side, as if it also was about to seek repose.

The coachman jumped off the box and came to the window.

"I am almost afraid, your ladyship, that we have lost our way."

"What matters?" answered the Countess; "does not the road lie before us? Drive on, of course."

"There is a road, my lady, but where does it lead?"

"It must lead somewhere."

"But I am afraid it will lead us to a place not altogether safe."

"What a fool you are! Every place is safe—where are we now?"

"In the forest of Szalonta."

"Well, this forest ends somewhere. If I remember right, it only takes two hours to drive through it either way."

"But the coachman is afraid," I ventured.

"Is he paid for being afraid?"

"He is afraid, dear Countess, that something may happen to you."

"That's no affair of his."

"Or that the horses—"

"Well, that's his lookout."

"That there are some poor devils in this forest who try to get their living by—"

"Folly! Isn't our coachman a poor devil himself?"

"Yes, yes; but he means those poor men who are in the habit of relieving one of a horse, and not infrequently of a carriage too. Countess, ma deesse, it is no joke: they might steal the horse, take our lives, or even worse. If I only had my revolver with me!"

"So that you might have it stolen, too," jested the fair fiend. Thereupon she opened the carriage door, and, before I could prevent her, leaped gracefully out into the darkness. "Oh, what a lovely night! How fragrant the forest is! How the glow worms sparkle! Look at them, dear Baron!"

"Look! what am I to look at? It is pitch dark, I can not see anything."

"Nothing? Is not that a light gleaming under the trees yonder?"

My blood curdled. We were close to the robbers' den. The coachman had also descried the light; he now said in a voice which resembled that of a man who was being hanged:

"That is the inn, My Lady, frequented by the poor men."

"Capital! Drive to the inn, coachman, for we have no other refuge for the night."

I was in despair. "For heaven's sake, Countess, what are you going to do? This is a notorious den of thieves, where we shall all be assassinated; the host is a confederate; many travelers have already met their death. Only lately I read in the papers—"

The diabolical creature interrupted me with a loud laugh.

"These are only old women's tales," she said; "who is afraid of such imaginary bogeys? If there were a hotel anywhere near, we should of course drive to it. As it is, we must put up with the tavern."

So saying, she told the coachman to follow her slowly with the carriage; she meant to advance on foot, to show him the way. Remonstrances were useless; she threatened to penetrate the csarda alone if we would not accompany her. The little Countess would have done it, too! As we approached the building, strains of gypsy music became audible.

"Strange!" jested the Countess, "we wanted to go to a ball, and here we have suddenly lit upon one. How very fortunate!"

With these words she walked up to the door.

For a moment I reflected that it would be wisest to leave her here, and to betake myself to the forest; but it would not have been right to forsake her, and, besides, I had no choice, for Mdlle. Cesarine, the chaperon, had seized my arm, which she would not relinquish, Poor creature, she was half dead with fright, and shook like an aspen leaf. At some distance we could hear the wild shouts with which those assembled in the tavern accompanied their dance. Nothing daunted by all this, the Countess boldly opened the door and walked in.

We entered a long, low room, stained with smoke. In my first fright I fancied that I beheld at least ... dancing and singing before me. Subsequently, when I had somewhat recovered myself, I counted them, and it appeared that they amounted to nine in all, including the landlord and the three gypsies who formed the band. Five, however, are plenty! I wished them all at Jericho. Five muscular, gigantic fellows! Their heads almost touched the ceiling. Their pistols—each had one—were lying in a corner of the room. I noticed them at first sight. "Well, we shall be lucky if we ever leave this den alive," thought I.

When the fellows saw us they paused in their dance, and stared at us with great sparkling eyes. Our temerity astonished them. My little Countess advanced into the room, and with a bewitching smile addressed them as follows:

"Pray forgive us for having disturbed you in your entertainment; we have lost our way, and, as the darkness prevented us driving any further, we beg you to give us shelter for the night."

One of the five bandits advanced toward her—he was the handsomest and slimmest of them all. He twirled the ends of his mustache, took off his hat, rattled his spurs till they rang again, and, bowing low to the smiling Countess, he said that he did not feel the least disturbed by her appearance, but was delighted at the honor. He, Fekete Jofzi (my blood ran cold—Fekete Jofzi, the notorious brigand of the day!) was paying the reckoning that evening, and so as host he took the liberty of inquiring who it was he had the honor to address. Before I could make a sign to prevent her, the Countess recklessly answered:

"Countess Repey, residing in your immediate neighborhood."

"I have the good fortune to know the name. The old Count once sent a bullet after me, but missed his aim. Pray be seated, Countess."

Here was a pleasant acquaintance! The Countess sat down on a bench. Fekete seated himself beside her. He never asked me to sit down; he seemed utterly unconscious of my presence.

"Where were you driving at such a late hour?" he inquired.

"Don't tell him! Don't tell him?" I telegraphed with my eyes.

"To Arad, to the casino ball." Farewell to your ball-dress and jewels!" thought I.

"Indeed! It was a lucky chance for us that brought you here. We are giving a ball, too, and, if Her Ladyship does not despise our invitation, I think I can promise her a delightful evening. Our gypsies are excellent musicians; they play csardas which make the blood course like fire through one's veins." Turning to the musicians, he added: "Let us have your song of 'The Beautiful Woman,' and mind how it is played."

Without another word the barefaced fellow, as soon as the music began, slipped his arm around the waist of the fair Countess, and swung her into the middle of the room.

Another impudent fellow rushed up to Mademoiselle Cesarine, who was half fainting from fright and agitation, and pulled her up to dance. After a few turns he passed her on to another—this was repeated till the poor creature found herself in a sad plight.

The Countess, on the other hand, was gliding about among all the noise with the same calmness and enjoyment as if she were waltzing on the wax floor at Arad.

She was never lovelier or more seductive than at this moment. I have often seen Hungarian dancing, both at the theater and balls, but I shall never forget the way in which these two danced. First the Betyer, with majestic steps, led his partner once or twice around the room, his face proud, his gestures imposing. Suddenly he sprang into the middle of the room with a loud shout, the fiery Hungarian music waxing wilder and wilder.

Slowly, with steps full of grace, the Countess commenced the dance. She fluttered about like a butterfly, touching every flower, but alighting on none. Now and again the bandit bent over her as if about to embrace her. Suddenly stopping, he would throw back his head and turn aside with wonderful grace, the bewitching little fairy floating toward him at one moment as if about to throw herself into his arms, then drawing back and luring him hither and thither in pursuit of her, the glance of their eyes alone showing that they formed one couple. At last the Betyar turned round completely and placed himself in front of the gypsies, as if he had turned his back on his partner, wishing in his rage to dance quite alone; again with a bound he resumed his place before her, their hands met, and he waltzed round with her at lightning speed. It almost made me giddy to watch them.

I feared all the time that the unblushing rogue would in his excitement be rude to the Countess. He had ample opportunity. One misdeed more or less could matter nothing to a man with a price on his head—the Countess was quite in his power. I was determined that if he forgot himself or displayed any impropriety in his manner toward the Countess I should make a rush for the pistols and shoot him down like a dog. What are you smiling at? Parole d'honneur! I was bent upon it!

Nothing of the kind occurred. Fekete led the Countess to her seat, reverently kissed her hand, and then turned to me. Laying his hand familiarly on my shoulder, he said:

"And you, old gentleman, you are not dancing."

(Insolence! "Old gentleman" to me!)

"Thank you, I can not dance."

"Indeed; that alters the case." He turned away to the Countess. "Pardon us, Your Ladyship, for not being duly prepared for the reception of such distinguished guests. I hope you will be content with what we have, it is not much, indeed, but none the worse for that."

He alluded to the supper. It was a sumptuous banquet, I can tell you. A small kettle filled with slices of lamb was placed on the table, and the whole band gathered round it. The riches of the world would not have procured a plate; each person fished scraps of meat out of the kettle with a pocket-knife and a bit of bread. My little Countess ate as though she had had nothing for three days. The Captain of the band himself selected the tit-bits for her, and cut several pieces of white bread. Her appetite was excellent.

Fekete suddenly remarked that I was taking no part in the repast. He first frowned ominously, but soon recovered his temper, and smilingly inquired why I did not eat.

"Eat away—eat away, old gentleman; this will fatten you; stolen meat is very nourishing."

"Thank you," I answered; "it is too highly seasoned for me."

The wine, of course, was served in a Kulatsch—such people know nothing of glasses. After their custom, Fekete drank first himself. Rubbing the neck of the vessel with his wristband, he handed the wine to the Countess, who took it readily, and, putting her lips to it, drained a hearty draught. Think of it, my friends—she drank, and a good deal, too!

Once more it came to my turn: "Drink, old boy" ("old boy" he had come to now), "drink, just to wake yourself up."

"Thank you, I am not allowed to drink; I live homeopathically."

"Ah!" laughed he, "I understand, similia similibus." (He even understood Latin!) "I also follow the homeopathic system; yesterday wine did me an injury, to-day I cure myself with wine."

I felt sure that they wished to intoxicate us first, and then take our lives. How they could drink, too! Though only five in number, they emptied a cask of wine and rose from the table perfectly sober. While the others took some wine to the gypsies the Captain again approached your humble servant.

"Well, well, old gentleman, you don't eat, drink or dance. How do you pass your time? Do you play cards?"

He took a pack of cards from his pocket.

"Now," thought I, "he wants to find out how much money I have."

"I don't do that, either," I answered; "I have never played."

"No matter. I'll soon teach you a game—it's very easy. Look here. I put one card here and another there. You stake on that, I on this: whoever's number first turns up wins the stakes."

The shameless fellow wanted to teach me lansquenet—as if the acquirement of this game had not cost me two of my estates! Yet, I had to allow him to teach me. I had a little silver and some coppers in my pocket—this I thought I might risk.

"What! you don't want to play for coppers with me? Whom do you take me for, sir? Here is the bank."

He threw a whole pile of brand-new ducats on the table. I had a few gold pieces in a pocket-book; tremblingly I laid one on a card. The cards were shuffled, and I won. The robber paid me. At no price would I venture to take up my winnings. I left it as a fresh stake. I won again, and did the same thing. For the third, fourth, fifth and sixth times I won. Thick drops of perspiration covered my forehead. It is not exactly one of the pleasures of life to win money from a robber. The seventh time also the stakes were mine. I quivered like an aspen leaf. Why had I not had this ill-timed luck at Presburg during the Diet? How ardently I prayed that Providence would relieve me of the money and allow the robber to win for once! Vain the wish—for the eighth time also I was the winner. Now, indeed, I was a dead man.

"Old boy," said the robber, with a smile, "you must be in love with the beautiful Countess, or you would not have such good luck at cards. The man still had the face to joke at my expense. My heart beat as if it would burst when he shuffled the ninth time. "There it is; you've won again!" Fekete struck the table with his fist so that the gold jingled, and rose from his seat. "If you went on winning like this, old gentleman, I might in an hour lose all the money in the neighborhood," he cried, with a laugh, putting the remaining pieces of money in his pocket.

Trembling, I ventured to offer him the sum which I had won. Proud as a hidalgo, he cast a glance of withering scorn at me.

"What do you take me for, sir? Put your money into your pocket, or I will throw you and it out of the window."

Good God! what was I to do with this money, which had doubtless already been the cause of bloodshed, and would probably lead eventually to my own destruction?

In my trepidation, I threw it, large sum as it was, to the gypsies. I regretted the act at once; it betrayed the fact that I was rich, and that money was no object to me. The gypsies overwhelmed me with thanks, and offered to play me anything I liked. I sent them to the Countess to be rid of them. Without much pressing the Countess, with a voice of a siren, set up one of her favorite Volkslieder. Forgetting in the perfection of the melody all the surrounding circumstances, I applauded as madly as if I were in my opera-box at Pesth. The bandit Captain applauded just as heartily, and volunteered to sing himself. He favored us with one of those indigenous melodies which may be heard in every village at the corner of every street. The song ended, he turned to me:

"Now, old gentleman, it is your turn; we must have your song."

I was in a sad quandary. I sing!—under such circumstances, too!—I who, except the song "Fare thee well, thou silent house," had never been able to learn a tune in my life.

"I—I can not sing—I can't sing at all!"

(The fiend of a woman who had got us into this fix always laughs immoderately when I absently begin to hum an operatic air. I have a high, squeaking voice. A peacock is more melodious.)

The Countess begged me in French to sing something, as my refusal might be hurtful to all. That was all that was wanting—what was I to do? Convulsed with terror, my heart transfixed as it were with fear, I commenced: "Fare thee well, thou silent house."

I sang in a soul-stirring, yet ear-splitting fashion. Painfully enough I got half-way through my song, when in my third strophe, by an unlucky mischance, I made an agonizing shriek. The Countess could no longer contain herself, but burst into a hearty laugh. The bandits also began to laugh: and, lastly, I myself joined in the chorus, though I had little cause for merriment.

The dance was then renewed. The Countess was unwearying. They danced till dawn. Not till the sun's first rays began to peep through the windows did she interrupt the festivities, and beg her partner, as it was high time, to have the horses put to.

"We shall now see their true aspect," thought I: "may God have mercy on our souls!"

The robber went out, roused the coachmen and servants, had the horses harnessed, and then announced that the carriage was ready for our departure.

"Of course, they mean to murder us on our way, thought I.

I got inside the carriage with more alarm than when I alighted. It seemed so suspicious to me that they did not demand my purse. The chief of the band at the same time mounted his horse and accompanied us to the high-road; after directing us on our way, and expressing hopes that we should enjoy the ball, he took leave of us and rode off to rejoin his companions.

I did not breathe freely till we reached Zeriel. I then began to reproach the Countess with her very thoughtless conduct, and to remind her how great had been the danger to which she was exposed, from which my authority alone had rescued her. Who knows what might have happened to the Countess had I not been with her? The humiliation, too, of dancing the csarda with Betyars till daybreak!

She listened quietly to my reproaches; when I had finished she said:

"Apropos of daybreak, dear Baron, are you not sleepy?"

"Not in the least," I answered, crossly.

"Then be so good as to sing me the song which you left unfinished."

You may imagine how quickly I became sleepy.

I had flattered myself that the Countess would fain purchase my silence with some of the sweetest marks of her favor. How mistaken I was. We reached Arad at about eight o'clock—half an hour later all the fashionable world were in possession of the details of the story. She even robbed me of this slight satisfaction.

She was the belle of the evening. She did not dance, however, and thus failed to follow up her latest triumph; yet she was queen of the hall. She pleaded weariness as her excuse. I can well believe she was weary after dancing eighteen csardas in one night. I had not danced at all, yet I was confoundedly tired.

I hastened to the card-room. "I am in luck to-day," I thought. They were playing lansquenet at one table. "Now I shall pluck you, my pigeons." Nicely I did pluck them—I lost all my ready money, and incurred a debt of a thousand gulden.

Six months after these events I read in one of our political organs the announcement that Fekete Jofzi, the celebrated robber chief, was lying in prison at Szedegin, condemned to death, and that he would be executed according to law in that town. I at once hastened to tell the news to our little Countess.

"What a pity," she remarked, laying down the paper; "he was such a charming dancer!"—From the Hungarian, in London Temple Bar.

The "Choleraic Germ."

The more in detail the observations of Dr. Koch on cholera appear, the less certain does it seem that any very important new light has been thrown on the disease. Dr. Koch, indeed, makes some statements concerning the spread of contagion which clash with the observations of other medical investigators, but he does not appear yet to have reached absolute certainty on these points. He asserts that "the infection is not conveyed by the air," yet he holds that it is conveyed through food, and it is difficult to see how the microbes can be deposited on food save by the action of air-currents. But the vital point, namely as to whether these microbes cause the disease, or only a company or follow it, is really not definitely settled, and it can not be said that the testimony at hand is capable of settling it. For though Dr. Koch is of opinion that the disease is caused by the introduction of the microbes into the alimentary canal, it is well known that such introduction may take place without producing the disease, for the experiment has been tried deliberately, not alone on brutes but on men. The doctor says that drinking water "is not the only vehicle of the choleraic germ." That has long been recognized, but it is much more difficult to say what may not be the vehicle of infections. Certainly there is evidence extant in support of the theory that the germs may be carried by the wind; and though Dr. Koch says that when dry the microbe is harmless, facts seem to favor the conclusion that dried microbes can be rendered active again by moisture without regard to the lapse of time.

If it be assumed that the microbe is the choleraic germ, the world is but little better off for the knowledge, since it does not know how the microbe is to be dealt with, and since it does not know how to restrict the field of operations of the fatal little animal. Cholera spreads despite the investigations of Dr. Koch, and he does not pretend to have found a cure for it. And after a generation of research and inquiry science can really tell us little more about the disease than our fathers knew. Cleanliness of residence and person; wholesome and regular diet; pure water; these are still the main preventives against cholera. But it almost always finds places where these desiderata are absent, and then it makes its way into quarters where they do exist. It is a common to be told that fear has no influence over the matter, but the assertion is open to doubt. Fear is capable of playing the part of infection as regards any disease, and therefore it may do so with this one. With a conscientious and vigorous quarantine, however, we ought to be able to keep the cholera out this year at least.—N. Y. Tribune.

Naming the Goods.

If a farmer should want a reaper of some standard make, and select one and then discover that the maker's name and location was not conspicuously placed upon the machine, he would possibly refuse to take it, for while it might look like the machine he sought, the absence of the name of maker would carry the suspicion that fraud was lurking about. This is exactly the case with the great number of butter makers of this country. The butter is sent to market anonymously, and the buyer can not tell whether he is buying the same brand of butter again or not. The great creamery men brand every package, and by making as nearly as possible a uniform grade of butter, have a constant call for it. The farmer makes his butter, sells it at the nearest store, unpacked, and it is impossible that it can reach market in attractive shape. Even if butter is sold to the corner store it can be put up in small neat packages that do not need to be disturbed until it reaches the consumer, and if the package is marked with the maker's name and address it makes a demand for another supply from the same source and thus proves an advertisement for the maker. If the maker would take the same pride in making public that such a package is his "choicest," as he usually does to conceal the fact, there would be far less poor butter in the market and a far greater number who once having found a make of dairy butter that suited them would insist upon having the supply continuous and to the great benefit of the producer.—Cleveland Herald.

The Pest of Flies.

An Iowa lady writes to an exchange: "For three years I have lived in town, and during that time my sitting-room has been free from flies, three only walking about my breakfast table: while all my neighbors' rooms are crowded. I often congratulated myself on my escape, but never knew the reason of it until a few days ago. I then had occasion to remove my goods to another house, while I remained on for a few days longer. Among other things removed were two boxes of geraniums and calcolarias, which stood in my window, being open to its full extent top and bottom. The boxes were not gone half an hour before my room was as full of flies as those of my neighbors around me. This, to me, was a new discovery, and perhaps it may encourage others in that which is always a source of pleasure, namely, window gardening. Mignonette, planted in long, shallow boxes, placed on the window sill, will be found excellent for this purpose.—Philadelphia Call.

Grape Vines.

In answer to a correspondent who inquires about grape trellises, we would say that it does not make any serious difference as to which side of the trellis the vine is. It is true that it is better, perhaps, to place the vine on the east or west of the trellis. As to the construction of the trellis that is not difficult. Almost every one must have seen a trellis. It may be composed of simply posts and slats. Or it may be made of posts and wire. Select the posts from oak, or some other durable timber, and have them large enough to provide sufficient strength. Set the posts eighteen feet apart in the rows, and have them run north and south, so as to give a more uniform exposure of the grapes to the sun, as we have before intimated. The posts ought to be about four or five feet above the ground. Now stretch your wires along the posts, and fasten to each post with a staple, driven in firmly enough to prevent the wires from slipping through, as, if they do that, they will sag in some places while being taut in others, making the strain uneven. It will be necessary, as will naturally occur to the reader, to have the end posts somewhat larger than the others, and to so brace them that the strain from the wires, either from contraction or the weight of the vines, will not loosen them. We should place the wires about fourteen inches apart, the lower one being placed at that distance from the ground. This will bring the top wire about four feet eight inches from the ground. Some only use three wires, but four gives a better chance to tie up the vines, and will pay for the extra trouble and expense. Now if there is more than one trellis the question will arise, "How far apart should they be?" Opinions will vary in regard to that, but we believe that they should not be nearer together than eight feet, and if they are further apart than that, we do not think any damage will be done, to say the least.

Now if the vines are six feet apart there will be three between each two of the posts, and that is about right. If the trellis is not put up as soon as the vines are planted, they can be left to trail upon the ground the first season, and no great harm will be done. Vines left thus for the first season will do very nearly as well as if on the trellis. If the trellis is there, however, they should be tied up the first season; but as the trellis is to be constructed, we advise setting it up at once. We may say here that during the first year we should neither prune nor pinch. We do not believe it does any good. At the end of the first season—in the Fall—we would cut down to two strong buds, and during the second year these two buds will each produce a cane. Once or twice during the second season we would pinch back the stronger laterals, so as to cause the two main canes and their buds to develop as fully as possible. But guard against all severe pruning and pinching; very many pinch a grape vine to death. The vine does not thrive in consequence of their treatment but in spite of it. If during the second season a heroic system of pruning is adopted, in all probability the buds which were designed for next season, will be driven into premature growth this season. At the end of the second season cut back the two canes to three buds, and this will leave six buds which the third year will produce six canes, and these will probably bear fruit, but care must be taken not to permit them to overbear, and hence the fruit had better be thinned to about ten bunches to the vine. This third season it will be in order to pinch back to the laterals somewhat more closely than was done the second season, and when the vines have got a little above the trellis stop them.

Now, after pruning by cutting three of the canes down to two buds, and shortening the other three canes to about three feet, we come into the fourth year's management. The three canes that were left will produce branches, and each of these will bear fruit, and we would advise that these branches be stopped at the second leaf beyond the last bunch of fruit. Each of the buds left at the last pruning will produce a cane which will bear fruit during the following or fifth year. One matter needs attention. Do not permit anything to allow too heavy fruiting. Nothing is gained by it. The lesson of thinning fruit has been learned long ago by our most experienced fruit growers. Judicious thinning not only produces a better quality of fruit; but it produces likewise a greater amount. No rules can be laid down for thinning, as it must depend upon circumstances, the strength and vigor of the vine and the variety of the grape, for instance. In the fall of the fourth year the three canes that have borne fruit may be cut entirely away, and the three canes which are to fruit next year cut back to about three feet.—Western Rural.

Watch the Barnyard.

The barnyard should be watched at this time of the year to see that the juices do not run to waste. If the flow can be turned into a field to soak away over its surface, the manure contained in it will settle into the ground and be saved. On land where this deposit is made no other manure will be necessary, as the best materials, the chemical salts, are washed out and flow away with the water. Where there is a considerable distance for the stream to run these will be deposited unless the flow is too rapid. Where the juice can not be made to flow over a field it should be dammed up in the barnyard, and the course manure thrown into the pool. This is presupposing that no arrangement were made the year before to manage it to better advantage. To utilize this valuable material there should be hauled into the barnyard in the Autumn a lot of muck or earth which should be so placed that it may be able to absorb the juice. Where there is a basement it can be placed therein, and wheeled out any time when it is required. Without such convenience it may be piled up across the natural outlet from the barnyard, and so answer the purpose of a dam and absorbent.—Farmer and Manufacturer.

Old Hay or Straw.

Last year there was a very heavy crop of hay, and many farmers have hay left over. This hay, as well as sweet old straw, can be put to good account, and not injured, but improved in quality for next winter's use. Clover hay half cured, which can be done in one day, can be put in mow or stack by layering it with old hay or straw. These will absorb the moisture and keep it from heating enough to injure. Curing in this way preserves the clover just as sweet, with much less labor, and the old hay or straw absorbs so much of the aroma of the clover that stock will eat it with avidity. In this way clover can be cured with less danger from catching weather. Salt, if sprinkled in with the old and new hay will make it more palatable, but do not imagine from the wise sayings of some writers that it will aid in the least in preserving the hay. That is one of the exploded follies of the past.—Iowa State Register.

—Trichinæ, if the experimental results of the work of MM. Mignon and Touard, of Paris, are to be relied upon, are said to be rendered innocuous after the meat containing these parasites has been subjected to a temperature so low as twenty degrees centigrade.

—I ain' got much faith in de frown-in' man. In de black cloud dar's more win' dan rain.—Arkansaw Traveler.

HOME AND FARM.

—The exclusive feeding of clover to cows gives hard cheese and soft butter.—N. Y. Herald.

—Oil of wintergreen mixed with an equal quantity of olive oil is recommended as a rheumatic painkiller.

—When extra sheep are mentioned in market reports wethers are always meant. Ewes never rank high in the fat stock trade.—N. Y. Times.

—For fodder the yield of sweet corn and sorghum is about the same. The former, however, is better relished by stock, while the latter endures drouth better.—Albany Journal.

—A pleasant remedy for a cough is lemon honey. It is made of the juice of three lemons, one pound of sugar, quarter of a pound of butter and six eggs. The mixture is boiled and taken hot.—Exchange.

When, on a hot day, from any cause perspiration is suppressed, stop working at once, go under the shade and reduce your temperature by cold application to the head, or sunstroke is imminent.—Cincinnati Times.

The home should belong to the wife. There cannot be an argument on the other side. In her possession it is safe and sure. No matter what reverses come, the family can generally weather the storm if they have the anchor of a home.—Exchange.

To bleach cloth, put six cent's worth of oxalic acid into a gallon of boiling water and pour over the cloth. Stir them up and let them remain in it till the water is cold, and then lay them out on the grass to bleach. They will soon be as white as snow.—Boston Globe.

—A filling for a layer cake that is gaining favor is made by boiling a pint of molasses very slowly for twenty minutes, stirring it constantly; then remove from the fire and flavor with lemon and stir three well-beaten eggs into it. Stir this for three or four minutes to make it light. If you wish to vary this, chocolate, or fruit or nuts may be added.—N. Y. Post.

—Orchard grass may be grown anywhere in the country. It makes excellent pasturage. The rapidity of its growth is great. It makes flesh and is very nutritious. From its appearance it is sometimes called cock's-foot grass. It thrives in somewhat shaded places. Of course hay can be made from it, although it is very coarse, and it seems never tired of growing either after close cutting or after close pasturing. In fact, it must be close fed. The time for cutting is about the same time as for clover.—Detroit Post.

—The Poultry World says that the difference between an egg laid by a plump, healthy hen, fed with good, fresh food daily, and an egg laid by a thin, poorly fed hen is as great as the difference between good beef and poor. A fowl fed on garbage and weak slops, with very little grain of any kind, may lay eggs, to be sure, but when these eggs are broken to be used for cake, pies, etc., they will spread in a weak, watery way over your dish or look a milky white, instead of having a rich, slightly yellow tinge.

All About Horses.

"I suppose," said a well-known horse-dealer, "that, for carriage hosses, there's nothing finer'n English 'Cleveland bays.' We have some in this country, though they're scarce and gen'ally called coach hosses. They are called as they are 'cause of their bay color and black points, an average of 16 to 17 hands high. The first one I ever saw was in Canada, an imported one. They are high steppers, have small heads and arching necks, an' are of good style an' appearance. Their trotting action is from the shoulder, and a pair of 'em 'll rattle off a heavy barouche in fine shape, I tell you. A good pair would bring from $2,000 to $4,000; but you can't get many of 'em, 'cause they're not to be hed. Have the right kind, matched up close, and they would bring almost any price—such fellows as Vanderbilt would buy 'em."

"Some people say that the French coaching stallions that are being brought to this country have too much of the Percheron, or cart-horse, strain in them. Do you think so?"

"No, I don't. There is no better bred horse than a genuine French coaching stallion, an' I believe Dahlman, of New York, has done as much as any man in the country to improve American horses, both coach and draft. He's brought over this year thirty-one coaching stallions, besides his Norman stallions. They were mostly chestnuts, and very high knee actors, standin' 16 to 16½ hands high. He has 'em in York State, Ohio, Illinois, and Michigan. They sold as high as $3,500 each. Dahlman bought 'em of the French Government, for they are the very best to be had. He also brought over thirteen mares. They are such hosses, you know, as you'd stop to look at on the street; high knee action an' lots of style, what the French like. They was all blood hosses; every one that handles hosses knows what they are. When I was in New York I see the French working stallion Incroyable, which Dahlman sold to Vanderbilt. He was a three-year-old, sixteen hands high, gentle as a kitten, and as fine a horse for his age as I ever saw in my life. Good stallions don't amount to much, however, if you haven't got good mares. A good many people don't seem to bear that in mind."

"How about lighter blooded stock?"

"Well, some of the finest 15 to 15.3 hand high horses for such vehicles as T-carts, dog-carts, phaetons, etc., come from Kentucky. They are better than most of the others, because they have the blood. That'll tell, every time. Some very fair ones of this class, cob-built, come from Maine. Everybody likes that build of hoss if he has good action. They are an easy kept hoss, an' a hoss that wears better than these long-legged, loose-made hosses. They are worth from $800 to $2,500 a pair, according to style, action, and quality. For a lady's phaeton you want a hoss a little smaller, one about 14½ hands high, of Morgan build. A fast hoss that is too small for racing is very good for this purpose."

"Too small?"

"Yes, a good many fast horses are too small to stand the work of a race-course. You occasionally find very fast small horses, but where you'll find one fast one 14½ hands high, you'll find ten a hand higher. They hain't got the foot to carry 'em; they can't get there as a bigger hoss. Good looks is a mighty important consideration in a lady's phaeton hoss. A lady is sure to want a hoss with a long mane an' tail, archin' neck, silky coat, etc., an' such hosses is rare. Maine is a good place to look for 'em, and they'll bring from $300 to $600 apiece."

"How about trotting horses?"

"Well a man needn't pay so much for a trotter, unless he wants one that can go better'n 30. If he's satisfied with one that will trot in the neighborhood of 2:45, he can get one for $400 or less. When you get below 2:30 there ain't no regular price; it's regulated by the customer. Of course you know some of the fastest of 'em have brought enormous prices—as high as $50,000."—Boston Globe.

—Valentine Fritz, of Baltimore, hurt his head by falling in some old timbers twenty years ago, but as it was only a bump he paid no particular attention to it until last week he was taken suddenly and violently ill, when the doctors found under his scalp three inches of a spike three-eighths of an inch in diameter, where it had lain ever since 1864.—Baltimore Sun.

No. 150,000.

This is the number actually reached this week by the Mason & Hamlin Organ and Piano Company in the regular numbering of their world-renowned cabinet organs. Having commenced business in 1854, the average number of organs produced per annum has been 5,000, which is 100 per week for the entire 1,500 weeks of their business career. The Mason & Hamlin organs have been sent to every civilized country, and their sale never was greater than at the present time, averaging from 10,000 to 15,000 organs per annum.—Boston Journal.

—Now comes the Hoosier Schoolmaster, and proves that it will take more than 7,000 years to fill this new Sahara Sea through the proposed canal, and presumably more than 1,000 years to get into it water enough to have any climatic effect.—Indianapolis News.

English Trade-Marks.

Mr. Edward Waters, Patent and Trade-marks office, 87 Bourke street, Melbourne, Australia, writes: "One of my household suffered with tooth-ache and rheumatism and after trying numerous other remedies without relief, tried Jacob's Oil. It was rubbed on the cheek and plugged in the tooth, and well rubbed in for rheumatism. In both cases the cure was immediate and complete, and in neither case has the pain returned.

A COACHMAN is the saddest of all men, for his life is full of "whoa."—Pittsburgh Chronicle.

It Is No Wonder

that so many people sink into untimely graves when we consider how they neglect their health. They have a disordered Liver, deranged Bowels, Constipation, Piles or diseased Kidneys, but they let it go and think they "will get over it." It grows worse, other and more serious complications follow and soon it is too late to save them. If such people would take Kidney-Wort it would preserve their lives. It acts upon the most important organs purifying the blood and cleansing the system, removes and prevents these disorders and promotes health.

WOMEN do love one another. It is only a woman who thinks of kissing a man for his mother.

Caution to Dairymen.

Ask for Wells, Richardson & Co.'s Improved Butter Color, and take no other. Beware of all imitations, and of all other oil colors, for every other one is liable to become rancid and spoil the butter into which it is put. If you can not get it write to us at Burlington, Vt., to know where and how to get it without extra expense. Thousands of tests have been made, and they always prove it the best.

A DEAD give-away—Bequeathing your remains to a medical college.

LYDIA E. PINKHAM'S Vegetable Compound was first prepared in liquid form only; but now it can be sent in dry forms by mail to points where no druggist can readily be reached, and to-day the Compound in lozenges and pills finds its way even to the foreign climes of Europe and Asia.

WHY is a tight shoe like a fine summer? Because it makes the corn grow.

☞ To match that bonnet? Feathers, ribbons, velvet can all be colored to match that new hat by using the Diamond Dyes. 10c. for any color at the druggists. Wells, Richardson & Co., Burlington, Vt.

THE owl is a very small bird for its eyes.—Burlington Hawkeye.

A Nice Sewing-Machine Free.

Any lady can secure one by a few hours' work. Write Chicago Scale Co., Chicago, Ill.

SEA serpents—A faculty peculiar to confirmed inebriates only.—Life.

Glenn's Sulphur Soap

Is recommended for salt-rheum, itch, scald head, impetigo or any other skin eruption.

THE MARKETS.

CINCINNATI, August 19, 1884.

LIVE STOCK—Cattle—Common	$2 00	@	2 75
Choice butchers	4 00	@	4 75
HOGS—Common	4 25	@	5 35
Good packers	5 60	@	6 10
SHEEP—Good to choice	3 75	@	4 25
FLOUR—Family	3 50	@	4 00
GRAIN—Wheat—Longberry red		@	81½
No. 2 red	80	@	81
Corn—No. 2 mixed		@	56
Oats—No. 2 mixed			25
Rye—No. 2		@	56
HAY—Timothy No. 1	12 50	@	13 00
HEMP—Double dressed	8 75	@	9 00
PROVISIONS—Pork—Mess	18 00	@	18 50
Lard—Prime steam		@	8 25
BUTTER—Fancy Dairy	18	@	20
Prime Creamery	19	@	23
FRUIT AND VEGETABLES—
Potatoes, new, per barrel	1 00	@	1 25
Apples, prime, per barrel	2 50	@	2 75
NEW YORK.
FLOUR—State and Western	$2 65	@	3 30
Good to choice	3 70	@	6 00
GRAIN—Wheat—No. 2 Chicago	85	@	85¼
No. 2 red	89½	@	89¾
Corn—No. 2 mixed	56	@	62
Oats—mixed	36	@	46
PORK—Mess		@	18 00
LARD—Western steam		@	7 95
CHICAGO.
FLOUR—State and Western	$3 50	@	5 00
GRAIN—Wheat—No. 2 red	76⅛	@	76⅞
No. 2 Chicago Spring	76⅛	@	77
Corn—No. 2	50⅛	@	51¼
Oats—No. 2	24⅛	@	24⅞
Rye		@	50
PORK—Mess	18 50	@	19 50
LARD—Steam	7 75	@	7 80
BALTIMORE.
FLOUR—Family	$4 00	@	5 00
GRAIN—Wheat—No 2	87½	@	87⅞
Corn—mixed		@	63
Oats—mixed	33	@	34
PROVISIONS—Pork—Mess		@	18 75
Lard—Refined		@	9¼
INDIANAPOLIS.
WHEAT—No. 2 red	$	@	77
CORN—mixed		@	52
OATS—mixed		@	24½
LOUISVILLE.
FLOUR—A No. 1	$ 4 15	@	4 25
GRAIN—Wheat—No. 2 red	75	@	80
Corn—mixed		@	55
Oats—mixed		@	28¼
PORK—mess		@	19 00
LARD—steam		@	9½

A SOWER trial—Testing an agricultural implement.—Merchant Traveler.

TEN thousand dollars would not purchase from me what Swift's Specific has done for me. It cured me of Rheumatism caused by malaria."
ARCHIE THOMAS, Springfield, Tenn.

GOOD at figures—A dancing master.—Burlington Free Press.

IF a cough disturbs your sleep, one dose of Piso's Cure will give you a night's rest.

A SIGN of good breeding—getting the prize in a dog show.

IF afflicted with Sore Eyes, use Dr. Isaac Thompson's Eye Water. Druggists sell it. 25c.

The Harlem Railroad.

Valuable Suggestion of Interest to Men Employed on all Railroads—Read It, if You Would be Benefited.

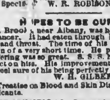
CONDUCTORS' ROOM, HARLEM DEPOT,
NEW YORK, Feb., 1884.

DEAR SIR: I take pleasure in saying a good word for DR. KENNEDY'S FAVORITE REMEDY. I have used it for two years for Dyspepsia and derangement of the Liver, and can say with emphasis that it always affords prompt and complete relief. FAVORITE REMEDY is pleasant to the taste, thorough in its effects, never producing the slightest disagreeable or sickening sensation. Yours truly,
B. C. TROWBRIDGE.

But Mr. Trowbridge is not alone in his praise of Dr. DAVID KENNEDY'S FAVORITE REMEDY. Favorite Remedy is a positive cure for Malaria as well as Indigestion. Read the following from R. A. Campbell, foreman of the sorting room in the Montgomery Paper Mill:

MONTGOMERY, Orange Co., N. Y., March 4, 1884.
Dr. Kennedy, Rondout, N. Y.:
DEAR SIR: I have used for some time your valuable medicine, FAVORITE REMEDY, for Malaria, and it has proved an effectual cure. After having tried a great many other medicines for a disorder of this kind without avail, I find DR. DAVID KENNEDY'S FAVORITE REMEDY affords complete satisfaction, and I do heartily recommend it to all who suffer as I did.
R. A. CAMPBELL.

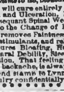
DR. DAVID KENNEDY'S FAVORITE REMEDY is a positive cure for Malaria, Kidney and Liver Diseases, and for all those ills peculiar to women.



MATAWAN, N. J., March 3, 1884.
Dr. Kennedy, M. D., Rondout, N. Y.:
DEAR ... I have used your valuable medicine, FAVOR... REMEDY, in my family for liver difficulties, and find it an excellent preparation, worthy of the recommendation it bears.
MRS. MARGARET HAYES.

20 Years!

A CANCER FOR TWENTY YEARS.
"For twenty years I suffered from a Cancer on my neck. 'Patent Potash and Mercury Mixtures' fed instead of curing the Cancer. I lost the use of my arms and the upper part of my body. My general health was broken down, and my life was despaired of. S. S. S. cured me sound and well. This new lease of life it gave to me can not be measured by any monetary value. I owe my life and the support of my family to Swift's Specific." W. R. ROBISON, Davisboro, Ga.



HOPES TO BE CURED.
"Mr. Brooks, near Albany, was hopelessly afflicted with Cancer. It had eaten through his nose into his mouth and throat. The time of his death was only a question of a very short time. He prayed for death, his suffering was so great. S. S. S. has had a wonderful effect on him. His improvement is so great that we all feel sure of his being perfectly cured in time.
W. H. GILBERT, Albany, Ga.

Our Treatise on Blood and Skin Diseases mailed free to applicants.
SWIFT SPECIFIC CO., Drawer 3, Atlanta, Ga.
N. Y. Office, 159 W. 23d St.; Philadelphia Office, 1205 Chestnut St.

CATARRH

HAY-FEVER

HAY-FEVER.
I was afflicted for twenty years, during the months of August and September, with Hay-Fever, and tried various remedies without relief. I was induced to try Ely's Cream Balm; have used it with favorable results, and can confidently recommend it to all. ROBERT W. TOWNLEY, (ex-Mayor), Elizabeth, N. J.

Ely's Cream Balm is a remedy based upon a correct diagnosis of this disease and can be depended upon. 50 cts. at druggists; 60 cts. by mail. Sample bottle by mail 10 cts. ELY BROS., Druggists, Owego, N. Y.

LYDIA E. PINKHAM'S VEGETABLE COMPOUND
IS A POSITIVE CURE FOR
All those painful Complaints and Weaknesses so common to our best
FEMALE POPULATION.
Price $1 in liquid, pill or lozenge form.
Its purpose is solely for the legitimate healing of disease and the relief of pain, and that it does all it claims to do, thousands of ladies can gladly testify.
It will cure entirely all Ovarian troubles, Inflammation and Ulceration, Falling and Displacements, and consequent Spinal Weakness, and is particularly adapted to the Change of Life.
It removes Faintness, Flatulency, destroys all craving for stimulants, and relieves Weakness of the Stomach. It cures Bloating, Headaches, Nervous Prostration, General Debility, Sleeplessness, Depression and Indigestion. That feeling of bearing down, causing pain, and backache, is always permanently cured by its use.
Send stamp to Lynn, Mass., for pamphlet. Letters of inquiry confidentially answered. For sale at druggists.

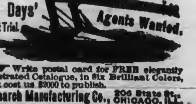
PILES ITCHING PILES. Symptoms—Moisture, intense itching, most at night. SWAYNE'S OINTMENT sure cure.
It is EQUALLY EFFICACIOUS in CURING ALL SKIN DISEASES such as Pimples, Blotches, Rash, Tetter, Itch, Salt Rheum, no matter how obstinate or long standing. Box, by mail, 50c. Dr. SWAYNE & SON, Phila., Pa. Sold by Druggists.

25 CTS. PISO'S CURE FOR CURES WHERE ALL ELSE FAILS. Best Cough Syrup. Tastes good. Use in time. Sold by druggists. CONSUMPTION 25 CTS.

WANTED Ladies and Gentlemen in City or County to take light work at their own Homes. $3 to $4 a day easily made. Work sent by mail. No canvassing. We have good demand for our work, and furnish steady employment. Address with stamp Crown M'f'g. Co., 290 Race St., Cin'ti, O.

GUNS ShotGuns Revolvers, Rifles, Etc.

Large Ill. Catalogue free. Address Great Western Gun Works, Pittsburgh, Pa.



GUNS, $15. —DOUBLE Barrel Breech Loaders, Rebounding Locks and Pistol Grip, with outfit complete. Send for price list. C. E. Overbaugh & Co. 265 & 267 Broadway, New York.

$250 A MONTH. Agents Wanted. 90 best selling articles in the world. 1 sample FREE. Address JAY BRONSON, DETROIT, MICH.

DIPHTHERIA CROUP, ASTHMA, BRONCHITIS, Neuralgia, Rheumatism. JOHNSON'S ANODYNE LINIMENT (for Internal and External Use) will instantly relieve these terrible diseases, and will positively cure nine cases out of ten. Information that will save many lives sent free by mail. Don't delay a moment. Prevention is better than cure. JOHNSON'S ANODYNE LINIMENT CURES Influenza, Hoarseness, Hacking Cough, Whooping Cough, Diarrhœa, Dysentery, Cholera Morbus, Kidney Troubles, and Lame Back. Sold everywhere. Circulars sent FREE. I. S. JOHNSON & CO., Boston, Mass.

CUT THIS OUT AND (1) SEND WITH YOUR ORDER.
THEY ARE THE STANDARD.
NATIONAL GREASE HEEL LOTION. Cleanses your Horses' heels. This lotion Remedy has been used with the most unqualified success. Obviates grease heels and cracked heels. Horse shoers should have it for sale. Price $1.00.
NATIONAL SPANISH LINIMENT. Is invaluable for Sprains, Bruises, Shoulder lameness, Affection of the tendons or ligaments, Splint, Rheumatism. It should always be at hand in the stable. Price $1.00.
FOR SALE BY DRUGGISTS, General Stores and Horseshoers. If they do not have it, send order direct. A New and exceedingly Valuable Live Stock Doctor Book accompanies each Bottle. STANDARD PRICE $1.00.
NATIONAL HOG CHOLERA REMEDY is the discovery of a noted veterinarian and should always be kept on hand by stock raisers and farmers. It is a sure cure. Price $1.00.
NATIONAL COLIC REMEDY. This disease, the most sudden and fatal, is controlled by the National Colic Remedy; the formula is by a noted veterinarian; three doses in each bottle; a cure in every case. Price $1.00.
OUR REMEDIES NEVER FAIL.
NATIONAL LIVE STOCK REMEDY CO., 175 DEARBORN STREET, CHICAGO.

NOW IS THE TIME. To prevent and cure all "Skin Diseases," and to secure a white, soft and beautiful Complexion, use
=BEESON'S=
Aromatic Alum Sulphur Soap.
Sold by Druggists. One cake will be sent on receipt of 25 cents to any address.
WM. DREYDOPPEL, Manufacturer, 208 North Front Street, Philadelphia, Pa.
BEST and most economical Laundry Soap for Washing, especially Merino, Woolens and Undergarments (cleans perfect and easy; makes clothes white and sweet) is DREYDOPPEL'S Borax Soap. Sold by all wholesale grocers and first-class retailers.

Fast Potato Digging
THE MONARCH POTATO DIGGER
Saves its cost yearly, FIVE TIMES OVER, to every farmer. Guaranteed to Dig Six Hundred Bushels a Day!

SENT ON 60 Days' Test Trial. Agents Wanted.
☞ Write postal card for FREE elegantly illustrated Catalogue, in Six Brilliant Colors, that cost us $2000 to publish.
Monarch Manufacturing Co., 206 State St., CHICAGO, ILL.

U.S. STANDARD. JONES OF BINGHAMTON. 5 TON WAGON SCALES, Iron Levers, Steel Bearings, Brass Tare Beam and Beam Box, $60 and JONES he pays the freight—for free Price List mention this paper and address JONES OF BINGHAMTON, Binghamton, N. Y.

EDUCATIONAL.
$40 PAYS for a Life Scholarship in the COLEMAN BUSINESS COLLEGE, Newark, New Jersey. Positions for graduates. National patronage. Write for Circulars. COLEMAN & PALMS.

AGENTS Male or Female earn $25 to $50 a week selling our Goods. Entirely new. For samples write MEMORIAL CO., 14 Home St., Cincinnati, O.

Young Men If you want to become Telegraph Operators, and be guaranteed employment, address P. W. REAM, Ada, O.

HAIR Wigs & Waves sent C.O.D. anywhere. Wholesale & Retail. Price-list free. Goods guaranteed. B. C. STREHL, 157 Wabash av., Chicago.

A. N. K.—E. 992

WHEN WRITING TO ADVERTISERS please say you saw the advertisement in this paper.

BOONE COUNTY RECORDER.

VOLUME IX. | BURLINGTON, KY., WEDNESDAY, AUGUST 27, 1884. | NUMBER 43.

CLEVELAND'S

Acceptance of the Nomination for the Presidency.

His Views Upon the Party's Principles and Duties—Favors One Term—The Workingman's Rights Should be the Chief Care of the Law-Makers.

ALBANY, N. Y., August 18.—Grover Cleveland's letter of acceptance of the nomination as a candidate for President by the Democratic National Convention is as follows:

GENTLEMEN: I have received your communication dated July 28, 1884, informing me of my nomination to the office of President of the United States by the National Democratic Convention lately assembled at Chicago. I accept the nomination with a grateful appreciation of the supreme honor conferred, and a solemn sense of the responsibility which in its acceptance I assume. I have carefully considered the platform adopted by the convention, and cordially approve the same. So plain a statement of Democratic faith and the principles upon which that party appeals to the suffrages of the people needs no supplement or explanation.

It should be remembered that the office of President is essentially executive in its nature. The laws enacted by the legislative branch of the government the Chief Executive is bound faithfully to enforce, and when the wisdom of the political party which selects one of its members as a nominee for that office has outlined its policy and declared its principles it seems to me that nothing in the character of the office or the necessities of the case requires more from the candidate accepting such nomination than the suggestion of certain well-known truths, so absolutely vital to the safety and welfare of the nation that they can not be too often recalled or too seriously enforced.

We proudly call ours a Government by the people. It is not such when a class is tolerated which arrogates to itself the management of public affairs, seeking to control the people, instead of representing them. Parties are the necessary outgrowth of our institutions, but a Government is not by the people when one party fastens its control upon the country and perpetuates its power by cajoling and betraying the people, instead of serving them. A Government is not by the people when a result which should represent the intelligent will of free and thinking men is, or can be, determined by the shameless corruption of their suffrage.

When an election to office shall be the selection by the voters of one of their number to assume for a time a public trust, instead of his dedication to the profession of politics, when the holders of the ballot, quickened by a sense of duty, shall avenge truth betrayed and pledges broken, and when the suffrage shall be altogether free and uncorrupted, the full realization of a Government by the people will be at hand; and of the means of this end not one would, in my judgment, be more effective than an amendment to the Constitution disqualifying the President from re-election. When we consider the patronage of this great office, the allurements of power, the temptation to retain public place once gained, and, more than all, the availability a party finds in an incumbent whom a horde of office-holders, with a zeal born of benefits received and fostered by the hope of favors yet to come, stand ready to aid with money and trained political service, we recognize in the eligibility of the President for re-election a most serious danger to that calm, deliberate and intelligent political action which characterizes a Government by the people.

A true American sentiment recognizes the dignity of labor, and the fact that honor lies in honest toil. Contented labor is an element of National prosperity. Ability to work constitutes the capital, and the wage of labor the income, of a vast number of our population, and this interest should be jealously protected. Our working men are not asking unreasonable indulgence; but as intelligent, manly citizens they seek the same consideration which those demand who have other interests at stake. They should receive their full share of the care and attention of those who make and execute the laws to the end that the wants and needs of the employers and the employed shall alike be subserved and the prosperity of the country, the common heritage of both, be advanced.

As related to this subject, while we should not discourage the immigration of those who come to acknowledge allegiance to our Government and add to our citizen population, yet, as a means of protection to our workingmen, a different rule should prevail concerning those who, if they come, or are brought to our land, do not intend to become Americans, but will injuriously compete with those justly entitled to our field of labor. In a letter accepting the nomination to the office of Governor, nearly two years ago, I made the following statement, to which I have steadily adhered:

"The laboring classes constitute the main part of our population. They should be protected in their efforts peaceably to assert their rights when endangered by aggregated capital; and all statutes on this subject should recognize the care of the State for honest toil, and be framed with a view of improving the condition of the workingman."

A proper regard for the welfare of the workingman being inseparably connected with the integrity of our institutions, none of our citizens are more interested than they in guarding against any corrupting influences which seek to pervert the beneficent purposes of our government, and none should be more watchful of the artful machinations of those who allure them to self-inflicted injury.

In a free country the curtailment of the absolute rights of the individual should only be such as is essential to the peace and good order of the community. The limit between the proper subjects of governmental control and those which can be more fittingly left to the moral sense and self-imposed restraint of the citizen should be carefully kept in view. Thus laws unnecessarily interfering with the habits and customs of any of our people, which are not offensive to the moral sentiments of the civilized world, and which are consistent with good citizenship and the public welfare, are unwise and vexatious.

The commerce of a nation to a great extent determines its supremacy. Cheap and easy transportation should, therefore, be liberally fostered. Within the limits of the constitution, the General Government should so improve and protect its natural water ways as will enable the producers of the country to reach a profitable market.

The people pay the wages of the public employes, and they are entitled to the fair, honest work which the money thus paid should command. It is the duty of those intrusted with the management of their affairs to see that such public service is forthcoming. The selection and retention of subordinates in government employment should depend upon their ascertained fitness and the value of their work, and they should be neither expected nor allowed to do questionable party service. The interests of the people will be better protected; the estimate of public labor and duty will be immensely improved; public employment will be open to all who can demonstrate their fitness for it; the unseemly scramble for place under the Government, with the consequent importunity which embitters official life, will cease, and the public departments will not be filled with those who conceive it to be their first duty to aid the party to which they owe their places, instead of rendering patient and honest return to the people. I believe that public temper is such that the voters of the land are prepared to support the party which gives the best promise of administering the Government in the honest, simple and plain manner which is consistent with its character and purposes. They have learned that mystery and concealment in the management of their affairs cover tricks and betrayal. The statesmanship they require consists of honesty and frugality, a prompt response to the needs of the people as they arise, and the vigilant protection of all their varied interests.

If I should be called to the Chief Magistracy of the Nation by the suffrages of my fellow citizens, I will assume the duties of that high office with a solemn determination to dedicate every effort to the country's good, and with a humble reliance upon the favor and support of the Supreme Being, who I believe will always bless honest human endeavor in the conscientious discharge of public duty.

GROVER CLEVELAND.

To Colonel Wm. F. Vilas, Chairman, and D. P. Bestor and other members of the Ratification Committee of the Democratic National Convention.

Grass-Grown Pottery.

The public passion for novelties has been illustrated lately by a display and sale of grass-grown pottery in one of our Washington street bric-a-brac shops. The small vases of porous ware are soaked in water and then sprinkled thickly with a peculiar sort of grass seed, which soon sprouts and covers the red earthenware with a green coat. By keeping the grass filled with water the grass remains green for three months. In one week two of these pottery curiosities were sold, and an admiring crowd gathers closely about these living vases in the windows.

THE EASTERN TROUBLE

Foo Chow Arsenal Destroyed by French Bombardment.

The Chinese Gunboats Bravely Maintained a Desultory Fire for a Quarter of an Hour, When the Survivors of Their Crew Leaped Overboard.

LONDON, August 24.—The Times' Foo Chow dispatch, dated Sunday, 3 p. m., says the French shelled the barracks and camps near Quantae. No resistance was made to the attack. The Consulated buildings were looted by the Chinese soldiers, who were in uniform and armed. The French Chief of Staff reports the French lose six men. The Times' correspondent believes this estimate untrue. The English pilot was killed during the scare Saturday night, when the French opened their heavy fire, and it is believed sunk one of their own torpedo-boats. The bombardment is described as of a most sickening character. The Chinese fleet lately on the Min River, with the exception of two ships, was blotted out. No surrender was allowed disabled and sinking ships. Their guns were silenced, and they were shelled for hours. Admiral Courbet opened fire at 2 p. m., and the Chinese replied almost simultaneously. The dockyard arsenal was fired immediately, but with only partial success. The eleven vessels forming the Chinese fleet were mostly light river and coast transports, and were really toys. The French had eight heavily-armed ships. Several Chinese gunboats maintained bravely a desultory fire for about a quarter of an hour, when the survivors of their crews leaped overboard. The combat was practically finished in seven minutes. The superior French artillery made the contest, after disabling the Chinese vessels, no fight. It was a massacre. This is the opinion of every spectator. Two eighteen-ton gunboats of the Chinese fleet fought well, on sinking near the English man-of-war Champion, while the others, stationed above the junks, made a good stand. The French kept up fire on the arsenal, neighboring buildings, forts, barracks and villages until 5 in the afternoon, although resistance from the shore batteries closed about 3. Some French and Chinese ships were engaged in close proximity to the English men-of-war Vigilant and Champion. At 6 Sunday evening three burning gunboats floated down stream, one carrying French colors. Numerous fire junks were blazing in a dangerous manner near the imperiled English men-of-war, but were fended off. One English bark was saved by the English men-of-war. French torpedo boats exploded the sterns of the gang of war transports and the two sinking gunboats. The scenes on the river as the dead and wounded floated by were terrible. The English saved many wounded. Forts lower down have not yet been attacked.

DERAILMENT.

Nearly Thirty Persons Injured—A Narrow Escape.

WORCESTER, MASS., August 23.—A train on the Southbridge branch of the New York and New England road ran off the track near Quinebaug this morning. One passenger car and the smoker went down the bank twenty feet, but only fell over on their sides, and the fall was gradual. There were about thirty passengers on board, most of whom were bruised up. The principle injuries were to J. W. Phelps, of Hyde Park, salesman for Borne, Seymour & Co., of Providence, cut on the right temple, case critical; Mrs. George Frost, of Southbridge, several scalp wounds and concussion, with great loss of blood; Mrs. Ruth Paine, of Eastford, Conn., left wrist broken; Miss Frost, severe injuries on the head and back; Henry Cody, of Southbridge, knee injured and right wrist crushed; Mr. Brooke, head cut and hip crushed; Deputy Sheriff Samuel Perry, of Southbridge, severe wound on the right leg; Dr. McGregory, of Southbridge, injured in the back and hands; Mrs. George Wells, cut badly; Pliny M. Clark, cut and bruised, and Geo. Dinsmore, in charge of the train, cut badly in several places on the head and face and hip jammed. Many others were slightly bruised. Physicians from Southbridge, Dudley, and Woodstock tendered assistance.

Held for Inhumanity to Children.

CHICAGO, August 23.—Henry Walker, Oscar Radcliffe, Mrs. Pease, Mrs. Slater and Mrs. Parker, who were the ostensible managers of the "Home for God's Orphans," were all bound over to the grand jury to-day for ill-treatment of children left in their charge. The testimony of four of the young inmates tended to show that a large number of babies had died in the asylum, apparently through want of care, and according to stories related by the young children in court, they were subjected at times to rigorous treatment, by being locked up alone in dark rooms and given very little food. The court looked upon the managers of the institution as belonging to a dangerous class of religious fanatics.

Story of Cannibalism Denied.

NEW YORK, August 23.—Captain J. W. Norman, ice-master of the Thetis, of the Greely relief squadron, informs the public that he never told any person, or led any one to believe from his conversation, that cannibalism had been practiced by Lieutenant Greely and his command.

Three Drunken Men Drowned.

ST. JOSEPH, MO., August 23.—Samuel Lilley, John Oskis and Chas. Nation, with a jug of whisky, went skiff riding on Lake Contrary, six miles south, last night, got into a fight, upset the boat, and all were drowned. The bodies were recovered to day.

A Heartrending Sight.

OTTAWA, ONT., August 24.—A farmer named LeBlaine, living near Shrewsbury, went to the woods yesterday, directing that his little daughter be sent with his dinner. At 3 o'clock in the afternoon no dinner having arrived, he started for home, having gone some distance, he saw a bear feasting on some object. He fired, and the animal dropped dead, and at its feet the horrified farmer saw the body of his daughter, mangled almost beyond recognition, and in her hand the can which contained her father's dinner.

American Manganese.

PITTSBURG, PA., August 23.—Experiments at the Edgar Thompson steel works during the past four days have demonstrated that they can manufacture manganese superior in quality to that imported from Europe. This is the first manganese ever made in America. The daily production is about fifty tons, while the highest daily production in Europe is ten to fifteen tons.

Unprofitable Business.

MONTREAL, August 23.—It is stated that cattle shippers here have lost heavily, one firm, it is said, dropping a quarter of a million, and another one hundred thousand dollars, during the past three years.

ITALIAN EMIGRANTS.

They Are Leaving Our Shores for Lack of Work in Railroad Building.

NEW YORK, August 24.—The fact has just leaked out that the Italians are leaving this city and going back to their old home as fast as they can get passage. The movement amounts to an exodus of the Italians who have not been long in this country, and many of whom were brought over by railroad contractors to take the place of their laborers. Over fifteen hundred have sailed in the last three ships that left this port for Italy, and others are preparing to go as fast as they can get away. The cause of the movement is said to be twofold. The cessation of railroad work and the impossibility of unemployed Italians obtaining other work on account both of the prejudice felt against them by the Irish and other workingmen, and the absence of employers who speak their language. While the Nickel-Plate and West Shore Roads were building, the contractors, it is said, sent money to Italy to pay the passage of men who would come to this country to work on the roads. When that work ceased the men could get no other. Since the exodus began Italian emigration to this country has almost entirely ceased.

THOS. A. HENDRICKS' ACCEPTANCE.

He Appreciates the High Honor, and With a Deep Sense of Public Duty, Awaits the Judgment of His Countrymen.

INDIANAPOLIS, IND., August 20.—The following is a copy of ex-Governor Hendrick's letter of acceptance of the Democratic nomination for the Vice Presidency:

INDIANAPOLIS, August 20, 1884.

GENTLEMEN—I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your communication notifying me of my nomination by the Democratic Convention at Chicago, as a candidate for the office of Vice President of the United States. May I repeat what I said on another occasion, that "it is a nomination which I had neither expected nor desired, and yet I recognize and appreciate the high honor done me by the convention."

The choice of such a body, pronounced with such unusual unanimity, and accompanied with so generous an expression of esteem and confidence, ought to outweigh all merely personal desires and preferences of my own.

It is with this feeling, and I trust also from a deep sense of public duty, that I now accept the nomination, and shall abide the judgment of my countrymen.

I have examined with care the declaration of principles adopted by the convention, a copy of which you submitted to me, and in their sum and substance I heartily indorse and approve the same. I am, gentlemen, your obedient servant,

T. A. HENDRICKS.

To the Hon. Wm. F. Vilas, Chairman; Nicholas M. Bell, Secretary, and others of the Committee of the National Democratic Convention.

WILBUR F. STOREY.

The Once Brilliant Editor Said To Be Hopelessly Insane.

CHICAGO, August 23.—Messrs. Goudy and Acay, attorneys in the Storey insane suit, to-day agreed with Drs. Henry M. Lyman and Andrew J. Baxter to make a medical examination of Mr. Wilbur F. Storey. Some time after eleven o'clock these two physicians and Mr. Goudy drove up to Mr. Storey's house, on Prairie avenue, and were promptly admitted. Mrs. Storey had previously been notified of their visit and she conducted the trio into the apartment occupied by her husband, being present during the whole of the examination. After its conclusion a reporter saw Dr. Lyman. He said that he did not deem it proper, having acted under the orders of a court, to make any statement as to the mental condition of Mr. Storey, and that he preferred to make his report direct to Judge Knickerbocker next Thursday. By dint of some further pressing and questioning, the doctor was made to virtually admit that he and his colleague had both found the whilom brilliant editor of the Times in a state of hopeless imbecility.

A Texan Cyclone.

DALLAS, TEX., August 23.—A small cyclone struck the end of Lamar street this afternoon, tearing a deep hole and rising again with great velocity, carrying a column of sand two feet in diameter to a height of over five hundred feet. A valuable dog was carried up eighty feet and fell to the ground lifeless. The cyclone moved north-westerly, where it is believed some damage resulted. The storm continued only a few moments. It came without warning. The sky was clear and the weather warm, when suddenly a funnel-shape cloud of inky blackness swiftly descended, striking the earth like a cannon-ball and rising instantly. It is reported that two men chopping wood in Trinity Bottoms, three miles from this city, were injured by the cyclone.

Fondling a Russian Bear.

TORONTO, ONT., August 24.—This afternoon Wm. Thompson, while drunk, visited the Zoological Gardens. There is confined at the Garden a dangerous Russian bear. When Thompson reached the cage he put his hands through the bars to caress the animal. The animal immediately grasped his hand in his teeth, and crushed his arm to the elbow. It required the efforts of four men to make the animal release its hold. Thompson was taken to the hospital, where his arm was amputated at the shoulder. The bear is Peter the Great, the largest in Canada, and very savage.

Valuable Horses Burned.

CYNTHIANA, KY., August 24.—Last night at midnight a fire destroyed the Abdallah Park stables, near this city. One man, James Honan, and fourteen valuable horses were burned to death. The dwelling of Mr. Wilson, the owner of the stables, was also burned. The loss is put at $100,000.

A Fall of One Hundred Feet.

PITTSBURG, August 23.—This afternoon the elevator of P. Keil & Son's grain warehouse gave way, and two workmen, named Theodore Teseing and Peter Kuauff, were precipitated from the third floor to the cellar, a distance of one hundred feet. Both were fatally injured.

A Father's Terrible Mistake.

NASHVILLE, TENN., August 24.—Thomas Huling, who lives at Belle's Bend, ten miles from this city, mistook his daughter, a child nine years old, for a burglar this morning, and shot and killed her. He was not aware that she had gone out, and hearing her trying to raise a window, he discharged two barrels of a gun loaded with buckshot in the direction of the noise. When he got a light and stood over the supposed burglar he found he had literally torn his daughter to pieces.

Miners' Bodies Recovered.

SHAMOKIN, PA., August 23.—All the bodies have been recovered from the burning mine at Buck Ridge, in which there was a gas explosion a few days ago, and a number of miners killed. Efforts are now directed toward extinguishing the fire.

Somnambulist Walks to Death.

WILKESBARRE, PA., August 23.—Prof. W. R. Kingman, of Charleston, S. C., walked out of a window while asleep last night, and was killed by the fall.

Yellow Fever.

HAVANA, August 23.—There were seventeen deaths from yellow fever here during the past week.

PROHIBITION

Nominees for President and Vice-President Notified.

Remarks of the Candidates—The Movement Not a Mere Menace, But the Outgrowth of a Rapidly Increasing Sentiment.

CUBA, N. Y., August 25.—Gov. St. John and Wm. Daniel, Prohibition candidates for President and Vice President, were notified of their nomination, to-day Prof. Dickey, Chairman of the notification Committee, addressed the candidates:

GENTLEMEN—I am to speak for this committee, representing here to-day the National Convention of the Prohibition party recently in session at Pittsburg. In harmony with political usages and in keeping with the dignity and importance of the high positions in which we shall endeavor to place you, we are here for the purpose of notifying you, in this official and formal manner, of your selection as the candidates of the National Prohibition party for the positions respectively of President and Vice President of the United States.

The convention which thus honored itself by so wise a selection was no ordinary gathering. There were men there, bowed under the weight of many years, who a generation ago gathered in the same hall to organize for the victory of what seemed to some a hopeless cause, a battle against that other slavery. Young men were there, with the ardor of youth and devotion of heroes. Women were there—Francis Willard and Mary Woodbridge and Mrs. Burt and Mary Lathrop and Ester Pugh, representatives of the best brain and heart of American womanhood. * * *

It was a convention representing a powerful constituency from all parts of our land—a constituency composed of citizens grown tired of the spectacle of two old political parties rivaling each other in their eagerness to serve the liquor traffic, going down upon their faces in the dust before the Moloch of men and crying out, in the language of the Scripture, "Am I not thine ass upon which thou hast ridden?"

I need not assure you that the Prohibition party will give you most ardent support. We may not succeed in electing you to the high positions for which you have been named, but we shall enjoy the proud satisfaction of knowing that our candidates were the only candidates and our party was the only party that ought to have succeeded.

And now, gentlemen, in the name of the noblest manhood and the purest womanhood of America, I invoke the blessing of Almighty God to rest upon you, and may that divine power which rules and overrules in the affairs of the Nation and of men, vouchsafe unto you such measure of strength and courage and wisdom as shall enable you to bear well the burdens which the National Prohibition party, with supreme confidence, now lays upon you.

Governor St. John replied as follows:

MR. CHAIRMAN AND MEMBERS OF THE COMMITTEE—In receiving this formal notice of my nomination for the highest office within the gift of the people, by the National Convention of the Prohibition party, permit me, notwithstanding the distinction was neither sought nor desired by me, to assure you, in view of the unanimity with which it was given, of my high appreciation of the very great honor it confers. There are more political parties in the field to-day than there are political issues. Upon the great question as to what should be done with the traffic in intoxicating liquors as a beverage both the Democratic and Republican parties are united in favor of making the traffic permanent, while Prohibitionists demand that it be forever placed under the condemnation of the laws of the land.

Thus an issue is clearly made, and I think it safe to say the only one to-day that really reaches the heart and conscience of citizens. Upon this issue we go to the people, the source of all political power. Let us appeal to reason rather than prejudice. Let those resort to personal abuse and scandal who have nothing better to uphold their cause. The Prohibition party was not organized as a mere menace. It is the outgrowth of a rapidly increasing, crystallized sentiment against the great evil of the age; an evil that the old parties dare not attack, but against which this young party of the people, in defense of the homes of the Nation, has entered upon a warfare that shall never cease so long as the flag of our country waves its protecting folds over legalized dramshops. In this struggle let us ever remember we are accountable to God; that our duty to Him is paramount to our allegiance to any political party; that political ties will never, in His sight excuse a ballot for any party that does not stand up fearlessly for the right. The home will have nothing to fear if the people vote as they pray.

Mr. Daniel followed, and said to the Chairman and members of the committee:

I am profoundly gratified for the honor conferred upon me by selecting me as one of the standard-bearers of this great reform movement. I accept the nomination for the office of Vice President, and expect to do so more formally by letter hereafter, knowing well that it is one of responsibility, and involving no little of personal sacrifice, and I appreciate this honor, not merely as a personal one, but as a token of appreciation by the convention of the earnest, solid prohibition work that has been done in my native State of Maryland within the few years past. I also appreciate it as an indication of the desire of our brethren of the great North and West to obliterate all sectional party lines, and build up a grand Union party, composed of the best elements on both sides of the line in array against the worst; the representatives of protection to home everywhere as against the saloons. This disposition is more clearly evinced from the fact that I am the first person selected since the war from a Southern State as a candidate for a National position, and I trust this action will be the harbinger of that reign of harmony, good will and unity throughout the land which a poet has described as

"The Union of lakes, the Union of lands,
The Union of States none can sever;
The Union of hearts, the Union of hands,
And the flag of the Union forever."

Whatever may be the result of this effort so far as the precise number of votes polled is concerned, I believe the agitation to be of immense advantage to the cause and the country. I believe the result will be to rivet the earnest, thoughtful attention of the American people upon this liquor traffic, this gigantic crime of crimes, so as to cause the speedy adoption of such measures as will greatly hasten its overthrow. The duty of the hour is to crystallize and organize the Prohibition sentiment. We already have entered into political action, and having thus a standard to which we can rally, we shall more rapidly form whatever else of sentiment may be needed than in any other way.

I have but to say in conclusion that I shall do all in my power now and henceforth to bear onward this prohibition standard.

The French Retreat.

LONDON, August 25.—The Times' dispatch from Foo Chow this afternoon says: "The French ironclads entered the mouth of the river this afternoon at 2 o'clock. The White Fort opened fire with Krupp cannon while the ships were three miles away. After an hour's engagement the French retired. The Chinese fire was good."

Where's Dr. Tanner?

FORT PLAIN, N. Y., August 25.—Kate Smolsey is in about the same condition as in the past few days, apparently not much weaker. She is conscious, and converses with her family. She takes no nourishment, and desires none. She swallows no drink of any kind. This is the one hundred and sixty-seventh day of her fast.

Bad for Buckwheat.

TROY, N. Y., August 25.—Frost damaged corn and buckwheat last night.

—Dan Rice declares that he never made money so rapidly and steadily as when he ran his "one-horse show" and charged fifteen cents admission. His was literally a one-horse show—consisting of a clever trick horse and a clown, who was Dan Rice himself. Such a show as that would not stand much of a chance in these white elephant and hippodrome days.—Detroit Post.

—At Troy, N. Y., Mr. William R. Hyde seated himself in his office recently to write to his daughter, who was spending her vacation in Baltimore, and, after a few lines, wrote: "I hope to live long enough," when the pen fell from his hands and he died in five minutes.—Troy Times.

—St. Paul and Minneapolis continue their race for a lead in population. This year St. Paul's directory contains 39,729 names, and that of Minneapolis 39,533.—Chicago Journal.

—Twenty-two thousand dollars' worth of twine was required to bind the 1884 crop of wheat in Ransom County, D. T., where the first furrow was turned in 1881.—Denver Tribune.

THE COMMONWEALTH.

Louisville Leaf Tobacco Market.

Dark and heavy styles have been exceedingly brisk and strong, and prices are 25@75c. higher. Redried Green-river leaf has not been affected by the depression in fair to fine Burley, keeping fully up with the procession of dark and heavy or export styles. The latter have been very scarce. Lugs have been strongly in sellers' favor. The largest sale of bright wrappers of the year was made to-day at the Louisville warehouse. The offerings included the crops of some of the most successful Kentucky curers, and in several instances the highest prices of the year were paid, on packages, however, which were of a finer grade than have previously appeared here from the last crop. Crop advices in Kentucky are fair, though there have been some local complaints. The Missouri crop is reported to be suffering from drouth, but reports from other States are generally favorable. We quote full-weight packages new-crop sound tobacco as follows:

	Dark and Heavy.	Burley.
Trash	$6 00@ 6 75	$6 50@ 8 00
Common lugs	7 00@ 7 25	7 00@ 8 00
Medium lugs	7 50@ 7 75	8 00@ 9 00
Good lugs	8 00@ 8 50	9 50@10 00
Common leaf	8 00@ 8 50	10 00@11 00
Medium leaf	8 75@ 9 50	12 00@13 50
Good leaf	10 00@11 00	14 50@16 50
Fine and fancy leaf	12 00@18 00	18 00@20 00

Miscellaneous Items.

THOMAS MITCHELL, an escaped convict from the Kentucky Penitentiary, was captured at Cynthiana by Deputy Marshal Williams and Sheriff Garnett.

CHARLES DRAKE, a promising young lawyer of Bowling Green, is dead.

MISS MARY WHITTINGTON, principal teacher at the Daughters' College, Harrodsburg, died of consumption at the college the other day.

C. B. FUNK entered suit at Louisville against the Louisville and Nashville Railroad in the sum of $10,000 for injuries received in an accident on June last.

BLAND TAYLOR, son of General Tom Taylor, Chief of Police, of Louisville, assaulted reporter Eakin, of the Times, the other afternoon, for publishing an article in the afternoon paper reflecting on his father. After a spirited scuffle friends separated the belligerents. No bloodshed, although umbrellas were freely used.

THE case of the Commonwealth vs. George Allender, for the killing of Fremont Oaks, in the east end of the county, March 12, 1883, was concluded at Nicholasville, the other day. The jury after supper retired to their room, and in fifteen minutes returned a verdict of acquittal. The court-room was crowded with men and women.

ANDREW T. HURST, Postmaster at Frozen Creek, Breathitt County, was arrested on the charge of robbing the Government mails, and the other morning was tried before U. S. Commissioner Wood. There appearing reasonable grounds for believing him guilty, he was held over in the sum of $2,000, to appear before the U. S. Court at Louisville.

A WARRANT for the arrest of a half-breed Indian, by the name of Ben Skene, was sworn out to-night, charging him with outraging Mrs. Mary Sponeer, an old woman, out in the country, near Louisville. He choked and beat her until nearly dead. Skene has not yet been arrested. Mrs. Spencer is in a critical condition.

ON a train on the Short Line, about mid way between Frankfort and Louisville, the other day, a little boy between eight and nine years of age leaned out of the window of the car and his hat was instantly blown off his head. The little fellow got up and ran to the door, with the intention of regaining his head covering. The train was going at the rate of thirty or forty miles an hour, and as the child reached the door a sudden lurch threw him off. His mother was horror stricken, and the alarm being given, the conductor started the train back, expecting to find the boy's body. Their surprise can be imagined when, on reaching the spot, he was found to be running as fast as his little legs could carry him in the direction of the train. Beyond a big bruise in his temple he had received no injury. His escape was a truly remarkable one.

GOVERNOR KNOTT, has pardoned James Cunningham and Owen Bradley, both convicts in the Kentucky Penitentiary. The pardon of those two convicts was asked by a large number of citizens for the courage they displayed during the outbreak at the prison some days ago. Bradley mounted a horse and rode through the streets, notifying the citizens, and also informed the city and county authorities of the revolt. Cunningham saved the life of Captain Ed. Johnson, the prison gate-keeper. While Johnson was lying in an insensible condition on the ground, Alsop rushed at him with a huge knife, and would have plunged it into his body but for Cunningham, who caught Alsop's arm and engaged in a scuffle with him. Cunningham was severely cut in the right side, and is yet unable to leave the prison hospital. He was sent from Hickman County for life for murder, the man he killed having seduced his sister. He is about thirty-eight years of age, tall, and of handsome appearance. He served as a private in the Confederate army, and once saved the life of ex-Attorney General Moss, of this State. After General Moss fell on the battle-field wounded, Cunningham, who was in his command, placed him on his shoulder and carried him a distance of several miles to avoid further danger, and then went for surgeons to dress his wounds. When Cunningham returned home after the war he found his father's home in a wretched condition, everything the old man had having been destroyed or taken away by a band of guerrillas. As soon as Cunningham was told who led this band which destroyed his father's property, he armed himself, and meeting the guerrilla leader on the streets of Hickman, he shot him dead, for which offense he was never arrested. Bradley was sent from Bourbon County for horse-stealing, his term expiring next October.

SAM BARTON, colored, was killed by Bob Guinar, white, near Louisville, a few days ago. The two had a quarrel about a colored woman. The negro drew a club to strike Guinar, when the latter drew a pistol and shot, killing him almost instantly.

A COWARDLY attempt was made the other morning to assassinate Mr. James Ellis, who was sleeping in the office of Gould & Harris, Eminence. The back window was protected by iron bars, but hoisted, and the shutters open. The would-be murderer thrust a pistol between the bars and fired twice, each shot perforating the glass partition between the office and store-room, passing across and within a few inches of Mr. Ellis' body. The room was filled with the odor and smoke of burned powder.

TWO HORSES belonging to the Hon. W. H. Wadsworth, of Maysville, were killed by lightning a few days ago.

THE survivors of the First Kentucky brigade of Confederate soldiers will hold a reunion at Elizabethtown September 19.

TOWN Marshal Jesse Offutt, of Franklin, was shot the other day by a young man named Henry Taylor. Taylor had been arrested for drunkenness by Offutt. After the trial the two went into a store for a cigar. While Offutt's back was turned Taylor shot him three times in the back. Offutt's wounds are fatal. Taylor was arrested.

TELEPHONE connections between Lexington and Cynthiana has been completed.

MR. A. M. OFFUTT, of Scott County, thinks his crop of tobacco will make 2,20 pounds to the acre.

BUTLER'S ADDRESS

To His Constituents Throughout the United States.

Topics Discussed: Official Reform; Protection of American Industries; Preservation of Greenbacks; Hostility to Monopolies, etc.

To My Constituents:

In compliance with oft repeated and anxious inquiries, I hasten to give an account of my stewardship, of the political interests with which I was charged. They were four:

1. Hostility to all monopolies in commerce, industries and lands.

2. The preservation of the National legal-tender currency of the people, constitutionally issued by Congress.

3. The needs of all men and women who labor in the production of wealth, to be protected against the encroachments of those who absorb and consume without producing.

4. The necessity for reform and correction of abuses in government, so that its pressure on the people would be made as light as possible; its administration effective, to guard the rights of American citizens at home and abroad; to make public servants, individual or corporate, subservient to the use and will of the people only, so as to restore the prosperity of the country, with equal rights, equal burdens, equal powers, and equal privileges of all people.

These latter were specially confided to me by the Democratic masses of Massachusetts, to whom alone I owe grateful duty for high consideration and support during years of effort in the reform of government, but to no Democratic organization whatever. They were to be presented to the National Democratic Convention for its acceptance and adoption as the axioms of Democratic rule, as practiced by our fathers.

I had intended if these great principles of government, by the people and for the people only, had been cordially received, and earnestly and honestly adopted by that convention as the political chart of the Democratic party, to have permitted my name to be presented to the convention for the suffrages of the people as Chief Executive to administer and carry forward the necessary measures; in which case I should have been bound by it, action to support both its platform and nominees.

That I should be placed in that high position I knew was the will of the 150,000 voters of that Commonwealth, who had expressed their confidence by their votes so unanimously that no man from that State could have been a delegate to that convention if he had dared to breathe aloud that he was opposed either to the principles I represented or to my personal candidature.

In thus doing the will of those who sent me, I sought none of the honors of the convention, and interfered with none of its proceedings, save to serve as a member of its committee on what should have been its platform of principles, and not of expedients.

Owing to an accident without fault of any one, I reached that committee only after it had been some hours in session, and then found by solemn vote twice over, that it was equally divided upon the question whether in raising the moneys necessary for an honest and economical carrying on of the government, the Democratic party would pledge itself to tax the people in such manner only as would best promote American enterprise and American industry, and foster and cherish American labor. This division was shown by repeated votes of eighteen States to eighteen States in the choice as chairman, one who should represent the affirmative or negative of that vital proposition. The committee failing to elect a chairman, remained under its temporary chairman during the remainder of its deliberations with the understanding that after a tariff plank should be agreed upon, either one or the other of the two candidates, Messrs. Converse, of Ohio, or Morrison, of Illinois, should be elected permanent chairman and present a platform to the convention, the tariff plank of which should most nearly accord with his views.

To find myself holding the controlling vote in a committee on resolutions of a Democratic National Convention was not a new or untried position. I had held that position twenty-four years before in the Charleston Convention of 1860; and there I was obliged by my convictions to differ from both sides, I then presented a second minority report of one, which was adopted by the convention.

At Chicago a sub-committee of eight was chosen, and directed to prepare a tariff plank and submit it to the committee. In that sub-committee I presented a series of resolutions, which may be thus summarized:

1. That no more revenue should be raised by any form of taxation than absolutely necessary for the expenses of the Government.

2. That such revenue should be raised by tariff on imports.

3. That all material used in arts and manufactures, and the necessaries of life not produced in this country, should come in free; but luxuries should be taxed to the highest possible point.

4. That the internal revenue tax upon liquors, distilled and fermented, and tobacco, being a war tax, should be sacredly devoted to relieving the people from the remaining burdens of the war, to-wit: the care and comfort or relief of soldiers disabled in the wars of the Republic, and paying such pensions as Congress should from time to time allow such soldiers and paid into a fund for that purpose, a like fund having been provided for our sailors.

5. That the laws imposing duties for revenue should be so adjusted so as best to promote American enterprise and American industry, to cherish and foster American labor, and not create monopolies.

On submitting these resolutions to the sub-committee, the first four articles were agreed to without a division; but the fifth, declaring the duty of the Government to so lay taxes as best to promote American industry, and cherish and foster American labor, failed of adoption by a vote of four to four. From that hour any candidature of mine in that convention became to me impossible. The defeat of any possible nominee of the party upon a free-trade platform seemed to me inevitable, even if not desirable. The influences which caused the change of three votes out of seven clearly foreshadowed the nominee. * * *

It will be observed that mine was substantially the Ohio tariff plank, which, when offered by Mr. Converse in general committee, was also voted down, although it had been adopted by many State conventions.

I afterwards offered a series of resolutions in favor of industries and laboring men and women of the country. That as under existing laws all controversies between labor and capital can only be settled by brute force; and that as capital is strong and labor weak, therefore Government should establish tribunals in which these great controversies may be settled. That it should be provided by law that laboring men may combine and organize for their own protection, as capital may be incorporated and combined for its protection; and that all laws that hinder the laboring man in this right are oppressive and ought to be changed. That all the great woes of our country have come because of imported labor. That America ought never to be a lazar house for the reception of the pauper labor of other countries, sent here through Governmental aid, or brought here under contract by capital, for the purpose of debasing American workingmen and women, by competing with them through imported or convict labor. That labor has a right to demand a just share of the profits of its own production. That the future of the country unites with the laboring men in demanding a liberal support by the United States of common school education in the States, so that all citizens shall be sufficiently instructed in their duties as freemen and electors.

All of which, one after another, were voted down.

I also presented a resolution declaring that the legal-tender currency, under the decision of the Supreme Court, was now the constitutional currency, and should not be interfered with; and that business interests should not be disturbed by financial discussion.

That also was voted down in the committee, and a resolution passed that the Democracy were in favor of "honest money."

I also offered a resolution that all monopolies, as they tend to make two classes, the very rich and the very poor, were hurtful to the people of the Republic. Voted down.

I also offered a resolution that the agents of the Government, whether State or National, incorporated to do public business, were the servants of the people, and should be regulated by the power that created them. That was voted down.

Another resolution that it was the duty of Congress to provide by law that railroads should not make discriminating rates so as to enhance the price of the necessaries of life between the producer and consumer. That suffered the same fate.

Again, a resolution declaring the public lands to be the heritage of the people, and that they ought to be held in small quantities for that purpose only, and another resolution that public lands were held in trust by the Government for those who became citizens of the United States, and ought not to be permitted to be monopolized in large areas by corporations and the aristocracy of Europe. Both voted down.

Again, a resolution that the United States will not permit a ship canal to be built across the Isthmus of Panama without its consent, except that it will exercise the right to take possession of it whenever the necessity of the country demands. This, too, was voted down.

I also offered a resolution that the various offices of the Government belong to the people thereof, and that frequent changes of Federal officials were necessary to counteract the growing aristocratic tendencies to life office, as well as for the discovery and punishment of frauds and embezzlements of public money. This was voted down.

Again, I offered in sub-committee, resolutions defining the duty of the United States to protect every citizen everywhere, and also that no American citizen should be tried for any act done in this country except under its own laws, and on its own soil, and that there was no power in the Government to send a citizen elsewhere to be tried therefor.

These resolutions were voted down in the sub-committee, but when offered in the general committee, there being nothing in the platform deemed by that committee to be a substantial equivalent, they were adopted, although there were some namby-pamby statements reported by the sub-committee on the same subject.

This will account to those curious in such matters, for two sets of resolutions upon the same subject in the platform, to which I call attention, and designate for convenience as the "American" and the "English" resolutions as to the rights of American citizens to protection by their Government. These declarations of principles seem to cover most of the live questions in politics in which the people are interested.

Through the courtesy of the Chairman of the committee, and by personal intercession, I obtained the boon of thirty minutes to present and discuss a charter of the people's rights at an hour crowding on midnight, but before it could be printed and laid before the convention, and with the refusal of the convention to adjourn to the morning before a vote was taken upon them. So eager were the members to get at their work of predestined nomination. And such a convention has been called a deliberative body! It is true, that it spent days upon the unit rule, which required a man's vote to be cast against his conscience and judgment, in spite of his protest, by others, and days in trying to settle the internal dissentions of the machine politics of a single State; but it could give thirty minutes only to the discussion of principles for the government of the Nation. I therefore could substantially present but one plank, the most important of all, the protection of the American laborer and producer, without which, in my judgment, there can be no prosperity to this country.

And this was voted down in the convention by a vote of 712½ to 97½.

I felt it but right to warn, the convention, however unimportant such warning might seem, of the course of my duty if such a vote passed against the workingmen and women of the country, for whose welfare it was well known I had stood from my earliest manhood. The notice was in this emphatic language: "If you refuse to stand by the workingmen, God help you, I can not." In this there was no mistake. Mr. Watterson, of Kentucky, who followed me, took warning, saying the party would look to God for help, but the Scripture saith, "The prayer of the wicked availeth not." It was due to myself not to adopt the course which certain pure-minded and upright and highly moral politicians deem it proper to pursue, take part in the proceedings of a convention to its end, and then, without giving any notice to anybody, and without protesting, refuse to support its doings. * * *

I will not omit the fact that in the platform adopted there were certain sweet phrases used toward the foreign-born citizen. There were certain honeyed words, over and over repeated, in order that their repetition might seem like earnest advocacy put in favor of labor, and upon some of the topics of our platform. But I do claim, and submit to the just judgment of the people, that comparing the two platforms and taking the action of the convention, every claim of the anti-monopolist and of the National Greenback and Labor men was so contemptuously rejected or so thoroughly smothered by platitudes which would permit any financial theorist or any monopolist to subscribe to the majority platform that it is most apparent on the face of the resolutions that they were simply resolutions of expedients to catch votes by indirection, deception and illusion, not declarations of those high principles which should form the basis of the united action of a great party of the people.

* * * * * * *

The country has had experience in Republican party rule twenty-five years, and knows its results. We therefore have no need to look at its platform, for "by their fruits ye shall know them." * * * * The anti-monopolists can expect nothing from the Republican party for reasons before stated, and because it holds both houses by the rich men, who are the owners of monopolies, or their paid attorneys.

True, it has in all its tariff legislation claimed to protect and cherish American labor, but always only as an adjunct to American capital. Capital engaged in manufactures and other industries can only be successful when the American laborer is well paid and surrounded with the comforts of life. But how little has the greed of capital allowed or comprehended this great fact, to prove which I need only to recall to your minds how capital, chafing under even a partially fair division of its great profits with labor, has sought to relieve itself from this scant measure of justice even by the importation of foreign labor from every country whence it could be brought, from the Chinas to the western shores of the Atlantic.

Why have they done this? Because these imported laborers can, and for a time do, live on what would starve the American workingman, and so can work very much cheaper, for it has ever been the rule, and if the workingmen do not take the remedy for this fearful state of things into their own hand, ever will be the rule that the wages of labor are only so much and no more as will support him and his wife and children in the lowest degree of comfort when all of them are at work who can work.

In addition to this imported cheap labor, and the use of convict labor at a nominal price wherever it could be had, they by debasing and lowering the high standard of American labor, the perfection of machinery, by which so great a share of production is effected, has so lessened muscular effort in labor that capitalists have been enabled to utilize the labor of women and children to a very large extent to do that work which men formerly did. Thus the workingman's wife and sisters are made the instruments of lowering his own rate of wages.

But it will be said, surely to employ the women and children profitably can not be objectionable. Certainly not if it is profitable to themselves, their fathers and husbands and the country.

How stands the fact? Women's labor is employed in manufactories at a very much less price than men's labor, even that poor quality of men's labor imported from abroad, while women and even children can do that class of labor equally well with the best of men. Laboring men are thereby thrown out of employ, or else compelled to work at unremunerative prices. Thus capital gets still further advantage of a tariff put on imported articles, as is claimed, to enable the American producer to pay more to American labor than the foreign laborer receives as wages. It will therefore be seen that capital, thus taking to itself as a rule from the poor mechanic, who invents them, all the good gifts of God given to mankind in improvement of machinery for production, uses those very improvements for the purpose of still further lowering the wages of the American workingmen by the employment of women and female children to tend this improved machinery. To illustrate the extent to which this has gone, there are ninety thousand females in Massachusetts alone, one-sixth of the wage people, working at wages out of their own homes, at an average not more than fifty per cent. of what is paid to males.

General Butler indicts the Republican party for failing in its duty to women, and continues:

The Republican party has granted subsidies to railroads and steamships, erected many and expensive public buildings, spent many millions in opening the mouth of the Mississippi and leveeing its banks, and many millions in improving rivers and harbors. These grants amount to a sum equal to half the national debt. Without criticising the propriety of these grants, although some of them are open to criticism, yet these are all aids to the capitalist and land-owner.

Point me to one grant or act in aid of the workingman. I do not forget the eight-hour law for government laborers and mechanics, but there never has been honesty and power enough in Republican administration to enforce that law.

When in Congress I introduced a bill and advocated it as well as I could that Congress grant aid to families of laboring men in cities to settle on the public lands in the West and make homes for themselves, and as communities be able to protect themselves against the Indians and thus dispense with the cost of the army. It slept in the proper committees of a Democratic House and Republican Senate the sleep of all proposals in favor of labor that knows no waking. * * *

The Republican party has in its ranks many good, true and conscientious men, who followed its fortunes and carried its elections because it protected the labor of the South in its rights, and claimed to protect the laborer of the North in his wages.

I call the attention of such men to the fact that that party has failed to do either. Laboring men are out of employment and starving after a quarter of a century of Republican rule. Nay, more! It is well known in Massachusetts and Rhode Island, and how far in other parts of the North I leave the good and just minded of those localities to speak, capital has coerced the votes of the laboring men to its own purposes by threats, intimidation and in some cases, worse means. The negro of the South, also, can not go to the ballot-box for fear of the shotgun, and if he does the ballot-box stuffer puts in two votes to neutralize his one.

In the matter of finance there is nothing to hope from the Republican party, any more than from the Democratic party. The bankers and capitalists of both parties uniting together have controlled for twenty years the financial legislation of the Nation. And the result? What have we just seen? With money enough in the country for all its wants; with no substantial drain from abroad; with an accumulation of wealth such as the world never has seen; with a crop of corn and wheat almost untouched, and another one about to be garnered; with a stock of petroleum already produced sufficient for the consumption of the world for a year; with nearly a year's stock already produced of cotton goods; with more than six months' stock of woolen goods as they will average; with a production of iron that leaves its further production impossible until greater consumption becomes possible; with provisions in such abundance that the means of sustaining life are cheaper than before for fifty years; yet because of our financial system, in every class of business, embarrassments and failures to an unheard of extent, with banks locking up their money in millions upon millions, and allowing their customers, who, by our financial system, have been made dependent upon them, to be ruined; the producing laborer goes about the streets unemployed; and the farmer's wheat, which with our fathers was a measure of value, is a drug in the market; and that which he raises to-day, produced by the sweat of his face, is without profit to his industry!

We, the despised Greenbackers, offered a remedy for all this which no reflecting, keen-sighted business man will now say would not have been effectual. Myself in Congress over fifteen years proposed that instead of issuing a U. S. bond which would be held by capitalist only, and for the purpose of securing a bank currency, Congress should make an interconvertible bond at a low rate of interest, to be issued by the Government, so that any man might invest in it instead of placing his money in savings banks or trust companies to be loaned out on margins or kiting stocks and then lost when he called for it. That bond bearing three and sixty-five one-hundredths per cent. interest, to be presented by the holder at any time to the Treasury, and legal tenders to be issued for it, and thus the interest to that amount of the National debt accrues to the Government instead of being paid by it from the taxes of the people. And then when another bond was desired by the investor, one should be issued by the Government, and interest thereon begin.

Every financier knows that it is the odd fifty millions withdrawn or put out that makes a redundancy or scarcity of circulating medium; and is there a man who dares say now that such a bond would not have prevented the panic and desolation to business through which we are now passing?

The time has come when the greenback is sustained by the Supreme Court as a constitutional currency against the opinions of the paid attorneys of ever financier of the country. The time will come, if the people of this country can get the clutch of monopoly of its currency off its throat, when such a system of finance as I have sketched will give freedom to the industrial and business interests of the country from the terrible fluctuations which the people now suffer.

* * * * * * *

The Republican party is bound hand and foot to capitalized monopoly. The Democratic party is governed in its conventions by a combination of a solid South, from whence no laboring man, white or black, is a delegate, and where the aristocracy of capital alone is heard, and the political machine corruptions of substantially a single State of the North, which confederacy dominates its platform and nominates its candidates, and holds them firmly in its grip if elected. * * *

How long will the precious ballot be left to every freeman? The people must act now and assert their power, or they may lose it forever. Already the British party in this country, those who ape the British aristocracy, wear clothes which are imported, largely without paying duties, because they feel that an American mechanic can not make cloth good enough for them; can only be waited upon by British servants, and cut their whiskers even, British fashion, so as to appear as un-American as possible, are saying to each other: Why should the lower classes have the ballot, and thus the masses rule the country against us?

The cunning of the monopolists and capitalists has taught them that if they can only keep the people of the country voting according to party lines, they then can govern the country whichever party prevails. Did I need evidence of this, it would be in the declaration ascribed to the largest and ablest railroad king in the country, Mr. Gould, who is said to have testified before a committee, in substance, that when he had a Democratic Legislature to manipulate he was a Democrat, and whenever a Republican Legislature, he was a Republican. That is to say, to carry his measures, he helped elect, by his money, Democrats and Republicans indiscriminately, but both sets of his members are Gould men.

Thus are the people played with and kept apart by the Fetish, called "party allegiance," ever bound to the chariot wheels of their oppressors. * * *

No monopolist cares which party wins. He is only anxious that the nominating convention of each party should nominate a candidate whom he can control.

What then is the remedy for these so monstrous evils? How can the people, the true Democracy, repossess themselves of their government, to make laws to protect their own interests, and to redress these great wrongs, and cause these plunderers to disgorge their robberies from the treasury.

The cry has already gone forth: "If the people put a third candidate in the field those who vote for him will throw away their votes." Be it so. The voter will do worse than throw away his vote if he votes for either candidate of the monopolists. Such vote thereby perpetuates the rule of his oppressors without protest, if by his vote he puts or keeps either in power. * * *

In framing your Electoral ticket, make a fusion in all the States with the supposed minority, and make it upon this theory: not that you are going to vote for the Electors of any candidate opposed to your interests, not that the friends of the other candidate are going to vote for yours, but agree that you will run the same Electoral ticket, provided the electors who compose it are as they ought to be, reputable men who will be bound by their honorable undertakings, which is all there is that binds the Electoral College to vote in any direction: and then have it agreed that the Electoral vote of the State shall be divided in the Electoral College according to the number of votes thrown for your candidate, and the number of votes thrown for the other candidate on the same ticket. The number of votes which each candidate gets will be known with substantial accuracy long before the official count is made. Therefore you will have every incentive to vote for your candidate because the larger number of votes you cast the more Electoral votes will your candidate get, and the less will the other have. And those who are voting for the same Electors with you will throw as many votes as they can for their candidate in order that he shall have as large a share of the Electoral vote of the State as possible, neither in fact voting for the candidate of the other. Thus you will show your strength and hold the balance of power.

Organize in every State, and present at the polls an Electoral ticket, and support it with your votes. * * * Organize in your workshop; agree to vote together for one ticket. There need to be no great and expensive meetings. You can vote together without a brass band just as well as you can with one. Torchlight processions are an invention of your enemies to deceive you into following their banner and marching to their music, and into not voting for your own interests, and the interests of your wives and your children. * * *

In many States, if we exert our strength, we already hold the balance of power. In quite one hundred Congressional districts, less than one thousand votes will determine whether a friend of labor and the people, or the tool of monopoly, shall have a seat in Congress. Let us organize, therefore, in every district, to see to it that no men goes to Congress from any district who is not with us and of us; strong enough in moral rectitude to stand for the rights of the people "unawed by power and unbought by gain."

Again, in balanced States make an alliance with whichever of the other parties will choose so to do. Minorities naturally gravitate toward each other. Give them some State officers and take others to yourselves, upon an agreement that both parties shall vote the same ticket. Be particular to see to it that your own friends are sent to the State Legislatures. There are many States where laws are needed for the protection of the workingmen, the farmer and the merchant against oppressors and monopolies, and if these will stand together, they can get that protection in spite of the monopolies. * * *

General Butler closes his address with a statement of his "grievance" that his counsels were rejected at Chicago, and the assurance that in their candidate they have one who will need no defending, having stood the fire for more than a quarter of a century, and an appeal to the Democracy of Massachusetts to stand by him now as it has done in the past. There is also a postscript, stating that he has issued his address without waiting for Cleveland, against his own judgment and by the desire of many trusted, devoted friends.

A New French Possession.

The Kingdom of Cambodia, China, which has just been annexed by the French, is about as large as a sixth part of France. It is a fertile and productive region, yielding plentiful minerals, game and fish; indeed the fisheries of Great Lake are the chief resource of the country, the exports bringing in some £400,000 yearly. The Me-kong waters the country, and the most productive district borders the river, villages being clustered thickly along the banks, where the inhabitants cultivate cotton, tobacco, indigo, and the mulberry tree. Beyond this zone is a region of swamps and lakes, where the fishing is carried on, and further back is another watery district, occupied by rice and melon culture. Then comes the zone of the higher plains, with valuable forest trees, producing oil, lacquer, etc.; and lastly, the mountains, yielding a harvest of india-rubber, vanilla, etc. Elephants and rhinoceroses inhabit the forests, but tigers and leopards are scarce.—Pittsburg Chronicle-Telegraph.

THE RECORDER.

WEDNESDAY, AUGUST 27, 1884.

RIDDELL & HALL,
Proprietors.

For announcing candidates, $5. Obituary poetry, 5 cents per line. Obituary notices 20 lines free; after that number (excepting the announcement of the death) 3 cents per line.
Tributes of respect from lodges, &c., $1 50

We are authorized to announce
DR. JAMES S. BROWN,
of Warsaw, as a candidate for the State Senate, from this, the 23d Senatorial District, subject to the action of the Democratic party.

GOV. HENDRICK's letter of acceptance was written with a view to having the public read it. He is not verbose and to the point.

THE Michigan Democrats have fused with the Greenbackers, and the State convention indorsed six of the Greenback electors, and nominated seven of its own.

WHEN a trotting nag beats the record of all others, Robert Bonner not long in finding out that he has use for the animal and if money will buy it soon becomes his property.

IN answer to an invitation to join a Blaine Club at Albany, Roscoe Conkling wrote: "I am quite out of politics, and don't wish in any way to be drawn into the pending canvass."

THE Milton Free Press boasts that it is now in its new office, and is three feet above high water mark. You are not out of danger yet, my friend. The Ohio goes four feet better every spring.

Some of the political prognosticators prophesy that an alliance between Butler and Mahone will be formed as to 1888 by which time both believe a new party headed by Butler will sweep the country.

BEN BUTLER is a sharp political crank, and it is amusing to read his declarations in favor of a free and honest ballot. How many votes would a man have to cast to be beyond the pale of honesty if left for Ben to decide?

THE Lawrenceburg Fair was all that the management anticipated, both as to the attendance and exhibition. One of Boone's good cooks, a Mrs. Wingate, furnished the loaf of bread that captured the fine New Home Sewing Machine.

WHEN the Democratic Executive Committee of this district meets to make arrangements for nominating a candidate for Congress, it should cut the business short and declare Hon. John Griffin Carlisle the nominee; for such will be the result of a convention should one be called. Such action on the part of the committee will be endorsed by the party in the district.

DORMAN B. EATON, of the Civil Service Commission, has written a long letter in reply to various communications received by him from Government employes, asking for advice as to the payment by them of assessments for political purposes, the substance of which is that clerks are under no greater obligations to pay than other citizens of the same means, and they should pay or refuse to pay, as they would feel it a duty of a private citizen.

RIDDELL's defeat in the first Appellate district was brought about by those of Reid's friends who have been induced to believe that Riddell was concerned in the Reid-Corneilson trouble, strengthened by the influence of that political renegade, Thomas Hargis, who at any time during his official career as one of the Judges of the Court of Appeals, could find time to take an active part in the political canvasses, notwithstanding the Court of Appeals was about five years behind with its business.

THE County Judge and the Justices of the Peace have the appointment of four students from this county to the State College where they can attend free of tuition. The County Judge also has the appointment of two students from the county to the Madisonville Normal school where they will receive free tuition. This is a rare opportunity for those who wish to attend a good school, and some of Boone county's young citizens should take advantage of these offers. Call on the County Judge for further particulars, in Burlington, where he will be found every Monday.

A writ issued last week, for the arrest of Bos Morgan, charging him with robbing Rothwell. He was tried and acquitted in this court, a few weeks since, upon the charge of murdering Rothwell.—Owen Democrat.

The confession of John Williams, who surrendered to the Owen County Judge a few days since, implicated Morgan, and he having been cleared on the charge of murder, there was no other course to pursue whereby he can be subjected to further investigation concerning the matter. Morgan's accomplices may yet be tried and convicted for murder, but his punishment under the law can not exceed that for robbery, although it may be yet shown that he was the principal in the murder.

WHAT we said last week in regard to re-organizing the Fair has been considered by many of the best citizens of Boone and Kenton counties, and they are now enthusiasticly advocating the measure. The spark has been kindled into a blaze, as it were, and several influential persons who are interesting themselves, report that they find the people willing to lend substantial aid to the enterprise.

Ever since the North Kentucky Agricultural Association suspended, a desire to have another Agricultural Association has lingered with our people, and it is now developed into active work for that end.

It is evident that the people of this county want some place at which to hold annual meetings where they can renew acquaintances and compare notes generally; a place where the citizens of the various neighborhoods can meet, and by mingling with each other become better acquainted and overcome those sectional petty jealousies and animosities that are the result of each neighborhood's being socially isolated.

Aside from the social feature an Agricultural Association, properly conducted, redounds to the interest of the county by improving the productions of the country surrounding, by stimulating the stock raisers and tillers of the soil to an extra effort to excel their neighbors in friendly competition.

The Fair in years gone by was an event looked forward to by nearly every body with pleasure, and its re-establishment will be hailed with delight by the masses.

The proposition is to locate the grounds on the railroad between a point opposite Florence and Erlanger. Papers soliciting subscriptions will be circulated at court next Monday, and those at work in the interest of the Fair, will be glad to have as many of its friends as possible in Burlington on that day.

A MAN's zeal in public enterprises is measured by the liberality with which he subscribes his money to assist in prosecuting them. By this standard it is demonstrated that several of the land owners at the upper end of the proposed Rabbit Hash and Gunpowder pike are intensely in earnest, and have burdened themselves with a subscription to the extent of from $4 to $6 for every acre of land they own, to assist in the construction of that road. If that liberality extended the entire length of the proposed road, there would be no question about the road being built without delay. The pike is to follow the old grade from Rabbit Hash to near Gunpowder, and those living along that part of the route are put to no inconvenience further than putting their hands into their pockets and pulling out the money, while those along the creek will have their farms cut and the building of much new fence necessitated, but to all this they are willing to submit in order to get the road.

It is evident that the Gunpowder subscribers feel the necessity of a good road, and if the proposition to build one to Rabbit Hash fail, the next thing you hear will be that they are headed towards Bellevue and McVille, from which place there is but little doubt that sufficient assistance will come to build the road. If those along the old grade allow the present effort to build the road to be abandoned, they suffer the golden opportunity to pass, for, in all probability, the assistance now guaranteed by the Gunpowder people, will be for ever withdrawn, and without it they cannot turn a wheel, taking the present condition of things as grounds on which to base a prophesy.

Next Saturday the board meets at Rabbit Hash, when the fate of the road will be determined, and it is difficult to believe that those particularly interested will permit an enterprise by which they will be so materially benefited, to fail for the want of means with which to carry it to completion.

At the most but a very short time will elapse before the work of cutting the crop will be commenced in earnest. In a very few instances in the most favored sections cutting has already been done, but in most instances, a few weeks more will be required to properly mature the early set tobacco, and a longer period for the late set. Considerable early tobacco has been topped, and is maturing, though the cool weather, generally prevailing for the past week or so, prevents very rapid ripening. If we have good, warm weather, with good dews in the night, for a few weeks more, the crop will mature splendidly. There is not much reason to expect danger now from the lack of rain, except in the case of late planted tobacco. Early frosts are more to be feared now. If the weather we have had lately prevails much longer it may conduce to that end. A couple of nights last week went close to the frost line in the more Northern or elevated regions.

Planters have been fortunate this year in the freedom of the tobacco fields from the pests that usually harrass them. This unusual immunity is attributed in great part to the protection afforded the plant when in the plant beds by covering them with canvass or, rather, muslin. This practice was quite common the present year, and it is hoped that it will become universal in the future, as it insures more certain and substantial benefit to the planters, while giving to manufacturers a more perfect and useful stock.

Planters will soon have to turn their attention to preparing their barns and sheds for the reception of what promises to be a very large crop. That they are better prepared than ever, in this particular, must be admitted by all who have any communication with the country districts. The value of plenty of barn room has been quite generally demonstrated and recognized, and it is surprising, we are told by correspondents and others, to witness the amount of new barns and additions to old ones that have been put up during the present year. With plenty of barn room, and close attention to curing, and with ordinary weather favoring them, our planters should give us, this year, the finest as well as the largest crop ever produced, and we believe they will.—Western Tobacco Journal, Cincinnati.

YESTERDAY Benjamin C. Cleek, of Beaver, was adjudged a lunatic, and ordered to the asylum at Anchorage.

STATE NEWS.

The corn crop looks fine says the Marion Press.

A negro was elected constable in Christian county.

Flux is prevailing alarmingly in and for miles around New Castle.

In the Logan county jail there are 29 prisoners and in the poor-house thirty.

Lice destroyed a fifty-acre corn field in Barren county. It will not yield one barrel to the acre.

A thief in Midway was caught in the act of stealing some silver spoons, and the owner of the property gave him 100 lashes with a buggy whip.

James Shearn exhibited at the Richmond Fair three squashes raised in Madison county, that weighed 80, 90 and 100 pounds respectively.

Mr. Thos. Croft has a field of corn which, by counting the ears on the stalk, he estimates will make 104 bushels to the acre. His entire crop is very fine this year.—Marion Press.

Live Stock Market.

CINCINNATI, Aug. 25, 1884.

CATTLE.

Receipts to-day, 797 with very few good cattle on sale; market 25 cents higher; prospects favorable; shipments to-day, 171; about 100 left over which are common scalawags.

Best Shippers	6 25 to 6½
Good Shippers	5½ to 6 00
Extra Oxen	4¾ to 5¼
Fair to good Oxen	4 to 4½
Extra Butchers	4½ to 5
Common to Fair	3¼ @ 3¾
Roughs and Scalawags	2 @ 2¾

COWS.

Extra	4½ @ 4¾
Common to Fair	3½ @ 4
Fair to Good	3½ @ 4

BULLS.

Extra	3¼ @ 3½
Fair to good	3 @ 3¾
Heavy feeding steers	4½ @ 5¼
Good stockers	4 @ 4¾

COWS and CALVES.

Common	15 @ $20
Fair to good	30 @ $40
Choice	45 @ $55
Extra	$60
Jerseys	50 @ $90

VEAL CALVES.

Best	6½ @ 7
Common	4 @ 5

HOGS.

Receipts, 2,283, mostly light grass fed—well fatted corn fed hogs are active at the following figures:

Select butchers, heavy shippers	6 25 @ 6 60
Good lights, 180 to 200	5 85 @ 6 25
" " 150 to 175	5 25 @ 5 75

SHEEP.

Liberal receipts—not much of a demand, and the worst market of the season. Common stock has almost to be given away to get rid of it. The pens have not been cleared for the past ten days, while there are about 900 left over to-day unsold.

Best weathers	3¾ @ 4¼
Fair to good	3¾ @ 4
Ewes and wethers mixed	3¼ @ 4
Stock wethers,	2½ @ 3½
Common	75 @ 1 50

LAMBS.

Dull—especially common which are very dull.

Best shippers	4½ @ 5 00
Fair to good	4 @ 4½
Lights	3 @ 3½

W. M. CONNER.

NOTICE.

All those indebted to the estate of Isaac Clore, deceased, are hereby notified that they must come forward and settle the same immediately. Those having claims against the estate of said deceased must present them to the undersigned properly proven, at once. JOHN W. CRIGLER, Administrator.

WITTENBURG COLLEGE,
Springfield, Ohio.
For young men and women. Four courses—Classical, Scientific, Literary and Ladies' Preparatory and Normal departments. New building. Spacious grounds. Teachers of experience. Expenses low. Students going home and returning travel at reduced rates. Fall term begins Sept. 11th. For catalogue containing full details address the Secretary of the Faculty.

FLOUR!
We have TALBOTT'S Flour for sale, by wholesale or retail—Very Cheap.

A. Corbin & Son,
GRANT, KY.

LUMBER.
Goe. M. Bedinger & Co.,
Erlang r, - - Ky.
We keep constantly on hand all kinds of Lumber, Laths and Shingles. Also Builder's supplies of all kinds.
—Come and see Us.—

THE BOONE COUNTY TEACHERS'

INSTITUTE,

WILL BE HELD IN

THE MORGAN ACADEMY,

BURLINGTON, KENTUCKY,

SEPTEMBER 2, 3, 4, and 5th, 1884.

PROGRAMME.

FIRST DAY—Forenoon.

Devotional Exercises, including reading a few verses from Proverbs, by Rev. Froh.
9:30. Opening Address, by Superintendent.
10:00. Organization and enrollment of teachers.
10:10. Word method of teaching reading, Prof. B. F. Bell and William Gaines.—Discussion.
10:35. Mental, Moral and Physical Education, and what belongs to each, by F. W. Bishop and J. C. Sebree.—Discussion.
10:55. Physical, Mathematical and Political Geography, of what does each treat and the best method of teaching Geography, T. Z. Roberts and Miss L. Lampton.—Discussion
11:10. Reading—Object of teaching, J. C. Gordon and R. B. Huey.—Discussion.
11:40. The different periods of United States History, short sketch of each, by Miss Allie Carson.—Discussion.
12:00. What are the prominent causes of failure in teaching? by E. M. Clutterbuck.—Discussion.

Afternoon.

1:40. How can we train our pupils to talk grammatically? Wm. Barkley and Miss Cassie Foulke.—Discussion.
2:00. The best method to teach beginners grammar, David Blythe.—Discussion.
2:30. Arithmetic—Fundamental Rules, Bruce Thornton and Wood Sullivan.—Discussion.
3:00. Qualification of teachers, A. Maxfield and W. E. Morris.—Discussion.
3:15. How to interest and teach primary classes, I. J. Daughters and Miss Katie Craig.—Discussion.
3:30. Simple Proportion—Its principles explained, and the best method of teaching same, by J. P. Craig and B. B. Records.—Discussion.
3:50. Essay—Text Book Knowledge, by Miss Mary Hughes and Miss Carrie Watson.
4:00. Report of Critics.

SECOND DAY—Forenoon.

9:10. Call to order and roll call.
9:20. Mental Arithmetic—Its advantages, and best method of teaching it, J. C. Sebree and Woodford Sullivan.—Discussion.
9:45. Common and Decimal Fractions explained, and the best method of teaching them, I. J. Daughters & A. J. Owens.—Discussion.
10:15. Example in interest worked, explained, and the best method of teaching it, R. B. Huey and John P. Craig.—Discussion.
10:40. Essay, Miss Nettie Gardner.
10:50. Select Reading, Miss Nannie Bristow.
11:00. Orthography, Orthoepy, Geo. Curtright & Miss E. Moore.
11:15. How can pupils be taught good manners? Miss Cassie Foulke and Bertha Conrad.—Discussion.
11:30. Reading, Articulation, Sidney Gaines and R. E. Kirtley.—Discussion.

Afternoon.

1:40. Select Reading, Mrs. Alice Walker.
1:50. Is teaching by memory, solely, the best method of education? W. E. Morris and B. Thornton.—Discussion.
2:10. Select Reading, Robbie Foster.
2:30. False Syntax—Examples given and corrected with reasons assigned.—Class exercises, under the supervision of Will Conner.—Discussion.
3:00. What method of instruction will most successfully lead pupils to original investigation, Wood Sullivan and T. H. Stephenson.—Discussion.
3:25. Lecture—School Management, Rev. Froh.—Alternate—David Blythe.—Discussion.
3:45. Logic of teaching, R. E. Kirtley and J. T. Marshall.—Discussion.
4:00. Report of Critics.

THIRD DAY—Forenoon.

9:30. Roll call.
9:40. Percentage and Interest demonstrated, and the best method of teaching them, F. W. Bishop and W. E. Morris.—Discussion.
10:00. Select Reading, Miss Lizzie Dobbins.
10:10. History, best method of teaching it, J. C. Gordon and A. Maxfield.
10:20. Essay, Miss Mary Bradley.
10:30. Laws of Health, best method of teaching them in the common schools, B. F. Bell.—Discussion.
10:45. Reading, best method of teaching primary classes, F. W. Bishop and Miss Frankie Poland.—Discussion.
11:10. Lecture on object lessons, by B. F. Bell and Miss Nannie Bristow.—Discussion.
11:30. Spelling, best method of teaching primary classes, E. M. Clutterbuck and Miss C. A. Forbes.—Discussion.

Afternoon.

1:40. Select Reading, Mrs Mary Walton.
1:50. Are our courses of study and methods of teaching sufficiently practical? D. M. Snyder and J. C. Sebree.—Discussion.
2:10. Recitation, Robbie Foster.
2:20 Grammar—Annalysis, best method of tenheing it, I. J. Daughters—Alternate, F. W. Bishop.—Discussion.
2:40 Work in the School-room, Its trials and pleasures—Essay, Miss Allie Carson.
2:50. In what way can a teacher most successfully impart moral instructions in school? W. E. Morris and Miss Cassie Foulke.—Discussion.
3:15. Do the good morals of a community depend upon its education? H. Newton and Sidney Gaines.—Discussion.
3:35. Grammar—Elements—Oral Instruction, R. E. Kirtley and B. B. Records.—Discussion.
4:00. Report of Critics.

FOURTH DAY—Forenoon.

9:30. Call to order, Superintendent.
9:40. What kind of physical education is best adapted for introduction in the School-room? B. F. Bell and W. W. Sullivan.—Discussion.
10:00. Composition, best method of teaching it, Rev. Froh and W. E. Clutterbuck.—Discussion.
10:25. Essay, by Miss Allie Carson.
10:35. How can the cordial co-operation of parents be best secured? B. F. Bell.—Discussion.
11:00. Essay—Does the pecuniary prosperity of a nation depend upon its education? Miss Cassie Foulke and T. H. Stephenson.—Discussion.
11:30. Free Discussion—How improve our common schools? Introduced by F. W. Bishop.
11:50 General Questions—Class drill, under the supervision of Will Conner.

Afternoon.

1:50. Hygiene—Lecture—by Dr. J. G. Furnish and R. E. Kirtley.—Discussion.
2:25. Class of six in spelling, to-wit: Wm. Gaines, Mrs. N. Lewis, J. T. Marshall, Miss Lottie Burnett, B. F. Bell and Miss Katie Davis. The class will be under the supervision of Will Conner, who will request each to state the methods practiced and the success attending the employment of each.—Discussion.
2:25. Lecture on Education, by Rev. Froh.
3:00. Common Fractions, Division, best method of teaching it, J. C. Sebree and W. E. Morris.—Discussion.

Closing Address, J. C. Gordon.—Report of Critics.

Mr. Joseph Reed will recite one of his select pieces one day during the Institute.

The exercises of the Institute will commence at 9:30 a. m.

Every teacher of a Common School, and every one who expects to apply for a certificate, must attend the full session of the Institute. Those failing to attend the entire session, and to give a satisfactory excuse, will forfeit their certificates; and the law will be faithfully and impartially executed. Therefore, we hope that each teacher will be present, and willingly and cheerfully labor for the improvement of the members of the Institute in the science of teaching and in the most approved practice; and in promoting harmony of feeling; and the greatest possible advancement in useful and practical information.

A cordial invitation is extended to the trustees, and all persons who feel an interest in the cause of education.

Under a late decision all certificates issued under the old law are null and void, therefore, those expecting to teach must obtain new certificates. H. J. FOSTER, County Superintendent.

The Board of Examiners will hold their sessions on the third and fourth Saturdays in August, 1884. There will be no examination of teachers during the Institute.

As special Agent for the Gholson Fencing Company, for Boone County, I am prepared to build their patent fence at any time. This is the cheapest and best fence in use. It needs no talking up, as it is fast selling itself wherever it is introduced. Any number of wires can be used.
28-1y-84. G. C. GRADDY, Bullittsville, Ky.

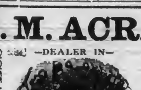
CLEARING SALE!

To make room for Fall Stock I have reduced Custom-Made Suits 20 per cent. and on ready-made Men's, Boys' and Children's Clothing 25 per cent. for Cash only, until August 20.

H. F. BLASE,
540 Madison Street
COVINGTON, - - - - - KY.

John Q. Davis,
—DEALER IN—
BOOTS & SHOES,
HATS AND CAPS

Of the very best Eastern and Cincinnati manufactures. I claim to be the best posted man in my line in this section. Goods sold absolutely on their merits, and ample willing reclamation made where goods do not come up to the "SCRATCH."



YOU CAN AS SAFELY SEND YOUR CHILDREN AS TO COME YOURSELVES.

Thankful for the very liberal patronge in the past, and hoping with increased facilities to still do the BOOT and SHOE business of this section,
Respectfully,
J. Q. DAVIS,
SIGN BIG RED BOOT, MAIN, Street, Rising Sun, Indiana.

WM. COLTER,
—DEALER IN—
Clothing, Boots, Shoes, Hats, Caps, Millinery Goods, Coals, Etc.
JOB LOTS OF ABOVE A SPECIALTY,

We are just now devoting our entire energy to making preparations for the ensuing season, and can promise to call your attention to a stock of Boots and Shoes, Rubber Goods, Men's and Boys' Ready-Made Clothing, Ladies' Cloaks, and Wraps, Millinery Goods, Ribbons, Mens' Hats, Buck Gloves, &c., in which, for real solid and genuine Bargains, we challenge competition. We intend to lead the market in this section much more than we have ever done before, which we can at once prove to you at your first inspection. Have already bought over 500 Overcoats, over 800 Suits, 1,000 pairs of Gloves, over 70 cases Kip Boots, 16 cases Mens' Hats and Caps, all grades. And we are not asleep if it is hot. The above line of Goods is kept in the lower half and 2nd floor of our Mammoth House. We are slashing down prices on all Summer Goods now, as we do not carry any Goods over. Thanks for past favors. Respectfully,
Wm. COLTER, Rising Sun, Ind.

SOUTHERN EXPOSITION
LOUISVILLE,
Opens August 16th. Closes October 25th, 1884.
15 ACRES UNDER ONE ROOF.
TWO CONCERTS EACH DAY
By Cappa's and Gilmore's, the most famous bands of the world.
Largest and Finest Display of Machinery in MOTION ever witnessed anywhere.
LOWEST RAILWAY RATES EVER GIVEN IN THE STATE.
ART BUILDINGS,
CONTAINING THE CHOICEST PICTURES IN AMERICA.
Ten works of Kentucky's great sculptor, Joel Hart, the best possible collection
One hundred counties in Kentucky will make exhibits, displaying products which will demonstrate this State's tremendous capacities and future greatness. An occasion for Kentucky pride and glory—KENTUCKY TRIUMPHANT.
AN IMMENSE LIVE STOCK EXHIBITION
Presenting at one time in line over $1,000,000 worth of horses, comprising all the sires that have made Kentucky famous. The exhibit will surpass in extent the Royal Stock Show in London, and present to the visitor the grandest, completest, and most magnificent Stock exhibit the world has ever witnessed, and a sight that can not be duplicated in the world.
BENNETT H. YOUNG, President. J. M. WRIGHT, General Manager.

A. M. ACRA,
—DEALER IN—
HARNESS  SADDLES.
Fine and Cheap Buggy Harness.
BURLINGTON, KY.
I also have a full stock of BUGGY WHIPS, LAP DUSTERS, ANKLE BOOTS and TROTTING BALLS and everything else usually kept in a first-class harness shop.
REPAIRING A SPECIALTY.
Give Me A Call.

W. J. RICE,
CARPENTER & BUILDER,
BULLITTSVILLE, KY.
Is prepared Raise or Move EITHER LOG or FRAME BUILDINGS On Short Notice.
And at the Lowest Possible Figures.
38-tf Your orders respectfully solicited

THE LEADING CAMPAIGN BOOK!
History of Growth, Development and Resources of the Republic. Review of past Administrations. Biographies of Candidates, 1884. 800 Pages Fine illustrations. Send 50cts. for full outfit and begin work. Circular free. Address
J. C. McCURDY, Cincinnati, O.

HARTER'S IRON TONIC
FACTS REGARDING Dr. Harter's Iron Tonic.
It will purify and enrich the BLOOD, regulate the LIVER and KIDNEYS, and RESTORE THE HEALTH and VIGOR of YOUTH! In all those diseases requiring a certain and efficient TONIC, especially Dyspepsia, Want of Appetite, Indigestion, Lack of Strength, etc., its use is marked with immediate and wonderful results. Bones, muscles and nerves receive new force. Enlivens the mind and supplies Brain Power.
LADIES suffering from all complaints peculiar to their sex will find in DR HARTER'S IRON TONIC a safe and speedy cure. It gives a clear and healthy complexion.
DR. HARTER'S IRON TONIC IS FOR SALE BY ALL DRUGGISTS AND DEALERS EVERYWHERE.

For A Business Education Attend the Commercial College Of Kentucky University, Lexington, Ky.
WILBUR R. SMITH, Lexington, Ky.

NO NEW THING.
STRONG'S SANATIVE PILLS
Used throughout the country FOR OVER 40 YEARS, And thus proved The Best Liver Medicine in the World.
No Griping, Poisonous Drugs, but purely Vegetable, safe and reliable. Prescribed even by Physicians. A speedy cure for Liver Complaint, Regulating the Bowels, Purifying the Blood, Cleansing from Malarial Taint. A perfect cure for Sick Headache, Constipation and all Billious Disorders. Sold by Druggists. For Pamphlets, etc., address C. E. HULL & CO., 18 Cedar St., N. Y. City.

FOUND AT LAST.
THE ANIMAL SAFE GUARD.
Patent applied for. Absolute cure for all breachy stock. Simple and safe appliance; always at hand. No Bow, no Yoke, no pole used to injure stock. No animal will jump a fence when this is used. Send One Dollar for Farm-right and full Instruction. Address
C. F. BROSEKE, Justice of the Peace, Falmouth, Ky.

MARRIAGE AND HEALTH
DR. WHITTIER, CINCINNATI, OHIO.

PISO'S CURE
CURES WHERE ALL ELSE FAILS.
25 CTS.

KENTUCKY UNIVERSITY, LEXINGTON, KY.
Three Colleges—Arts, Bible and Commercial. College of the Bible, no tuition fees. Session opens the Second Monday in September. For catalogues, address CHAS. LOUIS LOOS, President of the University, or ROBT. GRAHAM, President of the College of the Bible.

LAW SCHOOL
OF WASHINGTON AND LEE UNIVERSITY.
GEN. G. W. C. LEE, President.
Instruction by text-books and printed lectures, with courses of lectures on special subjects by eminent jurists. Tuition and fees, $80 for session of nine months, beginning Sept. 18. For catalogue and full information address CHAS. A. GRAVES, Prof. of Law, Lexington, Va.

THE COMPLETE HOME.
book. New edition.—New bindings.—New illustrations from new designs. Superbly gotten up. Same low price. Adapted to all classes. Sells at sight. Agents doing big work. EXCELLENT TERMS. The handsomest prospectus ever issued. Apply now.
WM. GARRETSON & CO., Lexington, Kentucky. Also other grand new books and Bibles.

OPIUM and WHISKY HABITS cured at home without pain. Book of particulars sent Free. B. M. WOOLLEY, M. D., Atlanta, Ga.

Local News.

Uncle Billy Rouse has been quite sick with flux.

The drought's back bone commenced weakening last Thursday.

Read the Sheriff's proclamation to the tax payers of this county.

There will be a basket meeting at the Bellevue Christian church next Sunday.

Rev. Morgan occupied the pulpit in the Baptist church at this place Sunday evening.

F. P. Walton had the misfortune to break and ruin one of his tobacco screws last week.

The jailer's business is on a boom in this county, and it was especially brisk last Thursday morning.

F. Riddell purchased of John G. Gaines, last week, the Benjamin Sherrill store house property for $1,800.

Uncle Ben Rouse has in his back yard a hemp stalk that is sixteen feet high, and it looks like a young sapling.

The people of the extreme northern part of this county know what it is to have too much water or "too none."

James Riddell's daughter lost a red shawl on her return from the Fair last Saturday. The finder will leave it at Gainesville or Hebron.

Last Friday Mr. S. P. Brady and wife, their guests and Misses Annie and Mattie Winston had a very pleasant visit to Big Bone Springs.

John Aylor and Miss Hattie Clore, of Hebron, were married, last Sunday, at Elder H. J. Foster's, in the presence of a large number of their friends.

The little steamer Charles L. Grant stranded on the Rising Sun bar last Thursday, careened, and filled with water. Capt. B. is having bad luck with the Grant.

Tobacco knives were put to work last week, and some of the weed was cut to prevent its being ruined in the patch. It was excessively warm for the business.

Two butcher wagons from Burlington wended their way to the country Saturday morning, issuing supplies to country people whom they anticipated had more money than meat.

Rabbi Stucky, who lives but a short distance southeast of Burlington, has a very fine crop of both corn and tobacco. There are several small localities in the county where good crops prevail.

The front end of the RECORDER firm left for Louisville this morning to attend the Exposition. All the press gang of the State will be there to-day and to-morrow, as guests of the Exposition.

A white boy and a monkey wrench were making short work of an impudent negro boy on the street here the other day, and had a peace officer not interfered he would have done a good job of it.

Those who were elected Constables at the last August election should bear in mind that the law requires them to execute bond within thirty days after election, and in case of their failure to execute their bonds they forfeit their offices.

Gabriel T. Gaines, of Flickertown, is inclined to the opinion that cholera will prevail in this country next year, and he is trying to consume watermelons enough to carry him through that period, and for that purpose he buys a wagon load at a time.

Died—On the 21st inst., little son of James Horton. The funeral was preached by Rev. C. C. Conner, in the Universalist church at this place last Friday at 1 o'clock, after which the remains were taken to Bellevue and interred in the cemetery at that place.

Esq. Baker has been confined at home by an ankle he sprained by stepping in a sink hole. He had a large slice of the population of Constance before him last Thursday, having a very interesting term of court, but the Commonwealth's exchequer was not inflated thereby.

One of the negroes who defied Constable Sandford to arrest him a few weeks since, was arrested by that officer the other day and brought before Esquire Baker who fined him $10 and days imprisonment, as a lesson for interfering with an officer when in the discharge of his duty.

The day has come when to leave the grave of the departed one unmarked by a neat stone, is not suffered by even those in the most ordinary walks of life, and all can be pleased in both design and price by Huschart & Co., of Lawrenceburg, Ind. John Beall, of Hebron, is their agent.

Bondurant Bros.' steam threshing machine aroused the natives when it came snorting into town last Saturday under a full head of steam. Zack was at the throttle, and while in town gave a free exhibition of how badly boys can be stampeded when investigating a strange and dangerous looking object.

Some scamp who has no fear of the devil nor sympathy for a poor printer, made a raid on the cabbage patch of the junior member of the RECORDER firm, a few nights since, and appropriated several fine heads of that luscious vegetable. He don't care much about the cabbage but would like to know who the inhuman thief is.

The amusement-going public are invited to be present at La Grace Grove again on the afternoon of the 30th inst., when a delightful picnic will be given. The music will be furnished by Prof. Thompson, of Cincinnati, which is a guaranty that it will be fine. The committee is C. Ernest, W. S. McGlasson, James Conner and Walter Gutridge.

Numerous petty thefts have been committed [illegible] this summer, many [illegible] and if the thieves are not very careful they will go home some night with their hides well perforated with shot. They are being watched for at more places than they imagine, and they will confront the muzzle of a shot gun before they expect it.

A SURPRISE PARTY.

Two Prisoners make a Bold Dash for Liberty, but are captured and both presented with a pair of Bracelets.

Last Thursday morning at 7 o'clock when Mr. Cowen and his son, Thomas, took breakfast to the three prisoners in jail, Monroe, who was sent from Walton and has about 20 days of imprisonment before him, and Marks, who was sent from Beaver, to await the big sixten in October, made a break for liberty. They were confined in the second story, and when the door was opened they made a dash, and colliding with Uncle Sam and Tom, Tom and the two prisoners, the waterbucket and basket containing breakfast for three men, came tumbling heels over heads down the steps, landing in a conglomerated mass on the ground. Monroe was grabbed in the descent and held, but Marks was soon on his feet and commenced running, but there being several on the streets he was headed off at every turn and captured before he got out of town, and both prisoners were soon again lodged in jail and shackeled. Monroe seems to be cranky and says that the reason he wanted to get out was because he has overheard some fellows talking and they said they intended to hang him. Last Thursday night was the time he expected them, but as the mob failed to materialize, probably his nerves have become quieted. Thorp, the third prisoner, and the one who is guilty of a grave charge, made no attempt to escape, and remained on his bed.

NOTES.

Everybody yelled "catchhim."

Dr. Bange wanted them to wait until he loaded his cannon.

Monroe got a considerable cut on his head by falling down the steps.

Tom Cowen now performs his toilet after his morning visit to the jail.

Dudley Rouse was soon on the scene and put his muscle to valuable use.

Mrs. Crisler's big dog was an important factor in the capture of Marks.

For a short distance, Dr. Grant is a good runner. He made it from one end of his yard to the other in 1½ seconds.

Riddell, of the Boone County Recorder, in a late issue said, "that whisky had to go, Jerry," in Owen. Well, that's true, but if there is any place on earth where whisky ought "to go," it is Burlington, Riddell's own town; and if we were living there, we would be the most violent, determined, stubborn, irreconcilable and fanatical prohibitionist in all the country. We know that while we were Commonwealth's Attorney in that county, that one ounce of Burlington whisky made Riddell's client steal sheep from his own father and a half a pint made him steal them from his wife.—Owen Democrat.

That's rough on the sheep, but as Jerry is evidently mistaken as to the facts, they should pardon him. We have no whisky by the ounce in Boone; we go by the quart as the minimum; we never had a client charged with sheepstealing while friend Jerry was Commonwealth's Attorney; we never had at any time a client charged with sheepstealing from his father or wife; we never had a client charged with sheep stealing; we never had a case in a court while friend Jerry was Commonwealth's Attorney; we never had a case in any court; we never had a client; we never practiced law while friend Jerry was Commonwealth's Attorney; we never have practiced law at any time; we are not a lawyer. Thus we see that with these few very trifling defects, Jerry's charge is correct. But "It is human to err."

A tramp representing that he was engaged with Bondurant's threshing machine struck the town last Saturday about the time the machine came in. He followed it to Mrs. Dempsey's where Geo. Hughes learned he was a stranger to the Bondurant boys and not working for them, when he "fired him out." He afterwards got with John Carpenter, a half-witted fellow and accompanied with a bottle of long-ranged corn juice they proceeded to Legrand Gaines' barn where they turned in for the night. The tramp persuaded Carpenter that the night's repose would be much more pleasant were they to divest themselves of their clothing, and they at once proceeded to disrobe for the night. After sleeping some time Carpenter awoke, and to his surprise the tramp had absconded' exchanging hats, pants and shoes with Carpenter before going, leaving in their stead an old pair of shoes long since worn out. Carpenter was greatly worsted by the exchange and at once proceeded to Deputy Sheriff German's for assistance in recovering his property, but it being at such a late hour in the night German did not respond, and Carpenter was left to mourn his loss.—John says it wont do to sleep with everybody, "will it?"

Mr. Isaac Flick, of Bellevue, took a load of watermelons through here last Friday, and, of course, he is too clever a man to pass this office without setting 'em up, and therefore left the most delicious melon it has been the pleasure of the weary printers to sample this season. We obeyed his injunction not to hurt ourselves, but we don't know what might have been the result had we not had the unpleasant assistance of three other very liberal eaters.

The knights of the mallet and wicket dedicated a new croquet park last Saturday. The speechifying which all such occasions require was well delivered by Dr. Bange in the presence of a large and enthusiastic crowd of the admirers of the game. Had it not been for this, one of the most important events in the history of Burlington, several thousand more of her citizens would have attended the Lawrenceburg Fair that day.

The pugilists were taken before Esq Baker Friday, and the two principals fined one cent and cost each, while Aaron, the colored boy who proposed to interfere with constable Sandford when he parted the combattants was fined ten dollars and cost for his freshness. [illegible] on those who interfere with officers in the discharge of duties.

Venus Lodge I. O. O. F., of Florence will give a big picnic on the 13th of next month. The boys say they will have every thing that is advertised, "mule trick and all."

NEIGHBORHOOD NEWS.

Bullittsville.

The literary has again resumed work.

Elder Howe preaches here next Sunday.

Wm. Gaines and Billy Crisler started Tuesday for Canton, N. Y., where they will attend school this fall and winter.

Miss Lou Kendall has returned from Louisville accompanied by two lady friends, a Miss Blankenbecker and the other one's name has escaped our memory.

Jas. Clore in company with his sister Miss Anna, and Miss Fannie Campbell, of Covington, while enroute from the Lawrenceburg Fair in trying to pass a buggy near Gainesville, ran into a rock pile and capsized, hurting Miss Fannie, the rest of the party luckily escaped being hurt.

Rabbit Hash.

Corn and grass are suffering for rain.

C. G. Riddell returned home all right from Burlington.

The ferry is having a big trade now, ferrying wheat and coal.

B. F. Bell attended the teachers' examination at Burlington last Saturday.

The tobacco is suffering very badly, and some are cutting in order to save it.

M. F. Morrison is very busy making wagons and buggys and doing general blacksmithing.

Dr. Cowen and Hon. J. A. Wilson attended the watermelon party at Milton Kirtley's last Thursday.

Ben Wilson has added much to the appearance of his residence by painting it and putting up new shutters.

John P. Ryle is reroofing and siding up his tobacco house preparing for the handling of tobacco again this winter.

The weather still continues dry. We had a very light shower last Thursday, but it was hardly enough to lay the dust.

B. C. Calvert is taking in all the lose stands of plums and barrels of apples, while Z. T. Holmes is engaged in the same business.

Union.

Since my last communication, two weeks ago, we have had weather warm enough for anyone. But it is cool now.

Misses Atma and Mattie Baker, of Covington, are the guests of relatives here...Miss Fannie Counley, of Terre Haut, Ind., is visiting Mrs. Bannister...Misses Mary and Bettie Haven, of Covington, who were the guests of Theresa Lassing returned to the city last week...Mrs S. Riley, of Owen county was the guest of J. W. Tallaferro last week...J. A. Huey, sr, went to New Liberty, last week, to see his brother, G. W. H., who is quite ill...A. Rachel leaves for Danville, Ind., Normal College next week...Mrs. Gibson, of St. Louis, accompanied by her little neice, Gertrude Frazier, is visiting her parents here...Rosa Sinnsifer, of Walton, is visiting her sister at this place...Amelia Hughes, of Burlington, spent last Tuesday with Mrs. Conner..Mary Wilkie is visiting relatives in Covington..Callia Taliaferro will leave shortly for Nicholasville, Ky, where she will attend school...Miss Mary Clarkson, of Kansas, and Miss Lillie Jordan, of Newport, Ky., are the guests of their aunt here...Miss Virginia Taliaferro is visiting Miss Kate Bradford, of Florence...Mrs. Anna Cleek is quite ill at her father's, N B Stephens...Mrs Lipp a very old and feeble lady is very sick at the residence of her daughter, Mrs. Norman...Miss Anna Anderson is absent on a visit to friends at Chilesburg, Ky...Mrs. Rachel Anderson is making a short visit in Rising Sun.

Normansville.

Hamilton district wants a good teacher for five or ten months school. Good salary will be paid. None but first class teacher, well recommended, need apply.

Corn and tobacco have been injured greatly in this vicinity by dry weather, but the light shower of rain is improving them somewhat, but can not make more than two thirds of a crop.

There came near being a serious accident at the Springs last Wednesday. A fill had just been finished on the new pike at that point and the men were cutting brush to lay across the road to prevent travel over it, when three young ladies, two daughters of J. W. Kennedy, of this place and Miss Mulford, of Covington, came along in a buggy and there being no warning of danger, they drove on the fill before noticing their mistake, and in attempting to drive off on to the bridge at that place the buggy upset, throwing the young ladies violently on the ground. Fortunately O. M. Huey was just in advance of the buggy, and caught the horse, preventing it running away and causing a more serious accident. The young ladies were taken to Dr. Adam's residence, where their injuries were examined. Miss Lutie Kennedy escaped with a slight injury to one hand, Miss Mulford received a severe blow on the nose which, luckily was not low enough down to brake any bones; Miss Katie Kennedy being on the lower side received the force of the fall on her right shoulder, and she will probably not be able to use her arm for several days. They are improving and none of the injuries are considered dangerous.

Waterloo.

The crops are improving wonderfully since the recent rain.

The attendance at the Lawrenceburg Fair from this place was very limited.

The many friends of G. W. Huey, of Big Bone, are sorry to hear of his serious illness.

Prof. J. T. Marshall has been before the board of examiners to obtain authority to tutor the young.

This section was visited on the 21st by a fine rain, which much revived the spirits of the farmers.

Conner & Walton have driven near 800 sheep and lambs from this neighborhood during the season.

Esq. Sutton gave us a hasty call the other day while traveling in the interest of several insurance companies.

We are glad to welcome Josiah H. Walton back to our neighborhood, he having moved from Bellevue to his farm near here.

Ben Butler cuts no figure in the presidential contest in our town. We have no spoons of the proper metal, consequently we do not need the "club" spoken of by your correspondent up in the north end.

Public school will begin in district No. 6 September 1st, under the tutelage of Prof. R. B. Huey. We hear that the McVille district has five applicants—more fortunate than district No. 7 which has none.

Leonard Clore is framing a barn to be erected on his McVille farm. The timber is being taken from the house built by John Marshall, sen., according to the best recollection of Uncle Tudor, in the year 1810. The timber is sound, except some that is slightly worm eaten, and will probably last the same length of time in the barn.

Personal Mentions.

[If you have friends from a distance visiting you or expect to be away from home on business or pleasure, let us have the item for this column.]

Mrs. Dr. Grant is entertaining her mother.

Judge Dills attended the Cynthiana Fair two days last week.

Dr. Sam Adams, of Big Bone, was among our welcome visitors last Thursday.

James Huey and wife, of Union, were the guests of H. P. Stephens and wife Sunday.

Jeff. Kyle and wife, of Mt. Carmel, Ohio, were visiting their relatives in this county last week.

Ex-Sheriff, Geo. W. Sleet, of Beaver, made Burlington a flying visit last Wednesday. He is George of old.

Miss Fannie Rice accompanied by her cousin, Miss Lucy Rice, left last Thursday for a visit to Lawrenceburg and Carrollton, to be absent several weeks.

Rev. C. C. Conner and family, of Newtown, Ohio, spent several days last week with his relatives near here. He filled his regular appointment here on Sunday.

Boone's Democratic Executive Committee was confirmed by default.

There will be a Sunday-school celebration at Hopeful church, Saturday, September 6th. Everybody is invited to attend and bring well filled baskets.

Charlie Scothorn will sell his personal property on the 4th of next month, at Francesville, after which he will journey toward the setting sun to locate in Kansas. We are sorry to loose him.

TAX NOTICE.

The law requires me to collect and pay over 80 per cent of the county revenue by the 1st day of October. All persons not paying their taxes when called on are requested to meet me or my deputy in their voting precincts at the following time and places:

Petersburg, Monday, November 17
Bellevue, Wednesday, November 19.
Florence, Friday, November 21.
Carlton, Saturday, November 22.
Union, Monday, November 24.
Beaver, Tuesday, November 25.
Hamilton, Wednesday, November 26.
Hebron, Thursday, November 27.
Walton, Friday, November 28.
Verona, Saturday, November 29.
Burlington, Monday, December 1.

Any riding done to collect taxes after the above dates will be done at the cost of the parties owing the same.

J. R. CLUTTERBUCK, S. B. C.

Flour! Flour!
TALBOTT'S
CELEBRATED BRAND OF FLOUR is for sale at the following places in Boone County, Ky.

A. Corbin & Son, Grant.
Dudley Rouse & Sam'l Cowen, Burlington.
Rouse Bros., Florence X-Roads.
W. W. Garnett, Hamilton.
Wilson & Riddell, Rabbit Hash.
E. L. Clements, Clements' Store.
Omer Kirtley, Kirtley's Landing.

TALBOTT'S FLOUR
—Is the Best, take no other.—
It is Cheap for the Quality.

FOR SALE.
50 head of stock ewes and a fresh milch cow—will sell cheap.
J. J. RUCKER, Constance, Ky,

SCIENCE-HILL
An English & Classical school for girls.
FOUNDED 1825 BY MRS. TEVIS.
Aims to give its pupils elements of a complete education. Faculty selected from best Eastern Colleges. Terms reasonable. Send for catalogue, W. T. Poynter, D. D., Principal, Shelbyville, Ky.

COMMISSIONER'S SALE.

Boone Circuit Court, Ky.

W. E. Anderson, Plaintiff,
Against | Notice of sale in Equity.
Daly Masters, &c., Defendants.

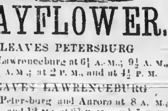
By virtue of a judgment and order of sale of the Boone Circuit Court, rendered at the April term thereof, 1884, in the above cause, the undersigned will, on Monday the 1st day of Sept., 1884, at 1 o clock p. m., or thereabout, (being County Court) proceed to offer for sale at public auction, on a credit of 6 months, at the Courthouse door, in the town of Burlington, the property mentioned in the judgment, to wit:

Lying in the town of Constance, beginning at a stone on the bank of the Ohio river, lower corner of Daly Masters' lot; thence with a line thereof s 20 1-4 w 90 1-4 poles to a stone, another corner of said lot in John Hood's line; thence with said line n. 69 1-2 w. 61 7-11 feet to a stone in said line; thence n. 20 1-4 e. 90 1-5 poles to a stone under the river bank witnessed by a stone in the line on the bank; thence s. 70 e. 61 7-11 feet to the beginning, containing 2 acre and 26 4-11 poles. It will be offered in two lots, one north and one south of the road and then as a whole, the bid or bids making the most money will be accepted.

The purchaser will be required to give bonds with approved security for the payment of the purchase money, to have the force and effect of a judgment, bearing legal interest from the day of sale, according to law. Bidders will be prepared to comply promptly with these terms. Bonds pay able to the undersigned.

W. L. RIDDELL, M. C. B. C. C.

GOLD for the working class. Send 10c for postage, and we will mail you free, a royal, valuable box of sample goods that will put you in the way of making more money in a few days than you ever thought possible at any business. Capital not required. We will start you. You can work part the time only. The work universally adapted to both sexes, young and old. You can easily earn from 50 cents to $5 every evening. That all who want work may test the business, we make this unparallele l offer; to all who are not well satisfied we will send $1 to pay for the trouble of writing us. Full particulars, directions, etc., sent free. Fortunes will be made by those who give their whole time to the work. Great success absolutely sure. Don't delay. Start now. Address STINSON & Co., Portland, Maine.



A. L. Brown,

THE HATTER,
Cor. Pike and Washington Streets
COVINGTON, - - KY.

Has always on hand a large variety of Men's, Boys' and Children's Hats, and prices GUARANTEED to be as low as the lowest.
Gents' Furnishing Goods a Specialty.

TIME CARD OF THE

MAYFLOWER.
LEAVES PETERSBURG
For Lawrenceburg at 6½ A. M.; 9½ A. M., and 11½ A. M.; at 2 P. M., and at 4½ P. M.
LEAVES LAWRENCEBURG
For Petersburg and Aurora at 8 A. M., 10 A. M. and 12 M.; at 2½ P. M. and 5 P. M.
LEAVES PETERSBURG
For Aurora at 8½ A. M., 10½ A. M.; at 1 P. M., and 3 P. M.
LEAVES AURORA
For Petersburg and Lawrenceburg at 9 A. M., 11 A. M.; 1½ P. M. and 4 P. M.
ELIHU ALDEN, Master.

L. KUPPERSCHMID,
—42 WALNUT STREET,—
Lawrenceburg. - - Ind.
Always keeps on hand a large assortment of WATCHES, CLOCKS, JEWELRY, &c. Repairing Watches and Clocks a specialty. Also, agent for the Rockford Watch Company.
Which manufactures the finest movement made, and they are used by all railroad men.
—Give Me a Call—

County Directory.

OFFICERS.

Assessor—G. M. Riley.
County Surveyor—W. E. Vest.
School Commissioner—D. M. Snyder.
Coroner.—Dr. A. A. Murat, Constance.

COURTS.

CIRCUIT COURT meets the 2d Monday in April and first Monday in October; P. U. Major, Judge; W. L. Riddell, Clerk A. G. DeJarnette, Commonwealths Attorney; W. L. Riddell, T[illegible] Jury Fund.

COUNTY COURT meets the first Monday in every month. L. H. Dills, Judge; S. W. Tolin, County Attorney. M. T. Garnett, Clerk; J. R. Clutterbuck, Sheriff, T. W. Finch and W. T. German, Deputy Sheriffs.

QUARTERLY COURT meets the first Monday in March, June, September and December. The officers of the County Court preside.

COURT OF CLAIMS meets the first Monday in November.

MAGISTRATES' COURTS are held in March, June, September and December, as follows:

Bellevue—M. B. Green, first Saturday, and T. H. Sutton, third Monday. J. M. Moody, Constable.

Burlington—E. H. Baker, Thursday after first Monday, and Oscar Gaines, fourth Monday. R. H. Sandford, Constable.

Carlton A. G. McConnell, Wednesday after second Monday, and B. H. Ryle, Saturday after third Monday. Walter Ryle, Constable.

Petersburg—Jos. Hensley, Wednesday after first Monday and L. A. Loder fourth Saturday. Geo. Comer, Constable.

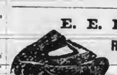
Beaver—W. M. Rouse, Friday after the third Monday, and

Union—M. C Norman, Thursday after third Monday, and H. Bannister, Thursday after second Monday. A. D. Riley, Constable.

Hamilton—F. M. Howlett, Tuesday after second Monday; W. W. Garnett, Wednesday after third Monday. R. L. Roberts Constable.

Walton—T. F. Curley, second Friday, S. F. Johnson, Tuesday after second Friday W. C. Moxley, Constable.

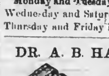
H. C. CHAMBERS,
AUCTIONEER
FLORENCE, - - - KENTUCKY.



CONNER YAGER
Attorney and Counselor at Law,
FLORENCE, - - KENTUCKY

ROBERT B. REED
Attorney at Law.
OFFICE AT - UNION, KY

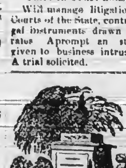
F. RIDDELL. H. P. STEPHENS.
RIDDELL and STEPHENS,
ATTORNEYS at LAW
BURLINGTON, KY.
Office over Dudley Rouse's Store.



W. E. VEST,
COUNTY SURVEYOR
WALTON, KY.
Is prepared to do all kinds of surveying. All orders sent him through the mail to Walton, will receive his prompt attention.

E. E. IGOE,

Resident Dentist,
Rising Sun, Ind.
WITH
J. P. Ulrey.
Monday and Tuesday at Rising Sun. Ind Wednesday and Saturday at Aurora, Ind.; Thursday and Friday at Lawrenceburg.



DR. A. B. HARRYMAN,

Resident Dentist.
Office over Post-Office,
AURORA. INDIANA.

J. J. Landram. G. G. Hughes.
LANDRAM & HUGHES.
ATTORNEYS at LAW.
Will practice in the Boone Circuit Cour and the Court of Appeals. Prompt attention given to Collections, on application to G. G. Hughes, Burlington, Ky.

S. W. TOLIN,
ATTORNEY AT LAW
BURLINGTON, - - - KY
Office in Court-house on 2d floor.
Will manage litigation in any of the Courts of the State, contracts and other legal instruments drawn up at reasonable rates. Aprompt an studious attention given to business intrusted to my care. A trial solicited. 12-1y

AURORA MARBLE AND GRANITE WORKS, Aurora, Ind
Will have constantly on hand
Marble and Granite Monuments,
Italian & American Headstones, &c.
I am ready to do all kinds of Stone Work on short notice and at low prices Hoping to receive the patronage of Boone County, I am respectfully,
F. W. KASSEBAUM.

INSURE AT HOME
The Farmers' Mutual Fire
INSURANCE COMPANY
Of Boone County
Is now completely organized and receiving applications for insurance.
Its Rates are Lower
Than those of any other Company, and it gives the farmers of Boone County a
HITHERTO UNKNOWN ADVANTAGE
In keeping their property insured
EVERY FARMER IN THE COUNTY
should take a policy at once.
J. A. GAINES, President, Burlington, Ky. | J. H. WALTON, Secr'tary, Constance, Ky.
R. RANDALL, Treasury.
DIRECTORS,
LEGRAN GAINES, A. L. UTZ
JNO. STEPHENS.
OSCAR GAINES, Agent. | C. L. CR[illegible], Assessor.

THE DRY GOODS DEPARTMENT!
—IS NOW COMPLETE AT—
COLTER, POWELL AND OWNBY'S,
New Styles of Sidenia Fancy Plaids and other elaborate styles just received. | Over One Hundred New Pieces just opened, from the best goods, marked down to
THE LOWEST PRICES.
Special Prices on a new lot of Black Dress Silks at 90c, $1, $1 25 and $1 50. New Fall Styles in Prints at wonderfully Low Prices. Muslins and all Domestics a Specialty. | Ladies' Dusters at 75c, 90c, $1, $1.25, $1 50 and $2. Ladies' Lap Dusters, 38c. Our Flannels, Yarns and Blankets are elegant. Over 200 doz. Hose at 8¼ and 10 cents.
OVER ONE HUNDRED DIFFERENT STYLES OF DRESS BUTTONS, JUST OPENED AT LOW PRICES.
Colter, Powell & Ownby.
Rising Sun, Indiana.

R. S. CRISLER,
Burlington, Ky,
WAGON MAKER AND
—MANUFACTURER OF—
ROAD WAGONS, SPRING WAGONS, HARROWS, PLOWS, WHEEL BARROWS
AND ALL KINDS OF WOOD WORK.
Also the Manufacturer of W. M. Conner's Patent Right Hay Conveyor
Saws Filed & Sharpened.
Please call and examine my prices before calling elsewhere.

JAMES S. WAYNE, President. JNO. L. SANDFORD, Cashier
CAPITAL $300,000.
FARMERS AND TRADERS
NATIONAL BANK.
Covington, Kentucky.
DIRECTORS.
James S. Wayne, J. S. Matson, M. C. Motch, J. H. Mersman, Sam Hind, J. L. Sandford, L. C. Stephens, E. J. Hickey, L. H Dills, E. J. Greer, F. P. Helm
The general operations of banking transacted upon the most favorable terms, collections made on all points in the United States.
The Business and Accounts of Farmers are Especially Solicited by this Bank. dec. 20-6m

UNDERTAKING.

We keep Constantly on Hand all sizes of
Burial Cases and Caskets.
And having just received a beautiful
NEW HEARSE,
Which can be had at a reasonable price when desired.
PRICES GUARANTEED LESS THAN CITY PRICES
DAVIS BROS., - - HEBRON, KY

City Flouring Mills
RISING SUN, INDIANA.
FLOUR EXCHANGED FOR WHEAT OR CASH. THE HIGHEST MARKET PRICE PAID FOR GOOD WHEAT.
mar7-tf28
J. W Talbott.

VANDERBILT UNIVERSITY, NASHVILLE, TENN.
Cost of grounds, buildings and apparatus, $500,000. Productive Endowment, $700,000. Six Departments. Tuition in Literary and Scientific Department, $65.00; in Theological, free. Special attention given to Civil Engineering. Session opens September, 1. For Catalogue (FREE) Send to Secretary.

KENTUCKY MILITARY INSTITUTE.

At Farmdale, near Frankfort, Franklin Co. Ky. [illegible] ALLEN, Supt.

GEORGETOWN COLLEGE
[illegible] unrivalled for beauty and health. Charming grounds, [illegible] Full Faculty. Complete course. Degrees of B. S., A. B. and A. M. conferred. [illegible] President
R. M. DUDLEY, D. D. GEORGETOWN KY.

CENTRAL UNIVERSITY,
COLLEGE OF PHILOSOPHY, LETTERS, AND SCIENCE, RICHMOND, KY.
Next Session will open Wednesday, September 3d, 1884.
ADVANTAGES.—A FULL FACULTY of able and experienced instructors. Comprehensive course of study and thorough instruction. Completeness of buildings and apparatus.
Social Influence.—The community is distinguished for its refined culture and hospitality, and young men find homes in the BEST families. Not a Saloon in the city.
Healthfulness of Location.—Richmond is at an elevation of more than 300 feet above the Ohio river, and free from all malarial influences.
Accessibility.—Richmond is in the geographical centre of the State, in the heart of the Blue Grass region, and is within a few hours, by rail, of Louisville, Cincinnati, Knoxville and Chattanooga.
Moderate Expenses.—Board in the New Memorial Hall, lighted by gas and heated by steam—elegant, comfortable home—$110 per annum for everything except washing, and in the best families from $3 to $4 per week. Total necessary expenses for the ten months, from $150 to $[illegible].
For full information and catalogue, apply to L. H. BLANTON, D. D., Chancellor.

LADIES' JERSEYS JUST RECEIVED AT
COLTER'S,
Rising Sun, Ind.
At 90c, $1 50, $2, and up to $3 and $4. Our all-Wool Trailed Jerseys at $2 is selling fast. As Jerseys have proven to be the most elegant, neat and economical garments, they are becoming very popular and will be worn extensively for the next five years.
The demand is so great that we have been getting in two or three lots a week from our New York Buyer. Having just received 165 Children's Cloaks from the Wolf & Conn failure; also over 200 Cloaks.
New Markets, Russian Circulars and
DOLMANS.
We offer a Black all-Wool Diagonal Russian Circular, with Large Fur Collar, two Fur Ornaments on Back, at $5,83, that is worth $11; and other garments of all kinds at $5 to $26.
NEW FALL MILLINERY
Just received Over One Thousand Men's and Boys' Suits of Good Clothing just received from the failure of Hays & Thall. Big Bargains in solid
BOOTS & SHOES.
Give me your money, you shall have its value You all know that our Motto is "Buy Goods right and thay will sell themselves." We have over
Twenty-Thousand Dollars
worth of Goods in the above lines, that would cost one-third more if bought [illegible] style. We neither buy nor sell on time. [illegible] Goods [illegible] is our aim. In case we get fire or rail [illegible] in any way, we are particular in showing our customers the defects. The most of our goods now come from the financially wrecked merchants and manufacturers. WM. COLTER, Rising Sun, Ind.
We have just received word that we are to get Four Hundred Good Overcoats at Half Price.

THE RECORDER.

RIDDELL & HALL, Publishers.

BURLINGTON, : : KENTUCKY.

BIRD-NOTES.

In April twilight calms I love to hear,
Amid the cold, gray solitudes of trees,
One bright and joyous song: the robin sings
On high, gaunt tree-tops, and his clear notes fill
The silent voids of nature with a dream
And prophecy of spring.

The sparkle of a sun-ray turned to song:
Listen!—it is the common sandpiper
That sits along the shallows of a stream
In the deep summer.

Hark! the thrush is caroling in the woods—
A liquid, lucid song.

I hear together, in the soft June air,
The silvery tinkle of the bobolink,
The warble of the red-eyed vireo,
And whistle of the oriole; higher still
I hear the melodies of the English lark—
Swift, copious and triumphant.

From some wet marsh the white-eyed vireo sings
His rich and vehement song.
The winter-wren has found his summer home
In the green depth of tranquil Northern woods,
Where all his mellow, plaintive strains are heard
By the listening leaves.

The mocking-bird our singer from the South,
Pours his melodious soul into the night,
Sweet lover of the moon; and, as I stand,
Drinking the golden music of his voice,
I hear again the old, enchanting songs
Of Philomela.

—George Edgar Montgomery, in Manhattan.

A MEAN REVENGE.

As it is now no longer doubtful that to-morrow I must pay with my life the last penalty of the law, I am moved in justice to myself to place on record a simple statement of the circumstances which have brought me to so lamentable a pass. I shall endeavor to write only that which is in entire accordance with truth, setting down the facts without prejudice or favor; and it will then, I think, be clear to all, whatever my misdeeds—or, as I should prefer to call them, my errors of judgment—have been, I am wholly innocent of the horrible crime imputed to me.

I am, or perhaps I ought to say I was, a gentleman of independent means, with a strong love for the study of chemistry. The better to gratify this I recently caused to be erected at the rear of my house, which stands apart from the road in its own grounds, a commodious laboratory. This I had furnished with every appliance which modern science could require, and there it has been my custom to pass, undisturbed, the greater part of each day.

Although of a cheerful and gentle disposition, I have never courted society—a fact which has earned for me, most unwarrantably, be it said, the reputation of possessing a churlish and cynical nature. My household comprises only myself and an old man who acts in the treble capacity of cook, chambermaid and butler; and so simple are my habits that it would be hard to find, except perhaps in my own sitting and sleeping apartments, any article even suggestive of luxury or ease. I need only add here, for the proper comprehension of what follows, that the laboratory of which I have spoken is connected by a short covered passage with the library in which I generally spend my evenings, either in study or meditating some of those deep problems which engage my attention.

I am no man of business, and with a view to do a kindly turn to one of my fellow-creatures and, in less degree, to save myself trouble, I placed my affairs a few years ago in the hands of a Mr. Sugg, a solicitor of some standing, depositing with him all my shares and stocks, and receiving, as it fell due, the interest accruing on each. For some time the arrangement worked admirably. I am the least suspicious of mortals, and certainly it would never have occurred to me to doubt the probity of Mr. Sugg, from whom, moreover, I had exacted a substantial guarantee sufficient to cover the value of the securities intrusted to him. Great, accordingly, was my regret to learn that the confidence I had put in that gentleman was wholly misplaced.

The truth reached me from an old acquaintance, director of a company in which I had a considerable interest. It appeared that in the usual course a certificate of transfer had been presented to him for signature. The circumstance would probably have passed unnoticed but for the fact that these were founders' shares, of which only a limited number existed. Prompted by curiosity, my friend made inquiry as to the original holder's name, and discovered to his surprise that it was mine. Without loss of time he wrote, asking if I had objection to state my reasons for parting with what was really a first-class property.

I replied briefly that my motives were sufficient, and by the same post dispatched a note to Mr. Sugg, begging that he would call and bring with him the stock in question. At the moment I was occupied with an experiment which could best be carried out in daylight. I offered this as an excuse for asking him to come after office hours.

Two days later he made his appearance; I had dined at five, somewhat earlier than usual, but Joseph, the servant, had requested leave of absence for an hour or two in the evening, a demand which, with my never failing considerateness, I had at once granted.

It was striking seven as Mr. Sugg knocked at the door, which I hastened to open in person. As I preceded him to the study I explained the absence of my only domestic, and then, throwing myself into a chair, begged him to be seated.

My solicitor was a man of some fifty years of age, of slight but wiry build, and in other respects rather ordinary-looking. To this, exception must be made in favor of his eyes, which were small, grey in color, and extraordinarily sharp. The difficulty one had in following the quick movements of these organs was increased by their owner's habit of wearing colored spectacles; to which must be added a trick of carrying a hand to his eyes as if to adjust these glasses whenever a disconcerting question was put to him. By such means he was able to conceal the expression of his face and at the same time to gain leisure in which to frame a suitable reply. He had been recommended to me as a clever if not over-scrupulous lawyer, but in engaging him I had reckoned on having these qualities on my side.

In order to disarm suspicion I offered him a cigar and proceeded to chat upon indifferent topics. When a quarter of an hour had been consumed in this way I suddenly asked:

"By-the-by, Mr. Sugg, did you bring those shares with you?"

His hand flew to his spectacles, and then, affecting surprise, he exclaimed: "Bless my soul, how very careless! I must have left them on the desk. I had them in my hand a moment before leaving the office."

I think I liked Mr. Sugg at that moment better than I had ever done. Of course my moral sense was deeply shocked by the falsehood he had just uttered, but his simulation of astonishment was so natural as to extort my admiration. I felt that such excellent fooling deserved encouragement, and smiled back reassuringly.

"The best of us will make a slip," I said, graciously. "I had almost forgotten what amount I hold, and was, moreover, anxious to consult you on the subject of realizing them."

"My dear sir," he rejoined, with the special emphasis on the word "dear" affected by lawyers on such occasions, "have you seriously considered the step you propose taking? Part with an investment that's yielding you thirteen per cent., and whose value increases every day!"

"Yes," I returned, "it does seem foolish; I suppose there's not another man in London would do such a thing."

Mr. Sugg let the smoke curl slowly from between his lips, and relapsing into a professional smile, shook his head. "Positively, I don't think there is another who would act as you suggest."

For the moment I was almost deceived by his seeming sincerity. If Mr. Sugg had been dealing with a harmless but stubborn lunatic he could not have assumed a more pitiful air. Even with the knowledge I possessed, the feeling that in opposing this worthy gentleman I was showing a most unreasonable spirit was uppermost in my mind.

"Well," I answered, "I dare say you're right; still, the money is of importance to me just at present."

Mr. Sugg leant back in his chair with a pained expression. "My dear sir," he repeated, "nay, if you will pardon the liberty, my dear friend, pray do not allude to such a thing; if it be only a question of money I shall be happy to send you a check for whatever you require to-morrow morning."

The generosity of his proposal, I admit, touched me; nor was it until I had reflected that in so doing he would merely be paying me out of my own capital and doubtless charging for the operation that I succeeded in stifling my sense of gratitude. "No," I replied, "you must allow me to decline the offer; I would not be indebted even to you. But to avoid the chance of a sacrifice I think it will be prudent in giving the broker instructions to place a limit upon the shares. Now, what would you say they were worth?"

The business instincts of the man were at once aroused. "Let me see," he said, reflectively, pressing the points of his fingers together, "the last were done, I think, at twenty-eight."

I smiled blandly. "Then there have been some as foolish as myself," I remarked.

"No, no," he quickly answered, forgetting politeness in his anxiety to clear himself, "you misunderstand me; it must be considered that they bought in at a higher price and so reap less benefit than yourself."

The irrelevancy of the explanation was apparent; besides, I was growing weary of playing my fish, and hastened to bring matters to a climax. "Come, Mr. Sugg," I said, "you seem to have some motive for wishing me to retain these shares. What is it?"

Again the hand sought his spectacles. "Merely in your own interests, my dear sir," he replied at last, in a tone of assumed indifference, "purely in your own interests."

"I imagine I am the best judge of what those are," I rejoined, more sternly, "and I began to suspect they might be in better keeping than Mr. Sugg's hands."

"What do you mean?" he asked, in a sharp manner.

"What I have said," I returned. "Are the words not plain? I have it in my power to make them clearer, if you wish."

He laughed uneasily. "Thank you," he said, "there is no need; but as to the shares, when do you require them?"

"The first thing to-morrow morning."

"I fear I can't oblige you," he returned; "I fancy they are deposited with my banker, and there may be a slight delay in obtaining them; but you shall certainly have them on the following day."

If Mr. Sugg's want of sincerity had pained me before, this new proof of it shocked me still more inexpressibly; that so shrewd a man, having once told a lie, should relapse into such glaring inconsistency, gave me a poor opinion of his mental powers. The grief I experienced probably betrayed itself in my voice as I replied:

"It may be my mistake, but I understood that you left them on your desk."

I regret to record that Mr. Sugg's answer was couched in language which I shrink from reproducing here. I sat calmly waiting till the storm should subside. When at length he found that his words had no effect upon me, he asked:

"What do you want with me? I presume you didn't bring me here for your own pleasure?"

"No," I said, with a faint smile, "that was certainly not my object. I wish to inform you that I am about to transfer my affairs to another solicitor, and shall therefore require from you a full and immediate statement as to how we stand."

He started to his feet, throwing what remained of his cigar into the fire. "You have some reason for this step?"

"A good one," I answered, in a placid voice.

"What is it?" he returned.

"Simply that I find my present agent has been disposing of my property without authority."

Mr. Sugg began to walk around the room excitedly. Suddenly he stopped and, placing his hands on the table at which I sat, he looked across at me. "Mr. Cliffe," he said, "you do not know what a dangerous game you are playing. I am a desperate man."

"Yes," I said, in an encouraging way, as if so interesting a statement deserved elaboration.

"You know that I have parted with these shares; but there is much of which you are still ignorant. If you insist on doing as you propose, you will be my destruction."

"Tit for tat," I rejoined, playfully; "you forget that you have been trying your utmost to ruin me."

"Give me a little time," he pleaded, "and I swear you shall not lose a penny."

"Come, come," I answered, "as a lawyer you must know that an accessory after the crime is equally guilty with the actual perpetrator. Collect your thoughts, my dear fellow, collect your thoughts."

His face grew livid with passion. "So you refuse to show me any mercy," he said.

His pertinacity wearied me. "I don't know what you mean by mercy," I remarked; "I asked for a statement, and a statement I'll have."

"Very good," said Sugg, becoming calmer. "I think I understand; you are determined to ruin me. Now listen; you and I are alone in this house." I nodded. "I also have made my decision; if you persist in your resolve, only one of us shall leave this room alive."

He was facing me as he spoke; there could be no doubt that he meant what he said. For my own part, I had no fear; in my table is a drawer, and in that drawer I keep a loaded pistol, ready for emergencies; my hand was on it as I replied:

"You have quite made up your mind on that point?"

"Perfectly."

"And nothing I can urge will move you from the position?"

"Nothing."

"Then," I continued, "it seems there is but one solution to the difficulty. As the originator of the scheme, I take it that you have well considered its feasibility; under the circumstances, therefore, you are clearly the better fitted of us two to carry it into effect." Then, before he could say a word in reply, I drew out the pistol and, rapidly taking aim, pulled the trigger. The next moment he dropped dead on the carpet, shot through the heart.

I confess to some regret at having been forced to this step, but the logic of the position was irresistible. I admire a man who has the courage of his opinions, but I think, and I believe most people will agree with me, that Sugg carried the principle too far. Had he been a little less rigid in its observance, he might have been alive at this moment.

Personally he had caused me great inconvenience; I could not allow him to remain where he lay, for Joseph's return might take place at any instant, and a dead body is not usually reckoned among the essential requisites of a well-furnished library. At that moment I remembered the furnace in the laboratory, and at once recognized that it afforded a convenient way out of the difficulty. It is needless to go into details which can have little interest for outsiders, and I content myself with saying that after several hours' work my task was satisfactorily accomplished.

With a sense of considerable relief I returned to my easy-chair, and, ringing the bell, ordered Joseph to make me a cup of strong coffee. When this had been brought I told him I should require his services no more that night, and bade him go to bed at once.

A little later the clock on the mantelpiece chimed midnight, and I began to think the time had arrived for following Joseph's example. As, however, I rose to do this I was surprised to hear some one call me.

"Come in," I said, thinking it must be the servant; but no one stirred. For a moment I stood irresolute, but on a repetition of the sound walked to the door and threw it open. There was no one outside.

"Mr. Cliffe!" again said the voice, this time coming from the neighborhood of the fire; "Mr. Cliffe!"

I closed the door and turned back. "Who and where are you?" I asked.

"I'm here," was the answer, "and I'm Sugg, the solicitor."

"Pooh, pooh," I replied, dropping into my chair, "Sugg's——" Fortunately I stopped in time; I must be careful not to incriminate myself. "Sugg's at home, and no doubt in bed an hour ago."

"It's no use, Mr. Cliffe," returned the stranger, "I know better, and so do you; you're a clever fellow, Mr. Cliffe, but you can't argue a bullet out of a man's body," and the voice laughed in a dreary kind of way.

The last statement had its weight with me; clearly, if this were not Sugg it was some one possessed of a curiously precise knowledge of what had just occurred. "What are you doing here?" I asked.

"At present I'm trying to warm myself," he said. "One finds it a trifle cold at first without any flesh or clothes."

I began to realize the position; this, then, was Sugg's ghost, probably come to take revenge on me for having killed its owner.

"I suppose you mean to haunt me," I suggested; "if so, you'll certainly have your trouble for nothing; my nerves are tolerably strong."

"Oh dear no," he answered, "you're quite mistaken; that's an absurd idea people have. Spirits are not allowed to return to this world."

"Then you've no right to be here," I replied, conclusively; "when rules are made they ought to be observed."

"That's true," he said, "but an exception is needed now and then just to prove that they do exist. I'm one," he added, with a touch of self-satisfaction.

"Very well," I replied, "now that you've fulfilled your mission, you had better go. I'm off to bed, and I can't afford to keep up a fire all night for your pleasure."

"I must finish my business first," he protested.

"That's your affair," I retorted, rising.

"I know," he returned; "but for that I must have your help."

"Indeed," I rejoined; "in what way?"

"I'll explain in a word, if you'll sit down again," he said. With my usual good humor I did as he requested. After a pause, during which I presume he was settling himself comfortably on the hob, he proceeded:

"Of course what I am about to tell you will be considered strictly confidential. I may count upon your discretion?"

I nodded toward the fireplace; its occupant seemed satisfied, and continued:

"For some time before my—my demise, I was a large and unfortunate speculator on the Stock Exchange. Nothing succeeded with me, loss following loss with appalling persistency. After disposing of all my own valuables I was forced to fall back on those of my clients—amongst others yours. Permit me to make you a somewhat tardy acknowledgment of the assistance yielded to me.

"But the worst has to be told. I fell into bad company, and was hurried into the commission of deeds from which in a cooler moment I should have shrunk; what torments me most is that I induced some of my friends, and those precisely the most guileless and unsuspecting, to follow my example unwittingly. My unexpected"—here he again hesitated—"demise prevented me from destroying certain compromising documents committed to my care, and unless I can do this a heavy and undeserved punishment will fall upon those blameless but too confiding persons."

"I am sorry to hear it," I interrupted; "but I do not see how I can interfere."

"I do not ask that you should," he returned, eagerly; "I have arranged everything; in view of the facts, leave to return to earth has been given me, with permission to take possession of my former tenement for one night. All I wish from you is to say where you have concealed my body."

In all my experience I can not recall having received so inconsiderate a demand. I do not think I am an unreasonable man, and had Mr. Sugg's spirit kept within moderate limits I should have made no demur in giving my help; but this was a proposal I could not accept.

"The thing's impossible," I said; "I decline to be a party to so monstrous a scheme. It's against every rule of nature. Why, sir," I continued, waxing warmer, "you might as well ask me to second you in upsetting the law of gravitation."

My answer seemed to disconcert Mr. Sugg in no small measure. The voice trembled as it replied:

"For pity's sake, don't refuse me; think of the disgrace and suffering you will bring on a innocent if you persist. After all, it's a trifling matter to you."

"Is it?" I said to myself, reflecting on the difficulty of bringing back his scattered remains to their original form; but to him I only replied more decidedly:

"My mind's made up; I refuse distinctly to give you any such help."

On hearing these words Mr. Sugg's spirit uttered a low cry of despair, and then, as I judged, began to fly rapidly from one end of the room to the other, wailing forth: "My poor body! where's my body?"

When this performance had lasted for some time I lost my temper. "Come, come," I said, "you know you can't go on like this all night."

The voice was silent for an instant, and the next words were spoken from beside the fire. "Oh, can't I?" it said, "just listen!" and thereupon it gave utterance to a shriek so weird and shrill that in spite of myself I shook with fear.

"For Heaven's sake," I cried, "don't do that again, or you'll drive me mad."

If spirits can chuckle, certain I am that Mr. Sugg's did so then. "Oh, that's nothing," it observed, "I was only clearing my throat."

The mere thought of having the sound repeated made me turn cold. "Look here," I hastened to say, "if you'll promise to be quiet I'll tell you the truth."

"Very well," replied Sugg. "I promise."

"I can't give you back your body," I went on, "because I've already disposed of it."

"What!" almost shouted my visitor, "you've done what with it?"

"I do not think you quite understand me," I said, in a pacifying tone; "when I use the words 'disposed of' I do not mean that I have bartered it for money. You know I couldn't keep it here, and so—well, the fact is, I burned it to ashes in the furnace."

The groan which escaped from Mr. Sugg really moved me to pity. "But surely," I suggested, a happy thought striking me, "there must be plenty of vacant bodies about; why not make use of one of them?"

"Ah, you don't understand me," he replied, despairingly; "to do so I must first have the owner's consent, and that's not easy; besides, the time is too short."

"Well, I'm sorry I can't help you any further," I observed, wishing to bring the conversation to a close; "you see we're at a dead-lock."

Mr. Sugg was silent for a minute, and then in a more hopeful voice he suddenly said: "Ah, but you can if you will."

"Well, if I can," I replied, doubtfully, "you may depend upon it that I will."

"You can lend me your body."

"Gracious heavens," I cried, "what a suggestion! You must take me for a mad man to imagine I'd do such a thing."

But it was clear on the contrary, that Mr. Sugg had every confidence in my sanity, for he quickly showed that unless I yielded, he had it in his power to drive me completely out of my senses. Moreover, he claimed the fulfillment of the promise that I would help him if I could.

It was useless to point to the impracticability of the plan. If I consented, he argued, there was no difficulty about it. For this he made himself personally responsible.

"But suppose," I objected, "you went off with my body and never came back. What guaranty have I for your return?"

He answered in an injured tone: "Whatever I may have been in the flesh, you need have no fear of my breaking faith with you. Spirits never lie."

Possibly not, I thought, but could I be equally sure of my own tongue even with so truthful a mentor behind it. However, I considered it as well not to express this doubt.

"You promise, then," I said, "to be here again by six in the morning and to vacate my body at once."

"I pledge you my word of honor," he answered.

Whereupon, wearied by his importunity, I gave a reluctant assent to his proposal.

How the change was affected I can not tell, but immediately after I found myself floating about in mid-air with an uneasy sense of being incompletely clothed. At the same time I noticed my body pacing the room with every appearance of life.

"Thank you," said Mr. Sugg, making use of my mouth to speak the words, and turning to the table on which I had placed the contents of his pockets; "I see my keys are here; this will save me all trouble in getting what I want. And now, au revoir."

"One moment, Mr. Sugg," I cried, as he walked towards the door; "before you go, will you kindly put on some coals? Don't spare them. It certainly is chilly to-night."

He replied with an irritating laugh. "I told the truth, you see. But as the coals are your own I don't grudge the expense."

After doing as I had requested he quitted the room, leaving me a prey to a host of doubts and evil forebodings.

I am not concerned to relate in what manner I spent the night. Certainly it was the most uncomfortable I ever passed; apart from the physical—if I may use the word—discomfort of the position, I was tormented with the thought that Mr. Sugg would not perform his part of the agreement. The very idea sent a thrill of horror through my shadowy form.

My relief, therefore, was intense when a little before six the door opened and my body entered the room. It looked pale and tired, but this did not surprise me, as my habits are methodical, and I have always shown to my own person the greatest consideration, even to over-indulgence. As it sank wearily into the easy-chair, I said:

"Well, I hope you've arranged everything satisfactorily?"

"Quite," returned Mr. Sugg; "and now, sir, I'm ready to change places with you again. Your throat seems to have contracted a slight hoarseness, probably from exposure to the night air, but with ordinary care you'll soon get rid of that."

"Thank you," I replied, "I'll see that it has every attention." Scarcely were the words uttered before I found myself, somewhat to my astonishment, reinstated in my old position.

"Good-bye," said Mr. Sugg's voice, from the farther end of the room; "I shan't forget your kindness." And then, I suppose, he vanished up the chimney or through the key-hole, for I heard no more of him.

I rose and opened the shutters; it was broad daylight, and I had not been to bed yet. My legs ached with fatigue, and it was with difficulty I kept my eyes open. Hastily penciling a line for Joseph, stating that I had been obliged to work till an early hour and was on no account to be disturbed, I mounted to my room, and, quickly undressing, threw myself on the bed. Before two minutes had elapsed I was sound asleep.

It must have been nearly four in the afternoon when I was awakened by a loud knocking; so persistent was the noise that I was forced to acknowledge it. "Come in," I shouted, wondering what could have induced Joseph to disobey my instructions.

The door opened and that worthy appeared on the threshold. "Well," I said, angrily, "what is it?"

"A gentleman, sir," he answered, "who says he must see you at once."

"Oh, nonsense," I replied, "I can't see any one at present. Tell him to call again to-morrow."

Before Joseph could answer he was roughly put aside, and an officer in plain clothes, followed by two policemen, entered the room. So complete a disregard of the ordinary courtesies of life fairly roused me.

"What do you mean by intruding here?" I asked. "One would think you were come to arrest a thief or a murderer."

"You could not have hit the mark nearer if you'd tried," said the one who appeared to be the chief of the party. "But I warn you that whatever you say will be taken down and used against you."

"Used against me?" I repeated. "Explain yourself, sir."

"Just this," he answered. "Early this morning Mr. Sugg the solicitor's office was entered and important papers stolen. After committing the robbery the thief passed to the housekeeper's room, and there, in cold blood and without any provocation strangled the poor old woman. The evidence is pretty strong, sir, as to who did it; so you'd better come along quietly."

The blood froze in my veins; I saw the whole thing at a glance. This, then, was Sugg's revenge. Not content with destroying the documents he spoke of, he had killed this unhappy being, and had clearly been careful to leave abundant evidence by which the crime could be brought home to me. Overwhelmed by the thought, I fell back in my bed more dead than alive.

Let me acknowledge that the officers treated me with every consideration. There was, however, nothing for it but to rise and go with them. I did not even attempt to speak a word in my own defense.

I need not repeat here the particulars of my trial, as these have already been made public through ... of the daily papers. The evidence against me was irresistable. Every step from the moment of my leaving the house up to that of my return was traced. I had been seen by the night policeman to quit Mr. Sugg's premises about five in the morning, and had even stopped to say a few words to him explanatory of my presence there at so unusual an hour. Moreover, a child seven years old, who slept in the same room, had actually been a witness to the murder and testified to its utter wantonness. The finding of Mr. Sugg's key's in my pocket added another link to the chain. In short, my guilt was so plain that no one would have been more surprised than myself had I been acquitted.

The one unexplained point in the case was the disappearance of Mr. Sugg. But as his affairs were found on investigation to be hopelessly involved it was shrewdly suspected that he had absconded.

I have no complaint to make of the manner in which my defense was conducted. The only plea possible to advance was, of course, that of insanity. But even this could not save me. I am myself persuaded that, even had it been capable of proof, the jury would have pronounced me responsible rather than allow so dangerous a lunatic to remain alive.

I may add that, when asked for instructions by my solicitor, I communicated to him the foregoing facts just as I have stated them here, and begged that they might be taken as a basis for my defense. To this, however, he absolutely refused to accede, and threatened to retire from the case if I persisted in my request. Greatly against my own judgment, I yielded to his wish, but not until he had shown that to adopt the course I suggested would ensure my condemnation on the capital charge of killing Mr. Sugg. I certainly was not disposed to give that gentleman the satisfaction my conviction on such a point would unquestionably yield him.

On the first night after sentence had been passed I sat, sadly enough, in my cell, when I heard a voice address me. "Mr. Cliffe!" it said; "Mr. Cliffe!"

I knew too well who was there. "Demon," I cried, "are you satisfied with your work now?"

"Perfectly," it replied; "I hope you're equally so?"

I was silent; my feelings were too bitter for words. If ever it was my fortune, I said to myself, to meet Mr. Sugg in another world, it would not be my fault if it did not go hard with him.

At last I mastered my emotion. I was not dead yet; hope still remained to me. Perhaps my enemy might be induced to relent. The attempt at least was worth a trial.

"Mr. Sugg," I said, as calmly as was possible under the circumstances, "I admit that I did not treat you altogether well. But remember the provocation you gave me. Not content with appropriating my property, you threatened my life. If I took yours it was in self-defense. Recollect, too, that, at considerable inconvenience to myself, I lent you my body that you might save your own reputation. I do not wish to recriminate. Nevertheless I can not but feel that you have used me unfairly."

I spoke feelingly, and my words seemed to have their effect. "What do you want me to do?" said Sugg's spirit.

"The merest trifle," I continued, gaining confidence as I proceeded. "Simply to speak a word in my favor. With you to corroborate my story—without, of course, referring to the way in which you came by your own death—I can not fail in obtaining a reprieve. Come," I added, coaxingly, "say that you will." Then, after a short interval, as he did not answer, I added, "Surely you will show me some mercy!"

"I don't know what you mean by mercy," he rejoined. The words were the very same that I had used to him on that fatal night.

I recognized then that my case was hopeless. "Ah," I cried, in despair, "if you were a man you would not let an innocent being go to the scaffold for your offense?"

Again I heard that horrible chuckle which had before chilled me to the bone. "If I were a man," he laughed; "and whose fault is it, pray, that I am not? But there, I can't stay here arguing any longer. Good-night and pleasant dreams."

And with a repitition of the weird laugh he vanished.—T. Malcolm Watson, in Belgravia.

Shade for the Cows.

It is so mighty easy to talk and say nothing that the press is filled with matter that is as empty as the wind. The Rural and Stockman has frequently urged the necessity for shade in the pastures, and has endeavored to point out the probable results of exposing cattle all day to the broiling rays of the sun. An Eastern contemporary flies to the defense of the cruel practice of roasting cows in the heat of the sun, and attempts to prove that it is right, by citing the fact that our boys are compelled to work in the sun all day, and thinks that they are as good as the cows. Now we submit that that proves a vast deal! It is no pleasant or highly desirable experience for boy or man to be exposed to the sun's rays for hours together when the thermometer is ranging among the nineties. It would be a great deal better and safer if neither was thus exposed. But work on the farm often requires it, and we are compelled to submit to the discomfort and the danger. It is a sort of cruelty that necessity imposes. But because men necessarily suffer is it any reason why we should compel a brute to unnecessarily suffer? If a boy of our household had the glanders, we should take care of him, though we should run some risk in doing so. But would that be any reason for taking the boy to the stables that the horses might probably become infected? Men are compelled to suffer many hardships that they would not like to inflict upon their stock. It is argued by this paper that the cow with the privileges of shade gets lazy. Then the burning sunbeams must be regarded in the light of a lash. The creature is so very uncomfortable that she eats grass in sheer desperation. Very well, if discomfort in the field causes her to eat more and produce more, why would not discomfort in the stable have a similar result? According to this doctrine all the talk that we have been hearing for years about making the cow comfortable—treating her like a lady—being gentle with her, etc., has been nonsense. There is nothing that will worry a man or brute more than exposure to very hot sun. The blood becomes heated to a boiling point. The sun does in this respect precisely what the dog, chasing the cow a long distance, will do. It heats her blood. Is that healthful? Is her blood what we want? If it is we have all been groping our way in the dark for a long time. It will not answer. The cow needs to be made comfortable, and if she is comfortable, even if she does not give quite so much milk, she will give better milk; and we have no right to torture her even if she gives no milk. The idea conveyed by the statement that she will get lazy if she has shade is simply a monstrous one. It means that for its little gain we have the right to make the animal uncomfortable. Societies for the prevention of cruelty to animals are organized to prevent just such ideas as that from being reduced to practice.—The Rural and Stockman.

—On an island in the Delaware River, near Port Jervis, N. Y., is an underground hut, six feet square, in which live an old man, his three sons and one daughter. They subsist by hunting and fishing.—N. Y. Herald.

HOME AND FARM.

—Nervous spasms are usually relieved by a little salt taken into the mouth and allowed to dissolve.—Chicago Journal.

—For sheep losing their wool the Country Gentleman recommends bathing with saltpeter water, one ounce to the quart.

—To remove mildew from linen, rub the spots with soap; scrape chalk over it and rub it well; lay it on the grass, in the sun; as it dries wet it a little; it will come out with two applications.—Detroit Post.

—To press flowers place them between two sheets of new blotting paper. Place a heavy weight upon them and let them remain for two or three weeks. They may be fixed to paper by strong gum arabic.—N. Y. Graphic.

—To wash black lace, carefully sponge the lace with green tea, and wind around a bottle to dry. By filling the bottle with warm water it will dry more quickly. Don't put near the fire, or it will have a rusty appearance. —The Household.

—The best of housewives sometimes find that their canned peaches are flavorless, in which case they will do well to put them in a dish with thin slices of orange and sprinkle with powdered sugar. After an hour's standing the mixture will be delicious.—Boston Globe.

—Eat only such things as agree with you, and not too much at a time. By heeding the warnings of your stomach many doctor bills and even undertakers, too, may be avoided. Give children plenty of milk and bread, graham or oatmeal crackers and good, ripe fruit. They will not only thrive on this diet, but keep healthy.

—To insure success in making a gooseberry pie, stew the berries in as little water as it is possible to use; when the berries begin to be tender mash them with a spoon; then you will preserve the richness of the juice, and will not have to throw any of it away. Sweeten with light brown sugar and bake with two crusts.—Albany Journal.

—Tea Cake: Three quarters of a pound of butter, one pound of sugar, one pound of flour, eight eggs. Cream the butter and sugar together; add a handful of flour and two eggs, then another handful of flour and eggs, and so on until all the ingredients are mixed together. Beat well each time and bake in a one pound mold.—Detroit Free Press.

—Potato Pudding: Peel and boil six good-sized potatoes; when quite soft, drain and wash them through a colander; stir to a cream a quarter of a pound of butter, three quarters of sugar, add the potatoes, beaten yelk of five eggs and half a pint of milk or cream; beat the mixture until very light, flavor with one grated nutmeg, a wine-glass of brandy and of wine, stir in the whites of the eggs whipped to a froth, pour in a buttered pudding-dish, and bake a half hour. Serve hot or cold.—N. Y. Times.

What We Have Learned From Animals.

It is a favorite theory of some that animals are imitative, and what man does they follow after and try to perform. Possibly man learned first from the animals. Many animals are born armed and weaponed both for offense, capture and defense when attacked or pursued. The gorillas of Africa fought the soldiers of Hanno, and apes use handstones to crack nuts. In the days of Strabo that historian tells us that Indian monkeys climbed mountains and rolled stones down on their pursuers. Take throwing, for example. The primitive man learned it from beasts. The squid (cuttle fish) defends itself by discharging its ink-bag, imbedded in the liver, and escapes in the blackened water. The tokotes or archer brings down insects with a drop of water when they are three or four feet high in the air. The archer fish of Japan is kept in a glass jar and fed by holding flies at the end of a rod a few inches from the surface of the water, and it never fails to hit them. The llama or guanaco throw their acrid and fetid saliva some distance and with accurate aim. Men would learn to strike by watching the blow of the bear, and the kick of those animals which defend themselves by kicking, as the horse, zebra, the camel and giraffe, while the ostrich, eagle and larger birds of prey would teach him a lesson in assaulting with ready wings. The whale raises its head with such force that it has sunk a whaler. Combats of goats, stags, buffaloes and wild bulls, all of which rush forward with their heads down and drive their horns into their enemy's body, would suggest the thrust. The bittern, the peacock and the American white crane stab at the eye. And the black rhinoceros, the fiercest of any, when angered his horn becomes hard and erect, and, diving beneath the canoe, he pierces a hole in its bottom and sinks it, and with the same weapon attacks and rips open the huge and ungainly elephant. The pheasant and partridge, the cock and quail, would suggest, with their spurs, the use of the poniard. Pliny says that dolphins which enter the Nile have a knife-edged spur on their back to protect them from crocodiles. The bull-head fish has a many-barbed horn on its dorsum which must have taught the Esquimaux and savages of South America and Australia the use of their spears. Poisoned dagger-makers took a hint from the sting-fish, or adder pike, whose dorsals and spines have double grooves, in which a poisonous secretion is found. The sting-rays twist their long slender tails round their enemy and cut the surface, inflicting a wound not easily healed. The sting sometimes breaks off in the wound. The Fiji Islanders, the Samoans and Tahitians use this poison extensively. These things in animals would suggest the poisoned dagger with which the Italians of the middle ages were so handy.—Cincinnati Enquirer.

Tobacco and Eyesight.

For many years it has been known to opthalmic surgeons that abuse of tobacco may lead to failure of sight. This fact has been made use of by the anti-tobaccoists, who are mostly well-meaning but meddlesome persons, and whose actions have too close a resemblance to those of agitators in the cause of various reactionary measures for the impediment of scientific research and the obstruction of sanitary legislation. In the report of forty cases of tobacco amblyopia by Mr. Shears, of Liverpool, it appeared that atrophy of the optic nerves is very rarely met with as the result of excessive smoking, although tobacco is the essential agent in producing failure of sight. Great moderation in smoking, and especially the employment of mild forms of tobacco, is all that is necessary to insure recovery. Mr. Hutchinson has found that a very small proportion of smokers suffer from amblyopia, and that among those who do become subject to impaired vision are many who show an hereditary tendency to that infirmity; many of their relatives who do not smoke being similarly afflicted. Workmen in tobacco factories do not appear to be subject to deterioration of eyesight; in one large manufactory, where 17,000 men and women are employed, Mr. Shears has found that not one single person on the premises suffered from failure of eyesight, although many of the hands had been working there for ten years.—Louisville Courier-Journal.

The first torpedo-boat ever known was launched in New York harbor in 1776.—N. Y. Sun.

"Not Good To Tie To."

The origin of the expression "It won't do to tie to" was explained to a Republican reporter yesterday, and the story may be of interest at this time when there is a prospect of its being used extensively before November in connection with political tickets and candidates.

About thirty-five years ago, according to the reporter's informant, Captain Swan, now a resident of this city, and an octogenarian, was coming up on his boat from New Orleans to St. Louis. When near the mouth of the Red River the captain decided to run ashore and tie up for the night. The mate ordered a plank to be thrown out where a dark object, supposed to be a stump, seemed to offer a good opportunity to tie up. A man was ordered out to the end of the plank and commenced winding the rope around the object to secure the boat, when a huge paw struck him, almost knocking him into the river, and tearing a great rent in his clothes. The supposed stump proved to be a bear who sat on his haunches watching the boat, while the light blinded his eyes. The man scrambled for dear life and succeeded in regaining the boat, when he exclaimed "that's a mighty good place to land, but that bear ain't a good thing to tie to."—The St. Louis Republican.

Extremes in Idaho.

On the sand plains down by Hawthorne it is so hot that mercury boils in the thermometers unless the bulb is kept wrapped in wet sponge. A dipper of water thrown up into the air evaporates before reaching the ground. The only living creatures seen about Walker Lano are the pelicans, and in flying from one shore to the other during the middle of the day they are obliged to descend two or three times and fill their pouches with water. The sand at the bottom of the lake gets so hot during the day that bathers going into the water of evenings are obliged to wear boots to prevent burning their feet.

Snowbanks are still plentiful near Homer, on the slopes of Mounts Gilcrest, Scowden, Haverly, and Homer, on the southerly side of Mill Creek Canyon, and on Mount Hector, north of Homer, while on the west, circling the head of the canyon, large, unbroken fields of snow loom up against the sky on McClintock Peak, Mount Bill Williams, and the Sea Lions.—Virginia City Enterprise.

Reminders of Old Times.

He was a tramp, and when he had carefully scanned the back yard for the expected wood-pile and had found none, he quietly slid around, and knocking at the front door, began his story of misfortune, and his inability to get work.

"Yes," said the farmer, who was of a classic turn, "but labor conquers all things; you remember the old saw, don't you?"

"Yes, indeed, I do," said the wayfarer, as tears started to his eyes, "and the remembrance is indeed plainful, but as I came along I didn't see any hanging up on the back of the house, so I thought I would ask for something to eat. Yes, I remember the old saw and the wood-pile, too, but have no use for them; good day," and he vanished into the whereness of the whither. —Boston Post.

The Quack of a Goose.

"How is my little duck to-night?" asked young Crimsonbeak of Miss Fussanfeather, his fiancee, as she met him at the door the other evening.

"Oh, I'm nearly roasted, George!" exclaimed the petulent maiden.

"I'm so glad," came from the lover, with a serene smile.

"Glad!" cried the girl, preparing to take a bath in tears; "you heartless creature!"

"Yes," said George, in a low voice after he had turned out the gas and put the clock back one hour, "you see, I am passionately fond of roast duck." —Yonkers Statesman.

—No wood has ever been discovered that combines so many advantages for all purposes as California redwood. It is easily worked; it may be used green just as its comes from the mill; it does not warp in drying nor shrink or swell by exposure to the weather; it burns slowly and when on fire is easily extinguished, because the wood contains no resin. It is brittle and breaks off squarely, so that in case of fire the firemen have no difficulty in cutting their way from house to house, and it does not rot at the ground like most other woods, and fence-posts which have stood for thirty years are as sound to-day as when they were planted. The redwood grows only in California.—San Francisco Chronicle.

THE old custom requiring saleswomen in dry and fancy goods stores to stand all day long without rest or relief is being superseded by more humane rules in many of our leading business houses. Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound is highly praised by those who have not yet been freed from the old necessity for constant standing; and is a genuine blessing in every such case, as well as to the tired-out housekeeper who must be on her feet all day.

A WOMAN of Greenwood, Me., is reported to be cutting her fourth set of teeth. Why, what's the matter? Don't they fit?—Burlington Free Press.

High Priced Butter.

Dairymen often wonder how their more favored competitors get such high prices for their butter the year round. It is by always having a uniform gilt-edged article. To put the "gilt edge" on, when the pastures do not do it, they use Wells, Richardson & Co.'s Improved Butter Color. Every butter maker can do the same. Sold everywhere and warranted as harmless as salt, and perfect in operation.

THE MARKETS.

CINCINNATI, August 26, 1884.

LIVE STOCK—Cattle—Common	$2 00	@ 2 75
Choice butchers	4 00	@ 4 75
HOGS—Common	4 50	@ 5 65
Good packers	5 70	@ 6 25
SHEEP—Good to choice	3 50	@ 4 25
FLOUR—Family	3 50	@ 4 00
GRAIN—Wheat—Longberry red		@ 81
No. 2 red	81	@ 82
Corn—No. 2 mixed	54	@ 54½
Oats—No. 2 mixed		27
Rye—No. 2		@ 55
HAY—Timothy No. 1	11 00	@12 00
HEMP—Double dressed	8 75	@ 9 00
PROVISIONS—Pork—Mess	18 75	@19 00
Lard—Prime steam	8 00	@ 8 12½
BUTTER—Fancy Dairy	24	@ 26
Prime Creamery	18	@ 20
FRUIT AND VEGETABLES—
Potatoes, new, per barrel	1 85	@ 2 00
Apples, prime, per barrel	2 25	@ 2 50
NEW YORK.
FLOUR—State and Western	$2 65	@ 3 30
Good to choice	3 70	@ 6 00
GRAIN—Wheat—No. 2 Chicago		@ 85½
No. 2 red		@ 89¾
Corn—No. 2 mixed	55	@ 62½
Oats—mixed	32	@ 42
PORK—Mess		@19 00
LARD—Western steam		@ 8 00
CHICAGO.
FLOUR—State and Western	$3 50	@ 5 00
GRAIN—Wheat—No. 2 red	77	@ 77½
No. 2 Chicago Spring	77⅛	@ 77½
Corn—No. 2	51¼	@ 52
Oats—No. 2	24¾	@ 25
Rye		@ 56
PORK—Mess	18 50	@19 00
LARD—Steam	7 40	@ 7 45
BALTIMORE.
FLOUR—Family	$4 00	@ 5 00
GRAIN—Wheat—No 2	87¾	@ 89¼
Corn—mixed		@ 68
Oats—mixed	30	@ 33
PROVISIONS—Pork—Mess		@19 25
Lard—Refined		@ 9¼
INDIANAPOLIS.
WHEAT—No. 2 red	$	@ 77½
CORN—mixed		@ 58
OATS—mixed		@ 25
LOUISVILLE.
FLOUR—A No. 1	$ 4 15	@ 4 25
GRAIN—Wheat—No. 2 red	76	@ 80
Corn—mixed		@ 56
Oats—mixed		@ 28
PORK—mess		@19 00
LARD—steam		@ [illegible]

JENNIE: "My doggie has a twenty-dollar blanket." Tommy: "That's nuffin; my doggie has got fleas."—Brooklyn Times.

"Rough on Coughs," 15c., at Druggists. Complete cure Coughs, Hoarseness, Sore Throat.

TALK about babies; but then, we never indulge in small talk.—Chicago Sun.

"Rough on Corns." 15c. Ask for it. Complete cure, hard or soft corns, warts, bunions.

YOU have no right to pick a photographer's pocket even if he has pict-ures.

THE increasing sales of Piso's Cure attests its claim as the best cough remedy.

A DOOR is sometimes a jar and an earthquake always is.—Lowell Courier.

"Mother Swan's Worm Syrup," for feverishness, worms, constipation, tasteless. 25c

FAVORABLE weather for hay-making—When it rains pitchforks.

"Buchu-paiba." Quick, complete cure, all annoying Kidney and Urinary Diseases, $1.

A DESPONDENT person ought never to eat blue fish.—Boston Post.

Skinny Men. "Wells' Health Renewer" restores health and vigor, cures Dyspepsia, $1.

A FOUR-IN-HAND—The piano duet.—Boston Courier.

Glenn's Sulphur Soap is a common remedy for skin diseases. Hill's Hair Dye, black or brown, 50c.

ST. JACOBS OIL

THE GREAT GERMAN REMEDY FOR PAIN. CURES Rheumatism, Neuralgia, Sciatica, Lumbago, Backache, Headache, Toothache, Sore Throat, Swellings, Sprains, Bruises, Burns, Scalds, Frost Bites, And All Other BODILY PAINS and ACHES. Sold by Druggists and Dealers everywhere. Fifty Cents a bottle. Directions in 11 Languages. THE CHARLES A. VOGELER CO., (Successors to A. VOGELER & CO.) Baltimore, Md., U.S.A.

CATARRH

HAY-FEVER. For twenty-five years I have been severely afflicted with Hay-Fever. While suffering intensely I was induced to try Ely's Cream Balm, and the effect was marvelous. It enabled me to perform my pastoral duties without the slightest inconvenience, and I have escaped a return attack. WM. T. CARR, Presbyterian Pastor, Elizabeth, N. J.

HAY-FEVER. Ely's Cream Balm is a remedy based upon a correct diagnosis of this disease and can be depended upon. 50 cts. at druggists; 60 cts. by mail. Sample bottle by mail 10 cts. ELY BROS., Druggists, Owego, N. Y.

THE NARROW ESCAPE

Of a Massachusetts Engineer—Timely Warning of Mr. John Spencer, Baggage-master of B. & A. R. R.

Sleep after fatigue, and health after disease, are two of the sweetest experiences known to man. Fourteen years is a long time in which to suffer. Yet Mr. Peter Lawler, of Dalton, Mass., had led a miserable life for that period through the presence of stone in the bladder. That he sought in all directions for a cure is an almost superfluous statement. He did obtain temporary relief, but nothing more. Last January he called on Dr. David Kennedy, of Rondout, N. Y., who said, after examination: "Mr. Lawler, you have stone in the bladder. We will first try DR. DAVID KENNEDY'S FAVORITE REMEDY before risking an operation." A few days later the following letter passed through the Rondout post-office:

DALTON, Mass., Feb. 6.

Dear Dr. Kennedy—The day after I came home I passed two gravel stones, and am doing nicely now. PETER LAWLER.

Dr. Kennedy now has the stones at his office, and they are sufficiently formidable to justify the claim that KENNEDY'S FAVORITE REMEDY is the leading specific for stone in the bladder. In his letter Mr. Lawler mentions that FAVORITE REMEDY also cured him of rheumatism. The subjoined certificate tells its own story:

OLD BERKSHIRE MILLS, DALTON, Mass., April 27, 1882.

Mr. Peter Lawler has been a resident of this town for the past seventeen years, and in our employ for fifteen, and in all these years he has been a good and respected citizen of the town and community. He has had some chronic disease to our knowledge for most of the time, but now claims to be, and is, in apparent good health. CHAS. O. BROWN, Pres.

DALTON, Mass., June 9, 1884.

Dr. Kennedy—Dear Friend: Thinking you might like to hear again from an old patient, I am going to write you. It is now (3½) years since first I went to see you. As I told you then I was troubled with Kidney Disease for about (15) years, and had (7) of the best doctors to be found. But I received only temporary relief until I visited you and commenced taking your FAVORITE REMEDY. I continue taking the Remedy according to your directions and consider myself a well man. Very gratefully yours, PETER LAWLER.

Our letter of April 27, 1882, holds good so far as Mr. Lawler's testimony is concerned regarding his health. CHAS. O. BROWN.

DALTON, June 9, 1884.

IT IS NOT

A CURE ALL, but as a tonic and health renewer, and for Blood and Skin Diseases, and troubles dependent on impure or impoverished blood, Swift's Specific is without a rival.

"My baby six months old broke out with some kind of skin humor, and after being treated five months by my family physician, was given up to die. The druggist recommended Swift's Specific, and the result was as gratifying as it was miraculous. My child soon got well, all traces of the disease is gone, and he is as fat as a pig." J. J. KIRKLAND, Minden, Rusk County, Texas.

Our Treatise on Blood and Skin Diseases mailed free to applicants.

THE SWIFT SPECIFIC CO., Drawer 3, Atlanta, Ga.

N. Y. Office, 159 W. 23d St., between 6th and 7th Aves.; Philadelphia Office, 1205 Chestnut St.

SOLDIERS NEW LAWS; Officers' pay from commissions; Deserters relieved; Pensions and increase; experience 19 years; success or no fee. Write for circulars and laws. A. W. McCORMICK & SON, Cincinnati, Ohio.

GUNS, $15.—DOUBLE Barrel Breech Loaders, Rebounding Locks and Pistol Grip, with outfit complete. Send for price list. C. E. Overbaugh & Co. 285 & 287 Broadway, New York.

HAIR Wholesale and retail. Send for price-list. Goods sent C. O. D. Wigs made to order. E. BURNHAM, 71 State Street, Chicago.

"I Have Suffered!"

With every disease imaginable for the last three years. Our Druggist, T. J. Anderson, recommending "Hop Bitters" to me, I used two bottles! Am entirely cured, and heartily recommend Hop Bitters to every one. J. D. Walker, Buckner, Mo.

I write this as a Token of the great appreciation I have of your Hop * * * Bitters. I was afflicted With inflammatory rheumatism ! ! ! For nearly Seven years, and no medicine seemed to do me any Good ! ! Until I tried two bottles of your Hop Bitters, and to my surprise I am as well to-day as ever I was. I hope "You may have abundant success" "In this great and" Valuable medicine: Anyone ! * * wishing to know more about my cure? Can learn by addressing me, E. M. Williams, 1103 16th street, Washington, D. C.

——I consider your Remedy the best remedy in existence For Indigestion, kidney —Complaint "And nervous debility. I have just" Returned "From the south in a fruitless search for health, and find that your Bitters are doing me more Good ! Than anything else; A month ago I was extremely "Emaciated ! ! !" And scarcely able to walk. Now I am Gaining strength ! and "Flesh !" And hardly a day passes but what I am * * * * * * * complimented on my improved appearance, and it is all due to Hop Bitters ! J. Wickliffe Jackson, —Wilmington, Del.

None genuine without a bunch of green Hops on the white label. Shun all the vile, poisonous stuff with "Hop" or "Hops" in their name.

GAIN Health and Happiness.

How? DO AS OTHERS HAVE DONE.

Are your Kidneys disordered? "Kidney Wort brought me from my grave, as it were, after I had been given up by 13 best doctors in Detroit." M. W. Deveraux, Mechanic, Ionia, Mich.

Are your nerves weak? "Kidney Wort cured me from nervous weakness &c., after I was not expected to live."—Mrs. M. M. B. Goodwin, Ed. Christian Monitor Cleveland, O.

Have you Bright's Disease? "Kidney Wort cured me when my water was just like chalk and then like blood." Frank Wilson, Peabody, Mass.

Suffering from Diabetes? "Kidney-Wort is the most successful remedy I have ever used. Gives almost immediate relief." Dr. Phillip C. Ballou, Monkton, Vt.

Have you Liver Complaint? "Kidney-Wort cured me of chronic Liver Diseases after I prayed to die." Henry Ward, late Col. 69th Nat. Guard, N. Y.

Is your Back lame and aching? "Kidney-Wort, (1 bottle) cured me when I was so lame I had to roll out of bed." C. M. Tallmage, Milwaukee, Wis.

Have you Kidney Disease? "Kidney-Wort made me sound in liver and kidneys after years of unsuccessful doctoring. Its worth $10 a box."—Sam'l Hodges, Williamstown, West Va.

Are you Constipated? "Kidney-Wort causes easy evacuations and cured me after 16 years use of other medicines." Nelson Fairchild, St. Albans, Vt.

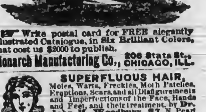
Have you Malaria? "Kidney-Wort has done better than any other remedy I have ever used in my practice." Dr. R. K. Clark, South Hero, Vt.

Are you Bilious? "Kidney-Wort has done me more good than any other remedy I have ever taken." Mrs. J. T. Galloway, Elk Flat, Oregon

Are you tormented with Piles? "Kidney-Wort permanently cured me of bleeding piles. Dr. W. C. Kline recommended it to me." Geo. H. Horst, Cashier M. Bank, Myerstown, Pa.

Are you Rheumatism racked? "Kidney Wort cured me, after I was given up to die by physicians and I had suffered thirty years." Elbridge Malcolm, West Bath, Maine.

Ladies, are you suffering? "Kidney-Wort cured me of peculiar troubles of several years standing. Many friends use and praise it." Mrs. H. Lamoreaux, Isle La Motte, Vt.



If you would Banish Disease and gain Health, Take

KIDNEY-WORT THE BLOOD CLEANSER.

NOW IS THE TIME. To prevent and cure all "Skin Diseases," and to secure a white, soft and beautiful Complexion, use —BEESON'S— Aromatic Alum Sulphur Soap. Sold by Druggists. One cake will be sent on receipt of 25 cents to any address. WM. DREYDOPPEL, Manufacturer, 208 North Front Street, Philadelphia, Pa. BEST and most economical Laundry Soap for Washing, especially Merino, Woolens and Undergarments (cleans perfect and easy; makes clothes white and sweet) is DREYDOPPEL'S Borax Soap. Sold by all wholesale grocers and first-class retailers.

Fast Potato Digging

THE MONARCH POTATO DIGGER

Write postal card for FREE elegantly illustrated Catalogue, in Six Brilliant Colors, that cost us $2000 to publish. Monarch Manufacturing Co., 206 State St., CHICAGO, ILL.

SUPERFLUOUS HAIR, Moles, Warts, Freckles, Moth Patches, Eruptions, Scars, and all Disfigurements and Imperfections of the Face, Hands and Feet, and their treatment, by Dr. John H. Woodbury, 37 N. Pearl St., Albany, N. Y. Send 10c. for book.

MAKE HENS LAY. It is a well-known fact that most of the Horse and Cattle Powder sold in this country is worthless; that Sheridan's Condition Powder is absolutely pure and very valuable. Nothing on Earth will make hens lay like Sheridan's Condition Powder. Dose, one teaspoonful to each pint of food. It will also prevent and cure CHICKEN CHOLERA, Hog Cholera, &c. Sold everywhere, or sent by mail for 25 cents in stamps. Also furnished in large cans, for breeders' use, price $1.00; by mail, $1.20. Circulars sent FREE. I. S. JOHNSON & CO., Boston, Mass.

CUT THIS OUT AND ( ) SEND WITH YOUR ORDER.

THEY ARE THE STANDARD. OUR REMEDIES NEVER FAIL.

NATIONAL GREASE HEEL LOTION. Cleanses your Horses' heels. This lotion Remedy has been used with the most unequaled success. Obviates grease heels and cracked heels. Horse shoers should have it for sale. Price $1.00.

NATIONAL SPANISH LINIMENT. Is invaluable for Sprains, Bruises, Shoulder lameness, Splint, Rheumatism, Affection of the tendons or ligaments, Price $1.00. It should always be at hand in the stable.

FOR SALE BY DRUGGISTS, General Stores and Horseshoers. If they do not have it, send order direct. A New and exceedingly Valuable Live Stock Doctor Book accompanies each Bottle. STANDARD PRICE $1.00.

NATIONAL HOG CHOLERA REMEDY saves your hogs. This Remedy is the discovery of a noted veterinarian and should always be kept on hand by stock raisers and farmers. It is a sure cure. Price $1.00.

NATIONAL COLIC REMEDY. This disease, the most sudden and fatal, is controlled by the National Colic Remedy, the formula is by a noted veterinarian; three doses in each bottle; a cure in every case. Price $1.00.

NATIONAL LIVE STOCK REMEDY CO., 175 DEARBORN STREET, CHICAGO.

CANCER INSTITUTE. Established, 1872; incorporated, 1880. For the Cure of Cancers, Tumors, Ulcers, Scrofula and SKIN DISEASES, without the use of knife or LOSS OF BLOOD, and little pain. For INFORMATION, CIRCULARS AND REFERENCES, address DR. F. L. POND, Aurora, Kane Co., Ill.

"THE BEST IS THE CHEAPEST." SAW MILLS, ENGINES, THRESHERS, Horse Powers, (For all sections and purposes.) Write for Free Pamphlet and Prices to The Aultman & Taylor Co., Mansfield, Ohio.

WANTED Ladies and Gentlemen in City or County to take light work at their own Homes. $3 to $4 a day easily made. Work sent by mail. No canvassing. We have good demand for our work, and furnish steady employment. Address with stamp Crown M'f'g. Co., 290 Race St., Cin'ti, O.

25 CTS. PISO'S CURE FOR CURES WHERE ALL ELSE FAILS. Best Cough Syrup. Tastes good. Use in time. Sold by druggists. CONSUMPTION 25 CTS.

EDUCATIONAL.

UNION COLLEGE OF LAW, Chicago, Ill. The Fall Term will begin September 24. For circular, address H. BOOTH, Chicago, Ill.

SPECIAL Inducements to Young Men to Learn Telegraphy. Send for terms. Commercial and R. R. Telegraph College, Ann Arbor, Mich.

LEARN TELEGRAPHY, or SHORT-HAND and TYPE-WRITING HERE. Situations furnished. Address VALENTINE BROS., Janesville, Wis.

A. N. K.—E. 993

WHEN WRITING TO ADVERTISERS please say you saw the advertisement in this paper.

BOONE COUNTY RECORDER.

VOLUME IX. BURLINGTON, KY., WEDNESDAY, SEPTEMBER 3, 1884. NUMBER 44.

TOPICS OF THE DAY.

DR. GAMPLE, of Birmingham, England, has taken out a patent for sponges made of cotton.

VICTOR HUGO, who is now eighty-two, is in good health, and has stood the hot summer well.

A PRESIDENT must be thirty-five years old and a resident of the United States for fourteen years.

THE papers of Maryland are predicting an oyster season characterized by lower prices and better quality.

CHICAGO, besides the other liquids she consumes, uses ninety million gallons of water per day in hot weather.

THE increasing number of faith cures leads an old doctor to observe that the prevalence of imaginary sickness is frightful.

THE French may yet learn, before the war is over, that the Chinese know how to burn powder in other ways than in fire crackers.

THERE is said to be some prejudice among the wild reds of the Western plains against "them literary fellers" just home from the Indian school at Carlisle, Pa.

GENERAL BUTLER's return to the Assessors of Lowell shows that his income from his profession is $100,000. His horses and yacht America are valued at $30,000 and his real estate at Lowell at $60,500.

IT is reported that with the old fashion of sealing letters with wax the custom of carrying seals on the watchguard or in rings is again coming in. Seals are generally cut in cornelian or agate, mounted in gold.

THE Mozart memorial at Vienna will be built from a design selected from the works of competing artists of all nations. Prizes of 7,500, 5,000 and 2,500 francs respectively will be awarded for the best three designs.

A CONNECTICUT woman sued a married man for $35 for "making the match" and baking the wedding cake, services which she performed at the request of the man's wife before marriage, for which the bride expectant promised to pay.

MAINE is opening her eyes over the fortune she is sinking in potato bugs every year in the form of paris green. One dealer in Portland says he has sold ten tons this year, and he has no doubt that the farmers of Maine have scattered over their potato fields a hundred tons of the poison at a cost of over $50,000.

LAST year 971 separate mining accidents were registered under the coal mining act of Great Britain, against 876 in 1882; loss of life for the same years, 1,054 and 1,126. There were twenty-five explosions of fire damp last year, attended with a loss of 134 lives, against thirty-five explosions for 1882, with a loss of 250 lives.

AMONG the new applications of cotton is its use, in part, in the construction of houses, the material employed for the purpose being the refuse, which, when ground up with about an equal amount of straw and asbestos, is converted into a paste, and this is formed into large slabs or bricks, which acquire, it is said, the hardness of stone, and furnish a really valuable building stock.

THIS summer's drought was not confined, it appears, to the Ohio Valley, where it was severe enough. Reports from many sections of Canada state that pasture lands are almost burned bare. The second growth of grass is poor; hundreds of wells have gone dry, and live stock has to be driven long distances to water, while the root crops have suffered seriously.

SOME of the numerous gas wells in the vicinity of Pittsburg have been in operation for nine years. The gas as it comes from the well is icy cold and almost colorless. Its heating power is 50 per cent. more intense than the heat generated in the most modern blast furnace. It can be conducted from twenty to one hundred miles without losing a great deal of its force, though this depends somewhat on the diameter of the conducting pipe.

THE Philadelphia Ledger offers this bit of seasonable advice: "The right way to receive the mosquito is to open wide your chamber window just about twilight. He appreciates the invitation and cheerfully comes in to sing and stay all night. If you wish to be inhospitable all you have to do is to keep the upper windows shut for an hour before and after sunset, and so make no show of light at an open window afterward, except through a window screen of gauze or wire."

AMERICANS are not welcome at several London hotels. Their landlords say that if a house gets the reputation of being preferred by Americans it is avoided by the English. Now, the American patronage is to be had in sufficient numbers only during a few summer months, whereas the English holds good the entire year round. Naturally the hotel people prefer the English business, and discourage the foreign or American. Yet they do not absolutely refuse accommodation.

AT Carlsruhe, in Baden, the impecunious people have long been helped and fleeced by a regular modern Shylock by the name of Hausmann, whose usurious practices at last brought him to the courts on trial for cruelty to those who were in his power. During the trial some seventy witnesses, mostly debtors, testified to his illegal extortions and traced their own downfall to his grasping avarice. Hausmann was found guilty and sentenced to pay a fine of eight thousand marks.

THE MINE TROUBLES

Culminate in Bloodshed in Hocking County, Ohio.

One Man Killed and Two Wounded—Snake Hollow Attacked at Midnight by a Band of Masked Men.

NELSONVILLE, O., August 31.—At midnight last night some three or four hundred masked men, heavily armed, presumably miners, appeared at Snake Hollow, for the purpose of seeking revenge upon the miners who had taken their places in the mines. Their appearance was the signal for firing from the guards, which was promptly and vigorously returned by the attacking party. Firing was very brisk for a few minutes, and plainly heard by a number of parties here. When the smoke of the battle cleared away it was found that a man named O'Hara from Logan, who was acting captain of the Snake Hollow Guards, was lying dead, with several bullet holes in his body, the fatal shot having penetrated the head, entering the left eye. The other guards were discovered to have received flesh wounds, but not serious. It is not known whether any of the attacking party was wounded, as none were left on the field of battle. It is also said that the attacking party had ropes with which to hang several blacklegs who have been repeatedly warned to desist from working, and they so far proceeded to carry out their threats as to place the ropes around the necks of two men. This, however, is not substantiated. Two horses were also shot, though not fatally. Telegraph lines were also cut near Longstreth, on the New Straitsville branch of the Columbus, Hocking Valley and Toledo Railway, between Lick Run and Haydenville, near this city.

COLUMBUS, September 1.—1:45 A. M.—Nothing further has been heard from Logan. The La[illegible] company is ordered to Logan on a special train. The Sheriff of Hocking County wants three hundred and fifty men to guard five points. The Fourteenth Regiment will be concentrated here and await orders. Troops will not be sent down before morning unless there is more fighting reported.

COLUMBUS, September 1.—The military are being held at 2:15 for further orders. The Lancaster company is at Logan guarding the jail. The Circleville and New Lexington companies have been taken by special train to Lancaster, and all the rest of the troops ordered out are being held at Columbus. The Governor has just left on a special train for the scene of the troubles to investigate the matter for himself, and will then order troops if he thinks necessary. He can reach the point in one hour and thirty minutes.

SAVED FROM THE WRECK.

A Schooner Capsizes in a Squall—The Crew Picked Up After Floating on a Raft Three Days Without Food.

MUSKEGON, MICH., August 31.—The crew of the wrecked schooner Brigham arrived here on board the schooner Walter Smith, which picked them up in mid-lake Thursday. They are four in number, Jas. Leary, Captain; Patrick Powers, Richard Bird and Edward Atkinson. The Brigham left Muskegon Saturday, the 23d inst., with a cargo of lumber for Chicago. Sunday evening a violent squall struck her, and she nearly swamped. The men stood at the pumps all night, but the storm increased. Monday forenoon the Brigham capsized, and shortly after careened bottom up. All day the men floated about on a temporary raft. Seas swept over them, and their sufferings can not be told. Tuesday passed, one vessel only being seen, the attention of which they failed to attract. The situation was unchanged until Thursday morning, when they were rescued by the Walter Smith. Up to that time the men had been entirely without food.

The Cholera in Europe.

LONDON, August 31.—The cholera is still spreading in the Pyrenees villages, but elsewhere in France it has abated its virulence somewhat. The total number of deaths to date is 4,376. Three new departments—Aveyron, which is one of the most mountainous districts in France; Ariege, which also is very mountainous, and Taran, which is well known for its forests—have reported deaths during the week, while the disease seems to have died out in Gaud and Hautes-Alpes. In a department of the Pyrenees (Mont d'Or district), during the week there has been an awful spread of the disease. The last previous report named fifteen villages which had been visited. Now there are thirty, and there is a daily increase. There have been about twenty-five deaths in Corsica, and some eighty persons are in the insane asylum at Aix. In Italy the situation is alarming, and it is made doubly so by the brutal ignorance of the peasantry, who stone the doctors in the streets, and refuse to go to the hospitals. It seems probable that the epidemic will make terrible havoc in Italy before the year closes.

London Mysteries.

LONDON, August 31.—The dead body of a young girl, about eight years of age, in the garden in front of a fashionable house in Marda Vale, has excited a sensation, and renews the talk about the number of undetected mysteries in London. The annual police report mentions that last year the loss of 12,411 children under ten was reported, and though only six, were unrecovered, this, with one hundred and thirty adults who can not be traced, and thirty-five dead bodies picked up in the streets and unidentified, make a bad yearly total of sinister mysteries.

Tariff on Cattle and Beef.

NEW YORK, August 30.—Trunk-line Commissioner Fink furnishes the following: In accordance with an agreement of the standing committee of the joint Executive Committee notice is hereby given that, taking effect immediately, tariff rates on cattle and beef will be on the following basis: From Chicago to New York, cattle twenty cents per one hundred pounds, and dressed beef thirty-two cents per one hundred pounds.

China Wants Revenge.

LONDON, August 30.—The Pall Mall Gazette says: "There is not the slightest foundation for the report that China wishes to come to an agreement with France. The Chinese consider the Foo Chow affair as an act of treachery on the part of Courbet, who took advantage of the permission accorded war ships of friendly Powers to enter Chinese ports. The barbarity of continuing the fire hours after the Chinese vessels had ceased is a cause for intense excitement against Europeans."

Buried Under Forty Loaded Cars.

BUFFALO, August 30.—A freight train on the New York Central Railroad, near Newark, N. Y., jumped the track. John J. Casey, fireman, was killed by forty loaded cars piling on him.

SAVED FROM THE BREAKERS.

An Accomplished Philadelphia Young Lady Marries Her Rescuer.

PITTSBURG, PA., August 30.—A secret marriage, tinged with romance, took place in Philadelphia yesterday afternoon. The parties to the sacred contract were Captain Mike Bradford, of the Bradford Bros., Life Guards, stationed at Atlantic City, near Howard's Ocean Pier, and the beautiful young daughter of a wealthy Philadelphian. The attachment between the young couple, which finally resulted in wedlock, had its origin in a strange manner. During the early part of the present season the young woman, whose name is withheld at her urgent request, was bathing in front of the Bradford Bros. tent. She ventured out too far, and was soon being tossed about by the breakers. One last agonizing cry for "help" brought to her assistance Captain Bradford, who brought her ashore in an unconscious condition. The beautiful bather had gone down for the last time when rescued. She was restored to consciousness and taken to her friends. Ever after that the young woman was accompanied by a relative when bathing. She frequently called upon Captain Bradford, and was profuse in her thanks to him for saving her life. These frequent meetings ripened into an acquaintance that finally resulted in courtship and wound up in marriage. After her rescue the young woman became very much attached to her rescuer, and never missed an opportunity to bathe in front of Bradford's tent. Being under the surveillance of her relative, who suspected the secret love-making, the young woman would take slips of paper with her, and, while lying on the sand, write notes, which she would slip into the hands of her lover. The bride is accomplished and beautiful. The groom is a native of Pittsburg, the son of poor and humble parents. Nine years ago, with his three brothers, he established the life-guard station over which he presides, and during the time he has assisted in saving 432 lives.

The Relief Expedition.

LONDON, August 30.—The government has ordered 250,000 pounds more of Chicago compressed beef for the Soudan expedition. Four transports at Woolwich and two at Liverpool are loading stores and munitions of war for Egypt. The transport Poonah takes 750 troops to Egypt. Certain particulars with reference to the relief expedition up the Nile have been finally arranged. The force which will proceed south of Assouan will be composed of 8,000 British troops, 2,500 Egyptians, and a flotilla of 950 river boats. The boats will be manned by 600 Canadians, 300 Kroomen and about 2,000 Egyptian and Nubian boatmen. The cost of the campaign is estimated at $8,000,000. It is reported that General Lord Wolseley, before accepting chief command of the expedition, insisted upon being granted carte blanche as to strength and equipment of forces. The total number of British troops in Egypt at the present moment is 10,128, of whom 601 are on the sick list. When all the reinforcements destined for Egypt reach there, the total number will be 15,000. The exact composition of the force which will take part in the expedition to Khartoum will not be decided upon until General Wolseley reaches Egypt. General orders are already given, however, to eliminate from the troops all men whose physique renders it likely that they would be unable to endure the privations to which the expedition will, no doubt, be exposed. Several special correspondents leave London for Egypt to-night.

A Russian Girl's Vengeance.

ODESSA, August 30.—The details of an attempted shooting a few days ago of Colonel Katansky, Chief of Gendarmes of this city, hitherto suppressed, are now made public. The motive leading the young woman, Maria Kelinsmaja, to attempt the desperate deed, was a desire for revenge. Katansky had sentenced her brother, a member of a revolutionary society, to penal servitude for life. The girl entered Katansky's private room, and twenty minutes later drew a revolver and fired point blank at the officer. The bullet grazed his ear, and before she could fire again Katansky seized the weapon and placed the young woman under arrest.

Expensive Funerals in London.

LONDON, August 31.—An action against a mechanic has thrown a curious light on the expensive funeral habits that still exist among the poorer classes in England. The action was for one pound eighteen shillings for the coffin, a guinea for a hearse and two broughams, seven shillings for wine, eleven for cabs, and-one-and-sixpence for refreshments for the drivers. The weekly wages of the mechanic was six shillings. The Judge was very hard on the undertaker, and commented on the burial of the son of the Duke of Westminster, the richest man in England, in a plain deal coffin, as an example to poorer people.

Hydrophobia.

CHICAGO, August 31.—In April last a lap dog belonging to Mrs. Geo. M. Pullman bit James Mulvaney, aged eighteen. The boy was taken ill a week ago and died to-day. He had been kept under the influence of opiates so his sufferings were not apparent, but the cause of his death was undoubtedly hydrophobia.

Their Courage Failing.

MONTREAL, August 30.—The enthusiasm of the Caughnawega Indians for the Khartoum expedition is weakening. They want a guarantee against death in the service, and refuse to engage longer than six months.

Old Rags.

WASHINGTON, August 30.—The Acting Secretary of the Treasurer has issued the following circular: "Notice is hereby given that unlading old rags arriving at ports of the United States from foreign ports on and after the 1st prox. is prohibited from three months after that date."

Run Down by a Locomotive.

MONTPELIER, IND., August 30.—Charles Kirby, a deaf and dumb man, while walking on the track of the Fort Wayne, Louisville and Cincinnati Railroad at Ponetta, north of here, was run down by Express Train No. 9, and instantly killed. He was walking ahead of the train. The engineer supposed he would step out of the way until too late to stop.

Carelessness of Human Life.

SHAMOKIN, PA., August 30.—At the inquest of the seven victims of the Greenback Mine disaster, to-day, the Coroner's jury censured the Reading Company for ignorance, and the negligence of R. C. Luther, Mining Engineer, and William Booth, Division Superintendent. It is expected the families of the victims will bring suit against the company.

Distressing Railway Casualty.

BOSTON, August 31.—At Nantasket Beach the five-year-old daughter of Thomas Regan, of Boston, wandered upon the track of the railroad in front of an approaching train. The father and grandmother, seeing the child's peril, rushed to the rescue, and all three were struck by the train. The child was instantly killed, and the father and grandmother probably fatally injured.

THE CHINESE WAR.

The Chinese Defiant, Official Placards Proclaiming War.

Foreigners, Other Than French, to be Unmolested Under Heavy Penalties.

LONDON, September 1.—A private dispatch from Tien-Tsin says China is not disheartened. The Government has issued an edict encouraging troops to fight, and warning local authorities everywhere to protect non-combatant Frenchmen. A Times dispatch from Pekin says: Imperial edicts and diplomatic circulars recently issued by the Tsung Li Yemen indicate a spirit of defiance as the result of the Foo Chow disaster, and placards posted in the streets proclaim war with France, but enjoin the people, under severe penalties, not to molest citizens of other nations.

TOULON, September 1.—Great activity prevails at Toulon Arsenal. Several transports are placed in readiness to embark troops for China.

PARIS, September 1.—It is stated in semi-official quarters that the French fleet in Chinese waters will go to the Gulf of Pechili for the present, and that an attack will be made on Canton by both land and sea forces as soon as the climate permits the march of the troops across the frontier from Tonquin.

HONG KONG, September 1.—A proclamation has been issued by the Chinese authorities placing a price upon the heads of Frenchmen.

Agricultural Statistics.

WASHINGTON, September 1.—Prof. J. R. Dodge, Statistician of the Agricultural Department, has issued a small book upon industrial economy of the United States, which presents some striking results of his investigation of statistics of manufacturing and agricultural productions of the country for twenty years. Within that period, owing to labor-saving machinery, agriculture has more than doubled its production, with a smaller proportion of farm labor, and now threatens a glut in farm products unless this proportion shall be farther reduced. The question of an outlet to foreign markets is discussed, and facts shown that the surplus of food products merely pays for imported food and beverages, and that trade can not be extended without a ruinous reduction in prices. The distribution of labor in occupations in this and other countries, is shown with reference to comparative thrift and progress. It is found invariably that inequality of distribution of industries retards developments; that exclusively agricultural nations are always poor. Phenomenal progress of Central "West" is presented in deductions from statistics showing that the half-cultivated area of the United States lies in one-fourth its territory, producing more than three-fourths of some of the principal crops. The fact is shown that the Ohio Valley is a most fully occupied body of land, Ohio having 94 per cent. of her surface in farms; Indiana, 88.9; Illinois, 88.4; Kentucky, 84, and no other State as much. It is shown that already three-tenths of the manufactures of the United States are produced within the "Central West," in less than three-tenths of the area of country, within half a century from its settlement.

A Four-Handed Fight—Three Killed.

OAKLAND, ILL., September 1.—This afternoon Taylor Doane and Tom Brown, two hard characters, went to the residence of Edward McConkey, a young farmer, avowing their intention to "clean him out." While a rough-and-tumble fight between Doane and McConkey was progressing Brown attempted to help his partner, seeing which, a half-witted employe of McConkey named Dean brained Doane with a scantling. Brown immediately emptied three chambers of his revolver into Dean, when he was himself felled to the ground by a shower of blows from an iron pipe in the hands of McConkey. The latter surrendered to the authorities. Dean and Brown are both dying. Doane's death was instantaneous.

Arkansas Elections.

LITTLE ROCK, ARK., September 1.—The county ticket will be close, but the election of the whole ticket is claimed by the Democrats. Specials from all over the State indicate a very large vote, due to increased population and deep interest in the county elections. Owing to combination tickets the Democratic State ticket is elected by a large majority. The indications are that most Republicans voted against the amendment repudiating $11,000,000 of railroad aid and levee bonds.

A Pigeon Tournament.

WASHINGTON September 1.—Arrangements are being made for a union meet of Antwerp pigeons in this city during the present month. Eight hundred birds will be sent here and liberated by Mr. Grant Parish, from the dome of the capital. The birds will come from a radius of one hundred miles, and their owners will remain at home and mark the time of the arrival of their birds. No prize is offered for the fleetest bird beyond the honor of possessing the fleetest flyers.

Not So Bad After All.

WASHINGTON, September 1.—It now appears that the Washington Monument Society has conveyed its title to the ground on which the shaft stands to the Government. The deed was filed in the State Department, and does not seem to have been recorded in the Register office of the District.

Austro-Hungarian Flag.

WASHINGTON, September 1.—Secretary of State Frelinghuysen has recognized the right of the Austro-Hungarian Consul at Pittsburg, Pa., to display the Austrian flag, despite the municipal ordinance prohibiting such "street obstruction."

Labor Demonstration.

NEW YORK, September 1.—The labor demonstration and parade to-day, was a large, orderly and enthusiastic affair. There were nearly 20,000 men in line of march.

Female Suffrage.

JOHNSTOWN, N. Y., September 1.—Mrs. Elizabeth Cady Stanton cast her first vote in the school election here. A lady was elected Trustee.

—King Ludwig, of Bavaria, has the finest horses in his stables, and soon ruins them by hard riding. Sometimes his majesty rises in the night, has a black steed saddled, and dashes off at a whirlwind speed up and down the hill roads—which are well kept for that reason—like a phantom horseman pursued by some relentless decree of the supernatural powers.

—The reduced son of a former editor of a leading London newspaper hires a cab after dark and picks up "fares" till midnight. He says other poor gentlemen in London do the same thing, and that their knowledge of the world and of European languages stands them in good stead.

—A young man, meaning to be very gallant, presented a lady with a rose, saying: "Madame, allow me to present you to one of your sisters." Judge of his chagrin when a bug crawled out and sat down in the middle of the rose. —Troy Times.

—An Atlanta (Ga.) man who was given a letter to mail eighteen years ago posted it recently.

THE COMMONWEALTH.

Louisville Leaf Tobacco Market.

Dark and heavy styles have been in sellers' favor throughout the week. Regie and other foreign styles have been scarce, and medium to good leaf has sold at a somewhat better average range of prices. Green river leaf has been active and steady. Lugs have ruled firm. Advices from the country indicate that the crop is more uneven than had been commonly supposed, with considerable suffering in some localities from drouth. The Burley tobacco district of Ohio has suffered most seriously. Copious showers visited this section during the week, and the rain area was of great extent eastward and northward, but south of Louisville there were only areas of rain. Drouth has so far been a subject of much less complaint than usual, and the general anticipation is for a good yield. The Virginia crop is said to be in excellent condition, and bright wrappers have recently declined $5@$10. We quote full-weight packages new-crop sound tobacco as follows:

	Dark and Heavy.	Burley.
Trash	$6 00@ 6 75	$6 50@ 8 00
Common lugs	7 00@ 7 25	7 00@ 8 00
Medium lugs	7 50@ 7 75	8 00@ 9 00
Good lugs	8 00@ 8 50	9 50@10 00
Common leaf	8 00@ 8 50	10 00@11 00
Medium leaf	8 75@ 9 50	12 00@13 50
Good leaf	10 00@11 00	14 50@18 50
Fine and fancy leaf	12 00@16 00	18 00@20 00

Miscellaneous Items.

THE result of the prize drill at Louisville was: The Treadway Rifles, of St. Louis, Mo., get the first prize, $3,000; Montgomery (Ala.) Greys, second, $1,000; Indianapolis Light Infantry, third, $500; Porter Rifles, Nashville, fourth place, and Quapaw Guards, of Little Rock, Ark., fifth.

A DEADLY form of typho-malarial fever is reported at Minerva, Mason County.

CAPT. JOHN CROMIE committed suicide at Louisville a few days ago, by shooting himself.

THE meeting of Prohibitionists to nominate State Electors and ratify the nomination of St. John, was held at Louisville, a few days since. General Green Clay Smith called the meeting to order, and submitted a prohibition address to the people of Kentucky, claiming that the Prohibition party is the one looking to the interest of the workingmen. The address was adopted as the platform of the party in this State. The following Electors were selected: State-at-large, General Green Clay Smith and Colonel George W. Bain: First District, A. G. Lee, J. T. Bolinger; Second District, Colonel J. M. Holmes, R. S. Eestin; Third District, B. T. Swindler, Den T. Cine; Fourth District, Colonel J. W. Bowles, A. V. Foose; Fifth District, Jas. Haskel, Colonel Bowles; Sixth District, H. M. Winston, James Henderson; Seventh District, Jno. Lewis, B. F. Turner; Eighth District, E. J. Polk, J. J. Bush; Ninth District, Wm. Fitch, J. Bradford; Tenth District, J. Persons; Eleventh District, R. H. Grinsted.

A MAN named Roberts shot and killed a neighbor named Benedict, near Stanford, and then escaped. The authorities made no effort to arrest him.

IN a street fight at Berry, a few days since, Steve Quinn shot Dick Williams in the thigh, inflicting a painful, though not fatal wound.

R. H. JOHNSON, Sheriff of Hickman County, while assisting in a barn-raising, fell and sustained injuries that resulted in death.

LADY DE JARNETTE, the property of W. H. Wilson, of Cynthiana, will be raffled off at ten dollars a chance, provided five hundred chances can be sold. It will be remembered Mr. Wilson lost heavily by the burning of his stable recently.

WHILE the ministers attending the Baptist Association meeting, at Berry's Station, were about to partake of a bountiful spread prepared by the ladies, Dick Lowe and William Barlow suddenly broke upon the festive scene, brandishing revolvers. They were arrested and lodged in jail at Cynthiana.

THE Blue grass crop of growing tobacco is estimated as follows: Bourbon County, 3,500 acres; Fayette, 1,500; Jessamine, 2,200; Scott, 2,700; Woodford, 3,200, in all, 13,100 acres.

GENERAL DAN MACAULEY and W. S. Neely have been appointed Special Pension Agents for Kentucky.

A POSTOFFICE has been established at Ready, Greyson County.

JOE HILL has been commissioned Postmaster at Spartaville.

THE Postoffice at Lawton, Carter County, has been discontinued.

THE other evening there was a shooting scrape near Pine Hill, Rockcastle County, between Geo. W. Brown and Sip Langford on one side, and Van Mason on the other. The difficulty came up about some defamatory talk which Mason had understood Brown to have had about him. Fifteen or twenty shots were fired, only one which took effect. This was from a needle-gun in the hands of Brown. The ball struck Mason on the left cheek, ranged down into his shoulder and came out at the back of the shoulder blade, making a very dangerous wound. Brown surrendered himself to the County Judges, who placed him in the custody of the jailer until a time could be fixed for trial.

ABRAM PENICK, of Winchester, the most famous short-horn breeder in the United States, died a few days ago, aged eighty-three. He leaves an estate valued at $400,000.

A LARGE catamount was killed near Princeton a few days since.

CHRIS. BARNER was shot and killed in Wm. Kessler's saloon, Louisville.

THE committee appointed by the Legislature to adjust the $30,000 claim of Captain Newton Craig against the State allowed him $11,000.

A BOURBON County rat-terrier has been trained to catch worms on growing tobacco.

MISS LIZZIE NICHOLS took the blue ribbon at the Cynthiana fair the other day, as the most successful horseback rider. In the saddle her dashing courage is surpassed only by her ease and grace.

JOHN R. WOLFE, who was shot in the attempt to escape from the Kentucky Penitentiary, was still alive on the 25th, but it is thought he can not recover.

Two large frame barns belonging to James T. Williams, near Eminence, containing a large amount of grain and agricultural implements, were destroyed by fire a few mornings ago. Loss about $7,000. Insurance in Niagara, $2,000. His fine racers were saved. Incendiary.

THE county jail of Henderson has fifteen inmates, six for murder, two for horse-stealing, four for grand larceny, and three for malicious cutting.

JAMES JOHNSON shot and killed John Bartlay at a Democratic primary in Louisville.

MAJ. E. B. TREADWAY, of Owsley County, has been declared insane, the result of strong drink. He was a soldier in the Mexican war; a Major in the Union army in the late war, and a Representative in the Legislature.

MR. SAM. JONES, a pioneer of Henry County, is dead, aged eighty-seven years.

A POSTOFFICE has been established at Ordinary, Elliott County.

THE name of the postoffice at Long Falls Creek, McLean County, has been changed to Glenville.

MARSHAL MERIWETHER, of Sharpsburg, shot and killed Dan Henry in the attempt to arrest him.

Neighborhood Industries.

Nearly every one has noticed that every department of trade in a large city centralizes in a particular quarter. In all old cities the wholesale book, clothing, iron, grocery and dry goods stores occupy distinct quarters of the business portion. Even rivals in business desire to be near each other. It is a great convenience to customers who come to a city for the purpose of buying supplies to have the establishments devoted to the sale of particular lines of goods near each other. In several European countries entire towns are devoted to particular branches of manufacture. For more than a century Geneva has been famous for the manufacture of watches. Sheffield for the manufacture of cutlery, and Manchester for the production of cotton cloth. We have several cities in this country that owe their prominence to particular branches of manufacturing. Specialities in agriculture are also largely confined to certain localities. Half the hops for the supply of Great Britain are produced in two counties in England. The County of Durham produces a large part of the mustard that is required to supply the world. Peculiarities of soil and climate often exert a great influence in determining what crops will be produced in a particular locality. Often, however, the enterprise and ability of a single farmer, horticulturist or breeder secures a reputation, not only for himself, but for the location where he lives. Some enterprising man planted tobacco in the valley of the Connecticut River, took great pains in raising and curing the crop, and secured a reputation not only for the tobacco he placed on the market, but for the region where it was produced. Still it is likely that there are a hundred better places in the country for raising tobacco where a stalk was never produced.

Nearly every farmer finds it to his advantage to keep horses for doing his work, cows for affording milk to use in the house, and fowls for producing eggs for use at the family table. He also finds it economical to raise the food these creatures consume, the common fruits needed in the house, and the grain necessary to supply bread for the family. There are few farmers who do not find it advantageous to raise their own pork, potatoes, and garden vegetables. If they are living in a region where the soil and climate are specially adapted to one of the standard corps, as corn, wheat, cotton, rice, tobacco, or sugar-cane, they will be likely to turn their attention to the one that is the most remunerative, and to make it a specialty. The money value of a suitable climate and soil can hardly be estimated. The profitable production of certain crops depends on the climate and the composition of the soil. There are many minor crops, as broom-corn, hops, castor beans, grass and clover seed, and vegetables for making pickles, that are very profitable if they are managed properly. It is rare, however, that one farmer succeeds in making much money in raising either of them if none of his neighbors are engaged in the same branch of business. There is nothing to be learned from the experience, success and failures of others. There is no one "to compare notes with." No one is interested in the branch of business and anxious to have it prove a success. Not enough is produced by any one farmer to make it an object for dealers to come to the place to purchase it. It must be sent to a distant city to be sold and consigned to a commission merchant who may fix the price to suit himself. If only one farmer in a neighborhood is engaged in producing a special crop he will find it difficult to procure competent help when occasion requires.

When several farmers unite, however, in raising some special crop, they are generally successful. Each, while working for himself, does much for the common cause. The knowledge gained by one is conveyed to the others. If one makes a failure, the others are anxious to ascertain the cause of it. If one is very successful, the others study his methods and copy them. They visit each other's places and make observations. Not infrequently they form an association for mutual improvement, procuring improved implements and seeds: as well as for obtaining books and other publications. They often combine in sending their products to market, and in inducing dealers to visit them with a view to purchasing their crops. Not infrequently they unite in purchasing costly implements and in putting up storehouses. They are all anxious to obtain a reputation for the crop they produce. The recent great success in dairying in this country is chiefly due to the circumstance that the business of producing milk and the manufacture of butter and cheese has been undertaken by nearly all the farmers in certain neighborhoods. While the isolated dairyman has failed or met with very indifferent success the milk-producers in neighborhoods almost entirely devoted to this branch of husbandry have enjoyed a high degree of prosperity. It has been much the same in the breeding of all kinds of live stock. The isolated breeder of horses, cattle, sheep or pigs does not ordinarily succeed as well as one who lives in a neighborhood where there are several engaged in the same branches of business. Purchasers of fine animals like to go where there are several herds, studs and flocks to select from. They can make comparisons, and be more likely to find what they want. The breeders themselves find much advantage in being near each other.—Chicago Times.

The Mouth of the Columbia River.

Early in the last century vague reports were received by the Jesuits, who had reached Lake Superior, of a great river that rose near the western end of the lake, and flowed west into the Pacific. In 1775 Captain Bruno Haceta, commander of the Spanish exploring ship Santiago, sailed past what he believed to be the mouth of a river on the western coast of North America, near latitude 46 degrees. He named it Rio de San Rogue, but deemed it too insignificant to be worth exploring, and so did not enter it. Three years later the great navigator, Captain Cook sailed along the same coast in the Resolution, but failed to note any traces of the great river. In July of the same year Captain Meares visited the coast on purpose to discover whether such a river as had been mentioned by Haceta existed or not. He discovered and named Cape Disappointment, called the insignificant inlet at its base Deception Bay, and sailed away, afterward reporting that the alleged river was merely a small inlet blocked by a sand spit.

In 1789 Captain Gray, of Boston, who was the first to bear the flag of the young republic around the world, while cruising up this coast fancied that, when in latitude about 46 deg., he saw signs of being off the mouth of an immense fresh-water river, but did not have time to stop and verify his supposition. Three years later, in the spring of 1792, he again found himself on this coast, in command of the ship Columbia, with time enough on his hands to carry out his cherished scheme of searching for the river of whose existence he felt so certain. He sailed south from the Straits of Juan de Fuca, and on his way down the coast fell in with Captain George Vancouver, on his famous exploring expedition that ended in the discovery of Puget Sound. The two captains exchanged courtesies and compared notes. Captain Gray mentioned the river that he hoped to find, and Vancouver laughed at him. The latter said that he had carefully examined the entire coast for two hundred miles under the most favorable circumstances, that the line of breakers was unbroken, and that he had only noted signs of river water near an opening that appeared so insignificant that he did not deem it worthy of attention.

On the following day, May 11, Captain Gray sailed the Columbia into this insignificant inlet, and discovered one of the grandest rivers in the world, which he named "Columbia" in honor of his ship. He named the extreme point of Cape Disappointment Point Hancock, and the head land on the south side of the river Point Adams, after the two most distinguished men of his native State. Behind Cape Disappointment he found a beautiful bay, which he named Baker's, and to the point bounding it on the east he gave the name of Chinook. Fifty years later the testimony of Captain Gray's log-book gave the noble river that he thus discovered to the United States, and moved the international boundary line three degrees north, to the Straits of Juan de Fuca.

On November 7, 1805, the intrepid explorers Lewis and Clark, coming from the interior, reached the mouth of the Columbia, which they called by its Indian name of Oregon.

In March, 1811, a company of fur traders, sent out from New York by John Jacob Astor, founded the settlement of Astoria, near the mouth of the river, which thus became the first American settlement on the Pacific Coast. Astoria struggled for existence for three years, and then fell into the hands of the British, who changed its name to Fort George. It is comparatively but a short time ago that it again came under the American flag, and was rechristened Astoria. To-day it is a flourishing city containing several thousand inhabitants, who are very proud of their handsome Masonic Hall, their Custom-house, and, above all, of the immense salmon-canning business conducted by its merchants. The canning establishments are huge unsightly structures of wood, built out over the river on piles, and in them the entire process of preparing and canning the salmon is conducted by Chinese workmen. But if these establishments are blemishes on the landscape, the fishing fleet which sails out from Astoria every evening during the season presents a most picturesque sight. The boats are small, sharp at both ends, cat-rigged, and each carries the two men necessary to manage the gill-net with which its cargo is to be secured. A favorite resort for the fishermen is in the vicinity of Pillar Rock, which rises abruptly from near the middle of the river a few miles above Astoria. From here they pursue their prey down to the mouth of the river, where it sometimes happens that they cast their nets so near the bar that the outgoing tide, rushing like a mill-race, sweeps them into the remorseless breakers. The products of their toil have found their way into every market in the world, and to-day Columbia River canned salmon commands a higher price than any other.

The most notable object near the mouth of the Columbia is the Tillamook light-house. It is built on a rock so precipitous, and rising from the midst of a tideway so terrible, that no boat may approach it closely without being dashed in pieces. To overcome these difficulties a huge derrick with a far-reaching arm raises and lowers an iron cage in which are contained the visitors or supplies that reach the light-house from the mainland. In this peculiar feature of inaccessibility this light-house stands alone in the world.—Harper's Weekly.

Coaching.

The reason why men do not drive nowadays with the skill which used to characterize the gentleman dragsman is easily found. They have not the practice, and what practice they do have is rarely of the servitude sort. Sometimes men go still to one of the two or three professional drivers who keep scratch teams as well as perfect ones, and permit their pupils to pull the animals' months about in Battersea Park; but the coachman of the present year of grace usually has a team "made" for him, he chooses his own road, and he goes his own pace. Our fathers learned to drive in a rougher school. They secured a seat on the box of a stage-coach by the side of a sound coachman, they took the reins—other passengers, no doubt, regarded the proceeding with varying sentiments—and they learned from their mentor the way they should go. Anything that could gallop a bit and could be persuaded to pull—and there were few that could not—was thought good enough for a team on many of the old roads. "Three blind 'uns and a bolter" was often the change from a confirmed kicker, a leader that pulled your arms off, a wheeler that would not start, and a fourth with an assortment of vices, any of which might come uppermost at any moment. Time had to be kept or trouble ensued, and it was behind such teams as this that the art of driving was to be mastered. The student acquired a good seat on the box, because the better the seat the more command a man has over his animals. He found out how to hold his horses together without pulling them, because the less they were interfered with when going freely and well together the faster they traveled. He did not endeavor to start the coach by the leaders, because he discovered that such a proceeding was likely to break the bars; and he found out that when he wanted to stop a hint to that effect must be first conveyed to the wheelers. The art of hitting his horses he also picked up. "Why, bless you, sir, there's some of 'em as never could hit a horse; and as for hitting a near-side leader, why they sit a-poking at 'em as if they were trying to pick a penny out of a pint pot, instead of turning their wrists under and letting their thong go." Such was the criticism of a professional coachman on amateur driving a good many years back, and since then things have certainly not improved.—Saturday Review.

—The new hanging staircase in the southeast corner pavilion of the Philadelphia City Hall is said by architects to be the finest specimen of work of its kind in America. Its cost, when completed, will be $100,000.—Philadelphia Press.

SCIENCE AND INDUSTRY.

—The electric street-cars of Cleveland, O., make eight miles an hour easily.—Cleveland Herald.

—A Paterson silk manufacturer has taken out a patent for a process by which cotton and silk threads may be twisted about light wires, to produce the effect of an ostrich feather or plume, for ladies' hats and other purposes.—Newark Register.

—The employment of an invisible actinic ink, of which there is no trace on the paper or in the image upon the focusing screen, it is said will prevent forgery of bank notes. As soon as one begins to develop the plate the word "forgery," written with the ink, appears on the negative.—Boston Journal.

—What is claimed to be a valuable rust protector is among the recent German inventions. It consists of ordinary oil paint mixed with ten per cent. of burned magnesia, baryta, or strontia, as well as mineral oil. This neutralizes the free acid of the paint, and the alkaline reaction protects the iron from rust.

—A new synchronous-multiple telegraph system was recently tested. In five minutes there were sent over one wire, in six circuits, 893 words while 805 were received. In ten minutes over one wire, using six circuits, 2,244 words were sent, averaging about thirty-seven words per minute to each circuit.—Chicago Herald.

—A design has been submitted to the Australian Minister for Water Supply of a contrivance for bringing down rain. It is in the form of a balloon, with a charge of dynamite underneath it. The balloon is to be sent into the clouds, and the dynamite is to be fired by a wire connecting it with the earth. The inventor, Mr. E. S. Haines, of Richmond, intends to try it in the dry districts of New South Wales.

—The air brush was one of the useful and interesting inventions exhibited at the recent Photographers' Convention in Philadelphia. A little holder is charged with India ink, and by a bellows operated with a foot pedal, after the manner of a sewing machine, the fluid is blown upon a faintly outlined portrait, the result giving a picture superior in many respects to the best crayon drawing. A life-size portrait may thus be made in a few hours, where as formerly by the use of the stump and pencil as many weeks were required.—Philadelphia Press.

—A correspondent of the Scientific American has been figuring on the red sunset question. He says: "To estimate the possible quantity of ashes required to give the red tint required in the sky, let us assume that an inch of ashes are spread through ten cubic yards of air This gives a dilution of 155,000 times. Astronomers tell us the cause of the red light reaches sixty miles in the air. At the rate of diffusion of the ashes that is assumed, this would require a mass of forty-two miles of cube, or a mile of ashes one mile high, forty-two miles wide and 1,700 miles long.

PITH AND POINT.

—Enquirer asks: "What shall I do to keep my greyhound from howling at night?" Did you ever try feeding him on paris green.—Boston Post.

—Cholera is not the worst horror that threatens Paris. A Frenchman has written a drama called "Les Dudes," which he proposes to bring out in that city.

—"Why am I like a Wall street financier?" asked a young farmer as he returned from the barn. "I give it up," replied his father. "Because I have been watering the stock."—Brooklyn Times.

—Lady (engaging laundress and nervous about small-pox)—"I hope you are very particular about infection." Laundress—"Lor, mum!" we never use none of it We always washes clothes with our 'ands!"

—"My daughter," said a pompous old gentleman, "you must never listen to flatterers." "But, papa," said the young lady, "how can I tell that they are flatterers unless I listen."—N. Y. Tribune.

—"O, don't propose to me here!" exclaimed a young lady, whose love was about to pour out his avowal as they were riding by a corn-field. "The very best corn has ears."—Burlington Free Press.

—The Telegram:

She catches at the telegram—
Conjecture racks her brain;
She knows her husband has been killed
On some outgoing train
Her fingers shake—her breath comes fast—
Oh dreadful it must be!
With angry scowl she reads the line:
"I'll bring a friend to tea!"

—Philadelphia Call.

—Mrs. Temperance—The weather is so warm I thought a little lemonade would be refreshing. Won't you have some, Mr. Idler? Mr. Idler—Thanks; no. I must confess I do not care for plain lemonade. I dont think it agrees with me. Mrs. Temperance—Won't you please tell me how you like it, and let me mix you some? Mr. Idler—Well, the fact is, I only like it with a stick in it. "A stick?" "Yes; but pray do not trouble yourself." "Oh, no trouble at all, I assure you. Jane, bring me the mucilage."—Philadelphia Call.

—Pat was a fresh arrival and had obtained a situation in a hotel as a sort of man of all work. "Now, Pat," said the landlord, "you see that sign, 'Gentlemen must use the spittoons.' If you notice any of the guests violating that rule I want you to report the matter to me." "Oi wull, sor." Pat kept a sharp eye out, and, after watching a gentleman for half an hour, he went up to him and said: "D'ye moind the sign forninst the wall, sor?" "Yes." "Why don't ye obsarve it, thin?" "I am not spitting on the carpet," said the gentleman, rather astonished. "Oi knaw yer not, an' yer not usin' the spettune naythur. Spet, ye thafe, or oi'll report yez."—N. Y. Sun.

Petrified Forests to Be Utilized.

The petrified forests near Holbrook, Arizona, have been purchased by a company. It has commenced the shipment and manufacture of the petrifactions into tablets, tiles and various ornamental articles in building and furnishing. In this connection the Prescott Miner has the following "Governor Tritle informs us that while in San Francisco he inspected an establishment recently started for the cutting and polishing of petrified wood taken from the wonderful forest of petrifactions existing along the line of the Atlantic & Pacific in this Territory. The parties engaged in this work state that the petrified wood is rapidly driving California onyx from the market as a material for fine mantels, etc., as it is susceptible of a much finer polish and also more permanent and lasting than that of the onyx. Several companies have already been formed for the purpose of getting possession of portions of the forest by pre-emption, etc."—Virginia City (Nev.) Enterprise.

THE RECORDER.

WEDNESDAY, SEPT. 3. 1884.

RIDDELL & HALL,
Proprietors.

For announcing candidates, $5. Obituary poetry, 5 cents per line. Obituary notices 20 lines free; after that number (except the announcement of the death) 3 cents per line.
Tributes of respect from lodges, &c., $1 50

We are authorized to announce
DR. JAMES S. BROWN.
of Warsaw, as a candidate for the State Senate, from this, the 23d Senatorial District, subject to the action of the Democratic party.

We are authorized to announce J. H. McDANELL, of Warsaw, as a candidate for the State Senate, from this, the 23rd Senatorial District, subject to the action of the Democratic party.

JOSEPH HERMES, of Covington, is a candidate for Congress in the Sixth Congressional District, November election, 1884.

COLORADO LETTER

DENVER, COL., Aug. 19, 1884.

To the Editors of the Recorder:

In addition to what we said in our last letter concerning Chicago, much more might be said; for to one visiting the city at this season, there are so many attractions, so much to be admired that he scarcely knows where to begin or where to stop in his descriptions. We will take it for granted, however, that you have heard quite enough of Chicago.

After spending four days in sight seeing here, we boarded the westbound train on the C. B. & Q. R. R., at 12:30 p. m., Aug. 10th, and were soon being hurried along over the rolling prairies and rich agricultural districts of Illinois. One observes upon leaving Chicago for the West, a vast change in the passengers. East of this point the greater portion of the traffic has been local, but now the passengers impress you with the idea that they have come to stay. Here you see the invalid, with his huge overcoat or blanket and small lunch box, going West to regain lost health. He has a distant look, is remarkably quiet and seemingly unconcerned as to what is going on about him. These people are all confident that by spending a few months in the West they will once more become healthy, vigorous individuals; but the majority of them learn too late, that like Ponce de Leon, they have failed to discover the Fountain of Perpetual Youth.

From this quiet, meditative individual, we turn our eyes across to the opposite side of the car, where sits the indulgent (?) mother with her store of provisions for a journey across the continent, her valise, bundles and baskets, with her three or four little, dirty faced, peevish interrogation points, to which, in some instances, are added a canary and a very small dog. She and her family usually occupy about three seats. They are going West to join the husband and father who has gone before to prepare for their arrival. Then there is the scenery-crazy tourists, with no object in view but a desire to see. He goes everywhere, sees everything, and in his own opinion can tell you all about the West. Numerous characters might be mentioned, but the above will suffice to give you some idea of the people one meets on a western train. There is something about the passengers that gives them a thorough look.

For almost 20 miles after leaving the depot at Chicago, you meet, in rapid succession, many thriving villages, fast hurrying toward the great city.

Illinois is truly the first corn growing State in the Union, and she is especially blessed this year with the best crop she has produced for five years. We passed through portions of Fulton, Warren and Knox counties, in which may be seen some of the best soil in the State, and at present thousands of acres of the finest corn we ever beheld. Oats and hay are also quite extensively produced in this section.

After a ride of about eight hours, we saw and crossed, for our first time the Father of Waters, at Burlington, Iowa. We did not stop, as we had been informed that little of interest is to be seen at this place. The prairies of Iowa, although exceedingly rich in farming lands and producing corn, oats and hay in abundance, are in our estimation excelled by those of Illinois.

When the morning sun next dawned upon us, we found ourselves within 75 miles of Council Bluffs, the old Kanesville, where the Mormons advanced the first parallel in their long seige to take the parched desert of Utah. For miles before reaching Council Bluffs, we passed through low, flat lands and swamps almost wholly unfit for cultivation, but which fully prepared us for a view of the Missouri River, appropriately christened "The Big Muddy." The bridge over the river at this point connecting Council Bluffs with Omaha, is nearly 3,000 ft. long, and rests upon cylindrical iron piles, reaching to the depth of from 109 to 125 feet below the water level. This bridge has triumphed over the uneasiest sand that ever slipped out from under a foundation. It is an established fact that this river gets up and lies down in a new place oftener than any other running water in America.

But we are now in Omaha, a city of 40,000 inhabitants, lying partially in the flats along the Missouri, and partially on the elevated lands back from the River. The streets are wide and in a very bad condition, as only a few of the principal streets are paved. The material used for this purpose is a red sandstone, which is fashioned into blocks that are set on edge, making a solid, substantial thoroughfare. The side walks are constructed of boards. The Public Buildings will compare favorably with those of any city of equal population in the East. A few miles up the river from Omaha is Ft. Calhoun from which Lewis and Clark set forth seventy-three years ago on their great exploring expedition. The stump of the flag-staff still remains whence the old colors drified out when the discoverers set forth.

The train of the B. & M. R. R., for Denver is ready to start. The conductor's cry of "all aboard" finds the passengers in their seats prepared for a twenty-four hour's journey across the plains of Nebraska and Eastern Colorado. The passengers now have eyes for nothing but the scenery. Here we meet a self important individual who passed over the same route two years ago. He is continually moving from one portion of the car to another, making it pleasant (?) for the passengers, by pointing out objects of interest along the way. He is wise in his own estimation, endeavors to impress you with the idea that he knows all about the West, but gloriously fails in his attempt when he tells you just how a certain place a few miles ahead looks and does not take into consideration the wonderful change which two years of progress unrivaled in history, has wrought throughout the West. You finally conclude that you can easily get along without his information, and he seizes upon another victim. Thus we left Omaha, and traveled for 30 or 40 miles along the valley of the Platte, which rivals in fertility the valley of the Nile. The Platte is a river without banks; it can neither be forded nor navigated at this season of the year. Sandbars, numerous and extensive may be seen, all of which would be easily hid from view by a rise of two or three feet of water. The bridges across the river are built at an elevation of not more than 6 feet above the present water level.

Leaving the valley of the Platte to the north, we now travel in a southwesterly direction until Lincoln is reached. The capital of Nebraska is one of the most handsomely laid out cities we have yet seen. The streets are uniformly 100 feet wide; the city contains many handsome residences and large business blocks. The Penitentiary and Insane Asylum, are each very massive stone structures, built of stone from the Platte Canyon, and located two miles from the city. We are now passing through a portion of the country comprising excellent farming and grazing lands. Corn is produced here in abundance, where a quarter of a century since the land was regarded as almost worthless, being a portion of what was then called the Great American Desert. However, large tracts, and in fact the greater portion of this land, is held by speculators and Eastern Capitalists, who are holding for higher prices. Here are to be seen the genuine plains. No forest trees obstruct your view as is the case in Illinois and Iowa, but one may look out across the plains, and far as mortal eye can compass sight, nothing save here and there a "dugout", in which resides the man whose business and sole occupation is to herd those hundreds of cattle grazing sometimes near the railroad, sometimes so far away that they look like mere specks upon the prairie. The first day's travel from Omaha brought us to Red Cloud 375 miles from Denver. At this point we stopped over night and resumed our journey early next morning. From Red Cloud, Neb., to the boundary between Colorado and Nebraska, we passed along the Republican River. Very little of the land in this valley is being cultivated, it being used for grazing.

We are now 200 miles from Denver, and the following 100 miles takes us through Sandy Plains, almost wholly destitute of human habitation. It is claimed, however, that in time, by irrigation, this soil may be made productive. This is, no doubt, true, for upon approaching the mountains where water for irrigating purposes may be brought down from the mountain streams, the same quality of soil is now producing fair crops of corn, oats and wheat.

When our train halted at Bush 88 miles from Denver, we first beheld the Rockies, with their sharp angles and pointed crests darkly outlined against the western sky.

Forty miles more have been left behind, and now the snow may be distinctly seen along the summits of the loftiest peaks. Denver has been reached and we are yet 12 miles from the foothills of the mountains, although the mountains themselves do not appear more than 2 or 3 miles distant. From Denver you have an excellent view of the great Rocky Range for a distance of 250 miles. Nearly 100 miles to the northwest rises Long's Peak; while almost directly west, is Gray's Peak, the mighty Dome of the Continent, with a dozen giant sentries on either side, as if to guard its hidden treasures from the adventurous man. Eighty miles to the southwest rises the pointed crest of Pike's Peak, the old land mark of pioneer days. Of the city of Denver, and Pike's Peak, we shall have more to say in our next.

J. C. CLORE.

THE teachers ought to make this a profitable week.

THE most remarkable exhibit at the Southern Exposition last week was the rural editors.

THE campaign was opened in Indiana last Saturday night, by the Democrats. Hon. John G. Carlisle addressed a large and enthusiastic crowd at Lawrenceburg that night.

THE Democratic Congressional convention for this district will be held in Falmouth on the 16th inst., at which time a candidate for the office of Supervisor of tax for this district will be nominated.

JOSEPH HERMESE, of Covington, and Independent candidate for Congress in this district, made our office a brief call one day last week. The Hon. Joe's chances for election are about as good as those of Butler.

HON. THOMAS L. JONES made a speech here Monday, and after giving Boone county a large dose of taffy, he waded into the Republican party and Mr. Blaine in particular, rough shod for about an hour.

WE did not know until this week that we had as live a town in the county as our correspondent represents Petersburg to be. We congratulate that town on having the class of citizens it has, and now that it has caught a boom, there is no telling what she will grow to.

IN this issue will be found the announcement of J. H. McDanell, of Warsaw, as a candidate for State Senator. Mr. McDanell is a leading business man in Gallatin county, and has many friends in this county. If nominated and elected he will make the district an industrious and conscientious representative.

THE county of Gallatin presents two candidates for the office of State Senator, and either of the gentlemen will make a good and acceptable candidate to the district; and as Gallatin county is entitled to the office the next term, the contest between the two aspirants should not extend beyond the borders of that county. Let Gallatin name the man whom she wants. We believe the candidates would be willing to have her choose between them.

DR. JAMES BROWN, of Warsaw and a candidate for State Senator, made a very neat speech in the Court-house here last Monday, which left a very favorable impression with the people. Capt. McDanell simply announced himself a candidate for the office of State Senator. Gallatin sends out two fine men as candidates.

IT is now clearly demonstrated that the people of this county are anxious to have the Fair revived, and the only thing necessay to bring the matter to a focus, is for the parties to agree on a location for the grounds. It seems that there are two desirable locations, which have produced some discussion. Those who are engineering the matter should, by all means, endeavor to work together harmoniously, and select the location which is the better adapted to all the requirements of the association. The money with which the enterprise is to be prosecuted, comes from the pockets of many, and it must not be used with a view to benefiting any particular individual or set of individuals, but the interest of those furnishing the money is paramount to all others. We are authorized to announce that a meeting in the interest of a Fair, will be held in Florence next Saturday afternoon, and all those interested are earnestly solicited to be present.

LUMBER.

Goe. M. Bedinger & Co.,
Erlanger, - - Ky.

We keep constantly on hand all kinds of Lumber, Laths and Shingles. Also Builder's supplies of all kinds.
—Come and see Us.—

Flour! Flour!
TALBOTT'S

CELEBRATED BRAND OF FLOUR is for sale at the following places in Boone County, Ky.
A. Corbin & Son, Grant.
Dudley Rouse & Sam'l Cowen, Burlington
Rouse Bros., Florence X-Roads,
W. W. Garnett, Hamilton,
Wilson & Riddell, Rabbit Hash.
E. L. Clements, Clements' Store,
Omer Kirtley, Kirtley's Landing,

TALBOTT'S FLOUR
—Is the Best, take no other.—
It is Cheap for the Quality.

$66 a week at home. $5 outfit free. Pay absolutely sure. No risk. Capital not required. If you want business at which persons of either sex young or old, can make great pay all the time they work, with absolute certainty, write for particulars to H. HALLET & Co., Portland, Maine.

Stott Brothers,

PETERSBURG, KY.

ARE STILL IN THE RING!

And wish to announce to the the people of Petersburg and vicinity that they have moved in thier New Building and added to their stock of

Dry Goods, Notions, Boots & Shoes,

HATS and CAPS, QTEENSWARE a full line of

STAPLE & FANCY GROCRIES,

Which they will be pleased to show the people, and give them prices before purchasing elsewhere. Our motto is

GOOD GOODS, SMALL PROFITS

and a square deal to all, both large and small. We also keep a good stock

Of Salt and Coal,

Which we guarantee to be as good as the best. Thanking the peopie for past favors, and solicit a continuance of the same. Remember, STOTT BROS, Petersburg, Ky., keep the best of Shaker Yarns, Jeans & Flannels.

LADIES' JERSEYS JUST RECEIVED AT

COLTER'S,

Rising Sun, Ind.

At 90c, $1 50, $2. and up to $3 and $4. Our all-Wool Braided Jerseys at $2 is selling fast. As Jerseys have proven to be the most elegant, neat and economical garments, they are becoming very popular and will be worn extensively for the next five years.

The demand is so great that we have been getting in two or three lots a week from our New York Buyer. Having just received 165 Children's Cloaks from the Wolf & Conn failure; also over 200 Cloaks,

New Markets, Russian Circulars and

DOLMANS.

We offer a Black all-Wool Diagonal Russian Circular, with large Fur Collar, two Fur Ornaments on Back, at $5,88, that is worth $11; and and other garments of all kinds at $5 to $26.

NEW FALL MILLINERY

Just received. Over One Thousand Men's and Boys' Suits of Good Clothing just received from the failure of Hayes & Thall.
Big Barguins in solid

BOOTS & SHOES.

Give me your money, you shall have its value. You all know that our Motto is "Buy Goods right and thay will sell themselves." We have over worth of Goods in the above lines, that would cost one-third more if bougbt in the old foggy style. We neither buy nor sell on time. Best of Goods at Bottom Prices is our aim. In case we get fire or railroad wreck goods, or goods soiled in any way, we are particular in showing our customers the defects. The most of our goods now come from the financially wrecked merchants and manufacturers. WM. COLTER, Rising Sun, Ind.

Twenty-Thousand Dollars

We have just received word that we are to get Four Hundred Good Overcoats at Half Price.

ODD-FELLOWS

MOONLIGHT FETE AND

Pic Nic,

Venus Lodge No 154 I.O.O.F.

Will give a grand Moonlight Fete and Pic nic at Carpenter's Grove Florence, Ky., on Saturday,

Sept'r. 13, 1884.

For the Benefit of the Widows and Orphans' Fund.

A Large and Commodious Platform in the finest, shadiest Grove in the county, with music by Affel's celebrated Band will delight those who wish to trip the light fantastic.

A SHOOTI'G MATCH

For a Silver Cup under the management of Dr. E. S. Rice, Captain of the Florence Shooting Club will be given during the afternoon.

Calcium Lights & Fire Works

For the Moonlight the Grove will be beautifully illuminated with Japanese Lanterns and Calcium Lights.

A magnificent display of fire works will be given during the evening, the finest ever seen the county.

No intoxicating liquors allowed on the ground. The committee of arrangements will spare no pains to interest those who may favor us with their presence.

COMMITTEE of ARRANGEMENTS.
Joseph Wagstaff, Geo. G. Hoover, Chas. H. Menninger.

FLOOR MANAGERS.

Frank Russell,	Fred A. Utz,
W. L. Riddell,	Chas. Schramm
Dr. J. A. Corey,	W. E. Piper,
A. J. Brown,	Dick McWethy.

The festivities will commence at 1 p. m., and close at 12 p. m.

Refreshments will be found on the grounds in abundance.

TAX NOTICE.

The law requires me to collect and pay over 90 per cent. of the county revenue by the 1st day of October. All persons not paying their taxes when called on are requested to meet me or my deputy in their voting precincts at the following time and places.

Petersburg, Monday, November 17
Bellevue, Wednesday, November 19,
Florence, Friday, November 21,
Carlton, Saturday, November 22.
Union, Monday, November, 24,
Beaver, Tuesday, November 25.
Hamilton, Wednesday, November 26.
Hebron, Thursday, November 27.
Walton, Friday, November 28.
Verona, Saturday, November 29.
Burlington, Monday, December 1.

Any riding done to collect taxes after the above dates will be done at the cost of the parties owing the same.

J. R. CLUTTERBUCK, S. B. C.

FLOUR!

We have TALBOTT'S Flour for sale, by wholesale or retail—Very Cheap.

A. Corbin & Son,
GRANT, KY.

L. KUPPERSCHMID,
—42 WALNUT STREET,—
Lawrenceburg, - - Ind.

Always keeps on hand a large assortment of WATCHES, CLOCKS, JEWELRY, &c. Rpeairing Watches and Clocks a specialty. Also, agent for the

Rockford Watch Company.

Which manufactures the finest movements made, and they are used by all railroad men.

—Give Me a Call—

A. L. Brown,

THE HATTER,

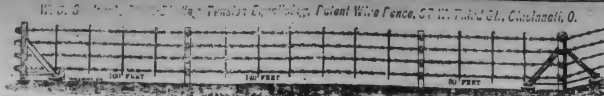
Cor. Pike and Washington Streets
COVINGTON, - - KY,

Has always on hand a large variety of Men's, Boys' and Children's Hats, and prices GUARANTEED to be as low as the lowest.

Gents' Furnishing Goods a Specialty.

TIME CARD OF THE

MAYFLOWER.



LEAVES PETERSBURG
For Lawrenceburg at 6½ A. M.; 9½ A. M. and 11½ A. M.; at 2 P. M., and at 4½ P. M.

LEAVES LAWRENCEBURG
For Petersburg and Aurora at 8 A. M., 10 A. M., and 12 M.; at 2½ P. M. and 5 P. M.

LEAVES PETERSBURG
For Aurora at 8½ A. M., 10½ A. M.; at 1 P. M., and 3 P. M.

LEAVES AURORA
For Petersburg and Lawrenceburg at 9 A. M., 11 A. M.; 1½ P. M. and 4 P. M.

ELIHU ALDEN, Master.

As special Agent for the Gholson Fencing Company, for Boone County, I am prepared to build their patent fence at any time. This is the cheapest and best fence in use. It needs no talking up, as it is fast selling itself wherever it is introduced. Any number of wires can be used.

28-1y-84. G. C. GRADDY, Bullittsville, Ky.

CLEARING SALE!

To make room for Fall Stock I have reduced Custom-Made Suits 20 per cent. and on ready-made Men's, B ys' and Children's Clthi ng 25 per cent. for Cash only, until August 20.

H. F. BLA E,
540 Madison Street
COVINGTON, - - - - - KY

John Q. Davis,

—DEALER IN—

BOOTS & SHOES,
HATS AND CAPS

Of the very best Eastern and Cincinnati manufactures. I claim to be the best posted man in my line in this section. Goods sold absolutely on there merits, and ample willing reclamation made where goods do not come up to the "SCRATCH."

YOU CAN AS SAFELY SEND YOUR CHILDREN AS TO COME YOURSELVES.

Thankful for the very liberal patronge in the past, and hoping with increased facilities to still do the BOOT and SHOE business of this section,

Respectfully,

J. Q. DAVIS,

SIGN BIG RED BOOT, MAIN, Street, Rising Sun, Indiana.

WM. COLTER,

—DEALER IN—

Clothing, Boots, Shoes, Hats, Caps, Millinery Goods, Cloaks, Etc.

JOB LOTS OF ABOVE A SPECIALTY.

We are just now devoting our entire energy to making preparations for the ensuing season, and can promise to call your attention to a stock of Boots and Shoes, Rubber Goods, Men's and Boys' Ready-Made Clothing, Ladies' Cloaks, and Wraps, Millinery Goods, Ribbons, Mens' Hats, Buck Gloves, &c., in which, for real solid and genuine Bargains, we challenge competition. We intend to lead the market in this section much more than we have ever done before, which we can at once prove to you at your first inspection. Have already bought over 500 Overcoats, over 300 Suits, 1,000 pairs of Gloves, over 70 cases Kip Boots, 16 cases Mens' Hats and Caps, all grades. And we are not asleep if it is hot. The above line of Goods is kept in the lower half and 2nd floor of our Mammoth House. We are slashing down prices on all Summer Goods now, as we do not carry any Goods over. Thanks for past favors. Respectfully,

Wm. COLTER, Rising Sun, Ind.

SOUTHERN EXPOSITION

LOUISVILLE,

Opens August 16th. Closes October 25th, 1884.

15 ACRES UNDER ONE ROOF.

TWO CONCERTS EACH DAY

By Cappa's and Gilmore's, the most famous bands of the world.

Largest and Finest Display of Machinery in MOTION ever witnessed anywhere.

LOWEST RAILWAY RATES EVER GIVEN IN THE STATE.

ART BUILDINGS,

CONTAINING THE CHOICEST PICTURES IN AMERICA.

Ten works of Kentucky's great sculptor, Joel Hart, the best possible collection.

One hundred counties in Kentucky will make exhibits, displaying products which will demonstrate this State's tremendous capacities and future greatness. An occasion for Kentucky pride and glory—KENTUCKY TRIUMPHANT.

AN IMMENSE LIVE STOCK EXHIBITION

Presenting at one time in line over $1,000,000 worth of horses, comprising all the sires that have made Kentucky famous. The exhibit will surpass in extent the Royal Stock Show in London, and present to the visitor the grandest, completest, and most magnificent Stock exhibit the world has ever witnessed, and a sight that can not be duplicated in the world.

BENNETT H. YOUNG, President. J. M. WRIGHT, General Manager.

A. M. ACRA,

—DEALER IN—

HARNESS  SADDLES.

Fine and Cheap Buggy Harness.

BURLINGTON, KY.

I also have a full stock of BUGGY WHIPS, LAP DUSTERS, ANKLE BOOTS and TROTTING BALLS and everything else usually kept in a first-class harness shop.

REPAIRING A SPECIALTY.

Give Me A Call.

W. J. RICE,
CARPENTER & BUILDER,
BULLITSVILLE, KY.

Is prepared Raise or Move EITHER LOG or FRAME BUILDINGS On Short Notice.

And at the Lowest Possible Figures.
33-tf Your orders respectfully solicited

THE LEADING CAMPAIGN BOOK!

History of Growth, Development and Resources of the Republic. Review of past Administrations. Biographies of Candidates, 1884. 800 Pages Fine illustrations. Send 50 cts. for full outfit and begin work. Circular free. Address
J. C. McCURDY, Cincinnati, O.

HARTER'S IRON TONIC

It will purify and enrich the BLOOD, regulate the LIVER and KIDNEYS, [illegible] HEALTH and VIGOR [illegible] diseases requiring a certain [illegible] especially Dyspepsia, Want of Appetite, Indigestion, Lack of Strength, [illegible] with immediate and [illegible] results. [illegible] the mind and supplies Brain Power.

LADIES suffering from all complaints peculiar to their sex will find in DR. HARTER'S IRON TONIC a safe and speedy cure. It gives a clear and healthy complexion.

The strongest testimony to the value of DR. HARTER'S IRON TONIC [illegible] do not experiment—get the ORIGINAL AND BEST.

Send your address to The Dr. Harter Med. Co. St. Louis, Mo., for our "DREAM BOOK." Full of strange and useful information, free.

DR. HARTER'S IRON TONIC IS FOR SALE BY ALL DRUGGISTS AND DEALERS EVERYWHERE.

For A Business Education Attend the

Commercial College

Of Kentucky University, Lexington, Ky.

Students can enter any week-day in the year. No vacation. Time to complete the Full Diploma Business Course about 10 weeks. Average Total Cost, including Tuition, Set of Books and Board in a family, $80. Telegraphy a specialty. Literary Course free. Ladies received. 5,000 successful graduates. Over 500 pupils last year from 15 to 45 years of age, from 23 States. Instruction is practically and individually imparted by 10 teachers. Special courses for Teachers and Business Men. University Diploma presented to its graduates. This beautiful city is noted for its healthfulness and society, and is on leading Railroads. Full Session begins Sept. 8th. For circulars and full particulars, address its President, WILBUR R. SMITH, Lexington, Ky.

NO NEW THING.

STRONG'S SANATIVE PILLS

Used throughout the country
FOR OVER 40 YEARS,
And thus proved
The Best Liver Medicine in the World.

No Griping, Poisonous Drugs, but purely Vegetable, safe and reliable. Prescribed even by Physicians. A speedy cure for Liver Complaint, Regulating the Bowels, Purifying the Blood, Cleansing from Malarial Taint. A perfect cure for Sick Headache, Constipation and all Bilious Disorders. Sold by Druggists. For Pamphlets, etc., address C. E. HULL & CO., 18 Cedar St., N. Y. City.

FOUND AT LAST.

THE ANIMAL SAFE GUARD.

Patent applied for. Absolute cure for all breachy stock. Simple and safe appliance; always at hand. No Rope, no Yoke, no pole used to injure stock. No animal will jump a fence when this is used. Send One Dollar for Farm-right and full instruction. Address
C. F. BROSEKE, Justice of the Peace, Falmouth, Ky.

SANITARIUM, Riverside, Cal. The dry climate cures Nose, Throat, Lungs, full idea, 36 p., route, cost, free.

MARRIAGE AND HEALTH GUIDE. 260 pgs. Illustrated. All that the doubtful [illegible] [illegible] paper 25c, Marriage Guide, 10 pills, [illegible] money or stamps, by DR. WHITTIER, 300 RACE STREET, CINCINNATI, OHIO. The greatest specialist [illegible] Debility, Impediments to Marriage, Consultation and Pamphlet free.

PISO'S CURE FOR CONSUMPTION
25 CTS.
CURES WHERE ALL ELSE FAILS. Best Cough Syrup. Tastes good. Use in time. Sold by druggists.

KENTUCKY UNIVERSITY,
LEXINGTON, KY.

Three Colleges—Arts, Bible and Commercial. College of Arts has two courses, Classical and Scientific with twelve professors and teachers; fees, $18 per session of nine months. College of the Bible, no tuition fees. Students of the College of the Bible have access without charge to the classes of the College of Arts, and those of the College of Arts to the classes of the College of the Bible. Session opens the Second Monday in September. For catalogues, address CHAS. LOUIS LOOS, President of the University, or ROBT. GRAHAM, President of the College of the Bible.

LAW SCHOOL

OF WASHINGTON AND LEE UNIVERSITY.

GEN. G. W. C. LEE, President.

Instruction by text-books and printed lectures, with courses of lectures on special subjects by eminent jurists. Tuition and fees, $80 for session of nine months; beginning Sept. 18. For catalogue and full information address CHAS. A. GRAVES, Prof. of Law, Lexington, Va.

THE COMPLETE HOME. Agents wanted for this beautiful book. New edition.—New bindings.—New illustrations from new designs. Superbly gotten up. Same low price. Adapted to all classes. Sells at sight. Agents doing big work. EXCELLENT TERMS. The handsomest prospectus ever issued. Apply now.
WM. GARRETSON & CO., Lexington, Kentucky. Also other grand new books and Bibles.

OPIUM and WHISKY HABITS cured at home without pain. Book of particulars sent Free. B. M. WOOLLEY, M. D., Atlanta, Ga.

Local News.

Read Stott Bros., ad in this issue.

Cistern cleaning has claimed the attention of many of our citizens the past few days.

From one to three steam boats have been camped on the Rising Sun bar all this summer.

Just received at W. F. McKim's, a fresh supply of Dr. Salmon's chicken and horse powder.

Joseph Stephens, late of Kenton co., is now a citizen of Florence, having bought property there.

Elijah Howard had a fine brood mare kicked and one of her legs broken the other day. He had to kill her.

A cool wave struck this section last Saturday evening, and Sunday morning fires added much to one's comfort.

Old man Thorp who was so badly cut by his son a few weeks since, surprised all who saw him at first by getting well.

The Burlington and Florence Turnpike Company has put in a new bridge immediately this side of Florence X-Roads.

Richard Blankenbeker's wife's funeral will be preached by Rev. A. J. Douglas at Hopeful church next Sunday week at 11 a. m.

Mrs. H. J. Casey, who has been visiting her parents at Bullittsville this summer, has returned to her home in Richmond, Virginia.

Some skamp stole a lot of very fine grapes from Mr. A. G. Winston the other night. Some thief will get his carcass full of shot yet.

The Farmers' Insurance Company is doing a rushing business. It issued twenty new polices Monday. It advertises in the RECORDER.

Four tramps terrorized the town last Thursday evening by their appearance and peculiar actions. They came from Hebron at which place the citizens had watched them the night before.

The picnic at Florence last Saturday was a complete success in every particular. The best of order prevailed, and another feather is added to Johnny Reed's cap as a manager of picnics.

The Odd-Fellows' picnic at Florence on the 13th inst., promises to be one of the best entertainments of the season. The purpose to which the proceeds are to be applied bespeaks for it a large attendance.

Mt. Pleasant Grange will meet the second Saturday in this month at 1 p. m. Several members from the Petersburg and Pt. Pleasant, will unite with said grange on that occasion. Others wishing to do so are requested to come out. J. C. Graddy.

An examination of teachers for the Common Schools of Boone county will be held on Saturday, September 13, '84, at the Morgan Academy, Burlington commencing promptly at 9 o'clock a m. No private examinations will be held. H. J. FOSTER, County Sup't.

The day has come when to leave the grave of the departed one unmarked by a neat stone, is not suffered by even those in the most ordinary walks of life, and all can be pleased in both design and price by Huschart & Co., of Lawrenceburg, Ind. John Beall, of Hebron, is their agent.

MARRIED—On the 28th of August at the residence of Elder E. Stephens, in Kenton county, W. H. Pope and Miss Nancy Jane Acra. That evening quite a number of the friends of the bride and groom assembled at their residence, where they received a cordial welcome, and were entertained in true Kentucky style.

Last Thursday night the Lawrenceburg post office was robbed of a small amount of money, and Friday a couple of officers from that place came through here in pursuit of two tramps whom they supposed to be the guilty parties. They overhauled them a short distance from town on the Burlington and Florence pike, but they concluded that they were not the parties who did the job, and let them go.

Some people lie for fun; some, because they ... keep it, while others lie for infernal meanness. To which of these classes the person who invented the lie that we wanted to charge the Harvest Home committee $25 to print their posters, belongs, we cannot say, but we think he could have put his time to better use than that of giving utterance to such an unmitigated lie. We did not do the job on account of sickness, and not because of a disagreement as to the price.

The Boone County Infirmary.

The following is the report of the Superintendent, on expenses and other matter, for the month ending August 30th, 1884:

Inmates remaining in, July 30...	22
Received
Deaths
Births
Discharged
Remaining Aug. 30	22
Provisions and Clothing	$71 46
Fuel	3 50

A. O. HALL, Superintendent.

The Institute.

The Teachers' Institute opened yesterday with an uncommonly large attendance of teachers for the first day, the roll showing the names of 32. In the after noon several visitors put in an appearance, and enjoyed the exercises which were quite spirited, and especially the discussion between John P. Craig and D. C. Peck. The roll contained the following names;

Mrs. Alice Walker,	Miss Mary Bradly
Miss Mary Walton,	" Etta Moody,
" Lillie Rouse,	" Lizzie Conner
" Lizzie Gordon,	" Katie Davis,
" Alice Daughters,	" SallieJohnson,
" Nannie Bristow,	" Susie Sleet,
" Nettie Gardner,	" C. M. Fuolke,
" Hallie Stephens,	Mrs. N. Lewis,
Bruce Thornton,	J. C. Mack,
R. B. Huey,	J. T. Marshall,
W. S. Cole,	F. M. Morris,
J. C. Gordon,	A. A. Maxfield,
W. E. Clutterbuck,	B. F. Bell,
E. M. Clutterbuck,	J. H. Green,
T. J. Baley,	O. Snyder,
I. J. Daughters,	Geo. Cartwright.

Miss Mary Bradly and D. C. Peck are acting in the capacity of critics.

SOUTHERN EXPOSITION.

The Kentucky Press Association being invited by the management of the Southern Exposition at Louisville to become its guests last Wednesday and Thursday, over one hundred newspaper men from the rural districts put in their appearance and enjoyed the hospitality of the Exposition management. Everything possible was done to make the visitors enjoy themselves, the Exposition paying their hotel bills, railroad and street car fares. Thursday at noon President Young received the press gang in the Music Hall, in the Exposition building, and after a few short addresses, he lead the way to a restaurant in the Park where an elegant dinner was served, and numerous toasts responded to by eloquent speakers. It was the largest gathering of Kentucky newspaper men that ever assembled, as well as the most enjoyable meeting.

The Southern Exposition is truly a great and grand enterprise, the arrangements for which are complete in all their appointments, and with as able and industrious man at its head, as Bennet H. Young can be nothing short of a success. The Exposition is yet in its infancy, consequently is deficient in many departments, although every train coming into the city brings exhibits which are being placed in the building as fast as they arrive. President Young says that the present Exposition is far in advance of that of last year both as to attendance and display, while he has information of numerous exhibits yet to arrive, principally county displays. Several counties have very creditable displays, but not as many are represented as should be. The Government has a very interesting display, a part of which is some of the relics of the Greely expediton, and which attract much attention.

The competitive drills were witnessed by immense crowds Wednesday and Thursday afternoons, and on the first evening those present beheld a beautiful scene never before witnessed in the world, viz.: A dress parade by electric light. It was simply grand. Five companies competed, the Treadway Reserves, of St. Louis, winning first prize, $3,000; Montgomery Greys, of Ala., second, $1,300 and Indianapolis Light Infantry, third, $500. The Porter Rifles, of Nashville, and Quapaw Guards, of Arkansas, were the other competitors.

An attractive programme had been provided for Thursday evening, but a terrific rain prevented its execution, and it served to swell the crowd again the following evening.

The Southern Exposition is designed to be of much benefit to Kentucky, and with a proper recognition on the part of her people, many good results are bound to follow. Every county in the State should be represented by its productions, and thus the great wealth of the grand Old Commonwealth will be more eloquently proclaimed than can be done by pen or words.

MISSOURI LETTER.

BUTLER, Mo., August, 27, 1884

To the Editors of the Recorder:

Thinking it will be of some interest to our friends in Boone, we take advantage of your columns to inform them as to how we are getting along out in this western country. Up to two weeks ago we had had quite a dry spell, but since then we have been blessed with splendid rains, and the corn crop will be immense, some of the old farmers putting the average of the crop at 50 bushels per acre for Bates county this year. Some crops are estimated at 80 bushels per acre, while the reports from our old home say that crop is almost a failure. The general belief here is that corn will be delivered at 20 cents per bushel and probably for less. Yet, while corn is so cheap hogs demand high prices, and are scarce at 5½ and 6 cents. Cattle range from four and one-half to five and one-half cents. Wheat is turning out well, and is bringing the enormous price of from 50 to 61 cents per bushel; oats sell at 25 cents a bushel; apples are not very plentiful, and demand a good price, bringing from 40 to 60 cents a bushel; crab apples go for a dollar per bushel; watermelons are too good to sell, but will bring a nickle any time.

About three weeks ago William Beasly, of Daviess county, this State, but formerly of your county, made us a visit, taking a look at our section of the county. He intended to spend about three weeks here, but looking around one day and part of another, he was convinced that we are in a much better section than he is, and he returned to his home with his heart full of joy, humming, "I am coming by and by."

Pem Ryle, one of Boone's early departures for the West, was here last week. He is living in Cass county.

There is no croquet here, but there are plenty of those long cucumber vines of Dr. Furnish's, that grow so rapidly that they pull all the cucumbers off. Doc, if Bob Sandford gets to playing it down on you, call me and I will send him a few which have been jerked off against a cuckle bur, which are plentiful. Health moderately good.

EVERETT WALTON.

Personal Mentions.

[If you have friends from a distance visiting you or expect to be away from home on business or pleasure, let us have the item for this column.]

Joe Reed ...ted in Cincinnati several days last week.

William Cowen arrived in Burlington one day last week.

Charles Winston left for the Woodward High School, yesterday.

Esq. T. F. Curley, of Walton, made Burlington a flying visit last Saturday.

Mrs. Albach, of St. Louis, was the guest of Mrs. C. W. Saxton, last week.

Misses Mary and Emma Light, of Covington, are being entertained by Mrs. F. Riddell.

Geogie Piper, Gaines Rice and Ezekiel Rice, visited the Southern Exposition last week.

Miss Nannie and Susie Kyle and Miss Susie Rich, of Kenton county, are the guests of friends in Burlington.

Miss Mollie Tupman, of Kenton Heights, was the guest of her aunt, Mrs. Carrie Riddell, of this place, several days last week.

Mrs. W. B. Leonard and two children, of Cincinnati, and Mrs. Wm. Clarkson, of Covington, are being entertained by Mrs. L. H. Dills.

NEIGHBORHOOD NEWS.

Longstreet.

Our fishing club all busted.

Henry Clore is building a large barn.

Mr. Jas. Kelley and wife, entertained quite a number of the young folks, last Saturday night.

Mr. Oscar Gaines and wife, Wm Crisler and wife, of Union, were visiting W. I. Rouse last week.

The saw-mill has shut down, having no water. Lemings is hauling some very fine logs from Alfred Cason's.

Threshing has been on the boom here this week. Downie Bondurant had his hand torn very badly by the engine.

Scattersville.

Jas. Horton and wife, spent last Sunday with his father.

The rain last Thursday has helped the crops a great deal.

Wheat threshing is done through this part of the county, and turned out very well.

Some few crops of tobacco in this vicinity are fresh and green, while others are fireing badly.

Ed Anderson and wife and John Mannin and wife were visiting Jasper Mannin last Sunday.

O. P. Conner is putting a new porch in front of his residence, he is also having his tenant house and out buildings fixed up in fine style.

Jas. Conner has bought all the stock hogs through this part of the neighborhood, paying 4 to 4½c.

Beaver Lick.

The Beaver and Walton graded road company are moving right along with their praiseworthy enterprise.

Z. T. Baker has just returned from the cattle market where he disposed of 50 fine steers. He reports a good market.

Damson plums are a paying fruit when they hit, but it seems that a hit in this line is rather difficult to make.

Dallas Grigsby, who has been visiting here for a few weeks, left Monday, for his adopted home in Texas. Dallas is a mover and we expect for him a prosperous jaunt through life.

Our farmers are beginning to think a good, old fashioned, soaker would be about the correct thing for their crops. Everything here is pretty dry, local option to the contrary notwithstanding.

W. C. Johnson and T. J. Coyle were out on the road leading from Beaver to Big Bone, with their hands last week. They did some fine work for the county. If our roads were worked every year as they have been this, we would soon have as good roads as any locality in the county.

A fine lot of stock of all kinds left this locality during the past week for market. Farmers were begining to think the prospect for corn too slim to count on much. Jacob Cleek has engaged his hogs to J. C. Hughes at 5½c. per pound to be delivered in about two weeks. Everything seems to command a good price notwithstanding the low ebb of "craps."

Union.

Elder W. J. Purington, of New Jersey who was expected to preach at Sardis Church in Union on the first Saturday and Sunday in September, sends a card to the pastor stating, that owing to unforeseen circumstances, he will be unable to fill the appointment.

Miss Nannie Bristow seems to be the choice of the patrons as teacher of the public school, but, as there was no election, and the Superintendent has failed to appoint trustees, nothing decisive can be said in regard to it. Above all things else we ought to have a new school-house. The building we honor with that name now, is totally unfit for the purpose. I can never understand how christian parents can send their little children where they are perfectly aware they can not possibly be warm from 8 a. m., to 4 p. m. Any pupil who has gone to that school-house during the last five years will tell you of cold feet, chilled backbones and of fingers so benumbed that the book can hardly be retained; of a stove which sits on three legs with a door broken in two pieces, and a hole in the side so large as to make it dangerous to leave even a few coals without a guard; of a blackboard that can't be used, and desks and benches minus legs, propped on sticks of stove wood, or anything the ingenuity of the teacher could suggest. Yet, the people want to send money to the heathens. Verily, charity beginneth, (or should) at home.

Rabbit Hash.

C. G. Riddell is complaining of a very sore throat.

Miss Kate Kirtley is visiting in the neighborhood.

You will hear by next week who shot Joe Riggs' cow.

We had a light shower Thursday evening, but not enough to do any good.

Several of the Rabbit Hashers attended the ball at McVille, last Friday night.

Jas. K. Pope, of Ghent, Ky., passed through here last week on his way home.

Lawrence Pope, Mrs. P. J. Acra and son, of Huntsville, spent Wednesday in Rabbit Hash.

Mrs. Jennie Merrick and her nephew Eddie Kerney, of Evansville, are the guests of Mrs. and Mr. Bell.

Eddie Ryle is quite sick at this writing, but Dr. Cowen thinks he will have him up again in a few days.

James A. Wilson left for Madison Thursday night to lay in a stock of jeans, flannels, &c, for the fall and winter trade.

Fishing is slow business when a fellow has to trade the fish for chickens, then has to kill and eat them for the lack of corn to feed them.

The Steamer Gen. Pike broke her shaft, at the foot of the bar last Wednesday. Her freight was transferred to the Str. Ohio, and then was hauled ashore, and still remains here waiting to be towed away.

Florence.

The free school opens the 8th, under the management of M. E. Clutterbuck. Several select schools are in anticipation.

Hon. Harry Baker has purchased from Uncle Joe Sullivan his celebrated Grey Eagle horse, at figures something less than Maud S sold for. Uncle Joe says that Harry has formed a copartnership with W. R. Terrill in the buss business and will enter his horse on that line.

A petition endorsed by about forty voters of the Florence precinct, has been sent to the County Court, asking that a vote be taken upon Local Option in said precinct at the November election. It was also accompanied with a petition signed by nearly everybody in town as an expression of their feelings, like the patriotic old woman of the revolution who shouldered the broom for a musket, they want to show where they stand.

John Reed's pic-nic which was billed for last Saturday, was a great success numerically considered, and we suppose financially too, as numbers are one of the necessary adjuncts to that result. The grounds which are in close proximity to town, are well supplied with all the conveniences for such occasions, a capacious platform was erected for the dancers and a little elevation for the musicians, numerous stands with refreshments were easily accessible, and the whole was overhung by a luxuriant foliage from forest trees. All the good looking ladies were there and most of the ugly ones, and if it wasn't impertinent we might exclaim, like Josh Billings, "of whom a majority are which." The mammies were there too, church members and all, who just went to take care of the children, however, their faces about 1-16 Tetlows' Swan Down, and their toilette was redolent with musk and eau de cologne. The order was good, the evening very propitious and all seemed to find enjoyment. They danced and danced till 12 o'clock and then, we think that some "Joshua" must have commanded the time to stand still, for yet a while they danced on.

Capt. Geo. Stephenson, of Confederate notoriety, is stopping with us at present, and entertaining us daily with a grand panoram of remarkable events, dating from the creation to the present time, most of which he was an eye witness.

GAS OMETER.

Plattsburg

John Finn is at home again, and will catch for the Carlisles.

James Kinney is the proudest father in the diggings—it's a big girl.

Miss Alice Clark, of Equality, Ill., is visiting relatives in Plattsburg.

Mr. Henry Smith got badly poisoned the other day, by using some drug.

Miss Lizzie Weindel and children, of Petersburg, are visiting Mrs. Amanda Smith.

Mrs. Capt. Hoff received a pension of $2,500 last week. Her son was killed in the late war.

The Irishman's soliloquy: The rich man rides in buggies and chaises; the poor man walks, by jases.

Sidney has left for Ludlow to take his stand behind the counter of Smith & Rifle, druggists of that place.

H. L. Sage, at one time a resident of this place, dropped dead in the depot at Lawrenceburg, last Friday week.

Little Joe Furnish put in his appearance for the first time in our town not long since. Come again, doctor.

Ed Rice was in town last Sunday, and says that corn and tobacco will not make half a crop in his neighborhood.

J. B. Tolin and wife and Wade Hampton, will spend a portion of next week with relations in Ludlow and vicinity.

George Gibbs, Jack Icenogle and Jas. Smith will constitute the trio that will leave for Kansas and Missouri in a few weeks.

Mrs. Bettie Snyder and children, of Delphi, Indiana, are visiting her parents, Mr. and Mrs. H. P. Crisler, of this place.

Mrs. Eliza Wingate, wife of Fillmore Wingate, received the sixty dollar sewing machine at the Lawrenceburg Fair for the best loaf of bread.

Miss Gene Buchanan, of Petersburg, received the china tea set, valued at $25, and presented by Chambers, Stephens & Co. for the best ironed shirt.

Last Sunday morning John Allen's little boys accidentally set fire to and burned five hay stacks for James Thompson. They were playing with matches.

Married, in Lawrenceburg on Saturday of the Fair, William Hensly, jr., and Miss Lena Wingate, daughter of Alfred Wingate.

The protracted drought has caused the water in Woolper to become very stagnant, and unless it rains in a few days, there will be no water fit for the stock to drink.

The steamer Arline landed at the mouth of Garrison not long since, and put ashore the dead body of a man, which the deck hands buried about two feet deep. Will Nixon had the body exhumed and buried in a regular burying ground, but the officers of the boat refused to pay him for his trouble.

Kentucky has enacted the best liquor law of any State in the Union. It gives each precinct in the several counties the privilege of voting down whisky if they see proper, which is democratic. Then the Northern States will howl about the free use of whisky in Kentucky. Take beer from the Germans and you deprive them of one of their inherited liberties. This is for Ohio: Treat the Germans right, and Ohio will go Democratic in November.

On Saturday we visited the Lawrenceburg Fair to see Bessie G. trot, but she was unable to go, having a sprained hip. Grafton was on hand, though, and the way he cut dust around the track that day, indicates that in the near future he will make something which it will take a Jay-Eye-See to beat. While there we took a general survey of persons and things, and came to the conclusion that Burlington turned out the best looking man, while Petersburg, we thought, had the prettiest lady in attendance.

The basket meeting at Ashby Fork, last Sunday was largely attended, people coming in from nearly every direction, and by 10 o'clock there were at least 200 persons on the grounds. Mr. Froh preached an able sermon in the morning. In the afternoon his sermon was short, he having to go to Petersburg to preach the funeral of James Bradley, a pioneer of that town. Bro. Froh is a good citizen and a clever gentleman, whom the people of this neighborhood would be glad to see returned to this circuit.

Petersburg.

Sometime has elapsed since anything from this place has appeared in your paper. This silence has not been occasioned by neglect from your regular correspondent, but for the want of time, I judge, and suppose such to be the case, and thinking a communication from some one else would be received the same, and I being a resident of this place and vicinity for a number of years, thought I would give the readers of the RECORDER a few items and my views regarding the past and future prospects of Petersburg.

This place is quite old, probably older than Cincinnati, although small, apparently got its growth a number of years ago, and as it were, came to a stand still. But within the last few months has revived in a business point of view, and the prospects are it will in the future be one of the leading cities of Northwestern Kentucky. It has been the intention of your writer for sometime to embark in business, provided he could find a location where business could be done, although having lived here for a number of years and having many near and dear friends to leave behind, but, thinking Petersburg not a suitable place, and having read such favorable accounts of other places, concluded to seek a location somewhere else. Having traveled far and near and not being suited, have come to the conclusion Petersburg is the place at last, and now, after returning to my native place will say I have failed to see any town in which the people appeared to have the energy and spirit that the people of Petersburg have. Since my departure, it looks strange to see how much building has been done, and how much is to be done that is now contracted.

When the Distillery was enrupted in flames, it was said by many that it would never be rebuilt; but now we notice that enterprising firm of Freiburg & Workum, with the assistance of Maj. Holmbird, their architect and a gentleman who understands his business, have about completed, on the foundation where the old one stood a 3 story brick and as fine a building of the kind as Kentucky affords. You readily see what such business men as F. & W. think of the future prospects of the town. Just above the distillery on the same street, we notice Mr. Andy Helm has a new building under construction, and above and a little across on Broadway Street, Geo. Brindle has a new dwelling under way. This building is two stories high, 24x40 feet, and will add largely to the appearance of that street when completed. On the corner of First and Broadway, Ira Thege has the foundation built for a new dwelling 40 ft. front, 2 stories high, which he will occupy as soon as completed; and rent the one he now lives in, which is already spoken for. One square above, on the corner of First and Tanner Strs., Stott Bros., have erected a new store building, 65 feet long, 20 feet wide, two stories high with large hall above, which they now occupy as a store for general merchandise. Excuse us, we like to forgot there is so much building going on, that W. H. Chapin, sen., has let the contract to Mr. Papet, of this place, for a new dwelling, of which we failed to get dimensions, but suffice it to say will be quite large. We will now mention the addition J. Frank Grant is building to his store on the corner of First and Market Streets. The addition is 45 ft. long, 20 ft. wide with iron front, and is to be used for a Dry Goods department. Ithamer Yerkus has purchased a lot and built a very comfortable residence on corner of Second and Main Streets which he now occupies, Chas. House having moved in the one vacated by Yerkus. The vacant lots all being taken up for residences and business houses John D. Norris has laid out 4 or 5 acres above town in lots and they are being sold rapidly to those who wish to have a quiet place to live, and not be interrupted by the sound of wagons and drays and all manner of noises to which a business town is heir. You may know that where there are from 3 to 8 Commercial Salesmen visit us daily, there must be some business done. We have a Building Association which is a great benefit to the town, and I think this place would be a suitable place for a bank. We have enough capital here, and why not start one and keep the town moving? I am in for anything that will be for the interest of the community, and my advise is to all those who wish to engage in any kind of business, or locate in a nice, healthy, christian place, come to Petersburg.

From the present prospects I cannot see why Petersburg will not be a place of notoriety in a business point of view, and more especially if we have another flood, because we are situated 20 feet above high water mark of 1884, and have as good a wharf as there is between Cincinnati and Louisville. There never is a time when passing steamers can not land. This would be one of the finest locations in the county for a Flouring mill, as there is an abundance of wheat raised in this community, and the facilities for shipping it are of the best.

A letter was received last week from W. P. Bennett, late of this county, but now a land owner in Illinois, stating that Illinois is solid for Cleveland Hendricks. We have no doubt about it as Bill knows.

Misses Sue and Ida Smith and Annie Bolen visited friends in Lawrenceburg, one day last week.

Miss Nellie Sway, of Cincinnati, is visiting friends here.

Mrs. W. T. Evans and family have returned home after a week's visit to friends in Ohio.

Mr James Bradley died Saturday the 23d ult., and was buried the next day. There were very few men of Mr. Bradley's qualities. He was liked by all who knew him, not leaving an enemy, and in his business relations his word was all that was necessary. He was a man in every respect. He leaves a wife who has the sympathy of this community.

Miss Lillie Baker, of Aurora, visited Miss Nettie McWethy, last week.

W. T. Snyder and J. M. Thomason are at the West Baden Springs, Indiana, for their health

The Christian Sunday-schools, of Aurora, Petersburg and Lawrenceburg, had an excursion on the Str. Minnie to Parlor Grove, last Wednesday.

We saw the sewing Machine awarded Mrs. M. F. Wingate at the Lawrenceburg Fair for the best loaf of yeast bread, and it is very nice indeed.

NOTICE.

All those indebted to the estate of Isaac Clore, deceased, are hereby notified that they must come forward and settle the same immediately. Those having claims against the estate of said deceased must present them to the undersigned properly proven, at once. JOHN W. CRIGLER, Administrator.

County Directory.

OFFICERS.

Assessor—G. M. Riley.
County Surveyor—W. E. Vest.
School Commissioner—D. M. Snyder.
Coroner.—Dr. A. A. Murat, Constance.

COURTS.

CIRCUIT COURT meets the 2d Monday in April and first Monday in October. P. U. Major, Judge; W. L. Riddell, Clerk A. G. DeJarnette, Commonwealth's Attorney; W. L. Riddell, Trustee Jury Fund.

COUNTY COURT meets the first Monday in every month. L. H. Dills, Judge; S. W. Tolin, County Attorney. M. T. Garnett, Clerk; J. R. Clutterbuck, Sheriff, T. W. Finch and W. T. German, Deputy Sheriffs.

QUARTERLY COURT meets the first Monday in March, June, September and December. The officers of the County Court preside.

COURT OF CLAIMS meets the first Monday in November.

MAGISTRATES' COURTS are held in March, June, September and December, as follows:

Bellevue—M. B. Green, first Saturday, and T. H. Sutton, third Monday. J. M. Moody, Constable.

Burlington—E. H. Baker, Thursday after first Monday, and Oscar Gaines, fourth Monday. R. H. Sandford, Constable.

Carlton A. G. McConnell, Wednesday after second Monday, and B. H. Ryle, Saturday after third Monday. Walter Ryle, Constable.

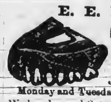
Petersburg—Jas. Hensley, Wednesday after first Monday, and L. A. Loder fourth Saturday. Geo. Comer, Constable.

Beaver—W. M. Rouse, Friday after the third Monday, and

Union—M. C. Norman, Thursday after third Monday, and H. Bannister, Thursday after second Monday. A. D. Riley, Constable.

Hamilton—F. M. Howlett, Tuesday after second Monday; W. W. Garnett, Wednesday after third Monday. R. L. Roberts Constable.

Walton—T. F. Curley, second Friday, S. L. Johnson, Tuesday after second Friday W. C. Moxley, Constable.



H. C. CHAMBERS,
AUCTIONEER
FLORENCE, - - - KENTUCKY.

CONNER YAGER
Attorney and Counselor at Law,
FLORENCE, - KENTUCKY

ROBERT B. REED
Attorney at Law.
OFFICE AT - UNION, KY

F. RIDDELL. R. P. STEPHENS.
RIDDELL and STEPHENS,
ATTORNEYS at LAW
BURLINGTON, KY.
Office over Dudley Rouse's Store.

W. E. VEST,
COUNTY SURVEYOR
WALTON, KY.
Is prepared to do all kinds of surveying. All orders sent him through the mail to Walton, will receive his prompt attention.

E. E. IGOE,

Resident Dentist,
Rising Sun, Ind.
WITH
J. P. Ulrey.
Monday and Tuesday at Rising Sun. Ind
Wednesday and Saturday at Aurora, Ind.;
Thursday and Friday at Lawrenceburg.

DR. A. B. HARRYMAN,

Resident Dentist.
Office over Post-Office.
AURORA, INDIANA.

J. J. Landram. G. G. Hughes.
LANDRAM & HUGHES,
ATTORNEYS at LAW.
Will practice in the Boone Circuit Court and the Court of Appeals. Prompt attention given to Collections, on application to G. G. Hughes, Burlington, Ky.

S. W. TOLIN,
ATTORNEY AT LAW
BURLINGTON, - - KY
Office in Court-house on 2d floor.
Will manage litigation in any of the Courts of the State, contracts and other legal instruments drawn up at reasonable rates. Aprompt an studious attention given to business intrusted to my care. A trial solicited. 12-1y

AURORA MARBLE AND GRANITE WORKS, Aurora. Ind
Will have constantly on hand
Marble and Granite Monuments,
Italian & American Headstones, &c.
I am ready to do all kinds of Stone Work on short notice and at low prices Hoping to receive the patronage of Boone County, I am respectfully,
F. W. KASSEBAUM.

INSURE AT HOME
The Farmers' Mutual Fire
INSURANCE COMPANY
Of Boone County
Is now completely organized and receiving applications for insurance.
Its Rates are Lower
Than those of any other Company, and it gives the farmers of Boone County a
HITHERTO UNKNOWN ADVANTAGE
In keeping their property insured.
EVERY FARMER IN THE COUNTY
should take a policy at once.
J. A. GAINES, President, Burlington, Ky. | J. H. WALTON, Secretary, Constance, Ky.
R. RANDALL, Treasury.
DIRECTORS.
LEGRAN GAINES, A. J. UTZ.
JNO. STEPHENS.
OSCAR GAINES, Agent. | C. L. CRISLER, Assessor.

THE DRY GOODS DEPARTMENT!
— IS NOW COMPLETE AT —
COLTER, POWELL AND OWNBY'S,
New Styles of Silesia Fancy Plaids and other elaborate styles just received. | Over One Hundred New Pieces just opened, from the best goods, marked down to
THE LOWEST PRICES.
Special Prices on a new lot of Black Dress Silks at 90c, $1, $1 25 and $1 50. New Fall Styles in Prints at wonderfully Low Prices. Muslins and all Domestics a Specialty. | Ladies' Dusters at 75c, 90c, $1, $1 25, $1 50 and $2. Ladies' Lap Dusters, 38c. Our Flannels, Yarns and Blankets are elegant. Over 200 doz. Hoes at 8½ and 10 cents.
OVER ONE HUNDRED DIFFERENT STYLES OF DRESS BUTTONS, JUST OPENED AT LOW PRICES.
Colter, Powell & Ownby.
Rising Sun, Indiana.

R. S. CRISLER,
Burlington, Ky,
WAGON MAKER AND
—MANUFACTURER OF—
ROAD WAGONS, SPRING WAGONS, HARROWS, PLOWS, WHEEL BARROWS
AND ALL KINDS OF WOOD WORK.
Also the Manufacturer of W. M. Conner's Patent Right Hay Conveyor
Saws Filed & Sharpened.
Please call and examine my prices before calling elsewhere.

JAMES S. WAYNE, President. JNO. L. SANDFORD, Cashier
CAPITAL $300,000.
FARMERS AND TRADERS
NATIONAL BANK.
Covington, Kentucky.
DIRECTORS.
James S. Wayne, J. S. Mason, M. C. Motch, J. H. Mersman, Sam Hind, J. L. Sandford, L. C. Stephens, E. J. Hickey, L. H. Dills, E. J. Green, F. P. Helm
The general operations of banking transacted upon the most favorable terms, collections made on all points in the United States.
The Business and Accounts of Farmers are Especially Solicited by this Bank.
dec. 20-6m

UNDERTAKING.

We keep Constantly on Hand all sizes of
Burial Cases and Caskets.
And having just received a beautiful
NEW HEARSE,
Which can be had at a reasonable price when desired.
PRICES GUARANTEED LESS THAN CITY PRICES
DAVIS BROS., - - HEBRON, KY

City Flouring Mills
RISING SUN, INDIANA.
FLOUR EXCHANGED FOR WHEAT OR CASH. THE HIGHEST MARKET PRICE PAID FOR GOOD WHEAT.
mar7-tf23
J. W. Talbott.

CENTRAL UNIVERSITY,
COLLEGE OF PHILOSOPHY, LETTERS, AND SCIENCE, RICHMOND, KY.
Next Session will open Wednesday, September 3d, 1884.
For full information and catalogue, apply to L. H. BLANTON, D. D., Chancellor.

Now is the time
To Subscribe for
The Recorder
Only $1 50 a Year.

THE RECORDER.

RIDDELL & HALL, Publishers.

BURLINGTON, : : KENTUCKY.

TO A DISCONTENTED MAN.

Where 's the man who dares change places
With the happiest man he knows?—
Take his chances and his fortune,
Bear alike his joys and woes!

Yet the world is full of grumblers,
Always growling at their fate,—
Sullen, surly, discontented,
Filled with envy and with hate;

Thinking all the world 's against them,
All their friends will prove untrue,
Never dreaming they can help it,
And the way is easy, too.

Now, my poor unhappy growler,
Half the fault lies in yourself;
Think a little more of others—
Lay your own care on the shelf.

Help make sunshine for your neighbors;
Drive the frown from off your brow;
Do some act of downright kindness—
Hard, at first, I will allow.

Yet 'twill grow to be a pleasure,
If repeated o'er and o'er,
And 'twill fill your heart with sunshine,
Till you feel to growl no more.

If you have your little trials,
Bear them bravely as you can.
Do not let them spoil your temper,
No one loves a surly man.

Other people have their troubles—
No one is from sorrow free;
Some have ten fold more than thou hast,
Yet they do not growl like thee.
—Carrie T. Richards, in Ballou's Magazine.

BY LAND AND BY SEA.

The Idyl of Ultra-Marine, in Six Clauses and a Climax.

CLAUSE THE FIRST.

The cadet's ball at Annapolis is in progress. To it have been bidden many of those who were once cadets but are now officers on men-of-war, have actually been to sea and visited foreign ports, which makes them assume traveled airs and display in various ways their convictions that there is nothing much left in the world worth seeing. Lieutenant Green (who is leaning against the columns of the ball-room and looking at the dancers with mild curiosity) remarks to Lieutenant Simpson (similarly engaged) that it reminds him, d'ye know, of the Nautch dance we saw in Calcutta, and Lieutenant Simpson responds that it is somewhat like that, but, d'ye know, it reminds him more of the Japanese Saki-naki. Then they both looked extremely traveled, to the intense envy of several new cadets who are within hearing.

This conversation also reaches a pair of pink ears belonging to a small damsel seated near by, who, however busy she may be in smiling away the sense of her midshipman escort, nevertheless finds time to curl up her lip and make comments not at all flattering to the Lieutenants. She asks her midshipman if he thinks those great men used to dance and deport themselves like ordinary mortals when they were at the academy; and he is quite pleased at her sarcasm, because—although he secretly admires Lieutenants who have been to Calcutta and Japan—he is very willing to have them disparaged for daring to know more than he.

Drawls Green to Simpson again: "See the Commodore's wife over the way?"

Simpson doesn't know the Commodore's wife, but is unwilling to acknowledge not knowing anything or anybody, so he nods and gazes at a tall, gaunt lady in black, whose hair and conversation alone have escaped the ravages of time.

"Hang it, not that one!" says Green. "That old party looks like a Peruvian duenna. Here's Mrs. Commodore on this side. Stout woman, with black lace mantilla. Reminds one of Spanish fandango. Wonder who she's got in tow?"

"I know him," replies Simpson, "it's Dale, First Lieutenant on board the Larkspur. Fellows call him Gentle Hermit because his initials are G. H., and then he sets up for a sage. To hear him talk you'd think he was as old as the everlasting hills and as wise as Solomon. He's a pretty good sort, though, and has been almost everywhere. I met him at Algiers when we were stationed there year before last."

"Looks rather young and conceited, seems to me." Thus Green: "Come along and let's have some punch. There's a feast of reason and a flow of bowl going on in the next room."

After which they depart, and the owner of the pink ears, who has been wickedly listening all the time, quite agrees with Mr. Green in his summary of Mrs. Commodore's escort. Before she has time to escape, however, that lady catches sight of her, beams affably, and, turning in their promenade, says something inaudible to her partner. He looks resigned, glances across the room, mutters, "Delighted, I'm sure," with a face not all indicative of delight, and then the twain descend upon the corner, where the pink ears are growing somewhat pinker, and have called a pair of brown eyes to assist in holding an indignation meeting over the idea of any one's being unwilling at an introduction to them.

"My dear Angelina," begins Mrs. Commodore, effusively, "what a faculty you have for hiding in snug corners, watching people, and I've no doubt saying clever, wicked things about them. Miss Owen, Mr. Dale." (Mr. Dale does the bow listless and Miss Owen the nod frigid). "Miss Owen is from California, and I am her chaperone, as well as very fond of her—"

"Which does not necessarily follow by any means," interrupted Dale. "But I can believe that no one would find it a difficult task to be fond of your charge." And he bows as if he had said a good thing and made a friend of her for life at a very trifling expense.

The indignation meeting is unanimously indignant. "Mr. Dale is kind enough to exert himself as much for his own glory as mine. His consciousness of merit is its own reward." (Then to her midshipman, who has not mentioned dancing): "Yes, I will dance with pleasure."

Dale (mentally)—"Whew! Dear creatures, girls!"

Angelina (whirling off)—"Such conceit!"

CLAUSE THE SECOND.

There is a banquet on board the United States ship Larkspur, Commodore Rudkin. The Commodore is a man who believes in "good ... ... toms," and doubts not their excellence if they have the requisite age; so he has drank healths, smashed glasses, proposed toasts (and answered them himself when no one else would respond), for all of which he is rewarded by carefully audible whispers from his lady guests to the effect that he is the life of the occasion—so convivial, so gallant, so generally charming.

Of a truth, he quite agrees with them; and as a master stroke he rises glass in hand, and says he has reached the—to him and all true men—most delightful and congenial part of the evening's entertainment, wherein he is permitted to pay a tribute to that lovely being without whom life would be indeed a waste! It is needless for him to add that he refers to woman. (Murmurs of applause from young officers and midshipmen.) He is himself somewhat too elderly a man, as well as too indifferent an orator (which he doesn't in the least believe), to do the young ladies justice, and hence he is going to pursue a plan of his own, and depute that pleasing task to some younger gallant—say Mr. —— (casting his eye up the table) Mr. Dale, who, he feels confident, will accept. As for himself, he cannot afford to relinquish the lovely sex entirely—may his timbers shiver and his lights go out when he does! So he intends reserving the matrons of maturer years for his tender mercies. Being a married man he is certainly more capable of estimating them at their worth, and with all his heart does he respect, reverence—aye, and love such of them as his wife will permit—and so forth, and so on.

During all this a young woman, who thinks Mr. Dale the most conceited man in the world, has found herself wondering what he will have to say about young ladies and whether he will be as fluent as that dear old Commodore, whom she considers a second Demosthenes and an old gentleman who is altogether fascinating from an unsentimental point of view.

The gallant Commodore at last, with a flourish of trumpets, drinks his wine theatrically, and sits down, very much pleased with himself and admired by his guests. All eyes, including a pair of scornful brown ones, are now turned to Mr. Dale, who rises opposite the last named orbs and looks across at them with a half-quizzical, half deprecatory smile. Then he glances coolly down the table to the Commodore and begins:

"Our worthy host could not have made a more unfortunate selection for this response than myself, and I fear that before I have finished you will all acquiesce in the opinion. A toast must necessarily be a panygeric, and to a man who has studied young ladies as I have, from an analytical and philosophical rather than a sentimental standpoint, the subjects of my present address afford but meagre material for eulogy. The fact is there is a great deal of cant about 'Heaven's last, best gift to man' and 'our better angels,' which we have adopted from the jargon of a fantastic chivalry—a chivalry which existed in semi-barbaric, bygone Ages, when a man felt called upon to go around and carve all of his fellowmen who refused to acknowledge the superiority of his particular divinity. And this divinity was frequently no better and no more beautiful than she should have been. As a matter of fact, women are not goddesses—they are as clayey as we are—their faults are equally numerous; and any man who has gone through the world with his eyes open knows they are numberless. If their failings are somewhat more frivolous and less grave than ours, it is because they lack both opportunity and capacity to become great offenders. Any man who thinks will readily admit—aye, and illustrate it by his own experience—that a boy of sixteen or eighteen years is nothing more or less than a raw, untrained, mentally and physically undeveloped Ego, who spends ten years of his after-life in wondering how he could have been such a fool! I say many a man will admit this, and yet he will talk endless bosh about sweetness, and intelligence, and beauty and thoughtfulness, and Heaven knows what imaginary virtues, in girls who are no wiser and no less absurd than he was at their age, with this additional drawback, that many of them never get over it! It is an unquestionable fact that there are many more grown-up children among women than men, principally because women's feelings generally control instead of her judgment, if she have any. Setting all this aside, I can say, with more sincerity but less elegance than our host, that I consider woman as a companion whose various imperfections of mind and body make her a fit helpmeet for man. And if all of us looked at them in this light there would be fewer marriages, perhaps, but certainly fewer disappointments in marriage."

With this the Hermit takes his seat, and on the spot all the ladies mentally condemn him as a disagreeable, stupid man, not nearly so nice as the dear old Commodore; and now could he say such horrid things?

There is one exception to this general disfavor, for, with strange perversity, our brown eyes dwell on the Hermit with something like approval, and she even ventures to nod and smile when he glances curiously at her.

There has been rather a damper cast on the conviviality, however, and the party soon breaks up, with the exception of a few choice spirits, headed by the Commodore, who is a three-bottle man, and proud of it.

Strolling around the deck, the Hermit comes upon his sole supporter in his late unpopular address. She is leaning against a capstan and looking out over the bay.

Dale—Are you in the contemplative mood which brooks no interruption, Miss Owen, or am I not the interrupter you would prefer? In either case I can take my cigar to the other side.

Angelina—To be frank, I was thinking of you and trying to fathom your extraordinary speech just now. Are you a relative, or merely a connection, of Mrs. Malaprop?

Dale—Neither, I hope. The fact is, I grow garrulous when on my pet themes. Most men who have hobbies ride them on every occasion, whether opportune or not.

Angelina (abruptly)—How old are you?

Dale (amused)—Just twenty-nine. And you?

Angelina—Old enough to know that young man's wisdom must be theoretical, since it can not be the result of experience; and that, therefore, they expose themselves to ridicule when they assume to be wiseacres. (Penitently)—Forgive me! I was rude in asking, and am more so in my reply. I am only twenty, and deserve all the disagreeable adjectives you applied to extremely young women.

Dale—If you think so, you probably do not deserve them. To know the truth is generally to be made free.

Angelina—Does it never occur to you that by keeping up this superior moralizing vein you expose yourself to the charge of conceit and offend people? Nothing makes one so many enemies as to assume that his thoughts run in higher grooves than theirs; that, being superior to them, he can amuse himself by observing their failings.

Dale—That is an observation which encroaches on my domain and deserves the criticism it contains. You are right, however, and I am not only unpopular but am held conceited. I dare say you thought so when we met, and think so still?

Angelina (coloring)—I must confess that I thought so, and think so still—but with this saving exception: I think you know it, and the conceit which acknowledges itself is half humility.

Dale—I see you, also, are a would-be philosopher. Then you have no right to reproach me with precocity, for compared to your tender years I am old Parr himself. Hark! the band is beginning. They play every night, and even at sea when the weather permits. Do you know, I think music never sounds so well anywhere as on the water? The crash is mellowed and softened; there are no harsh reverberations, while the music seems to peal out and die away over the waves. Sometimes when the sun is setting in mid-ocean, and our ship goes plunging along through the glittering water, the band strikes up, and one can almost fancy that the sound is caught up and wafted over the broad ocean back to land. You have never been to sea?

He has drawn a little closer, and is leaning against the same capstan.

Angelina (softly)—No. I am afraid of the ocean. There is a vastness and wildness which awes and frightens me. All the traveling I have ever done has been between here and my home.

Dale—Your home is in San Francisco, I think? I used to know a family of De Lancys who live there now.

Angelina—You know the De Lancys? Why, so do I. They live near us, and I see them very often. Isn't it nice to have mutual acquaintances? What a pretty girl Maud De Lancy is!

Dale (dryly)—Oh, yes.

Angelina—You say that as if it were anything but your opinion. Don't you like her?

Dale—Not extravagantly.

Angelina—(quickly)—Why?

Dale—Frankly, then, she's not my style. If she were more like you I should probably like her better.

Angelina (coldly)—Your approbation is magnificent. If she were in my place you would have said the same.

Dale (calmly)—It is possible.

Angelina (scornfully)—Your effrontery is admirable!

Angelina (not seeing it)—Good-bye.

Dale—And my temper imperturbable. Come, why should you grow angry over my humble little attempt to say in an indirect way that I like you.

Angelina—I am duly grateful (changing her tone). No, I believe I am glad, and—I see they are preparing to go ashore, and I must get ready.

Dale (walking by her side to the cabin)—Our ship will be here two weeks. I hope to see you again before I leave. (Holding out his hand)—Good-bye.

Dale (mentally)—A miracle! A girl who is not altogether frivolous, and can think!

Angelina (likewise)—He wouldn't have said it to Maud.

CLAUSE THE THIRD.

Mr. Dale does see Miss Owen again. And again.

CLAUSE THE FOURTH.

Angelina has met the "dearest, loveliest girl," in the person of a Miss Johns, from Washington, who is at the seaside for her health. They have known each other exactly ten days, and are accordingly grappled soul to soul "with hooks of steel;" ready to die one for the other, and profuse in kisses, arch quarrels and playful pats. These two have been allegedly bathing in the surf, and are now luxuriously seated in a hammock swung from the summer house roof. This summer house is situated in a "heavenly" spot near the hotel, surrounded by trees and unfrequented by masculine guests; so our girls dangle their little slippers out of the hammock and talk unrestrainedly.

Angelina—Nonie, dear (Miss Johns' name is Leonora), I've been thinking—

Miss Johns (playfully)—No? Why, Angie, how could you be so rash?

Angelina (petulantly)—Now, don't interrupt me, you provoking thing! I've been thinking that my time for going home is getting dismally near, and I don't know how I can ever muster up courage enough to leave this lovely place and—and you. I'm about ready to cry over it. Now don't you feel flattered?

Miss Johns—Oh, immensely. Of course I'm the source of your regret. It isn't the parties, nor the heads you turned; not to mention that solemn naval officer who follows you about, looking all the time as if he were protesting with himself against the folly of falling in love!

Angelina (laughing)—Truth to say, that is precisely what he is generally doing; and, worst of all, he doesn't confine it to himself, but protests to me.

Miss J.—Against his own folly or yours?

Angelina—Well, he's hardly so conceited as to call it mine, and he's reluctant to acknowledge it as his, so he moralizes over the tender passion in general, with no illustration in particular.

Miss J.—From which I'm to gather that you and he are an illustration if he would but acknowledge it.

Angelina (pouting)—No such thing! He's too wise to be human and I'm so ungrateful as to tire of wisdom. Whenever I do silly or commonplace things I don't like to have him looking at me in that commiserating way, and when I find amusement in what he calls frivolities it provokes me to have him calmly disdainful of them. Why he even ventured one of his imperceptible sneers at our friendship, the cold-blooded wretch!

Miss J.—I never could see what he bases his pretensions on, any way. I don't like men who pretend to be above everything, and I think that Captain West we met at the hop is ever and ever so much nicer. He's so lively, dances divinely, and seems to enjoy everything, while—

Angeline (interrupting)—Oh, I can't bear him! He asked me how I liked Newport, and if I was fond of dancing, and then said it was very warm, and he wouldn't be surprised if it were to rain soon. How can one talk to a man like that? There, there, don't pout! It can have its little captain if it wants to, so it can. (Long continued osculation.)

Miss J.—And it can have its horrid, preaching naval officer, too, if it will be good!

Angelina—But it won't have him, Nonie, dear!

CLAUSE THE FIFTH.

The band is playing in the hotel ball room, and "Terpsichorean exercises are being indulged in," as the society reporter hath it. There are two figures on the long piazza in the moonlight, and one of them is saying:

"Our ship sails to-morrow, Miss Owen. My two weeks are gone, and in them I have learned a new phase of life. I came here to—"

Angelina—Shall I not see you to-morrow, Mr. Dale?

Dale—Yes; but a general farewell is unsatisfactory and constrained, except where there is no feeling. From those we love our parting should be solitary. Therefore have I sought you out to say "good-bye" to-night.

Angelina (putting out a little hand)—Good-bye.

Dale (taking, but not releasing it)—Something more I would say, even though it be contrary to my usual precepts. I have learned to love you—foolishly, wildly, it may be; but truly, I am certain. And I came here to-night to tell you this—to ask —

Angelina (a little breathlessly)—Oh, do not go on. I am sorry, very sorry—I did not think—I mean I cannot listen to you, because I may have misled you. We can only be friends. It is much better so. You are too clear-sighted, and I am full of faults more than so many girls you laugh at and disdain.

Dale (very slowly)—It may be so; and it may be that in years to come ... shall be glad of your decision. I see that my wretched assumption of your philosophy has ruined whatever chance I may have had, and caused you to believe me a man whose habit of carping and sneering would make him discover objectionable features in an angel. You forget that I never lose sight of my own unworthiness. That were you twice as full of faults as you say, you were even then far too good for me. It is needless for me to go on. I have failed, and to the sting of defeat is added the remorse of an apostate to my creed. Over the latter I shall grieve but little, for I was a man ere I was a philosopher, and as to the former, I am too proud to cry out. Farewell (striding away).

Angelina (piteously)—I—I didn't mean to—Pshaw, I won't cry!

CLAUSE THE SIXTH.

Three months later and the Larkspur is anchored in San Francisco Bay through some inscrutable motive of the Secretary of the Navy. She is a scene of revelry, for most of the officers are ladies men, and crowd her decks almost daily with their feminine friends. Among these Miss Maud De Lancy and Miss Angelina Owen are numbered, and the latter young person accepts invitations bearing the name of "G. H. Dale" with a strange complication of feelings. She finds herself wondering whether he has recovered from his unaccountable infatuation, and whether she would be glad or sorry if he had not. She decides that she would be very sorry, and goes on board determined to be very gracious and friendly towards him—to assume the cordiality of an old acquaintance, and affect a belief in his total recovery, which, she feels sure, will prove agreeable, as most men prefer not to be considered love-lorn.

But to her unbounded indignation the Hermit turns the tables on her. He treats her as if she were the sufferer, and out of compassion he seeks not to revive her hopeless love. After a few words of formal greeting he turns her over to a fellow-officer and goes off chatting confidentially with that Miss De Lancy, whom he said he disliked. This is worthy of punishment, and she displays an astonishing vivacity, dances, laughs, and is excessively well acquainted with, and rejoices to behold each midshipman or ensign, some of whom she used hardly to notice.

This continues through several weeks of gayety on ship and shore, and all the while the Hermit pursues the same course. He does not shun her—that would be the best possible way to acknowledge his wound—nor does he appear to be aggrieved by her plainly marked neglect. He is exasperatingly unwounded, and entirely too little distressed over such a loss as Miss Owen feels he has sustained.

The breach is widening daily when the philosopher once more falls from grace and writes Miss Owen a letter, which (excuse impertinence) we will read over her shoulder:

"I have been afraid that you would construe my changed demeanor towards you into a spirit of sulkiness or petulance, and it is against this I wish to plead. When a man has played for as high stakes as I have, and lost, his regret is something deeper than mere pettishness. The true reason, then, for what you may consider as avoidance on my part is that in trying to follow my own unfortunate inclination to be near you whenever practicable, I can never again be certain that I am not subjecting you to an infliction, and it hurts me cruelly whenever I detect, or fancy I detect, annoyance on your part thereat.

"Then I can not hope to cure the malady against which I am struggling so unsuccessfully by renewing the cause, so I blindly strive to use the antidote of avoidance, and to believe that it is effectual. I am sometimes amused and distressed by the efforts of myself to convince my other self that it's of "no consequence." I am even more than ever addicted to my cynicism, and try to scoff at things which I believe in and admire. I seek more than ever to merit my absurd nickname, and all the time I feel, like poor Toots, that it is a great deal of consequence, and that I am more than half wretched, with a wretchedness that is harder to bear because I despise myself for it. Do not misunderstand me. I do not intend this as a reflection on you, for though I try not to do so I still believe that you are worthy and good and beautiful enough to merit any man's love. But I imagined my philosophy would break down vain and useless regrets, and am humiliated when I find I was mistaken.

"I have said enough to show you that, whatever my outward semblance has been, I am the truest, stanchest, tenderest lover you will ever have, even though I have lost the prize.

"There is no more to be said, except that should you ever stand in need of a service, great or small, which can only be entrusted to an unfaltering friend, then I ask you to let me prove my claim to that title."

Angelina (solus)—He is just as conceited as ever, and I hate conceit. The idea of—(To herself in the mirror)—You silly creature, there's a great big tear on your nose.

THE CLIMAX.

MARRIED—At the residence of the bride's mother, No. 1511 Wintergreen Square, Miss Angelina Owen to Lieutenant George H. Dale, U. S. N. [Washington papers please copy.]—Sheldon Borden, in San Francisco Argonaut.

The Ball in Antiquity.

It is not a little remarkable that nearly all the open air games in which the human family has indulged from the days of Homer down to the present time have revolved round a ball of some kind. Homer, indeed, introduces us to the Princess of Corcyra, who amuses herself with her maidens at hand ball, and is alluded to in lines translated from the "Odyssey" by Pope: "O'er the green mead the sportive virgins play. Their shining vails unbound; along the skies tossed and retossed the ball incessant flies." Herodotus again attributes the invention of the ball to the Lydians, and at least one passage of the "Iliad" shows us that some game with ball was played during the siege of Troy. So far as these islands are concerned, we know that Fitzstephen, who wrote in the Thirteenth Century, speaks of the London boys "as going annually into the fields immediately after dinner on Shrove Tuesday to play at the celebrated game of ball." There is no reason to believe that they indulged in football, which is supposed not to have been introduced or started in this country until the reign of Edward III.—long after the death of Fitzstephen, to whom, by the way, we are indebted for some of the earliest notices of horse-racing in these islands. While the boys of England were amusing themselves with hand-ball, which probably bore some resemblance to fives, we learn from St. Foix that the boys of Paris were engaged in the "jeu de paume," or palm play, "which consisted in receiving the ball and driving it back again with the palm of the hand." He adds that in former times the French youths "played with the naked hand and then with a glove, which in some instances was lined. Afterward they bound cords and tendons round their hands to make the ball rebound more forcibly, and from this practice the racket derives its origin." Four or five centuries ago, hand tennis was extremely fashionable in France, and was played by the most illustrious nobles for what were then considered large sums of money. The Duke of Burgundy is said to have lost sixty francs in 1368 to the Duke of Bourbon at palm play, and, not having enough money to pay his losses, he left his girdle behind him as a pledge for the remainder. It was not until two centuries later that tennis courts sprang up simultaneously all over France and England and that evidences appear in the public registers showing that many of our Kings took part in the game of tennis. Charles II., the most French of our monarchs, was extremely partial to the game and invented a dress specially adapted for its player to wear. Prior, however, to the introduction of tennis it appears that palm play was usually indulged in by five competitors on either side, and hence it got the name which it has ever since retained of "fives." Three centuries since Queen Elizabeth was on a visit to Elvetham, in Hampshire, which was then the property of the Earl of Hertford, and belongs now to Lord Calthorpe. Mr. Nichols tells us in his "Royal Progresses" that "after dinner, about three of the clock, ten of his Lordships servants, all Somersetshire men, in a square greene court, before her Majestie's window, did haul up lines, squaring out the form of a court and making a cross line in the middle. In this square they, being stript of their dublets, played five to five with hand ball at bord and cord, as they term it, to the great satisfaction and liking of her Highness." —London Telegraph.

HOME AND FARM.

—Mississippi is following Georgia in the development of truck farming.

—As a rule new fruits originated from seeds grown in seasons very unfavorable to their growth are inferior. Our best grapes, apples and other fruits come from seeds grown when the fruit attained its greatest excellence.

—A young animal, building its bone and muscle, requires different kinds and quantities of food from the more mature one. Hay, straw and other fodders are best for the immature animal; they are also heat and fat makers and would fatten alone, though slowly. —Boston Budget.

—Cabbage cooked in this way makes a good entree: Shave the cabbage very thin, then let it cook until tender in a very little water, drain it thoroughly. Put a lump of butter into a clean saucepan, let it melt and brown, then put the cabbage into it and let it brown; season with salt and pepper; send to the table very hot.—N. Y. Post.

—For the destruction of the apple and the peach borer no sure remedy has been found but the knife. It is probable that covering the trunk of the tree near the ground with the ink or tar used to catch the moths or the canker worm, or wrapping around the trunk bands of tarred paper, would assist in keeping them away.—Prairie Farmer.

—Pastures given to excessive moisture should, as far as possible, be avoided for sheep grazing, excepting perhaps in the middle of the day, when the surface moisture has been dispersed. Such pastures are further dangerous to the health and life of sheep in harboring certain descriptions of snails which carry upon or in their bodies the larvæ or young parasites which occasion liver rot, a disease quite prevalent in wet seasons, excepting on salt-marshes.—Troy Times.

—If you are having trouble with the quality of your butter, just take down the scythe from the old apple tree, says the American Dairyman, and march out into the pasture until you have cut down every weed you can find. There is no weed known to botany that makes good milk. They are the natural enemies of every product of the farm, and to dairy products in particular.

—Rice Pudding: Take one teacupful of raw rice, one onion, one cup broth, one cup milk, one egg, one cup chopped meat, pepper and salt. Boil the rice with the onion in the broth, adding water; when it is soft, remove the onion; add a raw custard made of the milk, egg, &c. Mix well with the meat, put into a grease mold, set in a pan of boiling water and bake, covered, till firm. About forty-five minutes should be enough.—N. Y. Sun.

The Transpiration of Plants.

Of all the phenomena of plants, that of transpiration is perhaps the most interesting. The rich dew that impearls a summer morning with beauty, resting on leaf and flower and grass blade, dampening the country roads, and that was once thought to be evolved from the atmosphere, is proved by the great Dutch naturalist Muschenbroeck to be the condensed perspiration of plants. The experiment was very simple; he covered with a plate of lead the whole circumference of the root of a white poppy, so as to prevent the vapor of the earth from interfering with his experiment. The plant was then covered with a bell glass cemented to the lead. After that, each morning, when the naturalist came to visit the imprisoned plant, he observed that even during the driest night its leaves were covered with an innumerable quantity of those drops of water to which the name of dew is given, and that the sides of the glass were covered with moisture. Guettard was able to decide the amount which vegetable transpiration produces, and found that a branch of a cornel tree weighing only five and one-half drachm distilled each day an ounce and three drachms of water, double its weight, in twenty-four hours.

The common garden sunflower is a marked instance of the transpiration of plants. Wales has proved by experiment that a sunflower lost by the transpiration of its leaves twenty ounces of water in twenty-four hours. Ruysch, the great Dutch anatomist, states that an arum which he kept in a greenhouse in the botanical garden at Amsterdam distilled water drop by drop from the extremities of its leaves in proportion as it was watered and another plant of the same family (Colocasia esculenta), edible arum, threw out little drops of water in the form of a jet, that were exhaled from the pores seen on the tips of its cordate-shaped leaves; and from each of these orifices from ten to one hundred drops of water were thrown some distance every minute. Touchet mentions a similar phenomenon in one of the greenhouses of the botanical garden at Louon, where an arborescent fuchsia rained down so much water upon the plants around it that it was necessary to remove them. The leaves of other plants, more tenacious of the perspiration they distil, collect it in little cups, which are seen at the extremities of their leaves, those in some cases have movable lids. The most remarkable plant that exhibits this phenomenon is the famous Nepenthes distillatoria, or pitcher plant, found in Southern Asia. Its leaves display a firm mid-rib, which extends along the blade and ends in a strong cylindrical cup, provided with a hinged lid, which spontaneously opens and closes according to the state of the atmosphere. During the night this lid sinks down and hermetically closes the little vase, which then fills up with limpid water exhaled by its walls. During the day the lid is raised and the water mostly evaporates. The beneficient nepenthe has often quenched the thirst of the Italian lost in the burning deserts. In the marshy forests of Southern America is found another distilling plant, the purple sarracenia, the structure of which is equally eccentric. Its leaves, uniting at their edges, are transformed into elegant amphoræ, the narrow opening of which is surmounted by an ample green auricle threaded with scarlet veins, to which this species owes its name. These cups are filled with pure and delicious water for the benefit of the traveler, and for which he is all the more grateful as he is encircled by morasses, the water of which is lukewarm and nauseous.

The vegetable marvel in transpiration is the weeping tree of the Canary Islands, whose tufted foliage distills water like rain. But the rain tree with which botanists are familiar is the Tami-Caspia of the eastern Peruvian Andes. Prof. Ernst, the director of the Botanic Gardens at Caraccas, states "In the month of April the young leaves are still delicate and transparent; during the whole day a fine spray of rain is to be noticed under the tree, even in the driest air, so that the strongly-tinted iron-clay soil is distinctly moist. The phenomenon diminishes with the growth of the leaves, and ceases when they are full grown." He attributes the rain to secretions from glands on the footstalk of the leaf on which drops of the liquid are found which are rapidly renewed on being removed with blotting paper.

The gigantic gum trees, Eucalyptus Globulus, so valuable to destroy malaria, emit camphoraceous antiseptic vapors from their leaves that counteract the poisons of the atmosphere.—Boston Transcript.

—There is an actress in Germany named Amanda Battina Kreuzwanger Rosalie Bakerman Zwinkehut. At an early hour in the matinees her friend begin to call her out for the end of the third act in the evening performances.

A TOUCHING INCIDENT.

A Young Girl's Dementia—How it was Occasioned—Some New and Startling Truths.

The St. Louis express, on the New York Central Road, was crowded one evening recently, when at one of the way stations, an elderly gentleman, accompanied by a young lady, entered the cars and finally secured a seat. As the conductor approached the pair, the young lady arose, and in a pleading voice said:

"Please, sir, don't let him carry me to the asylum. I am not crazy; I am a little tired, but not mad. Oh! no, indeed. Won't you please have papa take me back home?"

The conductor, accustomed though he was to all phases of humanity, looked with astonishment at the pair as did the other passengers in their vicinity. A few words from the father, however, sufficed, and the conductor passed on while the young lady turned her face to the window. The writer chanced to be seated just behind the old gentleman and could not forego the desire to speak to him. With a sad face and a trembling voice the father said:

"My daughter has been attending the seminary in a distant town and was succeeding remarkably. Her natural qualities, together with a great ambition, placed her in the front ranks of the school, but she studied too closely, was not careful of her health, and her poor brain has been turned. I am taking her to a private asylum where we hope she will soon be better."

At the next station the old man and his daughter left the cars, but the incident, so suggestive of Shakespeare's Ophelia, awakened strange thoughts in the mind of the writer. It is an absolute fact that while the population of America increased thirty per cent. during the decade between 1870 and 1880 the insanity increased was over one hundred and thirty-five per cent. for the same period. Travelers by rail, by boat, or in carriages in any part of the land see large and elaborate buildings, and inquire what they are?

Insane asylums!

Who builds them?

Each State; every county; hundreds of private individuals, and in all cases their capacity is taxed to the utmost.

Why?

Because men, in business and the professions, women, at home or in society, and children at school overtax their mental and nervous forces by work, worry and care. This brings about nervous disorders, indigestion and eventually mania.

It is not always trouble with the head that causes insanity. It far oftener arises from evils in other parts of the body. The nervous system determines the status of the brain. Any one who has periodic headaches; occasional dizziness; a dimness of vision; a ringing in the ears; a feverish head; frequent nausea or a sinking at the pit of the stomach, should take warning at once. The stomach and head are in direct sympathy, and if one be impaired the other can never be in order. Acute dyspepsia causes more insane suicides than any other known agency, and the man, women or child whose stomach is deranged is not and can not be safe from the coming on at any moment of mania in some one of its many terrible forms.

The value of moderation and the imperative necessity of care in keeping the stomach right must therefore be clear to all. The least appearance of indigestion, or mal-assimilation of food should be watched as carefully as the first approach of an invading army. Many means have been advocated for meeting such attacks, but all have heretofore been more or less defective. There can be little doubt, however, that for the purpose of regulating the stomach, toning it up to proper action, keeping its nerves in a normal condition and purifying the blood, Warner's Tippecanoe The Best, excels all ancient or recent discoveries. It is absolutely pure and vegetable; it is certain to add vigor to adults, while it can not by any possibility injure even a child. The fact that it was used in the days of the famous Harrison family is proof positive of its merit as it has so thoroughly withstood the test of time. As a tonic and revivifier it is simply wonderful. It has relieved the agony of the stomach in thousands of cases; soothed the tired nerves; produced peaceful sleep and averted the coming on of a mania more to be dreaded than death it self.

Swallowed Her Young.

It is not generally believed, even among people who live in neighborhoods where snakes are common, that these reptiles swallow their young, as in time of danger, or when they move from one locality to another. While it is a well-authenticated fact that many species of snakes do this, instances are rare where they have been seen in the act. Such a sight was witnessed a few days since. Charles Wilson, William Gould and Harry Lawrence, three boys, were blackberrying near Deckertown. They discovered a garter-snake in the bushes, which at once began to glide to and fro, uttering a peculiar hissing sound. Suddenly the snake stopped and lay flat upon the ground, with its head raised a little, and the mouth wide open. Instantly diminutive snakes began to appear from all directions, and one after another darted in at the open mouth of the old snake and disappeared. A steady stream of young reptiles poured itself into their mother's throat for more than a minute. When the last one had entered the mother snake was swollen to more than twice her natural size, and she immediately started to leave the spot. One of the boys killed her. There were 105 of the young snakes, and all were killed. The mother was but two and a half feet long, and the young ones were of an average length of three inches, aggregating a length of twenty-six feet stored away in the narrow compass of the old snake's body.—Trenton (N. J.) Gazette.

—A statistician estimates that the cost of setting up the reports of base ball matches in the various papers every year in the United States would pay the interest on the national debt, and by adding to it the cost of horse racing and other sporting news composition, the entire debt could be wiped out in seven years, eight months and thirty-five days. The estimate is based on the low figure of twenty-five cents per thousand "ams."—Burlington Hawkeye.

—Nobody need give up the use of fruit, for it is usually the best of summer foods. But eat the fresh, uncooked fruits in the morning only, first being sure it is ripe, and cook all the fruits that are to serve after the noon hour, and especially all that are bought at several days' distance from the place where they grow.—Philadelphia Ledger.

THE MARKETS.

CINCINNATI, September 2, 1884.

LIVE STOCK—Cattle—Common	$2 00	@ 3 00
Choice butchers	4 50	@ 5 00
HOGS—Common	4 25	@ 5 40
Good packers	5 65	@ 6 25
SHEEP—Good to choice	3 50	@ 4 00
FLOUR—Family	3 60	@ 4 00
GRAIN—Wheat—Longberry red	83	@ 84
No. 2 red	80	@ 81
Corn—No. 2 mixed	53½	@ 54
Oats—No. 2 mixed		@ 30
Rye—No. 2		@ 54½
HAY—Timothy No. 1	11 00	@ 12 00
HEMP—Double dressed	8 75	@ 9 00
PROVISIONS—Pork—Mess	18 00	@ 18 50
Lard—Prime steam		@ 8 00
BUTTER—Fancy Dairy	18	@ 18
Prime Creamery	23	@ 26
FRUIT AND VEGETABLES—
Potatoes, new, per barrel	1 75	@ 2 00
Apples, prime, per barrel	1 25	@ 2 00
NEW YORK.
FLOUR—State and Western	$2 65	@ 3 30½
Good to choice	3 70	@ 6 08½
GRAIN—Wheat—No. 2 Chicago		@ 81
No. 2 red	90	@ 90¾
Corn—No. 2 mixed	62	@ 66
Oats—mixed	32	@ 42
PORK—Mess		@ 18 25
LARD—Western steam		@ 7 90
CHICAGO.
FLOUR—State and Western	$3 50	@ 5 00
GRAIN—Wheat—No. 2 red		@ 83¾
No. 2 Chicago Spring	78¾	@ 79¾
Corn—No. 2	51¾	@ 53½
Oats—No. 2		@ 25¾
Rye		@ 54
PORK—Mess	16 50	@ 19 00
LARD—Steam	7 45	@ 7 50
BALTIMORE.
FLOUR—Family	$4 00	@ 5 00
GRAIN—Wheat—No 2	88½	@ 88¾
Corn—mixed	59½	@ 60¾
Oats—mixed	30	@ 32
PROVISIONS—Pork—Mess		@ 19 25
Lard—Refined		@ 9¾
INDIANAPOLIS.
WHEAT—No. 2 red	$	@ 79
CORN—mixed		@ 51
OATS—mixed		@ 25¾
LOUISVILLE.
FLOUR—A No. 1	$4 15	@ 4 25
GRAIN—Wheat—No. 2 red		@ 76
Corn—mixed		@ 56
Oats—mixed		@ 29¾
PORK—mess		@ 18 75
LARD—steam	2	@ 9¾

—The Wood River (Idaho) Times thus describes the speed of a fire in that section: "The entire country for forty or fifty miles each side of Shoshone seems to be in flames, and the fire appears to be gaining in all directions. The rapidity with which it spreads under a high wind is wonderful. About noon there was but a mere breeze, with a spurt or two. Yet the fire traveled faster than a horse could run, and in less than one hour had covered twenty-five or thirty miles. The flames would rise in the air about thirty feet, break in big blocks, sail along with the wind, and land about 100 to 300 feet ahead. Its speed is not surprising with such gigantic leaps."

—Three colored children were recently admitted to Trinity Church at Norwich, Conn., two descendants of General Israel Putnam being sponsors. Fifty-one years ago Miss Prudence Crandall, of the adjoining town of Canterbury, was thrust into the murderers' cell, in old Brooklyn jail, because she had been found guilty of teaching a class of colored girls in a school held in her house. Trinity Church now stands on the very site of the old jail.—Hartford Post.

Catholic College.

Mr. J. D. Kingsley, Secretary, Holy Cross College Gymnasium, Worcester, Mass., writes: Every member of our club frankly admits that St. Jacob's Oil, the conqueror of pain, is the best cure they have ever used, and all speak of it in terms of the highest approbation. 50 cents a bottle.

WHAT is the difference between a Goddess of Liberty and a detective? One is always on the dollar and the other always on the scent.

IT makes a milk-man's wife blush to ask her if her silk dress is watered.—Chicago Tribune.

SIDNEY OURCHUNNAO, of Pittsburgh, Pa., writes: "I have used DR. WM. HALL'S BALSAM FOR THE LUNGS many years with the most gratifying results. The pain and rack of the body, incidental to a tight cough, soon disappear. My wife frequently sends for HALL'S BALSAM instead of a physician."

THE most verdant young man of the period was the one who attempted to cut grass with a bicycle.—Boston Budget.

LAST year's fashions are out of date, but last year's friends are still our own. This is why Mrs. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound never loses favor; every lady who knows its worth (and who does not?) feels that the kindly face of Mrs. Pinkham is that of an honored friend.

THE violin craze which has recently attacked some women was probably caused by a desire to possess a beau

☞ A happy thought. Diamond Dyes are so perfect and so beautiful that it is a pleasure to use them. Equally good for dark or light colors. 10c at druggists. Wells, Richardson & Co., Burlington, Vt. Sample Card, 32 colors, and book of directions for two-cent stamp.

DEAF mutes converse by means of signs, because actions speak louder than words. —Boston Transcript.

Regulars.

One of the strongest proofs of the value of Kidney-Wort as a remedy for all diseases of the Kidneys, Liver and Bowels, is the fact that it is used and prescribed by "regular" physicians. Philip C. Ballou, M. D., of Monkton, Vt., says: "Take it all in all, it is the most successful remedy I have ever used."

"THE dog came for me," said the tramp, "and I played I was a railroad contractor." "What did you do?" "Made tracks."—Rochester Post-Express.

Glenn's Sulphur Soap

Supersedes oily unguents or salves for cutaneous eruptions.

A BALD HEADED man hasn't much to be proud of, but he always wants to put on hairs.—Merchant Traveler.

PISO'S REMEDY for Catarrh is a certain cure for that very obnoxious disease.

BEWARE of green fruit. The fruit can not help being green, but you can.—Philadelphia Chronicle-Herald.

IF afflicted with Sore Eyes, use Dr. Isaac Thompson's Eye Water. Druggists sell it. 25c.

"ANOTHER expedition to the pole," said the man as he wended his way to the barber shop.

CATARRH

HAY-FEVER

HAY-FEVER. I can recommend Ely's Cream Balm to all Hay-Fever sufferers, it being, in my opinion, founded upon experience and a sure cure. I was afflicted with Hay-Fever for twenty-five years, and never before found permanent relief.—WEBSTER H. HASKINS, Marshfield, Vt.

Ely's Cream Balm is a remedy based upon a correct diagnosis of this disease and can be depended upon. 50 cts. at druggists; 60 cts. by mail. Sample bottle by mail, 10 cts. ELY BROS., Druggists, Owego, N. Y.

WANTED Ladies and Gentlemen in City or County to take light work at their own Homes. $3 to $4 a day easily made. Work sent by mail. No canvassing. We have good demand for our work, and furnish steady employment. Address with stamp Crown M'f'g. Co., 290 Race St., Cin'ti, O.

HUDSON RIVER R. R.

Conductor Melius Says Something of Interest to All Travelers.

POUGHKEEPSIE, N. Y., Feb. 22, 1884.

Dr. D. Kennedy, Rondout, N. Y.:

DEAR SIR: I have used your medicine called Dr. KENNEDY'S FAVORITE REMEDY, for Indigestion and Dizziness, to which I was subject at times, and know from experience that it is worthy of all that can be said of it for disorders of that kind.

Respectfully,
W. S. MELIUS, 60 Harrison street.

That Dr. DAVID KENNEDY'S FAVORITE REMEDY is extensively used along the line of the Hudson River Railroad, is shown by the following from Tarrytown. The writer is none other than Mr. DeRevere, the Station Agent of the Hudson River Railroad Company at Tarrytown, a man well known in that community:

TARRYTOWN, N. Y., Feb. 23, 1884.

Dr. D. Kennedy, Rondout, N. Y.:

DEAR SIR: For a long time I was troubled with severe attacks of Dizziness and Blind Sick Headaches. I thought it was due to impure blood and a disordered state of the system. I was advised to try FAVORITE REMEDY. I did so, and have been completely cured. It's the best thing I ever heard of for any disorder of that nature, and I've recommended it to many with like success.
A. DEREVERE.

Dr. KENNEDY'S FAVORITE REMEDY is not confined in its sphere of usefulness to one State or locality, but is hailed as a boon by hundreds in every State, as the following letter from Millville, N. J., will show:

MILLVILLE, N. J.

Dr. David Kennedy, Rondout, N. Y.:

DEAR SIR: I had been a sufferer from Dyspepsia from the time I was sixteen years old. I had consulted various physicians but could find no relief, therefore had almost given up in despair of ever recovering health, when Dr. KENNEDY'S FAVORITE REMEDY was recommended, which I tried and have been cured. It's the best medicine I ever knew of, and worthy of the greatest confidence.
MRS. S. C. DOUGHERTY.

P WITH P

MAY mean "Poisoned with Potash." This is the case with hundreds who have been unwise enough to take Sarsaparillas, Potash mixtures, etc., until digestion is almost fatally impaired. Swift's Specific is a vegetable remedy, and restores the system to health and builds up the waste made by these poisons.

"I was suffering with Blood Poison, and treated several months with Mercury and Potash, only to make me worse. The Potash took away my appetite and gave me dyspepsia, and both gave me rheumatism. I then took Sarsaparillas, etc. All these Sarsaparilla mixtures have Potash in them. This made me still worse, as it drove the poison farther into my system. A friend insisted I should take Swift's Specific, and it cured me of the Blood Poison, drove the Mercury and Potash out of my system, and to-day I am as well as I ever was." GEO. O. WELLMAN, JR., Salem, Mass.

Treatise on Blood and Skin Diseases mailed free to applicants. SWIFT SPECIFIC CO., Drawer 3, Atlanta, Ga.

N. Y. Office, 159 W. 23d St., bet. 6th and 7th Aves. Philadelphia Office, 1205 Chestnut St.

NOW IS THE TIME.

To prevent and cure all "Skin Diseases," and to secure a white soft and beautiful Complexion, use

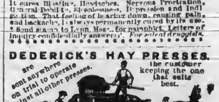
BEESON'S

Aromatic Alum Sulphur Soap.

Sold by Druggists. One cake will be sent on receipt of 25 cents to any address. WM. DREYDOPPEL, Manufacturer, 208 North Front Street, Philadelphia, Pa.

BEST and most economical Laundry Soap for Washing, especially Merino, Woolens and Undergarments (cleans perfect and easy; makes clothes white and sweet) is DREYDOPPEL'S Borax Soap. Sold by all wholesale grocers and first-class retailers.

LYDIA E. PINKHAM'S VEGETABLE COMPOUND IS A POSITIVE CURE FOR All those painful Complaints and Weaknesses so common to our best FEMALE POPULATION.



Price $1 in liquid, pill or lozenge form.

Its purpose is solely for the legitimate healing of disease and the relief of pain, and that it does all it claims to do, thousands of ladies can gladly testify.

It will cure entirely all Ovarian troubles, Inflammation and Ulceration, Falling and Displacements, and consequent Spinal Weakness, and is particularly adapted to the Change of Life.

It removes Faintness, Flatulency, destroys all craving for stimulants, and relieves Weakness of the Stomach. It cures Bloating, Headaches, Nervous Prostration, General Debility, Sleeplessness, Depression and Indigestion. That feeling of bearing down, causing pain, and backache, is always permanently cured by its use. Send stamp to Lynn, Mass., for pamphlet. Letters of inquiry confidentially answered. For sale at druggists.

DEDERICK'S HAY PRESSES.

Order on trial. Address for circular and location of Western and Southern Storehouses and Agents. P. K. DEDERICK & CO., Albany, N. Y.

PILES ITCHING PILES. Symptoms—Moisture, intense itching, most at night. SWAYNE'S OINTMENT sure cure. It is EQUALLY EFFICACIOUS in CURING ALL SKIN DISEASES such as Pimples, Blotches, Rash, Tetter, Itch, Salt Rheum, no matter how obstinate or long standing. Box, by mail, 50c. DR. SWAYNE & SON, Phila., Pa. Sold by Druggists.

PISO'S CURE FOR CONSUMPTION. 25 CTS. CURES WHERE ALL ELSE FAILS. Best Cough Syrup. Tastes good. Use in time. Sold by druggists.

GUNS ShotGuns Revolvers, Rifles, Etc.

Address Great Western Gun Works, Pittsburgh, Pa. Large Ill. Catalogue free.

"THE BEST IS THE CHEAPEST." SAW MILLS, ENGINES THRESHERS, Horse Powers. (For all sections and purposes.) Write for Free Pamphlet and Prices to The Aultman & Taylor Co., Mansfield, Ohio.

CHICAGO SCALE CO. 151 South Jefferson Street, Chicago, Ill. 2-Ton Wagon Scale, $40; 4-Ton $60; "Little Detective," $3. Send for Price List.

$100 GOLD Presented to Our Patrons! Send 15c. for Humorous Photo. (retail price 25c.) and full particulars. CARTOON PUB. CO., Chicago, Ill.

It is a well-known fact that most of the Horse and Cattle Powder sold in this country is worthless; that Sheridan's Condition Powder is absolutely pure and very valuable. Nothing on Earth will make hens lay like Sheridan's Condition Powder. Dose, one teaspoonful to each pint of food. It will also prevent and cure CHICKEN CHOLERA, Hog Cholera, &c. Sold everywhere, or sent by mail for 25 cents in stamps. Also furnished in large cans, for breeders' use, price $1.00; by mail, $1.20. Circulars sent FREE. I. S. JOHNSON & CO., Boston, Mass.

MAKE HENS LAY

CUT THIS OUT AND ( ) SEND WITH YOUR ORDER.

THEY ARE THE STANDARD. OUR REMEDIES NEVER FAIL.

NATIONAL GREASE HEEL LOTION. Cleanse your Horses' heels. This lotion has been used with the most unqualified success. Obviates grease heels and cracked heels. Horse shoers should have it for sale. Price $1.00.

NATIONAL SPANISH LINIMENT. Is invaluable for Sprains, Bruises, Shoulder lameness, Affection of the tendons or ligaments, Splint, Rheumatism. It should always be at hand in the stable. Price $1.00.

FOR SALE BY DRUGGISTS, General Stores and Horseshoers. If they do not have it, send order direct. A New and exceedingly Valuable Live Stock Doctor Book accompanies each Bottle. STANDARD PRICE $1.00.

NATIONAL HOG CHOLERA REMEDY saves your hogs. This Remedy is the discovery of a noted veterinarian and should always be kept on hand by stock raisers and farmers. It is a sure cure. Price $1.00.

NATIONAL COLIC REMEDY. This disease, the most sudden and fatal, is controlled by the National Colic Remedy; the formula is by a noted veterinarian; three doses in each bottle; a cure in every case. Price $1.00.

NATIONAL LIVE STOCK REMEDY CO., 175 DEARBORN STREET, CHICAGO.

$500 CASH, FREE!

We offer the above amount of money and THIRTY-FIVE GOLD WATCHES, Free to the first 145 persons answering the following Bible question: Where is the word Grandmother found in the Bible? Mention the Book, Chapter and Verse.

The first person answering this question correctly, on or before October 15th, will receive $75 cash. If we receive more than one correct answer, the second will receive $70; the third, $60; the fourth, $55; the fifth, $50; the sixth, $25; the seventh, $20; eighth, $15; ninth, $10; tenth, $8; eleventh, $6; twelfth, $4; thirteenth, $2; thirty-five GOLD WATCHES to the next thirty-five correct answers, and one dollar each to the next one hundred people answering it correctly. If you are not first, remember that you may be second or third, so you stand a good chance for a large prize. Each competitor must, in every case, send 50 cents for Sample package ROYAL TEA with their answers.

THE PURE, UNADULTERATED UNCOLORED ROYAL TEA

Is such as the crowned heads of Europe use. Imported direct. The first time the Royal Tea has ever been introduced in America. A revolution to American tea drinkers. Only Nature's Coloring is used in the Royal Tea. The fresh leaves are dried and prepared in such a way as to retain all their delicate aroma and flavor, together with strength and body. One trial of Royal Tea and you will forever do away with all impure, high colored and poisonous articles. SPECIAL OFFER! To introduce this Tea in America we will, for a limited time, (until October 15th,) send (sample box) one half-pound Royal Tea, prepaid, to any address on receipt of only 50 cents, one pound box, prepaid, $1. 50 cents is cheap for sample box Royal Tea so you pay nothing for competing for one of the above prizes. In addition to the other prizes, we offer $500 more to be divided equally; ($5 each) to the first one hundred persons sending us the correct answer to the above question and remitting $1 for one-pound sample Royal Tea. The money will be promptly sent to the successful ones. Send one dollar in P. O. order, postal note, or registered letter. Don't wait, but send your answer at once. Postage stamps taken. Full instructions to agents how to make $10 a day introducing the Royal Tea given with each sample box. Address MAYO & CO., 166 La Salle St., Chicago, Ill.

HAIR Wigs & Waves sent c.o.d. anywhere. Wholesale & Retail Price-list free. Goods guaranteed. B. C. STREHL, 157 Wabash av., Chicago.

$250 A MONTH. Agents Wanted. 90 best selling articles in the world. 1 sample FREE. Address JAY BRONSON, Detroit, Mich.

EDUCATIONAL.

$40 PAYS for a Life Scholarship in the COLEMAN BUSINESS COLLEGE, Newark, New Jersey. Positions for graduates. National patronage. Write for Circulars. COLEMAN & PALMS.

Young Men If you want to become Telegraph Operators, and be guaranteed employment, address P. W. REAM, Ada, O.

YOU ARE A LIAR

Lying Agents can't SELL and tell the truth about Jones. Put your lies on paper and sign if you dare. U. S. STANDARD $60.5 TON WAGON SCALES. Beam Box. Tare Beam. Freight Paid. Free Price List. Every Size. Address JONES OF BINGHAMTON, BINGHAMTON, N. Y.

A. N. K.—E. 994

WHEN WRITING TO ADVERTISERS please say you saw the advertisement in this paper.

BOONE COUNTY RECORDER.

VOLUME IX. BURLINGTON, KY., WEDNESDAY, SEPTEMBER 10, 1884. NUMBER 15.

TOPICS OF THE DAY.

A MONUMENT is proposed for Artemus Ward, the dead humorist.

ANGLEWORM oil is sold in the New England drug stores as a rheumatic cure.

HENRY GEORGE BOHN, the noted English publisher, is dead, at the age of eighty-eight.

MEXICANS have a great antipathy to vaccination. They say it is flying in the face of Providence.

THE Boston girl is considered accomplished when she can sneeze without dropping off her eye-glasses.

IT is a wise young man who early makes up his mind that gamblers know more about gambling than he does.

OLEOMARGARINE having driven genuine butter out of the market, now oleo is in turn being bounced by butterine, said to be produced from dirty fat.

COUNTERFEIT dimes of 1875 are in circulation, but they are so bad that the man who would allow one to be passed on him should have a guardian appointed.

WASHINGTON architects use red mortar in brick buildings. They say it makes a more harmonious effect than white or black mortar, and is altogether a pleasing novelty.

FOR the first seven months of this year the losses from fire in the United States amounted to the sum of $62,500,000, and $10,000,000 more than for the same period last year.

NEXT to the wife of the President the wife of the Chief Justice of the Supreme Court is considered the head of society in Washington. The Chief Justices are, with one exception, family men.

MONTGOMERY, Ala., proposes unto herself to take seriously to art the coming winter. Vinnie Ream Hoxie, the pretty sculptress, will pass the winter there with her husband, the Lieutenant, who has been ordered to report there for duty.

ELABORATELY beaded or braided jerseys will be very much worn this autumn over skirts of bison cloth, tweed and vigogne. The newest designs in braid-work resemble rich passementeries, being wrought in close elaborate patterns.

SOME of the ladies in Brooklyn refuse to patronize stores that keep open late Saturday nights, and wear almost to death the poor sales-girls. One writes to the Eagle to say that if all ladies would make up their minds to do their shopping in the morning the storekeepers would be obliged to close early.

FRANK SCOTT KEY, the author of the "Star Spangled Banner," who was a native of Maryland, and died in Baltimore in 1843 at the age of sixty-four, is to have an expensive monument in Golden Gate Park, San Francisco, the trustees of the James Lick estate having decided to expend $60,000 for that purpose.

IF French newspapers could have their way, the Republic would be at war with England within ten days. The accounts given in the English papers of the conduct of the French soldiers and sailors at Foo Chow have made the French press furious, and all the hatred concentrated on Germany seems to have been transferred to England.

AMONG other monstrosities worn at the French watering place of Trouville are huge sun-bonnets made of all kinds of materials. Inside them you perceive the face of the wearer at a long distance; and the roof of the edifice is crowned with lizzards, beetles, toads, and any repulsive-looking animal you may like to suggest.

JACKSON, Mich., has two modern Dromios, Quinton and Mungo Walker, twins, aged fifty years, who look alike, dress alike and appear alike, so that even their families can scarcely tell them apart. They were married on the same day, weigh the same number of pounds and agree on all questions except politics. One will vote the Greenback and the other the Prohibition ticket.

A CLOUD of locusts, estimated to be fifteen leagues long by ten wide, lighted upon the farms in the neighborhood of Calkini, Mexico, the other day. Within two days all the growing grain in that region had been destroyed. At Sisal a new cloud of locusts coming from the East arrived, spreading over a territory of four leagues long by one league wide. Although the farmers did their utmost to exterminate them their efforts met with but little success, and but little of vegetation was left.

ONE of the queerest of the many queer things about Leadville is that in all the length and breadth thereof there lives not a single cat. Cats have been imported there by the hundreds and in all varieties of color, breeding and size, but not one has survived the second week of residence. The midnight serenade, the back-yard clawing contest and the boot-jack act are alike unknown to the Leadvillian and his nightly slumber is calm and sweet—a calm and undisturbed repose.

FOR the fiscal year ended June 30, 1879, the exports of wheat were 150,000,000 bushels, of which only eighteen per cent. was in the form of flour; for the year ended June 30, 1883, the exports amounted to 149,000,000 bushels, of which twenty-nine per cent. was in the converted form of flour. During the past year a still larger ratio of flour was exported, the amount being over thirty-five per cent., for the exports of flour kept up while wheat fell off about 87,000,000 bushels

A CONFLAGRATION.

The Flats in Cleveland, Ohio, swept by Fire.

Loss Estimated at $2,000,000—A Number of Lumber Yards Totally Consumed.

CLEVELAND, September 7.—A great conflagration is raging on the flats. The entire Fire Department is in service, and telegrams have been sent to Akron, Youngstown, Painesville, Erie, Sandusky and Toledo for assistance. The origin of the fire is unknown. Incendiarism is suspected by some, but the most probable theory is that sparks from a tug set fire early in the evening to a pile of shavings, from which the flames spread until Woods, Parry & Co.'s extensive lumber yard was ablaze. The fire continued to extend, defying all efforts of the firemen. The lumber yards of Potter, Birdsall & Co., and C. G. King & Co., were also consumed. The Variety Iron Works were destroyed; Stanley's candle factory burned, and part of Sherwin, Williams & Co.'s varnish works, and at 10 o'clock the conflagration threatens to become still more extensive. About ten acres of lumber and frame buildings were aflame at one time, and huge clouds of smoke, thickly studded with blazing cinders, were blown by the changing wind for miles. Every steamer in the city, and additional ones from Akron and Erie, Pa., are now throwing water on the ruins. The intense heat drove back the firemen, and three engines becoming surrounded had to be thrown into the river to save them. A whirlwind, induced by the heated air, swept over the burnt district, throwing large timbers two hundred feet into the air. A sheet of flame has been driven clear through to Scranton Avenue and a lumber pile in Woods, Story & Co.'s yard is now on fire. Klint's lumber and planing-mills are now on fire, and Davidson & House's planing-mill is enveloped in flames, without the slightest possibility of saving it. The wind has changed, and is now blowing from the river. This unquestionably saves all the business portion of the city and jeopardized all other great manufactories on the flats. At eleven o'clock the heat had driven the firemen from the New York, Pennsylvania & Ohio freight depot, and the structure is on fire in fifty places. Nearly all the freight was removed to cars, and most of it will be saved. All that is left of the extensive mills and lumber yard of Porter & Barrett are charred piles of lumber. The city is as light as day. A large force of men are engaged in throwing lumber into the river in order to save the Seneca street bridge. The heat is terrible. Two firemen on the roof of the freight depot were overcome and rolled off the roof, injuring both severely. Two engines have arrived from Youngstown and Painesville. At twelve o'clock the bells rung the riot alarm, calling out the Fifth Regiment, who are now on duty assisting the police. The fire has been stopped at the west, after destroying Eynon & Sons machine shop. The heat has induced counter currents, and the flames are now driving furiously eastward. Rhodes & Co.'s coal-yards are now on fire and will be a total loss.

September 8—2 A. M.—The fire is now under control. The flames eat their way into the yards of Hubbel and Westover, destroying about $10,000 worth of property. The burnt district covers about one hundred acres. The largest lumber yards and planing mills in the West were located on these flats. Woods, Perry & Co., King & Clint, Davidson & House, Variety Iron Works, sustain a total loss. The origin of the fire is incendiary. The loss to the lumber interest, together with the interruption of business, it is thought, will reach nearly $2,500,000. The lumbermen were all heavily insured. At three o'clock the fire is still burning brightly, but fully under control.

American Girl's Characteristics.

LONDON, September 7.—Truth has come out with an antidote to the unflattering article of the World on the American girl, and allows a correspondent to describe her as well-bred and attractive, with a sweet and pleasantly modulated voice; as speaking good English, and not through her nose; modest, without prudery; charitable without ostentation; cultivated, without conceit; she is vigorous, healthy and energetic; rides, skates, plays tennis and delights in physical exercise. An English journal, on the other hand, declares emphatically that English women are forgetting how to sew, or that the miraculously small and neat stitches of olden days are gone.

Struck Gas, and Died.

HARTFORD CITY, IND., September 7.—Yesterday afternoon George Bates, a young man of this city, was boring in a wall for water. The well was some thirty feet in depth. Suddenly the auger sunk down, and a roaring, rumbling sound occurred, shaking the dwellings about. Young Bates was drawn up half way, but descended again to get something left at the bottom of the well. He was overcome by the gas, and before assistance was obtained he was so completely asphyxiated that resuscitation was impossible.

A Sky-Blue Colt.

KNOXVILLE, TENN., September 6.—This section of the country has the proud distinction of producing one of the most wonderful freaks of nature ever heard of. It is nothing less than a colt whose body is of a distinct sky-blue in color. There are solid black stripes over its legs and body. The phenomenon was born two days ago on the farm owned by Mr. Wm. Gardner, near this city, and the farm is a regular Mecca for hundreds of people attracted for miles around anxious to see such an unheard of thing as a live sky-blue colt. At last accounts the colt bid fair to live.

Procession of Clericals Mobbed.

BRUSSELS, September 7.—Clericals from all the provinces, and numbering many thousands, paraded here to-day, amid vehement hissing and howling of dense crowds of lookers on, who soon became more demonstrative, blocked the passage of the procession and tore down banners. Fierce scuffles ensued, and many persons, including several policemen, were injured. The police were powerless to stop the disorder, and the gendarmes and civil guard were called out, and attempted to reorganize the procession. Their efforts were futile, however, and the confusion became general. The mob stopped the procession at various places. The Clericals finally, finding themselves unable to advance, slowly dispersed. The melee gradually subsided but great excitement prevailed the whole evening. One hundred and eighty-five arrests were made. It is reported that three of the injured died. Troops are stationed at various points to preserve order.

Knights of Labor Elect Officers.

PHILADELPHIA, September 8.—The General Assembly of Knights of Labor re-elected T. V. Powderly, ex-Mayor of Scranton, Grand Master Workman; Frederick Turner, Grand Secretary, and George Rufus, Grand Treasurer.

THE ARCTIC EXPLORERS.

Another Terrible Story in Connection With the Greely Expedition to the Polar Seas.

INDIANAPOLIS, IND., September 6.—Sergeant Julius R. Fredericks, of the Greely Polar Expedition, is here visiting a brother. His attention was called to a widely published dispatch which charged himself and Long with selfishness and a determination to live whatever became of the rest of the party. He said it was a lie from the word go, and so, too, was the statement that there were two factions. He thought it might have been that there was some cannibalism, but if there was it resulted in instant death, for the stomachs of the men were in no condition to take such food. He saw no instance of it, however. Fredericks admitted that he and Long and Brainerd were the three to whom was assigned the duty of putting Henry out of the way, and he gave a first detailed account of the tragedy. Said he: "Theft of food supplies was proven against him in several instances, and four or five times he promised to reform. We demanded his life of Greely, but Greely was chicken-hearted, or rather too big-hearted, and begged him off. All the time Henry kept in good physical condition, coming out in the spring as sleek as he was in the winter. One day I saw him take food from a man without arms or legs, and from another who was drawing his last breath. I upbraided him for his conduct, but he was indifferent, and afterward boasted that he was able to take care of himself. The party became a unit against him and demanded that Greely should issue a death-warrant or allow it to proceed without. Greely finally consented and the order was secretly issued. Henry was supple as ever, and if he had known that an order for his death had been issued he would have killed us all for we were so weak that we could not defend ourselves and could barely walk with a gun. Three guns were loaded, I can't tell who loaded them, two of them with balls, the other with a blank cartridge. The three were placed on the ground, and we were detailed to take them up for the execution. We did not know who loaded the gun with a blank cartridge, nobody knows except the man who loaded the gun. We were then ordered to proceed to the execution. We found Henry down on the coast and alone, about one hundred and fifty yards away, in the very act of collecting sealskins which were designed for the subsistence of the entire party. Henry did now know that we were about to kill him, but he knew that he had been warned time and again that he would be killed if he persisted in appropriating the food of the party. We walked to within twenty yards of him, and the ranking man said: 'Henry, we are now compelled to carry out our orders.' The order to fire was given, and the man dropped dead. There was no missing him at that range, and the aim from each of the two men, whoever they were who carried bullets in their guns, was fatal. Henry did not say a word before or after we shot." Fredericks says it is the height of his ambition to go back to the Arctic zone. He is satisfied that the first man who sails up the Smith Sound route will reach the pole provided he travels by relays of sledges.

Imported Rags.

WASHINGTON September 6.—The Treasury Department received a letter to-day from Dr. Hill, U. S. Health Officer at London, asserting that the importation of rags into this country from England is fraught with great danger. Small-pox, he says, is and has been for some time prevalent in London, where quantities of rags are collected and shipped to America, and large quantities of continental rags are forwarded to London for shipment to American ports. These rags undergo no process of distinction previous to exportation and are very likely agents to convey infection of cholera or smallpox if collected in infected localities. Twenty-three bales of rags were recently shipped to New York by "Lydian Monarch," upon representation that they had not been collected in any infected district, but investigation showed they came from Dunkirk, France, where cholera had just broken out. Large quantities of Continental rags are now being forwarded to America by Wall Hall, a more dangerous port to ship from than either Liverpool or London.

The Cholera in Italy.

NAPLES, September 6.—Two hundred fresh cases of cholera were reported here in the past twenty-four hours. The number of deaths to-day shows a decrease compared with the previous day. An effort has been made to procure a supply of meats, the stock in the city being exhausted. During the past twenty-four hours, in Italy, the new cases of cholera numbered 293, and deaths 158. The epidemic in the province of Genoa is confined to Spezia and vicinity. One hundred and sixty-eight of the fresh cases and sixty-nine deaths reported above were in the city of Naples alone. The prefect at Reggio has been summoned to Rome in consequence of demonstrations at that place.

Killed a Highwayman.

CULPEPER C. H., W. VA., September 7.—Jeff Jolly, a stone-mason of this city, met a highwayman while returning home at a late hour on Saturday night, and in the struggle which ensued felled him with a hammer, killing him.

Child Accidentally Poisoned.

VINCENNES, IND., September 6.—A distressing case of poisoning occurred in the family of John R. Decker, a few miles below town, last night. During the day Decker obtained two kinds of medicine from a physician—morphine for himself, and something else for a year-old baby. During the night a dose was administered to the child, and, as it happened to be the morphine, it caused death in a short time.

Buffalo's First White Male Child.

NEW YORK, September 6.—Dr. C. C. Bristol, the first white male child born in Buffalo, is dangerously ill in this city. He was born in 1811.

Horrible Cannibalism.

LONDON, September 7.—The crew of the yacht Mignonette, rescued after being many days in open boats, captured a turtle on the fourth day after the sinking of the yacht. On the 18th of June, then seven days without food, and five without water, they discussed casting lots as to which should die that the others might live, but were unable to agree. Next day they determined to kill the boy Parker. Captain Dudley opened his jugular vein with a penknife, and the boy died instantly. The survivors, the Captain and two seamen, drank the murdered boy's blood, and sustained life by eating his flesh until rescued by the ship Montezuma on the 5th of July. The reason assigned for determining upon the boy's death is that he suffered most from thirst and was unmarried. When rescued the men looked like skeletons. They will be charged with murder.

Chinese in British Columbia.

TORONTO, September 6.—The Commissioners appointed by the Government to visit British Columbia and report on Chinese immigration, have returned. It is understood they recommend that Chinese immigration be regulated, if not restricted, in some measure.

THE WAR.

The Chinese Emperor Issues Practically a Declaration of War.

Admiral Courbet Demands That France Instantly Do the Same.

LONDON, September 8.—The English gunboat Zephyr was fired upon yesterday from the Kinpai forts. An officer and sailor were wounded. The Zephyr was mistaken for a French vessel of similar appearance. The British Admiral will demand an explanation. A later dispatch from the Times correspondent at Foo Chow says: "The Chinese are profoundly distressed at their mistake in firing on the Zephyr, and have made a satisfactory explanation to the British Admiral." The Pall Mall Gazette says the Chinese Government has made a declaration of war, in the form of a manifesto from the Emperor to the people. The Emperor declares he regards the French action as constituting a state of war, and he calls upon his subjects to aid in repelling the foes. The Pall Mall Gazette has the following: "The Chinese report the damage done to the forts and arsenal on Min River by Admiral Courbet as trifling. The masonry in some places was thrown down, but is now fully restored. The French landed and destroyed only three guns at the Mingan forts, and did not land at all at Kinpai. The arsenal was not damaged, and no war material or stores destroyed. No fire and no explosion. Work at the arsenal is proceeding as usual. Naval loss was serious, but after all only two fighting vessels were sunk. The others were dispatch or patrol boats. The defenses of the river are now in as good condition as before the bombardment. The Foreign Office orders strict neutrality observed between the French and Chinese.

PARIS, September 8.—The statement that the Russian Minister at Pekin was instructed to claim the fulfillment of the treaty of 1878, under the provisions of which China engaged to open new routes of commerce for the Russian Empire, was entirely unfounded. The Gaulois states that Admiral Courbet insists upon instant declaration of war by France against China. The Admiral declares it is impossible for him to carry on effective operations against the enemy while ships of other Nations are permitted to carry munitions of war to the Chinese under the eyes of the French squadron. Besides reinforcements of men, Admiral Courbet states he is awaiting war munitions, his fleet being deficient in shot and shell for big guns. The quantities of munitions sent him from the artillery park of Saigon still leave him insufficiently supplied.

MORE BANK TROUBLES.

Mahlon Runyon President of the New Brunswick National Bank Suicides.

NEW BRUNSWICK, N. J., September 8.—Mahlon Runyon, President of the National Bank, cut his throat, in the water-closet of the bank. He was implicated in the thievery of Cashier Hill. There is great excitement. The suicide of Runyan, while strengthening the testimony of great frauds in the management, causes unbounded astonishment to the general public. President Runyon was a farmer, sixty years old. He leaves a wife and four children. He had been President of the bank five years. The bank is a chaos. Over a million was stolen by Hill. Runyon expected to be arrested when he took his life. The city is wild. Crowds blockade Church street, where the bank stands. Acting Cashier Campbell is expected to be arrested for complicity. Millionaires are trembling, and more than two suicides are predicted. The mob threatened to burst open the bank, and were subdued by the police. Walter Carrol, a depositor, cut his throat on account of his losses. Bank Examiner Shelly has discovered a deficit of over $1,000,000 in the surplus cash and securities. The Ira Voorhees estate is partially ruined.

Crops in France.

WASHINGTON, September 8.—United States Consul Piexotto, at Lyons, has forwarded a report to the Department of State relative to crops this year in France. He says: "The wheat crop will amount to about 316,000,000 bushels, which will surpass the harvest of 1883 by over 30,000,000 bushels. The quality is excellent. The rye crop will equal 77,000,000 bushels. The quality is very superior. The Indian corn will amount to 33,000,000 bushels, and the potato crop 412,000,000 bushels. Reports from England and continental countries also state fine wheat crops. The English crop in particular has rarely been so fine. These reports have effected, and will still more seriously effect the price of wheat, which is falling daily. The cry for protection by increased duties on foreign wheat goes up loudly from all parts of France."

Famine in Newfoundland.

ST. JOHNS, N. F., September 8.—The latest Labrador news is appalling. The codfish catch is short a half million quintals, and on the northeast coast of Newfoundland famine is imminent. About eight hundred families are reported starving, and are only enabled to sustain life at present on squids. The whole coast of Newfoundland and Labrador is studded with icebergs. Captain Manual, of the mail steamer Plover, reports 258 icebergs between Wadham Island and Cape Free, N. S., Bona Vista Bay; thirteen icebergs from south of Cape Spear, yesterday, down into the tracks of ocean steamers.

Tramps Capture a Train.

NEW HAVEN, CONN., September 8.—When the evening train on the Derby Railroad stopped at West Haven to-night, three men were found riding on the truck. The train hands dislodged them, and a fight ensued. The tramps drew revolvers and ran the train to Derby, where two were arrested; one escaped. Some passengers narrowly escaped being struck by flying bullets. The police regard the men as professional burglars, and suppose their intention was to rob the passengers.

Senator Anthony's Will.

PROVIDENCE, R. I., September 8.—The will of Senator Anthony was filed to-day. There are legacies of about $200,000 to his sister and relatives, and public bequests of $25,000.

Maine Election.

PORTLAND, ME., September 8.—Governor Robie was re-elected by over twelve thousand plurality. The Republicans elect the four members of Congress.

—A Western paper says that a Russian named Kolozphoff Zaleszezaky was arrested the other day for being drunk, but was discharged when it was learned that the suspicious symptoms were due to the fact that he was telling some one what his name was. The Judge advised him to change his name to John Smith.—Chicago Herald.

—The London Graphic says: "A countryman, named William Stickers, flying to London to escape from rural justice, was appalled at reading on a wall, 'Bill Stickers Beware!' He went a little further, but reading again: 'Bill Stickers will be punished with the utmost rigor of the law,' gave himself up for lost, and surrendered."

—Mr. William H. Ballou, a member of the American Association for the Advancement of Science, believes that most animals are endowed with intelligence, commonly called instinct, and that within the next century some means of communication between man and the four-footed animals will be established.

—A Coney Island cook has been awarded $450 for the invention of a new chicken soup.—N. Y. Sun.

THE COMMONWEALTH.

Louisville Leaf Tobacco Market.

The only feature of fresh interest in the market this week has been a further recovery in good and fine grades of Burley leaf from the extreme depression of a fortnight ago. Some grades have sold $2.50@3 higher than at that time. Medium leaf of good filler types has also sold to better advantage. Common grades, which were firm throughout the late depression, have not varied much, and at the close the feeling in this class was rather quiet. Dark and heavy styles have been scarce, especially those suited to foreign requirements, and no new features have been developed. The crop outlook has been improved. We quote full-weight packages new crop sound tobacco as follows:

	Dark and Heavy.	Burley.
Trash	$6 00@ 6 75	$8 50@ 8 00
Common lugs	7 00@ 7 25	7 60@ 8 00
Medium lugs	7 50@ 7 75	8 00@ 9 00
Good lugs	8 00@ 8 50	9 50@10 00
Common leaf	8 00@ 8 50	10 00@11 00
Medium leaf	8 75@ 9 50	12 00@13 50
Good leaf	10 00@11 00	14 50@16 50
Fine and fancy leaf	12 00@16 00	18 00@20 00

Miscellaneous Items.

WHEN a circus was attracting general attention at Mayfield, the other day a fellow ran into the store of E. Taylor, snatched up a purse containing $700 and escaped.

SHEPHERD WITHROW, of Louisville, a bright boy of fifteen years, suddenly became deranged the other day and attempted to kill his sister with a hatchet. The boy's acts were so violent that three stout men were unable to hold him down for awhile. There were no indications of the approach of madness until he was found in a fit. His parents are well-to-do.

THE other day in Louisville Wm. Howard and Lee Hunt were on a painter's swinging ladder painting the south end of Brickley's new bakery, at Eighth and Green, when the ladder broke in the middle, and Hunt fell twenty feet to a shed, then rebounding, fell upon some barrels in an adjacent yard. He suffered concussion of the spine, and was bruised all over. Howard escaped by clinging to a window-sill.

CATHERINE LEVERONI, administratrix of Mary Leveroni, the young girl that died at her brother's residence in Cincinnati some months ago of small-pox, while on a visit, entered suit at Louisville, to recover $10,000 of Doctor Samuel Jones, a prominent dentist, and the petition alleges that on March 27 last, defendant treated decedent in a chair at his office in which he had previously treated a person afflicted with small-pox, causing her to contract the dreadful disease; that he knew the previous patient was so afflicted, but nevertheless maliciously and willfully allowed decedent to remain in his chair and office an hour, causing her to contract the disease that caused her death.

THE Post-office at Windom Station, six miles North of Nicholasville, was burglarized of postage stamps and ten dollars in change the other night. That section is being worked successfully by a gang of burglars. The officials are making a search.

DR. L. WATSON LYLE was arrested in Crittenden County, charged with pension frauds.

CHARLES E. KINCAID, Commissioner from Kentucky to bring back the remains of the sculptor, Joel T. Hart, to Frankfort, sailed in the Furnessia a few days ago.

GARRETT M. DAVIS, son of the late Kentucky Senator, has received a $1,200 appointment in the U. S. Treasury Department at Washington.

AT Livingston a construction train ran into a box car, killing Charles Graves and Bob Forepaugh, who were asleep in the car.

CAL WATTS, under arrest at Livingston, charged with the murder of Frank Ellison, escaped from jail and continues at large, though believed to be in hiding near by. At the inquest on the body of Ellison the jury returned a verdict to the effect that Ellison came to his death from the effects of two pistol shot wounds inflicted by Cal Watts.

ROBERT EWING, an old and respected citizen, dropped dead at Ewing Station.

THE horses attached to the Allensville and Bowling Green stage, when nearing the former place, ran away, severely injuring several passengers, and inflicting injuries from which it is thought a lad named Brown will die.

DR. M. R. TRUMBAUER, U. S. Veterinary Inspector, was ordered to Cynthiana by Dr. Saloman, Chief of the Bureau of Animal Industry, to make an examination of the Jersey herd of Frisbie & Lake, it having been reported in the Breeders' Gazette that this farm had purchased twenty-five head of diseased cattle, two months ago, from M. J. Clark, of Geneva, Ill. After a thorough examination he found the stock to be in a healthy condition, not a single head having pleuro-pneumonia. Frisbie & Lake have about seventy head of registered cattle, and only seven head were purchased from Mr. Clerk. The herd of D. A. Givans, consisting of fifty cows and fifty heifers, are all O. K.

HENRY THORNBERRY and wife, who lived in a remote spot in the southeastern part of Jefferson County, were found by neighbors both lying in bed dead, with an empty bottle labeled chloroform between them. They had evidently been dead several hours, and must have died simultaneously, as there was no evidence that either had attempted to assist the other. The nearest neighbors were unable to account for the occurrence, unless it was accident, and it is supposed that Mrs. Thornberry arose during the night suffering in some manner, and retired with the drug, then falling to sleep, the bottle overturned, when both inhaled deadly quantities of it. Thornberry and wife had no children, and farmed on a rented place. They had lived in the neighborhood only two years, were poor but highly respected. The doors and windows were found open, but everything was intact about the place, which assists to support the theory of accidental death.

THE Kentucky Court of Appeals has affirmed the decision of the lower court in the case of Lewis Walls, of Daviess County, sentenced to the penitentiary for twenty-one years for shooting Miss H. B. McQuarry.

PRES. DAVIS, colored, confined in jail at Hartford, under sentence of death, accompanied by Ben. Sowders, colored, escaped from jail the other night. Davis was sentenced to be hanged on the 12th. No news of the fugitives.

COLONEL CHAS. E. KINCAID, private Secretary of Governor Knott, left Frankfort the other day for Italy to bring back the remains of Joel T. Hart, the sculptor. The last Legislature appropriated $1,200 for the purpose.

CORN is retailing at seventy cents per bushel at the mills in Barren County.

THE Republicans of the Eleventh Kentucky Congressional District nominated Wallace W. Jones.

JUDGE J. Q. HOAD has been qualified as Judge of the Kentucky Superior Court, and became presiding Judge to fill out the unexpired term of Judge Richard Reid, deceased.

JUDGE CHARLES E. KINCAID has resigned his position as Private Secretary to Gov. Knott. Col. Clarence Egbert, of Frankfort, is mentioned as Mr. Kincaid's successor.

JUDGE WM. H. HOLT, the newly-elected Judge of the Kentucky Court of Appeals, to succeed Chief Justice Thomas F. Hargis, has been sworn into office, and entered upon the discharge of his duties.

THE DAIRY.

—Milk, cream and butter should all be kept as low as sixty-two degrees, at or below which point, if ever, carbonic acid gas develops. With pure food, cows rightly treated, with clean vessels and pure air, less difficulty will be experienced in churning than without such precautions.

—The great bulk of the cheese made goes into consumption in such an immature and indigestible condition as to be prejudicial, in a measure, to health, and much of its usefulness is thereby lost. The consequence is that cheese is rated at only half its possible value by the public. Cheese, properly made and thoroughly cured to render all its substance available for food, has twice the value of meat for sustaining life, and is fully as easily digested and fully as wholesome.—Colman's Rural.

—There are many reasons given why creamery butter, as a rule sells higher than dairy butter. The secret of it probably lies here. It is better butter, and one prime reason for its being better is, because the man who makes the butter does not own the milk, and therefore has to stand the criticism of those who do furnish it it. When a man has fifty or 100 persons wondering why he does not get the highest market price for his butter, he is very apt to do it. When the butter maker owns all the milk he is too easily satisfied with the quality of his make of butter.—Prairie Farmer.

—Every year the line is being drawn more closely about dairy products, and each succeeding year brings an increased demand for strictly first-class grades and a weaker demand for the poorer ones. In all probability the time is not far distant when it will be almost impossible to dispose of poor butter at all, except as grease, and at grease prices. Notwithstanding all that is said against imitation butter, it is a truth that the meanest, filthiest imitation of all is made from genuine cow's milk, but in such a slovenly, incompetent manner that all value and trace of genuineness has been eliminated.

—Of the use of oatmeal for cows, says a dairy writer, mention is not often made in this country; but when spoken of it is always with praise. That it is better than cornmeal there can be no doubt; it is richer in both albuminoids and fat, and the usefulness of these two nutriments, and especially the former, for making milk, is shown not only by the results of numerous careful experiments, but by the acknowledged usefulness of oilcake meal. Where this meal is used freely there would be less use for oatmeal; but under some circumstances it might be advantageously substituted for the bran in the favorite mixture for cows of Indian meal and bran.

Making First-Class Butter.

Prof. L. B. Arnold, who bears the reputation of being one of the most experienced and successful experts in the dairy business, lays down the following maxims in reference to making first-class butter:

1. To make the finest flavored and longest keeping butter, the cream must undergo a ripening process by exposure to the oxygen of the air while it is sweet. This is best done while it is rising. The ripening is very tardy when the temperature is low.

2. After cream becomes sour, the more ripening the more it depreciates. The sooner it is then skimmed and churned the better, but it should not be churned while too new. The best time for skimming and churning is just before acidity becomes apparent.

3. Cream makes better butter to rise in cold air than to rise sooner in cold water, and the milk will keep sweet longer.

4. The deeper milk is set, the less airing the cream gets while rising.

5. The depth of setting should vary with the temperature: the lower it is, the deeper milk may be set; the higher, the shallower it should be. Milk should never be set shallow in a low temperature nor deep in a high one. Setting deep in cold water economizes time, labor and space.

6. While milk is standing for cream to rise, the purity of the cream, and, consequently, the fine flavor and keeping of the butter, will be injured if the surface of the cream is exposed freely to air much warmer than the cream.

7. When cream is colder than the surrounding air it takes up moisture and impurities from the air. When the air is colder than the cream it takes up moisture and whatever escapes from the cream. In the former case the cream purifies the surrounding air; in the latter, the air helps to purify the cream.—Journal of Agriculture.

Milk Fever in Cows.

The animal is usually attacked with milk fever within thirty-six hours after dropping her calf, and unless relieved will probably be dead in forty-eight hours more. The deepest milkers and cows in high condition are more subject to it than those in poor flesh. The cause is the pressure of blood on the brain consequent on the increased amount in the circulation, forced to seek new channels by the expulsion of the calf. The symptoms are a sudden and entire ceasing of the flow of milk, the eyes become bloodshot, she loses all interest in her calf and all care for it, lies down and can be aroused with difficulty, loses all power of motion, and death ensues. Sometimes these symptoms are varied by violent mania, the cow being crazy, running against walls or other obstacles with entire carelessness.

Prevention is the first thing to be looked after. This can usually be secured by keeping the animal in a low condition. The bowels should be kept open by the use of roots, bran, and if necessary, mild cathartics. For several weeks before calving the meal should be taken away if the cow is in full flesh, and rich foods avoided. Where the danger is considered great, bleeding may be resorted to soon after the calf is dropped.

After the attacked, the only remedy which has been found tolerably sure is bleeding. I have never lost a case where bleeding could be done, but in advanced stages the blood is thick and dark and will not flow. In bleeding, cord the neck of the animal tightly well down toward the shoulder, when the vein will fill above the cord and show distinctly. Over this the fleam should be held and given a sharp blow with a stick to make the opening into the vein. The bleeding should be continued until the blood be caught in some vessel so to be sure how much is taken, as a little blood makes a great show if let to flow on the ground. Two thirds of a common pailful, six or eight, should be taken; if bled till they stagger, it will do no harm. The head should be showered with cold water or bags of ice applied to it. Move the bowels by physic—a drachm of calomel or a dose of epsom salts.—N. E. Homestead.

Why the Earth Quakes.

While facts enough regarding the extent of the earthquake of Sunday have not come to hand to enable me to speak on the direction of the earth wave or its peculiar features, as compared with other earthquakes, yet something may be said as to the latest convictions of students of science on the nature of the earth below the point any man can penetrate. That may lead us to guess intelligently at the cause of earthquakes.

You know the long received theory of the nature of the interior of the earth was that it is a molten mass, and that we move around on a crust enveloping the earth and caused by the cooling off of this mass on the outside. It is undoubtedly true that about thirty miles below the earth's surface the temperature is so high that everything is in a melted condition. We know this, because we have learned that every fifty feet we penetrate into the earth there is an increase of temperature of about one degree, and at a distance of thirty miles the heat is so great that any substance we know of would melt. Perhaps the melted mass is in the form of a liquid. That would be certain but for the immense pressure on it. The pressure is estimated at 10,000 tons on a square foot. Of course, scientific men can not experiment with matter at a high temperature with a pressure of 10,000 tons to a square foot, so we can only guess what may be its condition. In talking about this melted mass thirty miles under us, the term water substance is used by geologists.

"How great is the distance through this water substance we do not know, but it is certain that its density increases more and more, gradually, until the interior of the earth is solid, probably, from the inconceivable pressure 1,000, 2,000, or 3,000 miles from the surface. Sir William Thompson has demonstrated that the earth must have a core much denser than the land and water we live on. He points out the fact that if a shell only thirty miles thick surrounded a molten liquid mass extending from one side of the earth through the center to the other side, then the moon, through the law of gravitation, would displace the liquid or gas in the interior of the earth to such an extent that the earth's crust would bulge out in the direction of the moon, making a tide in the solid crust of the earth, as certainly as the skin of an orange bulges out when you squeeze the fruit between the palms of your hands. And this would be evident to us because the ocean tides would be almost, if not quite, imperceptible to us. To withstand the attraction of the moon, the earth, Sir William says, must be as rigid as steel.

"So we have the theory that the crust of the earth floats on and imposes an immense weight on a water substance, which is inconceivably hot. Now, as to the way an earthquake may be caused. Suppose moisture trickled gradually, year after year, through this crust into the heated mass. In our atmosphere steam would be produced. Thirty miles below us the pressure is so great that it is not likely that steam could be generated. One thing, though: the pressure of 10,000 tons to the square foot, a pressure exerted in every direction, would be increased. Some effect must be produced down there, and it is easy to see that if one place in the earth's crust is weaker than another near the region where the water trickled in, then 'the weakest place must stan' the strain.' It is not unreasonable to suppose that this pressure below might be so great that the earth's covering was shifted a little to adapt itself to the pressure from below. This shifting of the crust is, in fact, the earthquake.

I believe this theory has the greater reason on its side, because earthquakes are almost always in the region of volcanoes, and volcanoes are almost always in or near the ocean.

Another theory of earthquakes is that as the earth is very gradually cooling off, the crust is thickening on the under side, and cracks or fissures on the under side of the crust many miles deep may occur in consequence of the enormous pressure, so that the water rushes into a new position with a force that would knock a continent out of shape if it took place on the earth's surface. That motion would be sufficient to produce a vibration thirty miles distant.

Whatever the cause of the recent earthquake, I think the earth in the region where it took place has either settled into a new position or is forced back into an old position from which it was pushed by former earthquakes.—Prof. Merriman, of Rutger's College.

Abyssinian Soldiers.

Of luxuries the Abyssinian soldiers have few: smoking is not allowed, and the breaker of this rule is liable to lose his nose and lip by order of the King. But each man carries his little tin pot of snuff stuck in his belt. A pinch of this tobacco powder he will place between his nether lip and bottom teeth, which he eventually ejects in a soluble state, much after the manner of a sailor and his quid. A pair of drawers cut short below the knees and fastened at the waist with the assistance of a cartridge belt, and a toga or oblong piece of cotton cloth, generally with a red center stripe, which acts as waistcoat, jacket, overcoat and blanket, are his only wearing apparel. A sword, which he invariably uses on his right side, he draws with his right hand in a very dexterous way. He is also armed with a fowling piece or rifle, slung across his back: in his left hand he carries his shield and in his right a spear, the metal head being sharpened to a narrow point. They are as brave and clever with the spear and sword as the followers of the Mahdi, and better marksmen.—Philadelphia Inquirer.

—For seventy years three stalks of a plant which grows nowhere else in the State, and seems to be generally unknown outside of some portions of Connecticut, have sprung up every season, blossomed, and gone to seed beside the old State road near Avon, N. Y., and have never increased beyond the original number. The spots where they grow marks the place where John Alexander, an American soldier, was murdered in 1813, while passing from Sacket's Harbor to Buffalo. It is related that the plant sprung up on Alexander's grave the year following his burial.—Hartford Post.

—In the year 1794 a Mr. Goodrich, riding over the hills on horseback, as was the custom in those days, took a willow switch for his whip, and when he reached his journey's end thrust it into the ground in a soft, green spot at the corner of three farms not many miles from Pittsfield, Conn. It became the largest tree in the Berkshire hills, and a famous resort. Now it is blown over. It is thirty-two feet around its trunk and 115 feet from tip to tip of its far-stretching boughs.—Boston Post.

SCIENCE AND INDUSTRY.

—Watermelon vinegar is the latest industry engaged in by the Maryland farmer.

—About three tons of candy, mainly in sticks, are manufactured in Ithaca, N. Y., every week.

—Bicycles to be propelled by electricity are being perfected in England which will drive the ordinary machine out of the market.

—Professors Ayrton and Perry, in a paper lately read before the Physical Society of London, ventured the prediction that it will not be long before gas engines will be employed in the propulsion of vessels.

—The fog signal apparatus is now constructed in such a manner that, in calm weather, its sound may be heard twenty miles. The pitch of the tone may also be made high or low, as may be required, by a simple change of levers.

—A Chicago printer is said to have invented a contrivance by which, when attached to any printing press, eight different colors can be produced on paper at one impression. When the patent is secured it will be put on the market. It will, if it realizes what is claimed for it, work a revolution in fancy printing.—Chicago Herald.

—An electrical railway at Portrush, Ireland, has proved both a scientific and financial success. It is proposed to establish in Brussels a line of street cars driven by electricity, and experiments to a similar end have been made in Cleveland. The time is, therefore, fast approaching when horses will find their lot a happier one.—Current.

—A new composition metal has recently been invented, to which the name "silver-oid" has been given. It is a close-grained, brilliant, white alloy, the precise constituents of which are not known beyond the fact that cadmium is one of them. It is designed to take the place of the brass, bronze and gun-metal alloys, which it is said to surpass in the qualities of strength and capability of receiving a high polish.—N. Y. Examiner.

—Edison, the electrician chatting with a reporter in New York, said: "I have built a railroad three miles long at Menlo Park, on which I ran at the rate of forty-two miles an hour my electric motor and carried six or eight freight cars. It is a real, practical thing. I could not go on with it because I had not time. I had too many other things to attend to, especially in connection with electrical lighting. I am going into original experimenting again. I'll get out a new crop of inventions during the next year in the electrical line."—N. Y. Sun.

—A circular railway has been built at Ponce de Leon Springs, Ga. The new railway is a wooden structure, forming a circle, being four feet high and five hundred feet long, inside of which is laid the track for the cars, and is so graded that the cars run themselves, the highest point above the ground being twenty-two feet six inches and the lowest point touching the ground. Mr. Wood, formerly a poor carpenter of Toledo, O., is the inventor of the circular railroad, having conceived the idea from witnessing children slide down the hills on their slide-boards, he arguing that if they could slide down hill they could also slide up hill—a demonstration of which is witnessed in the circular railway.

PITH AND POINT.

—A loan without security is a cyclone for a bank.

—"Money goes a great way nowadays, observed a New York bank cashier, as he pocketed $50,000 of the bank's funds and set out for Canada.—Norristown Herald.

—Economy is a very good thing in its place, but it can sometimes be ill-timed, as was discovered by the man who tried to bring his horse down to living on a straw a day.—Pittsburgh Dispatch.

—There are all sorts of clocks, but a new invention is badly needed. It is one that instead of striking at 11 p. m. will pick up a dilatory lover and fire him out the front door. A million of American fathers would each buy one.—Chicago Journal.

—Most fathers know by this time that a diamond pin, a brown stone house, or even that highest test of respectability, an English dog-cart, are not guarantees that a man will be a good husband; yet a large majority of marriages are made because of similar superficialities.—Freeman's Journal.

—A little boy by the name of Hubbard, who lived in Macon, Ga., used to tell his schoolmates that some day he would be Governor of Texas. It was an awful threat, and it came true, too. Little boys should be very careful what they say when they are feeling unusually desperate.—Boston Transcript.

—"My Daughter Paints" is the title of a new novel. The author, instead of parading his daughter's failing before the reading public, should have reasoned with her at home, and explained how the practice of powdering and painting injures the skin and makes a young lady look prematurely old.—Norristown Herald.

—If there is anything that will make man cordially hate himself it is when he takes a walk about a mile to the Post-office to find that he has left his keys at home, and then on going back after them to find on opening the box that the only thing in it is a card notifying him that his box rent is due.—Boston Post.

—A young Wall street business man has written a four-act melodrama founded on incidents in the recent financial panic. We have not seen it, but it probably runs about this way: First scene, Wall street; second scene, detectives' office; third scene, railway depot; subsequent scenes, palatial mansion in Canada.—Philadelphia Call.

—A lay of summer:

Too hot to read, too hot to write,
Too hot to even be polite;
Too hot to sew, too hot to knit,
Too hot to be mosquito "bit;"
Too hot to sleep, too hot to wake,
Too hot to brew, too hot to bake;
Too hot to think, too hot to talk,
Too hot to ride, too hot to walk;
Too hot to lecture or to preach,
Too hot to scold, too hot to teach;
Too hot for mantle, veil or glove,
Too hot to dream of making love;
Too hot to laugh, too hot to cry,
Too hot to live, too hot to die;
Too hot to whistle or to sing,
And, oh! too hot for anything.

—Many of the most skillful mechanics in Washington, carpenters, bricklayers, plumbers, shoemakers, tailors, etc., are colored men, who have picked up their respective trades, but who have generally only received about two-thirds of the wages paid to the white mechanics. They have been relied upon by the employers in case of strikes as they have not heretofore been admitted into the trade organizations. This has prompted the white mechanics to receive them into the various labor societies as members.—Washington Star.

THE RECORDER.

WEDNESDAY, SEPT. 10. 1884.

RIDDELL & HALL, Proprietors.

For announcing candidates, $5. Obituaries in poetry, 5 cents per line. Obituary notices 10 lines free; over that number (excepting the announcement of the death) 3 cents per line.
Tributes of respect from lodges, &c., $1 50

We are authorized to announce
DR. JAMES S. BROWN,
of Warsaw, as a candidate for the State Senate, from this, the 23d Senatorial District, subject to the action of the Democratic party.

We are authorized to announce J. H. McDANELL, of Warsaw, as a candidate for the State Senate, from this, the 23rd Senatorial District, subject to the action of the Democratic party.

BEN BUTLER has been in the Northwest, probably to find a cool place, and nothing more.

SCHOOL commenced in the Morgan Academy Monday, and it is hoped that a large attendance will be kept up during the session

IT is seldom that a drought prevails as long in this locality as it has this year, and the farmers are not used to seeing their crops interfered with so seriously by dry weather.

THE death of Secretary Folger, last week was sudden and unexpected to the public, but his immediate friends have recognized for sometime that he was declining, and expected an early dissolution.

THE Indianapolis Sentinel Company says that it will be ready to have its Blaine slander suit tried early in October. The Sentinel does not seem to apprehend any trouble in proving the charge it made.

DATES are fixed for six hangings in Cincinnati, while eight other convicted murderers await the fixing of dates for their execution. The ball will be opened to-day by the hanging of Ben Johnson, colored, the burker.

WE have placed one column of this paper under the control of Prof. T. H. Stephenson who will take possession of it next week and edit it in the interest of education. He will make it alike interesting to teachers and parents, and we trust that much good will result from his labors.

IN some of the counties where the State Board of Equalization increased the valuation of taxable property, the property owners are very indignant. In Christian county valuation of real estate was increased forty per cent. The smallest change made is in this county, where two per cent is deducted from the valuation of personalty.

THE Republicans are making an effort to induce Conkling to take a hand in the Presidential canvass. They hope to tempt him with the office of United States Senator from New York. It remains to be seen how well they succeed, but it's a proof that they are not sincere when they tell you that the Republican candidates will have a walk over, or they would not make overtures to Mr. C.

THE Institute is apparently growing more unpopular with the teachers, which is one cause of such very little good's resulting from its annual sessions. They attend under compulsion, which is one feature that makes it odious to the profession, and causes loud and deep complaint. Many of the teachers pronounce the exercises only a wrangle, nothing ever being settled by their discussions, every teacher returning to his home entertaining the same opinions and defending the same positions that he did before attending the Institute. Until something is done to render the Institute more satisfactory to those who have to attend, no good result can be obtained from it.

BY the death of Senator Anthony, Mr. Edmuns becomes the oldest member of the Senate in continuous service, having served uninterruptedly from April 5, 1866, or something over eighteen years. The senior Senator in total length of service is, however, John Sherman, who succeeded Salmon P. Chase, March 29, 1861, and has been a Senator ever since, with the exception of the four years of Hayes' Administration, during which he was Secretary of the Treasury. This makes his total Senatorrial service about nineteen years and a half. Senator Morrill, of Vermont, has served seventeen years and a half. The total length of Mr. Anthony's Senatorial service from March 4, 1859, until his death, is twenty five years and a half.

IF Gallatin county is entitled to the next candidate for State Senator, and she unquestionably is, she ought to present her candidate, which will necessitate her choosing between her two sons who now aspire to the position. The district will not repudiate the nomination, let either of those gentlemen get it. We are not opposed to having the candidates mingle with our people, but, considering the race as it now presents itself, purely a Gallatin county contest, we think Boone and Owen counties ought express no choice as between them. The issues likely to arise in the canvass belong to Gallatin county, where they ought to be settled, and the racket they will probably raise can be of no interest nor benefit to either of the other counties?

COLORADO LETTER

SALT LAKE CITY, Aug. 25, 1884.

To the Editors of the Recorder:

Although we are now in the city of the Saints, we can tell you nothing of the city or her inhabitants this time, as our promise to relate more concerning Colorado must first be fulfilled.

Denver, the point reached in our last letter is 5,200 feet above tide water and contains 70,000 inhabitants Its healthful location and excellent society make it one of the most desirable cities of the West. The city is composed chiefly of persons who have accumulated large fortunes in mining or speculating, and with their wealth have erected immense business blocks and elegant residences.

The Court-house and Tabor's Grand Opera House are massive stone structures which, for architecture and beauty, are not surpassed by any buildings we have yet seen. The Grand Opera House in Cincinnati is far inferior to the Tabor of Denver. Ex-Senator Tabor, who is proprietor of this and many other buildings in the city—to say nothing of his two wives—is a resident of Denver and will in all probability be Colorado's next governor. His first wife, whom he has set aside for a younger and fairer one, owns, besides the mansion in which she resides, a block containing fourteen houses which rent for $150 per month, each. This property was given her by her husband at the time he abandoned her. The Ex-Senator himself is worth millions, but resides in a very ordinary story and a half brick building, with high board fence at the rear and lattice work on either side, in order, it is presumed, that the curious eyes of his neighbors may not too closely scrutinize his actions.

Another odd personage whose home is in Denver is "Brick" Pomeroy, formerly editor of the La Crosse (Wis.) Democrat. He is the author of several books, among which is one entitled "Sense," containing some of the most valuable advice ever written, in truth every essay in the book is full of sympathy and fellow feeling, yet the author is regarded in Denver as a consumate scoundrel and swindler. His magnificent residence is in North Denver.

A new building to be used as a P. O., and Custom House, and which will occupy almost an entire block, is now under way of construction. All the public buildings and many of the finest residences are built of an excellent quality of sandstone having a beautiful reddish tint. This stone is obtained from quarries about fifty miles south of Denver, and on account of its nearness to the city is secured at a comparatively low figure, consequently extensively used.

The Exposition building is commodious and, in general appearance will compare favorably with the exposition building at Cincinnati. The Denver people expect to attract thousands of eastern people to their exposition this fall, from the fact that their exhibits, in the way of minerals will be the rarest that can be gathered from the thousands of mines in the west. The exposition is under the control of a few of Denver's most enterprising private citizens.

People in the east, who desire to visit the west, will find this a favorable opportunity to see some of the finest agricultural territory in the world; to view the grandest mountain scenery on the continent; to mingle and converse with western people and rid themselves of the idea that there are no cultured or educated people here. Denver people are as refined, intelligent and orderly as any whom we have ever met. All that can be said of her vices, can with double emphasis be said of Cincinnati, Chicago, Indianapolis and of our other moral (?) cities farther east. During our four days in Denver we saw one man intoxicated.

One peculiarity in ladies' dress in Denver was particularly noticeable; to use a slang but very expressive phrase, they dress extravagantly loud. In many instances a large red feather constitute the entire trimming for a hat, and it is not at all uncommon to see women of high standing, walking the streets dressed in gay, gaudy colors, often exclusively red. We wish it distinctly understood, however, that this folly is only indulged in by the weaker sex; the men dress with the same taste and propriety here, as elsewhere.

Having taken a soul-satisfying survey of Denver, we took an excursion to the mountains on Aug. 17. We passed up Clear Creek canon to Graymout, 69 miles distant from Denver, at an elevation of 10,000 feet, and 9 miles from Gray's Peak. The railroad is a narrow guage and is built on the very brink of the mountain stream, there being but just room enough in the gorge for railroad and creek. Although we were continually ascending, the mountain on either side and before us, still lifted their snow crested heads into the clouds, while some of them appeared to pierce the blue dome of Heaven itself.

Clear Creek is a characteristic mountain stream, which comes leaping and dashing with tremendous force over the huge, round boulders that have been worn smooth by the rushing waters of centuries. The mountains on either side of the stream to the height of about 8,000 feet, are covered with a dense growth of evergreens, adding to the grandeur and picturesqueness of the scene. The railroad follows the serpentine windings of the stream, which does not flow in a direct line for the distance of 50 feet at a time, its entire course. The train, drawn by two engines, climbs the mountains, in some places, at the rate of 200 feet per hour, now curving around this projecting rock to the left, then suddenly around that to the right, frequently assuming the shape of a letter S, forming several horseshoe curves, and finally, crossing itself; thus forming a loop which is regarded as one of the most wonderful, and at the same time, successful piece of civil engineering to be found anywhere.

When you visit Denver don't fail to see Clear Creek canon, for it will be a day well spent in viewing some of Colorado's grandest mountain scenery.

Along the way, high up on the mountain sides, are numerous silver and lead mines, which produce valuable ore in abundance.

Georgetown and Silver Plum are situated on this line, respectively 8,500 feet and 9,000 feet above the level of the sea. These people are engaged principally in mining and smelting, and apparently enjoy their homes among the mountains, for

"There is freshness in the mountain air,
And health, which bloated ease can never hope to share."

But we will leave Denver, and seek what there is of interest at Colorado Springs, Manitou and Pike's Peak.

Colorado Springs is on the Denver and Rio Grande railroad, 75 miles south of Denver. At this place there are no springs of any consequence, the Mineral Springs being located at Manitou 6 miles west on the branch of the D. and R. G. R. R.

Manitou is a famous summer resort. Invalids from all points in the U. S., come here to bathe in the waters which flow from the Iron and Soda Springs. The waters of these springs are also drank by invalids and are reported as possessing wonderful curative powers, especially on consumptives.

In the vicinity of Manitou there is the greatest variety of scenery imaginable, the town being shut in on every side by mountains, which by volcanic actions and upheavel of the earth's crust have been thrown into every conceivable position, some of the strata are slightly tilted, others rest on their edges, while in many instances by violent disturbances, strata of the lowermost formation lie uppermost here; making it a valuable and interesting field for the geologist. These rock abound in fossils, which may be obtained at the expense of a few days labor.

William's canon leading from Manitou to Cave of the Winds 1½ miles distant, is just wide enough for a wagon road, with perpendicular walls rising to the height of several hundred feet on either side. Reaching the terminus of the canon you ascend the side of the mountain by means of a trail and stairway to the cave entrance. The crevice near the entrance is spanned by two natural bridges, thus forming a picture unique and beautiful in the extreme. The cave was discovered June 26, '80 and has been open to the public about three years. The entire distance traveled in passing through this cave is not more than one-half mile; and while the statagmites and stalactites are not so large as those of many other caves, for cave ornamentation it has no equal.

We will enumerate a few of the most interesting scenes in the different departments through which we passed.

In Canopy Hall, a room 200 feet long 30 feet wide and 20 feet high, many things of interest are to be seen. Upon the floor of this room are ripple marks showing that at some time a stream of water passed through the cavern. Numerous images may be seen here, such as toad-stools, coral reef, hogs head, whales mouth and families of prairie dogs; all formed by the limestone rock being dissolved by acid and held in solution by water.

In Music Hall, by striking lightly on the stalactites, tones resembling those of a piano are heard. The hall is 80 feet long, 5 feet wide and 10 high. A coral wreath extends almost the entire length of the ceiling, and at the end you see an unusual cluster of calcite material wrought into wings and shafts.

Bridal chamber or more appropriately named museum, is the most wonderful room in the cave. It is 15 feet wide, 20 feet long and 10 feet high. The walls and ceiling are literally covered by calcite ornaments of every imaginable shape. The Bride, Lots wife, Old Judge, &c., may be distinctly seen by the assistance of your imaginative powers. On the side wall of this room to the right, is the museum proper to different people this suggests widely different scenes. Some one has said to the Frenchman, it is Dante's Inferno, to the German, pretzels; to the stranger, from the celestial land, Chinese hieroglyphics; to the practical English and American, it is nature's laboratory; at all events it is a scene interesting and instructive; a place for hours of study and reflection, where the handiwork of the Almighty may be seen in this, His underground workshop, in the very bowels of the mountain.

From the Cave we repaired to the Garden of the Gods, a comparatively level field at the foot of the mountain, over which are promiscuously distributed, fragments of stone of various sizes, resting on edge; some of them rising to the height of 300 feet. This formation is sandstone and is brick red in color, altogether unlike any formation to be seen outcropping on the surrounding mountain sides. The edges of these rocks are worn smooth by atmospheric and other agencies, and in many instances images, resembling animals have been formed, the names they bear having been given them in most cases by visitors.

What is known as the gateway to this Garden is formed by two huge rocks, standing on edge, with an opening of about 30 feet between them, the walls rising perpendicularly to the height of more than 200 ft. on either side.

Castle Rocks, to be found here, remind one of the ruined walls and partially demolished domes of old Castles. From the Garden of the Gods, Pike's Peak, wrapped in its mantle of snow, may be seen and as we drove away toward Colorado Springs, gazing back upon the dizzy heights of the sublime old Peak, we then and there formed a determination to visit it the following day. 'Tis needless to say that our resolution was carried into effect.

An account of some things connected with the journey will be given as soon as we recover sufficiently, from the shock it occasioned, to collect our thoughts. J. C. CLORE.

RAIN now will be of but little benefit to the tobacco crop, it being about matured. Consequently there will be but few good crops in this county. Corn will be below half a crop in the county, and without a warm, damp fall food for stock will be an object before next spring. On sod land there is some good corn, but fields of that kind are comparatively few.

THE Indiana editors visited the Louisville Exposition yesterday. They received a hearty welcome by the Exposition and local press, and enjoyed the sights the Falls City affords, and returned home convinced that a northern man's life is as safe on the Dark and Bloody Ground as elsewhere. It is well enough to have these molders of public opinion in the North to visit Kentucky occasionally and learn how little they know of her hospitality and good feeling toward all man kind.

THE convention that meets in Falmouth on the 16th of this month will nominate a candidate for one of the members of State Board of Supervisors of Tax. Volney Dickersom, the present member of the board from this Congressional district merits the indorsement of this county, and an effort on the part of Boone's delegates to have him nominated for election. The result of the deliberations at the recent session of the board should be very satisfactory to this district, and these results are due mainly to the manner in which Mr. Dickerson advocated the rights of the taxpayers of his district. He advocated nothing that justice to this end of the State did not demand, and if returned he will be as watchful of the interest of his constituents in the future as he was in the past. Volney Dickerson is an old "war hoss" whose political labors have been neglected by his party, and now an opportunity is presented, and why not give him the nomination.

Stott Brothers,

PETERSBURG, KY.

ARE STILL IN THE RING!

And wish to announce to the the people of Petersburg and vicinity that they have moved in thier New Building and added to their stock of

Dry Goods, Notions, Boots & Shoes,

HATS and CAPS, QTEENSWARE a full line of

STAPLE & FANCY GROCRIES,

Which they will be pleased to show the people, and give them prices before purchasing elsewhere. Our motto is

GOOD GOODS, SMALL PROFITS

and a square deal to all, both large and small. We also keep a good stock

Of Salt and Coal,

Which we guarantee to be as good as the best. Thanking the people for past favors, and solicit a continuance of the same. Remember, STOTT BROS., Petersburg, Ky., keep the best of Shaker Yarns, Jeans & Flannels.

ODD-FELLOWS MOONLIGHT FETE AND Pic Nic,

Venus Lodge No 154 I. O. O. F.

Will give a grand Moonlight Fete and Pic nic at Carpenter's Grove Florence, Ky., on Saturday,

Sept'r. 13, 1884.

For the Benefit of the Widows and Orphans' Fund.

A Large and Commodious Platform in the finest, shadiest Grove in the county, with music by Affel's celebrated Band will delight those who wish to trip the light fantastic.

A SHOOTI'G MATCH

For a Silver Cup under the management of Dr. E. S. Rice, Captain of the Florence Shooting Club will be given during the afternoon.

Calcium Lights & Fire Works

For the Moonlight the Grove will be beautifully illuminated with Japanese Lanterns and Calcium Lights. A magnificent display of fire works will be given during the evening, the finest ever seen the county.

No intoxicating liquors allowed on the gronnd. The committee of arrangements will spare no pains to interest those who may favor us with their presence.

COMMITTEE of ARRANGEMENTS.
Joseph Wagstaff, Geo. G. Hoover, Chas. H. Menninger.

FLOOR MANAGERS.

Frank Russell,	Fred A. Ulz.
W. L. Riddell,	Chas. Schramm
Dr. J. A. Corey,	W. E. Piper,
A. J. Brown,	Dick McWethy.

The festivities will commence at 1 p. m., and close at 12 p. m.

Refreshments will be found on the grounds in abundance.

TAX NOTICE.

The law requires me to collect and pay over 90 per cent. of the county revenue by the 1st day of October. All persons not paying their taxes when called on are requested to meet me or my deputy in their voting precincts at the following time and places,

Petersburg, Monday, November 17
Bellevue, Wednesday, November 19,
Florence, Friday, November 21.
Carlton, Saturday, November 22.
Union, Monday, November, 24.
Beaver, Tuesday, November 25.
Hamilton, Wednesday, November 26.
Hebron, Thursday, November 27.
Walton, Friday, November 28.
Verona, Saturday, November 29.
Burlington, Monday, December 1.

Any riding done to collect taxes after the above dates will be done at the cost of the parties owing the same.

J. R. CLUTTERBUCK, S. B. C.

FLOUR!

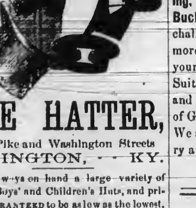
We have TALBOTT'S Flour for sale, by wholesale or retail—Very Cheap.

A. Corbin & Son,
GRANT, KY.

L. KUPPERSCHMID,

—42 WALNUT STREET,—

Lawrenceburg, - - Ind.



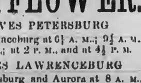
Always keeps on hand a large assortment of WATCHES, CLOCKS, JEWELRY, &c. Repairing Watches and Clocks a specialty. Also, agent for the

Rockford Watch Company.

Which manufactures the finest movements made, and they are used by all railroad men.

—Give Me a Call.—

A. L. Brown,



THE HATTER,

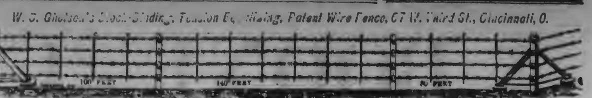
Cor. Pike and Washington Streets
COVINGTON, - - KY.

Has always on hand a large variety of Men's, Boys' and Children's Hats, and prices GUARANTEED to be as low as the lowest.

Gents' Furnishing Goods a Specialty.

TIME CARD OF THE

MAYFLOWER.



LEAVES PETERSBURG
For Lawrenceburg at 6½ A. M.; 9½ A. M., and 11½ A. M.; at 2 P. M., and at 4½ P. M.

LEAVES LAWRENCEBURG
For Petersburg and Aurora at 8 A. M., 10 A. M., and 12 M; at 2½ P. M. and 5 P. M.

LEAVES PETERSBURG
For Aurora at 8½ A. M., 10½ A. M.; at 1 P. M., and 8 P. M.

LEAVES AURORA
For Petersburg and Lawrenceburg at 9 A. M., 11 A. M.; 1½ P. M. and 4 P. M

ELIHU ALDEN, Master.

As special Agent for the Gholson Fencing Company, for Boone County, I am prepared to build their patent fence at any time. This is the cheapest and best fence in use. It needs no talking up, as it is fast selling itself wherever it is introduced. Any number of wires can be used.

28-1y-84. G. C. GRADDY, Bullittsville, Ky.

CLEARING SALE!

To make room for Fall Stock I have reduced Custom-Made Suits 20 per cent. and on ready-made Men's, Bys' and Children's Clthi ng 25 per cent. for Cash only, until August 20.

H. F. BLASE,
540 Madison Street
COVINGTON, - - - - - KY

John Q. Davis,

—DEALER IN—

BOOTS & SHOES,
HATS AND CAPS

Of the very best Eastern and Cincinnati manufactures. I claim to be the best posted man in my line in this section. Goods sold absolutely on there merits, and ample willing reclamation made where goods do not come up to the "SCRATCH."

YOU CAN AS SAFELY SEND YOUR CHILDREN AS TO COME YOURSELVES.

Thankful for the very liberal patronge in the past, and hoping with increaesd facilities to still do the BOOT and SHOE business of this section,

Respectfully,

J. Q. DAVIS,

SIGN BIG RED BOOT, MAIN, Street, Rising Sun, Indiana.

WM. COLTER,

—DEALER IN—

Clothing, Boots, Shoes, Hats, Caps, Millinery Goods, Cloaks, Etc.

JOB LOTS OF ABOVE A SPECIALTY,

We are just now devoting our entire energy to making preparations for the ensuing season, and can promise to call your attention to a stock of Boots and Shoes. Rubber Goods, Men's and Boys' Ready-Made Clothing, Ladies' Cloaks, and Wraps, Millinery Goods, Ribbons, Mens' Hats, Buck Gloves, &c., in which, for real solid and genuine Bargains, we challenge competition. We intend to lead the market in this section much more than we have ever done before, which we can at once prove to you at your first inspection. Have already bought over 500 Overcoats, over 800 Suits, 1,000 pairs of Gloves, over 70 cases Kip Boots, 16 cases Mens' Hats and Caps, all grades. And we are not asleep if it is hot. The above line of Goods is kept in the lower half and 2nd floor of our Mammoth House. We are slashing down prices on all Summer Goods now, as we do not carry any Goods over. Thanks for past favors. Respectfully,

Wm. COLTER, Rising Sun, Ind.

SOUTHERN EXPOSITION
LOUISVILLE,

Opens August 16th. Closes October 25th, 1884.

15 ACRES UNDER ONE ROOF.

TWO CONCERTS EACH DAY

By Cappa's and Gilmore's, the most famous bands of the world.

Largest and Finest Display of Machinery in MOTION ever witnessed anywhere.

LOWEST RAILWAY RATES EVER GIVEN IN THE STATE.

ART BUILDINGS,
CONTAINING THE CHOICEST PICTURES IN AMERICA.

Ten works of Kentucky's great sculptor, Joel Hart, the best possible collection.

One hundred counties in Kentucky will make exhibits, displaying products which will demonstrate this State's tremendous capacities and future greatness. An occasion for Kentucky pride and glory—KENTUCKY TRIUMPHANT.

AN IMMENSE LIVE STOCK EXHIBITION

Presenting at one time in line over $1,000,000 worth of horses, comprising all the sires that have made Kentucky famous. The exhibit will surpass in extent the Royal Stock Show in London, and present to the visitor the grandest, completest, and most magnificent Stock exhibit the world has ever witnessed, and a sight that can not be duplicated in the world.

BENNETT H. YOUNG, President. J. M. WRIGHT, General Manager.

A. M. ACRA,

HARNESS —DEALER IN— SADDLES.

Fine and Cheap Buggy Harness.
BURLINGTON, KY.

I also have a full stock of BUGGY WHIPS, LAP DUSTERS, ANKLE BOOTS and TROTTING BALLS and everything else usually kept in a first-class harness shop.

REPAIRING A SPECIALTY.

Give Me A Call.

W. J. RICE,
CARPENTER & BUILDER,
BULLITSVILLE, KY.

Is prepared Raise or Move EITHER LOG or FRAME BUILDINGS On Short Notice, And at the Lowest Possible Figures.

33-tf Your orders respectfully solicited

THE LEADING CAMPAIGN BOOK!

History of Growth, Development and Resources of the Republic. Review of past Administrations, Biographies of Candidates, 1884. 800 Pages Fine illustrations. Send 50 cts. for full outfit and begin work. Circular free. Address
J. C. McCURDY, Cincinnati, O.

HARTER'S IRON TONIC

It will purify and enrich the BLOOD, regulate the LIVER and KIDNEYS, and restore the HEALTH and VIGOR of YOUTH. In all those diseases requiring a certain and efficient TONIC, especially Dyspepsia, Want of Appetite, Indigestion, Lack of Strength, etc., its use is marked with immediate and wonderful results. Bones, muscles and nerves receive new force. Enlivens the mind and supplies Brain Power.

LADIES suffering from all complaints peculiar to their sex will find in DR HARTER'S IRON TONIC a safe and speedy cure. It gives a clear and healthy complexion. The strongest testimony to the value of DR. HARTER'S IRON TONIC is that frequent attempts at counterfeiting have only added to the popularity of the original. If you earnestly desire health do not experiment—get the ORIGINAL AND BEST.

Send your address to The Dr. Harter Med. Co. St. Louis, Mo., for our "DREAM BOOK." Full of strange and useful information, free.

DR. HARTER'S IRON TONIC IS FOR SALE BY ALL DRUGGISTS AND DEALERS EVERYWHERE.

For A Business Education Attend the

Commercial College

Of Kentucky University, Lexington, Ky.

Students can begin any week-day in the year. No vacation. Time to complete the Full Diploma Business Course about 10 weeks. Average Total Cost, including Tuition, Set of Books and Board in a family, $90. Telegraphy a specialty. Literary Course free. Ladies received. 5,000 successful graduates. Over 500 pupils last year from 15 to 45 years of age, from 25 States. Instruction is practically and individually imparted by 10 teachers. Special courses for Teachers and Business Men. University Diploma presented to its graduates. This beautiful city is noted for its healthfulness and society, and is on leading Railroads. Fall Session begins Sept. 8th. For circulars and full particulars, address its President WILBUR R. SMITH, Lexington, Ky.

NO NEW THING.

STRONG'S SANATIVE PILLS

Used throughout the country FOR OVER 40 YEARS, And thus proved The Best Liver Medicine in the World.

No Griping, Poisonous Drugs, but purely Vegetable, safe and reliable. Prescribed even by Physicians. A speedy cure for Liver Complaint, Regulating the Bowels, Purifying the Blood, Cleansing from Malarial Taint. A perfect cure for Sick Headache, Constipation and all Bilious Disorders. Sold by Druggists. For Pamphlets, etc., address C. E. HULL & CO., 18 Cedar St., N. Y. City.

FOUND AT LAST.

THE ANIMAL SAFE GUARD.

Patent applied for. Absolute cure for all breachy stock. Simple and safe appliance; always at hand. No Rope, no Yoke, no pole used to injure stock. No animal will jump a fence when this is used. Send One Dollar for Farm-right and full instruction. Address
C. F. BROSEKE, Justice of the Peace, Falmouth, Ky.

SANITARIUM, Riverside, Cal. The dry climate cures Nose, Throat, Lungs, full idea, 36 p., route, cost, free.

MARRIAGE AND HEALTH GUIDE. 260 pgs. Illustrated.

All that the doubtful curious or thoughtful want to know. Cloth and gilt binding, 50 cts., paper 25c. Marriage Guide, 110 pages, 10 cts. sent sealed, money or stamps, by DR. WHITTIER 302 RACE STREET, CINCINNATI, OHIO. The greatest specialist. Nervous Debility, Impediments to Marriage, Consultation and Pamphlet free.

PISO'S CURE FOR CONSUMPTION
CURES WHERE ALL ELSE FAILS. Best Cough Syrup. Tastes good. Use in time. Sold by druggists. 25 CTS.

KENTUCKY UNIVERSITY,
LEXINGTON, KY.

Three Colleges—Arts, Bible and Commercial. College of Arts has two courses, Classical and Scientific with twelve professors and teachers; fees, $12 per session of nine months. College of the Bible, no tuition fees. Students of the College of the Bible have access without charge to the classes of the College of Arts, and those of the College of Arts to the classes of the College of the Bible. Session opens the Second Monday in September. For catalogues, address CHAS. LOUIS LOOS, President of the University, or ROBT. GRAHAM, President of the College of the Bible.

LAW SCHOOL
OF WASHINGTON AND LEE UNIVERSITY.
GEN. G. W. C. LEE, President.

Instruction by text-books and printed lectures, with courses of lectures on special subjects by eminent jurists. Tuition and fees, $80 for session of nine months beginning Sept. 18. For catalogue and full information address CHAS. A. GRAVES, Prof. of Law, Lexington, Va.

THE COMPLETE HOME. Agents wanted for this beautiful book. New edition.—New bindings.—New illustrations from new designs. Superbly gotten up. Same low price. Adapted to all classes. Sells at sight. Agents doing big work. EXCELLENT TERMS. The handsomest prospectus ever issued. Apply now.
WM. GARRETSON & CO., Lexington, Kentucky. Also other grand new books and Bibles.

OPIUM and WHISKY HABITS cured at home without pain. Book of particulars sent Free. B. M. WOOLLEY, M. D., Atlanta, Ga.

Local News.

A CALL.

A mass meeting to select delegates to the Congressional Convention which meets in Falmouth on the 16th inst., will be held in the Court-house in Burlington at 1 p. m., next Saturday.

J. G. FURNISH, Ch. Co. Ex. Com.

The pastures look brown.

Plenty of squirrels in the woods.

Talbott's Patent Flour is the best.

Some depositions are being taken for Circuit Court.

There was a black-burying in Burlington Sunday.

Many of our citizens are laying in their winter's fuel.

There were 1,049 idiots in this State on the 30th of June.

Be careful with fire, for there is no water to fight it with.

F. P. Walton is about done prizing his last purchase of tobacco.

Born—To Perry A. Ryle and wife on the 6th inst., a 12 pound girl.

The Republican majority in Maine Monday is estimated at 15,000.

Lately Louisville has been entertaining some high-toned swindlers.

Use Magnetic Tooth Powder—best made. For sale by W. F. McKim.

Fleas and hogs have undisputed rights in the streets of Burlington.

Jailing business is looking up. The jailer is now dieting five able bodied men.

Cy Crisler has been suffering with a severe attack of hay fever for several days.

Albert Beemon and wife have been quite sick with fever for the last two weeks.

Tobacco that is cut this weather has to be closely watched to prevent it sunburning.

Gov. McCreary was nominated for Congress in the eighth district last Saturday.

Joe Reed and his force went over into Kenton, yesterday, to do a large job of painting.

A fresh supply of Dr. Salmon's chicken and horse powder, for sale by W. F. McKim.

All the well authenticated signs of rain have proven to be dry weather signs this season.

Wednesday, the wife of Ambrose Hoard, who resides near Beaver, died of consumption.

Our local fishing team had fine luck with their seine at Laughery island last Thursday night.

The northeastern portion of the county enjoyed a fine shower of rain last Monday afternoon.

The scarcity of small "tads" on the streets is due to the school-house catching some of them Monday.

The annual session of the North Bend Association of Baptist commences to day with Dry Creek church.

Mr. Mack, of Rising Sun, we understand has been employed to teach the common school at this place.

Don't forget the big picnic at Florence next Saturday. It will be a big affair, and don't you forget it.

Mittie Aera seems to be doing a fine business, having all the work he and a hand can do making harness.

Don't forget B. P. Rice's sale next Monday, the 15th, at his father's residence on the East Bend road.

Isaac P. Gray, Democratic candidate for Governor of Indiana, will speak in Aurora on Saturday the 20th inst.

The Falmouth Fair is in progress this week. Our harness maker will be there with some of his work to exhibit.

W. Lee Gaines, Courtney Walton and brother are attending college at Georgetown, having started last week.

James Conner and his trick pony gave a performance on the street yesterday, which was closely watched by a crowd.

The leaves have commenced falling. Probably the dry, hot weather has something to do with their early decay.

The docket for the next term of the Circuit Court threatens to be very small which fact is not encouraging to the functionaries.

Will Walton is at his old tricks out west, viz: Tickeling the palates of hungry printers with the goodies of his garden and fields.

The Florence John Sullivan was lodged in jail last week by officer Conrad. He got a long term for bad conduct, about 75 days.

A young man was arrested in Walton the other day, when a 38-caliber testament was found on his person, and now he languisheth in jail.

John Cox, of Middle Creek, sent to our office the other day two mammoth raddishes, and our fall rations are now assured. They are simply bouncers.

Having bought 600 head of heavy feeding hogs and refusing to buy lights, I will now buy 750 lights and thin sows.

J. M. CONNER.

Gen. John W. Finnell declines the Republican nomination for congress in this district before the convention meets.

Nearly all the farmers in the hills are compelled to drive their stock to the river and creeks for water, because of the continued drouth.—Warsaw Independent.

At the next regular election local option will be voted on in the Florence and Burlington districts. The necessary petitions have been filed in the County Clerk's office.

Irwin Balsly, John W. Gaines and Charles Scothorn left for Kansas Monday. The first two have gone to purchase property. The last named will become a resident of that State.

W. E. Piper has moved into the house vacated by A. W. Smith, whose goods were boxed and shipped to Florida last Saturday, and J. F. Blythe has moved into the house vacated by Piper.

Every cloud that appears in the west is watched with much anxiety by our citizens, many of whom are out of water and are appreciating the charity of their neighbors.

A meeting will be held in Florence next Saturday, for the purpose of organizing an Agricultural Association. Everybody is invited to attend and take part in the proceedings.

The September term of Esquire Baker's court was compromised out of business last Thursday. He expected a day's hard work, but the whole thing collapsed before court could convene.

In the Carroll Circuit Court, last week, Robert Duke, colored, was given a pass to the Kentucky penitentiary for life for the murder of Judy Reed, colored, at a church festival in that county about a year since.

We are satisfied after talking with people from every part of the county that the tobacco crop, so far as quantity is concerned, is about half a crop, and very little more than a third in quantity.—Carrollton Democrat.

Just a few hours before A. W. Smith and family expected to leave here for Florida, last Monday, his infant child was pushed over on the floor by its older brother while playing, and so seriously hurt that their departure is necessarily delayed a few days. It died last night.

An examination of teachers for the Common Schools of Boone county will be held on Saturday, September 13, '84, at the Morgan Academy, Burlington—commencing promptly at 9 o'clock a m. No private examinations will be held.

H. J. FOSTER, County Sup't.

The day has come when to leave the grave of the departed one unmarked by a neat stone, is not suffered by even those in the most ordinary walks of life, and all can be pleased in both design and price by Huselart & Co., of Lawrenceburg, Ind. John Beall, of Hebron, is their agent.

The shooting match at the picnic at Florence on the 13th inst, will be with both shot guns and rifles. The shot gun match will be at glass balls, and for a fine silver cup. The rifle match will be at long and short range. All the crack shots are invited, and especially old rifle shots. The shooting will be very interesting.

Interviewing the marriage register the other day, we learned that the following couples have seen proper to start on life's rugged journey together since the first of this month:

Charles F. Stucky, 24, farmer, and Rebecca J. Thorp, 21.

John W. Thomas, 35, farmer, and Maggie Baker, 32.

Jeff D. Stephens, 23, farmer, and Lena Baker, 21.

Tim Westbay and Everett Hall have rented the old Sherrill store room where they will keep a fresh supply of hams, dried beef, bacon, lard, butter and eggs, &c, &c, in connection with their meat shop. Will also buy country produce, such as meat, lard, butter and eggs, and will pay the highest price. Fresh beef Wednesdays and Saturdays.

Last Friday morning when Mr. Cowen went to the jail, he discovered that the shackels on the prisoners had been tampered with, and he at once instituted a search for the implements used, when he discovered a coal chisel concealed in the stove. The prisoners declared it was there when they were put in jail, but the jailer is of the opinion someone has been interesting himself in their behalf on the subject of escape, and furnished them with the chisel.

A spelling match was organized at the Court-house last Thursday evening. Many of the teachers took part and a few hours were passed very pleasantly. The whole force "stranded" on the word Circumforanean, although Dr. Furnish brought in a minority report, claiming that he spelled it correctly, but the doctor was the only one that so understood it. Webster's dictionary was used, and many who participated in the exercises claimed that the words were strangers to them.

One of Scattersvill's suburban citizens came to town one day last week, and while here was summoned on a jury. Expecting to be detained until afternoon, he registered at the Boone House and took dinner, intending to liquidate the hotel bill with his pay as juror, but he was nonplussed when he came out from dinner and learned that the lawsuit had been compromised and that his services were not needed. It then became necessary for him to work up a compromise with the landlord, and now he declares that he will never depend on futures again.

On Saturday next at 1 p. m., the second meeting of the Agricultural Society of Northern Ky., will be held at the Southern Hotel, in Florence, for the purpose of effecting a permanent organization, taking necessary steps toward purchasing grounds and erecting buildings, and soliciting stock for a new Fair Grounds, to be located between Florence and Erlanger, contiguous to the Cin. S. R. R and Lexington Pike. A committee of five persons has been appointed to report upon the best location and purchase, and will make its report Saturday. The first meeting on Saturday last was an enthusiastic one, in which Boone and Kenton counties were represented by business men determined that this laudable enterprise shall be a success. The C. S. R. R, heads the subscription with $1,000 and a side track for the especial benefit of the grounds. As this is an enterprise for the people, let it be of the people, and let every well wisher of the enterprise put in an appearance Saturday by person or proxy, and thus establish as a fact that which now seems and should be certain, a Northern Ky. Fair. The Public has demanded a new Fair ground ever since the old Florence Fair and urged the necessity and pleasure of it, and must not therefore neglect the present best opportunity to lend voice and aid to a worthy public enterprise.

The Harvest Home Picnic.

Saturday was intensely warm, but the heat did not prevent a very large crowd congregating at Parlor Grove, where the third annual Harvest Home was being held. A splendid band of music was in attendance, and those who enjoy the mazy dance were assigned the commodious platform, were the merry dancers kept time to sweet music, while the sturdy farmers and their good wives enjoyed themselves inspecting the various articles of husbandry that were on exhibition. In each department there were numerous entries, and the display of farm and garden products were much better than it was expected they could be. The work of nimble fingers was well represented, and with much anxiety did the fair exhibitors await the decision of the judges who would have gladly awarded each article a blue ribbon, had such a thing "been within the possibility of human events."

The past meetings of the Harvest Home have been very encouraging to the managers, and are growing in popularity with the public, which assures its success next season.

NOTES.

A steamboat load of fine grub was devoured at noon.

It was awfully warm but every body kept in a fine humor.

The water was cool enough, but it was flavored with vinegar.

The premium list we publish this week is very comprehensive.

The managers of the agricultural display had everything work as smoothly as could have been desired.

The fine music was so enticing that some of the waltzers forgot that an occasional rest was necessary.

The collectors' motto was, "let no man escape without contributing his admission fee." That was correct.

The Institute.

With great reluctance did the teachers attend the Institute last week, and but few, if any, acknowledged that they were benefitted thereby. Dr. Peck, of Spi[illegible], attended the last three days, and he and Jno. P. Craig enlivened the exercises by earnest discussions, which only confirmed each of the disputants that he held the proper theory in regard to the matters under discussion. The interesting part of the session was the concluding part of the programme, which consisted of a lecture on Hygiene, by Dr. Furnish; a recitation by Joe Reed, and the closing address by Crit Gordon. Each of these gentlemen acquitted himself with much credit, and especially the last named. The closing address was not only delivered in good style, but bristled with stubborn facts, which were forcibly presented, and listened to with much interest by the audience.

NOTES.

The attendance the last afternoon was large.

But few trustees were recognized in the audience.

Some of the teachers think the Institute "got" an over dose of grammar.

Prof. Stephenson is a fine grammarian but he gets scriptural quotations badly mixed occasionally.

The number of licensed teachers in the county is much less than the number of schools to be taught.

O, the pedagogue! O, the pedagogue!!
How he delights to scold and flog,
But on this subject's very mute
While attending the Institute,

His mode of teaching clearly states,
And his success proudly relates;
But nothing at all hath he to say
Why he doth wield the rod each day.

Talbott's Patent Flour is the best.

Personal Mentions.

[If you have friends from a distance visiting you or expect to be away from home on business or pleasure, let us have the item for this column.]

Mrs. L. H. Dills was quite sick a few days last week.

David Blythe has returned to Hanover, Indiana, College.

Mrs. W. F. Ashburn, of Cincinnati, is visiting her sister at this place.

William Glen, of Cincinnati, spent Sunday with his aunt at this place.

Mr. Barnett, of Antwerp, Ohio, made us a brief and pleasant call, Monday.

Mrs. Kate Frazier is the guest of her brother, H. P. Stephens of this place.

Jack Utz, of Milan, Ind., spent several days in this neighborhood last week.

M. T. Garnett and Miss Annie Cowen spent Sunday with friends in East Bend.

Uncle Milt Hamilton was in Burlington long enough to "hash" once last Friday.

Joshua Rice and wife spent last Friday in Burlington, the guests of Dr. Grant and wife.

Mrs. Wallace and Mrs. Sleet will attend the old Baptist Association at Maysville, this week.

Omer Perkins, of Rising Sun, was in Burlington one day last week, shaking hands with his many friends

Capt. A. B. Parker, and Levi Lemon, engineer, members of the Minnie crew, were in Burlington Sunday.

Johnny Herndon, traveling salesman for the Bradley & Gilbert Company, of Louisville, stayed in Burlington Monday night.

Among the visitors we failed to mention last week are Mrs. Jno. O. Campbell, Mrs. Lotta Davrainville and Miss Kate Kreylich.

Talbott's Patent Flour is the best.

The dry weather has interrupted our foreign commerce

The drouth's back bone has been slow to weaken. The final break-up will eventually come.

The Enquirer's statement that Conkling & Co. are leaning toward Cleveland must be taken with several grains of allowance.

How is it that each butcher shop can dispose of one beef a week, when they were consolidated one more than supplied the market?

The public cistern is still on duty, but its supply of water is having a desperate struggle to hold the fort until a reenforcement arrives.

NEIGHBORHOOD NEWS.

Florence.

Died—At the home of Z. T. Tanner, near Florence, on Sunday the 7th, inst. Leona, infant daughter of Stonewall J. and Fannie Clutterbuck. Burial on the afternoon of the 8th, in Hopeful cemetery. "Suffer little children to come unto me and forbid them not for of such is the kingdom of Heaven."

The above death was the result of whooping cough or some disease superinduced by some. There are many cases of a similar character in the neighborhood and several have proven fatal.

"How very dry," is the password now, but there's a glorious cloud in sight.

GAS OMETER.

Scattersville.

Dry and dusty.

John Sebree has some new earn ground.

John Rue is building more barn room.

Cutting tobacco is the order of the day.

Wm. Day is talking of going west this fall.

Frank Russell, the energetic saw-mill man is hauling some fine logs from Miss Dora Huey's farm.

Our huckster, Perry Rice is going to leave us and go to Covington, he is going to open a livery stable.

H. P. Parsons and family, O. B. Utz and family, of Big Bone, and Jno. Kittle and family, of Ripley county, Ind., spent the day with Chas. Parsons and family Sunday.

Long-street.

T. D. Goodridge says he had some chickens hatched by the sun.

Cutting tobbacco is on the boom, have to cut it to keep it from drying up.

A. Corbin has delivered 20 thousand shingles to Jno. Berkshire at $5 00 per thousand.

Everett Cason took in the Harvest Home, Saturday, and the Zoological Garden Sunday.

Wm. White drove his hogs to Bellevue and sold to our stock merchant, James Conner at 4½c.

Mr. J. J. Berkshire and wife were visiting friends in the Parker neighborhood last Wednesday.

We were glad to see Mrs. Jenkins able to visit her brother, Jno. J. Berkshire one day last week

Mr. Noah Utz and wife, and Jno. E. Walton spent last Wednesday with W. I. Rouse and family.

An old colored man by the name of Geo. White, was taken to his last resting place Sunday. He has killed and cleared off more timber in this neighborhood than any other man.

Quite a number of persons were on hand to witness the fearful feat of tree climbing by Henry Hall. He was to climb a large oak on Jno. E. Walton's land near the pike, but failed to put in his appearance.

Florence X-Roads.

Health generally good.

Miss Octavia Rouse spent several days with friends in Cincinnati last week.

D. J. Barnett and wife, of Antwerp, Ohio, are here on a visit to friends and relatives.

Prof. Barnes preached at Hopeful Saturday night and Rev. Link Sunday morning.

Last Saturday the Hopeful and Union Sunday-schools united and had a celebration in the grove near Hopeful church.

L. C. Conner, of Hebron, has a barn under way for Noah Craven, and Jack Henderson is constructing one for Owen Aylor.

Mrs. Strafer, of Cincinnati and Mrs. Seaman, of Covington, returned to their homes last week, after a pleasant visit to friends here.

Wells and springs are drying up and water is getting scarce. Rouse Bros. have excavated another well that will furnish 60 gallons per day.

The Harvest Home was well attended from this place. Report says one of our young men concluded to waltz, and unluckily fell down, but not seriously hurt

Last Friday night the brass band met and repaired to the residence of Mr. Thorp's on Wash Craven's farm, where it treated Chas. Stucky and bride to some very fine music.

Live Stock Market.

CINCINNATI, Sept. 8, 1884.

CATTLE.

Receipts 1,490—market 25 cents lower on all grades from last Monday's quotations.

Best Shippers	6 to 6 40
Good Shippers	5½ to 6 00
Extra Oxen	4½ to 5½
Fair to good Oxen	4 to 4½
Extra Butchers	4½ to 5
Common to Fair	3½ @ 3¾
Roughs and Scalawags	2 @ 2½
COWS.
Extra	4½ @ 4¾
Common to Fair	2½ @ 3½
Fair to Good	3½ @ 4
BULLS.
Extra	3½ @ 3¾
Fair to good	3 @ 3½
Heavy feeding steers	4½ @ 5½
Good stockers	4 @ 4½
COWS and CALVES.
Common	15 @ $20
Fair to good	30 @ $40
Choice	45 @ $55
Extra	$60
Jerseys	50 @ $90
VEAL CALVES.
Best	6½ @ 8
Common	4 @ 4½

HOGS.

We have had a declining market during the past week, the market continuing overstocked with half-fatted hogs. Prices below are for strictly corn-fed hogs.

Select butchers, heavy shippers	5 75 @ 6 00
Good lights, 180 to 200	5 50 @ 6 85
" " 150 to 175	4 50 @ 5 00

SHEEP.

Very dull throughout the week and very dull to-day. Stock ewes very dull at 2 to 3¼; weathers, 2½ to 3½.

Best weathers	3¾ @ 4
Fair to good	3 @ 3½
Ewes and wethers mixed	3½ @ 4
Stock wethers	2½ @ 3½
Common	5 @ 3 50
LAMBS.
Best shippers	4½ @ 4 75
Fair to good	3¾ @ 4½
Lights	3 @ 3½

W. M. CONNER.

NOTICE.

All those indebted to Conner & Northcutt and Jno. L. Conner, are hereby notified that they must come forward and settle the same immediately. Those having claims against the same must present them to the undersigned properly proven, at once.

J. T. CURLLY, Assignee.

NOTICE.

All those indebted to the estate of Isaac Clore, deceased, are hereby notified that they must come forward and settle the same immediately. Those having claims against the estate of said deceased must present them to the undersigned properly proven, at once.

JOHN W. CRIGLER, Administrator,

LUMBER.

Goe. M. Bedinger & Co.,

Erlanger, - - Ky.

We keep constantly on hand all kinds of Lumber, Laths and Shingles. Also Builder's supplies of all kinds.

—Come and see Us.—

Flour! Flour!

TALBOTT'S

CELEBRATED BRAND OF FLOUR is for sale at the following places in Boone County, Ky.

A. Corbin & Son, Grant.
Dudley Rouse, Sam'l Cowen, W. E. Piper and W. F. McKim, Burlington.
Rouse Bros., Florence X-Roads.
W. W. Garnett, Hamilton.
Wilson & Riddell, Rabbit Hash.
E. L. Clements, Clements' Store.
Omer Kirtley, Kirtley's Landing.

TALBOTT'S FLOUR

—Is the Best, take no other.—

It is Cheap for the Quality.

$66 a week at home. $5 outfit free. Pay absolutely sure. No risk. Capital not required. If you want business at which persons of either sex young or old, can make great pay all the time they work, with absolute certainty, write for particulars to H. HALLETT & Co., Portland, Maine.

County Directory.

OFFICERS.

Assessor—G. M. Riley.
County Surveyor—W. E. Vest.
School Commissioner—D. M. Snyder.
Coroner.—Dr. A. A. Murat, Constance.

COURTS.

CIRCUIT COURT meets the 2d Monday in April and first Monday in October. P. U. Major, Judge; W. L. Riddell, Clerk A. G. DeJarnette, Commonwealths Attorney; W. L. Riddell, Trustee Jury Fund.

COUNTY COURT meets the first Monday in every month. L. H. Dills, Judge; S. W. Tolin, County Attorney. M. T. Garnett, Clerk; J. R. Clutterbuck, Sheriff, T. W. Finch and W. T. German, Deputy Sheriffs.

QUARTERLY COURT meets the first Monday in March, June, September and December. The officers of the County Court preside.

COURT OF CLAIMS meets the first Monday in November.

MAGISTRATES' COURTS are held in March, June, September and December, as follows:

Bellevue—M. B. Green, first Saturday, and T. H. Sutton, third Monday. J. M. Moody, Constable.

Burlington—E. H. Baker, Thursday after first Monday, and Oscar Gaines, fourth Monday. R. H. Sandford, Constable.

Carlton—A. G. McConnell, Wednesday after second Monday, and B. H. Ryle, Saturday after third Monday. Walter Ryle, Cornstable.

Petersburg—Jos. Hensley, Wednesday after first Monday, and L. A. Loder fourth Saturday. Geo. Comer, Constable.

Beever—W. M. Rouse, Friday after the third Monday, and

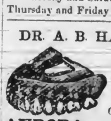
Union—M. C. Norman, Thursday after third Monday, and H. Bannister, Thursday after second Monday. A. D. Riley, Constable.

Hamilton—F. M. Howlett, Tuesday after second Monday; W. W. Garnett, Wednesday after third Monday. R. L. Roberts Constable.

Walton—T. F. Carley, second Friday. S. T. Johnson, Tuesday after second Friday W. C. Moxley, Constable.

H. C. CHAMBERS,
AUCTIONEER
FLORENCE, - - - KENTUCKY.

CONNER YACER
Attorney and Counselor at Law,
FLORENCE, - KENTUCKY



ROBERT B. REED
Attorney at Law.
OFFICE AT - UNION, KY

F. RIDDELL. H. P. STEPHENS.
RIDDELL and STEPHENS,
ATTORNEYS at LAW
BURLINGTON, KY.
Office over Dudley Rouse's Store.

W. E. VEST,
COUNTY SURVEYOR
WALTON, KY.
Is prepared to do all kinds of surveying. All orders sent him through the mail to Walton, will receive his prompt attention.

E. E. IGOE,

Resident Dentist,
Rising Sun, Ind.
WITH
J. P. Ulrey.
Monday and Tuesday at Rising Sun. Ind.
Wednesday and Saturday at Aurora, Ind.;
Thursday and Friday at Lawrenceburg.

DR. A. B. HARRYMAN,

Reeident Dentist.
Office over Post-Office.
AURORA, INDIANA.

J. J. Landram. G. G. Hughes.
LANDRAM & HUGHES.
ATTORNEYS at LAW.
Will practice in the Boone Circuit Cour and the Court of Appeals. Prompt attention given to Collections, on application t G. G. Hughes, Burlington, Ky.

S. W. TOLIN,
ATTORNEY AT LAW
BURLINGTON, - - Y
Office in Court-house on 2d floor.
Will manage litigation in any of the Courts of the State, contracts and other legal instruments drawn up at reasonable rates. Aprompt an studious attention given to business intrusted to my care. A trial solicited. 12-1y

AURORA MARBLE AND GRANITE WORKS,
Aurora, Ind
Will have constantly on hand
Marble and Granite Monuments,
Italian & American Headstones, &c.
I am ready to do all kinds of Stone Work on short notice and at low prices Hoping to receive the patronage of Boone County, I am respectfully,
F. W. KASSEBAUM.

INSURE AT HOME
The Farmers' Mutual Fire
INSURANCE COMPANY
Of Boone County
Is now completely organized and receiving applications for Insurance.
Its Rates are Lower
Than those of any other Company, and it gives the farmers of Boone County a
HITHERTO UNKNOWN ADVANTAGE
In keeping their property insured.
EVERY FARMER IN THE COUNTY
should take a policy at once.
J. A. GAINES, President, Burlington, Ky. | J. H. WALTON, Secretary, Constance, Ky.
R. RANDALL, Treasury.
DIRECTORS.
LEGRAN GAINES, A. J. UTZ.
JNO. STEPHENS.
OSCAR GAINES, Agent. | C. L. CRISLER, Assessor.

THE DRY GOODS DEPARTMENT!
—IS NOW COMPLETE AT—
COLTER, POWELL AND OWNBY'S,
New Styles of Sidonia Fancy Plaids and other elaborate styles just received. | Over One Hundred New Pieces just opened, from the best goods, marked down to
THE LOWEST PRICES.
Special Prices on a new lot of Black Dress Silks at 90c, $1, $1 25 and $1 50. New Fall Styles in Prints at wonderfully Low Prices. Muslins and all Domestics a Specialty. | Ladies' Dusters at 75c, 90c, $1, $1 25, $1 50 and $2. Ladies' Lap Dusters, 38c. Our Flannels, Yarns and Blankets are elegant. Over 200 doz. Hoes at 8¼ and 10 cents.
OVER ONE HUNDRED DIFFERENT STYLES OF DRESS BUTTONS, JUST OPENED AT LOW PRICES.
Colter, Powell & Ownby.
Rising Sun, Indiana.

R. S. CRISLER,
Burlington, Ky,
WAGON MAKER AND
—MANUFACTURER OF—
ROAD WAGONS, SPRING WAGONS, HARROWS, PLOWS, WHEEL BARROWS
AND ALL KINDS OF WOOD WORK.
Also the Manufacturer of W. M. Conner's Patent Right Hay Conveyor
Saws Filed & Sharpened.
Please call and examine my prices before calling elsewhere.

JAMES S. WAYNE, President. JNO. L. SANDFORD, Cashier
CAPITAL $300,000.
FARMERS AND TRADERS
NATIONAL BANK.
Covington, Kentucky.
DIRECTORS.
James S. Wayne, J. S. Matson, M. C. Motch, J. H. Mersman, Sam Hind, J. L. Sandford, L. C. Stephens, E. J. Hickey, L. H Dills, E. J. Green, F. P. Helm
The general operations of banking transacted upon the most favorable terms, collections made on all points in the United States.
The Business and Accounts of Farmers are Especially Solicited by this Bank.
dec. 20-6m

UNDERTAKING.

We keep Constantly on Hand all sizes of
Burial Cases and Caskets.
And having just received a beautiful
NEW HEARSE,
Which can be had at a reasonable price when desired.
PRICES GUARANTEED LESS THAN CITY PRICES
DAVIS BRO - - HEBRON, KY

City [illegible]aring Mills
[illegible] SUN, INDIANA.
FLOUR [illegible]HANGED FOR WHEAT OR CASH. THE HIGHEST MARKET PRICE PAID FOR GOOD WHEAT,
mar7-tf23
J. W. Talbott.

CENTRAL UNIVERSITY,
COLLEGE OF PHILOSOPHY, LETTERS, AND SCIENCE, RICHMOND, KY.
Next Session will open Wednesday, September 3d, 1884.
ADVANTAGES.—A FULL FACULTY of able and experienced instructors, Comprehensive course of study and thorough instruction. Completeness of buildings and apparatus.
Social Influence.—The community is distinguished for its refined culture and hospitality, and young men find homes in the BEST families. Not a Saloon in the city.
Healthfulness of Location.—Richmond is at an elevation of more than 500 feet above the Ohio river, and free from all malarial influences.
Accessibility.—Richmond is the geographical centre of the State, in the heart of the Blue Grass region, and is within a few hours, by rail, of Louisville, Cincinnati, Knoxville and Chattanooga.
Moderate Expenses.—Board in the New Memorial Hall, lighted by gas and heated by steam—an elegant, comfortable home—$100 per annum for everything except washing, and in the best families from $3 to $4 per week. Total necessary expenses for the ten months, from $150 to $210.
For full information and catalogue, apply to L. H. BLANTON, D. D., Chancellor.

Now is the time
To subscribe for
The Recorder
Only $1 50 a Year.

LADIES' JERSEYS JUST RECEIVED AT
COLTER'S,
Rising Sun, Ind.
At 90c, $1 50, $2, and up to $3 and $4. Our all-Wool Braided Jerseys at $2 is selling fast. As Jerseys have proven to be the most elegant, neat and economical garments, they are becoming very popular and will be worn extensively for the next five years.
The demand is so great that we have been getting in two or three lots a week from our New York Buyer. Having just received 165 Children's Cloaks from the Wolf & Conn failure; also over 200 Cloaks,
New Markets, Russian Circulars and
DOLMANS.
We offer a Black all-Wool Diagonal Russian Circular, with large Fur Collar, two Fur Ornaments on Back, at $5,88, that is worth $11; and other garments of all kinds at $5 to $26.
NEW FALL MILLINERY
Just received. Over One Thousand Men's and Boys' Suits of Good Clothing just received from the failure of Hayes & Thall.
Big Bargains in solid
BOOTS & SHOES.
Give me your money, you shall have its value. You all know that our Motto is "Buy Goods right and they will sell themselves." We have over
Twenty-Thousand Dollars
worth of Goods in the above lines, that would cost one-third more if bought in the old foggy style. We neither buy nor sell on time. Best of Goods at Bottom Prices is our aim. In case we get fire or railroad wreck goods, or goods soiled in any way, we are particular in showing our customers the defects. The most of our goods now come from the financially wrecked merchants and manufacturers.
WM. COLTER, Rising Sun, Ind.
We have just received word that we are to get Four Hundred Good Overcoats at Half Price.

THE RECORDER.

RIDDELL & HALL, Publishers.

BURLINGTON, : : KENTUCKY.

"LEADVILLE JIM."

He came to town one winter day;
He had walked from Leadville all the way;
He went to work in a lumber-yard,
And wrote a letter that ran: "Dear 'Pard,'
Stick to the claim whatever you do,
And remember that Jim will see you through."
For, to quote his partner, "they owned a lead
Mit der shplendidest brosbeets und nodings to ead."

When Sunday came he brushed his coat
And tied a handkerchief round his throat,
Though his feet in hob nailed shoes were shod
He ventured to enter the house of God,
When, sharply scanning his ill-clad feet,
The usher gave him the rearmost seat.
By chance the loveliest girl in town
Came late to the house of God that day,
And, scorning to make a vain display
Of her brand-new beautiful Sunday gown,
Beside the threadbare man sat down.
When the organ pealed she turned to Jim
And kindly offered her book to him.
Held half herself and showed him the place,
And then, with genuine Christian grace,
She sang soprano and he sang bass.
While up in the choir the basso growled,
The tenor, soprano and alto howled,
And the banker's son looked back and scowled.

The preacher closed his sermon grand
With an invitation to "join the band"
Then quietly from his seat up rose
The miner, dressed in his threadbare clothes,
And over the carpeted floor walked down
The aisle of the rich church in town,
In spite of the general shudder and frown,
He joined the church and went his way;
But he did not know he had walked that day
O'er the sensitive corns of pride tough-shod;
For the miner was thinking just then of God.
A little lonely it seemed to him
In the rearmost pew when Sunday came;
One deacon had "dubbed" him "Leadville Jim,"
But the rest had forgotten quite his name,
And yet 'twas never more strange than true;
God sat with the man in the rearmost pew,
Strengthened his arm in the lumber-yard,
And away in the mountains helped his "Pard."

But after awhile a letter came
Which ran: "Dear Yim—I hat sell our claim,
Und I send you a jeck for half der same.
A million I doughi vas a pooty goot brice,
Und my heart said to sell, so I took its advice—
You know what I mean if you lofe a fraulein—
Goot-py. I am going to marry Katrino."

The hob nailed shoes and rusty coat
Were laid aside, and another note
Came rippling out of the public throat,
The miner was now no longer "Jim,"
But the Deacons "Brothered" and "Mistered" him;
Took their buggies and showed him round,
And, more than the fact of his wealth, they found,
Through the papers which told the wondrous tale;
That the fellow had led his class at Yale
Ah! the maidens admired his splendid shape
Which the tailor had matched with careful tape;

But he married the loveliest girl in town,
The one who once by his side sat down,
When up in the choir the basso growled,
The tenor, soprano and alto howled,
And the banker's son looked back and scowled.

—W. W. Fink, in N. Y. Independent.

AN AMICABLE ARRANGEMENT.

Mr. Gimblet, the celebrated ex-detective, was foolish enough to transact his stock exchange business through an outside broker. With all his astuteness he shared the idiosyncrasy of many clever people of being somewhat careless about his private affairs, and the glowing advertisements of Messrs. Vant & Slowbody had proved irresistible. He had not done badly by the firm, upon the whole, when one morning he learned to his great disgust that the junior partner had disappeared after committing extensive defalcations.

Mr. Gimblet, fortunately, had recently realized nearly all his securities and duly received payment. There remained a balance due to him, but it was not very much, and if the failure of Messrs. Vant & Slowbody had occurred in the ordinary way he would have borne his loss with equanimity. But, according to the reports published in the newspapers, it appeared that the misfortune had been entirely brought about by the flagrant dishonesty of Mr. Slowbody, who had taken advantage of his senior's temporary absence to abscond with an enormous sum of money, and had apparently contrived to get clear away with his booty. The greatest sympathy was expressed for Mr. Vant, who had hastened home on hearing the startling news, only to find himself utterly ruined. It made Mr. Gimblet very angry, indeed, to think that he had been robbed, and he determined that Mr. Slowbody should not escape scot free for want of any assistance he could render.

Accordingly Mr. Gimblet attended the preliminary meeting of the creditors of the firm, dressed in his best, with the inevitable flower in his buttonhole. Nobody paid the slightest attention to him, for he modestly kept in the background and took no part in the proceedings. He did not trouble his head by attempting to follow the figures and the dry business details which bore upon the important question of the dividend the estate would yield, but certain parts of Mr. Vant's pathetic and eloquent statement interested him so much that, when the meeting adjourned, he politely accosted that gentleman and requested a few minutes' conversation.

Mr. Vant seemed inclined to resent Mr. Gimblet's demand as an impertinence. He was a florid, elderly man, with a loud voice, and rather pompous manners. He probably considered that after the ample statement he had made, the questions he had satisfactorily answered, and the unanimous vote of sympathy by which his creditors had testified their appreciation of his straightforward conduct, he might be spared the importunities of individual creditors.

"I am afraid that just at this moment I have no time to give you, sir," he replied, glancing rather superciliously at Mr. Gimblet.

"Very well. Only I thought I might possibly be of some service to you," said Mr. Gimblet quietly.

"In what way?" inquired Mr. Vant.

"My name is Gimblet," said the ex-detective, producing one of his business cards.

"Oh! ah! To be sure," said Mr. Vant, with sudden cordiality. "I believe you generally transacted your business through my late partner. That is why I did not recognize you. Come in here."

Mr. Gimblet followed Mr. Vant into a small private room, with a gratified smile upon his shrewd lips. Vanity was the ex-detective's weak point, and he could not help feeling flattered at Mr. Vant's change of manner.

"I believe you are one of the smaller creditors, Mr. Gimblet, fortunately for yourself," remarked Mr. Vant when they were alone.

"Yes," said Mr. Gimblet, taking a mental note of the fact that for the first time during the day Mr. Vant showed signs of mental nervousness. "However I did not wish to trouble you about that."

"Oh, don't consider me for a moment," said Mr. Vant, with a wave of his white hand. "I place myself entirely and unreservedly at the disposition of my creditors. Everything I have in the world—my house, my place, carriages, and even my wife's jewelry—will go toward increasing the dividend and repairing this terrible disaster as far as lies in my power."

"So I understand," said Mr. Gimblet, quite unmoved. "I wanted to ask about Mr. Slowbody."

"A warrant has been issued for his apprehension," returned Mr. Vant, somewhat impatiently.

"Yes, sir, I know. But not until too late."

"What do you mean? I gave information to the police within an hour of my return home," said Mr. Vant, reddening slightly.

"I understand the facts are these," said Mr. Gimblet. "You and your family were staying at Biarritz."

"We had been there two months," interposed Mr. Vant.

"Exactly. You had no suspicion of your partner's proceedings until ——"

"Until I received his letter written from Queenstown, informing me of his flight," interrupted Mr. Vant, quickly. "I immediately started home by the first train, and, after spending half an hour here, I called in the police. You see I did not lose a moment."

"No; but the letter did not reach you till several days—more than a week, in fact—after date," remarked Mr. Gimblet.

"That is so. Unfortunately I had left Biarritz with my family the day before the letter arrived there. Consequently it had to be forwarded on to Paris, and that caused delay."

"Mr. Slowbody had plenty of time to reach America, if that was his destination, between the date of his letter and the time of your giving information to the police," said Mr. Gimblet, musingly.

"That may be. I presume these questions have reference to a desire on your part to assist in apprehending my late partner?" said Mr. Vant, drawing himself up.

"Most certainly. Considering that he has robbed and ruined you, no one in his senses would imagine you desired to assist his escape," said Mr. Gimblet, with an innocent air.

"My dear sir, I—I am a Christian, a professing Christian certainly, and I hope a sincere one. At the same time I can not help feeling vindictive toward my late partner. As you say, he has robbed and ruined me. When I think of the misery and suffering he has wrought ——"

"What do the police say, sir?" said Mr. Gimblet, interrupting Mr. Vant's remarks with scant courtesy.

"Well, they have no clue at present, but they are hopeful," answered Mr. Vant. "I am sure they would be grateful for any suggestion you could make to them."

"No, they wouldn't, because I might tell them that they are on the wrong scent altogether," said Mr. Gimblet, looking his companion straight in the face. "However," feigning not to notice Mr. Vant's start and look of confusion. "I never interfere in what doesn't concern me. The police can go their way, and I will go mine."

"You are exceedingly kind," returned Mr. Vant evidently striving to appear cordial, "to interest yourself about the matter."

"Don't mention it, sir," said Mr. Gimblet, taking up his hat; "you see I've been robbed that is the long and short of it. I've not lost much; it's the having been swindled that riles me. I should like to be even with Mr. Slowbody."

"You are not singular in that desire, Mr. Gimblet, said Mr. Vant, extending his hand. 'Anything you have to suggest shall receive the most careful attention."

Mr. Gimblet wended his way homeward in a very thoughtful frame of mind after this interview. The fact was that he felt completely mystified by Mr. Vant's behavior. While that gentleman was making his statement to his creditors, the ex-detective had been struck by the suspicion that he was acting a part. The idea came to him with the force and suddenness which he had learned from experience to associate with a happy inspiration. The great secret of Mr. Gimblet's success in his peculiar line of business was the singular knack of forming a correct conclusion without the process of reasoning. He was by no means wanting in logical perception, but he was frequently aided in his investigations by a sort of intuition which put him on the right track when others were vainly groping in the dark. He had instinctively distrusted Mr. Vant from the moment he commenced his speech, and when the proceedings terminated he felt impelled to engage him in conversation in order to gauge his character. He had no difficulty in this, for Mr. Vant's demeanor had not been calculated to inspire confidence. In fact, Mr. Gimblet had a very strong impression that, in spite of direct evidence to the contrary, the gentleman was no more entitled to sympathy than his defaulting partner.

When he came to consider the details, however, Mr. Gimblet was inclined to mistrust his opinion. It was quite clear that Mr. Slowbody had decamped, as alleged, and had involved his partner in ruin. The report of the accountants, a firm of high standing, proved indisputably not only that Mr. Slowbody had robbed his clients, but also that he had pledged property belonging to Mr. Vant, besides appropriating the whole of their joint capital. The statement of affairs disclosed the most shameful frauds on the part of Mr. Slowbody, in none of which was there the slightest evidence to show that Mr Vant had been implicated. In fact, the surrounding circumstances all pointed to the innocence of the senior partner, and no shadow of suspicion appeared to rest upon him. But when Mr. Gimblet was seized with an idea he did not easily suffer himself to be disconcerted by adverse facts. Consequently, when he reached his dingy office, he said to one of his assistants:

"Grainge, you live at Clapham, don't you?"

"Yes, sir."

"I want you to make a few inquiries about a Mr. Vant," said Mr. Gimblet, thoughtfully drawing crosses with his pen on his blotting-pad.

"Is that the gentleman who has been swindled by his partner?"

"Yes. The matter does not press at all; any time will do. Just find out when he left Biarritz, and what day he received in Paris the news of his partner's disappearance. You may be able to get it from one of the servants."

After this Mr. Gimblet dismissed the subject from his mind for some days, having more important business on hand. He learned from the newspapers that no clue had been obtained as to the whereabouts of the defaulting partner, and it seemed pretty certain that he had made good his escape. At length his subordinate reminded him of the mission he had intrusted to him.

"Well, what have you ascertained?"

"I made the acquaintance of the gentleman's valet, sir, who accompanied the family to Biarritz."

"Yes?"

"Every one in Clapham sympathizes very much with Mr. Vant. The house and furniture are to be sold, and the servants have all received notice."

"Of course" said Mr. Gimblet, impatiently.

"The family stayed at Biarritz nearly two months, at the Hotel d' Angleterre. They left on the 20th of January and went to Paris. The letter followed them there with other letters from Biarritz some days later."

"Yes?"

"The valet was in the room when the letter arrived. Mr. Vant opened it, and was dreadfully upset. Of course, the valet did not know what had happened at the time, but he guessed there was something wrong by the way Mr. Vant abused him for picking up the envelope from the floor."

"Oh! How was that?" inquired Mr. Gimblet, with sudden interest.

"The valet stooped to pick up the envelope which had fallen. Mr. Vant pounced upon him directly and snatched it away from him and destroyed it in a passion."

"I suppose he saw the man looking curiously at some postmark or something," said Mr. Gimblet, thoughtfully.

"I suppose he did, but the valet didn't notice anything except that the letter had a Spanish stamp."

"Eh?" exclaimed Mr. Gimblet, quickly.

"That is what the man said, sir," said the clerk, a little startled by an abrupt movement of his master

"Very well. What else?" inquired Mr. Gimblet.

It was evident, however, that his mind was pre-occupied, and that he paid but little attention to the remaining details which his assistant related. The latter were quite unimportant, and when the man had finished Mr. Gimblet dismissed him without asking anything further. But the incident of the letter—or rather the envelope—afforded him food for reflection. The letter professed to have been written from Queenstown, and to have come from there. Mr. Gimblet had seen a copy of it, the original being in the hands of the police. Obviously the envelope containing it ought to have been marked by an English stamp. The fact of its having a Spanish stamp showed conclusively that it had not been posted in Ireland. Of course it was just possible that the valet might have been mistaken at a hasty glance; but, on the other hand, why should Mr. Vant have seized it so anxiously, and why had he destroyed so important a piece of evidence? Upon the whole, Mr. Gimblet was inclined to believe the correctness of the valet's story; and this suggested the inference that Mr. Vant had deliberately been misleading the police and his creditors for the purpose of screening his partner.

The train of thought which followed this discovery kept Mr. Gimblet's mind fully occupied for half an hour, during which he sat at his desk whistling softly to himself, with a very knowing expression. At length he roused himself from his reverie and started off into the city, where he paid a visit to Mr. Vant

"I've called, sir," he said, quietly, upon being ushered into the gentleman's office, "with reference to our conversation the other day."

"Ah! very glad to see you, Mr. Gimblet," said Mr. Vant, who had been permitted, owing to the sympathy of his creditors, to continue his business under favorable circumstances. "There is no news, I am sorry to say. I suppose you have none?"

"Well, I think I've found out something, sir," said Mr. Gimblet, with edifying humility.

"Indeed! What is it?" inquired Mr. Vant, condescendingly.

"You said the letter announcing the flight of your partner came from Queenstown?"

"So it did. The police have it."

"It professed to come from Queenstown, but I can prove that it really came from Spain, and that you knew it," said Mr. Gimblet, in a matter-of-fact tone.

Mr. Vant fell back in his chair as though he had been shot, and turned as pale as marble. The ex-detective's calm and penetrating gaze caused the denial he attempted to utter to die on his lips. After a pause he said, hoarsely:

"I did it for the best. He had wronged me, but he had been my friend. I had no other motive."

"You may tell that to the marines, sir," said Mr. Gimblet, with a wink. "Do you mind my telling you a little story?"

"What about?" murmured Mr. Vant.

"About two friends of mine—call 'em Smith and Jones," began Mr. Gimblet, quite cheerfully. "Smith and Jones were in business together, but things went from bad to worse, till nothing remained but to shut up shop. But Smith, who was an enterprising fellow, proposed to Jones to raise all the money they could, to collar everything they could lay their hands on, and to make a bolt."

"Nothing of the kind! nothing of the kind!" gasped Mr. Vant.

"But Jones had a better idea than that," resumed Mr. Gimblet. "He suggested instead that Smith should do as he proposed and leave him behind. This arrangement would suit both of them. Smith would have more capital to make a fresh start in another country; while Jones would remain behind and pose as a martyr. You see, sir, a crash was inevitable; Jones was bound to have lost everything, and he preferred to do so under circumstances that would secure popular sympathy and induce his friends to come forward. Besides, of course, he was to have part of the swag on the quiet."

"No. I'll swear, not a farthing," cried Mr. Vant, vehemently. "It's—it's a lie, all of it," he added, evidently beside himself.

"There is a precious lot of money gone, Mr. Vant," said Mr. Gimblet, meaningly.

"Look here, Mr. Gimblet," said Mr. Vant, making a desperate effort to recover his composure and dropping his voice to a tremulous whisper, "suppose everything had happened precisely as you say, what could you prove?"

"I should leave that to others," replied Mr. Gimblet, evasively.

"But nobody could prove anything. Do you doubt, if I had done as you suggest, I should not have taken every possible precaution. As regards your wonderful discovery about the letter having come from Spain ——"

"Well?" inquired Mr. Gimblet, as his companion paused.

"I deny it; but still—name your price."—London Truth.

Special Work of Special Brain-Regions.

What has thus been proved of the location of perception by sight, and of sight-memories in the posterior part of the brain, has also been proved of other senses and their memories. The perception of sound and sound-memories are destroyed when the lower part of the brain (the temporal region) is injured, but are not affected as long as this region remains intact. When the anterior of this region is destroyed, the animal becomes deaf to sounds of a low pitch; when the posterior portion is injured, high notes are no longer heard. If the region is entirely extirpated, the animal is totally and permanently deaf. If it is only partly extirpated, the animal loses all memory of words or commands formerly recognized, attaches no meaning to the cry of its puppies, to the snap of the whip, or to its master's whistle. The perception of touch and its memories are destroyed when the upper lateral portion of the brain is injured (the parietal region). Voluntary motion is suspended when the antero-lateral portion is destroyed. If the destruction of this part is complete, the paralysis is permanent; if not, recovery is possible. In all these regions the distinction between actual and potential obtains: if the actual area only is cut out, the acquisitions already gained are lost; but, as long as some of the potential area remains, the power to acquire is present and recovery is possible.

Thus, by experiment, a number of regions are mapped out on the surface of the brain and the function of each is determined. When the results of the physiologists are compared with those of the anatomists, they are found to agree. The area of the brain which the physiologist has shown to govern sight has been shown by the anatomist to be connected by means of insulated white nerve-fibers with the eye. The area which, one says, governs touch, the other says is connected with the skin. The area which one proves to be concerned with voluntary movements, the other finds to be joined to the muscles. Thus the two independent lines of evidence unite in indicating that each region of the brain has its own work to do, its own memories to preserve.—Popular Science Monthly.

—Pittsburgh is said to have the largest variety, as well as some of the handsomest bridges in the country, representing all styles of architecture and material.

Changes in Forest Growth.

The changes which often occur in the character of the trees that spring up after a forest has been destroyed by fire or otherwise, have led many persons to think that it was the result of a natural tendency to a rotation in this class of vegetation. If pine forests are destroyed by fire they are frequently followed by a growth of oak and hickory, and this is especially true in some of the Atlantic States. But this change can readily be accounted for from the fact that the pine stumps and roots do not throw up sprouts, and the pine seeds and small seedlings are far more quickly destroyed than the nuts of the oak or hickories; and furthermore, the roots and stumps of these same trees do not burn as readily as those of the pine, and will also withstand a far higher temperature without serious injury. In all of the pine forests that we have examined, in the localities named, we have always found more or less scrub oaks and stunted hickories, and similar species of deciduous trees which the deep shade of the pines had kept in check, only a few obtaining sufficient sunlight to insure a vigorous and natural growth; but, so soon as the shade is removed by the destruction of the evergreen trees, they make their presence known by shooting up rapidly.

The casual observer of such sudden changes in the appearance of forest growths, without knowing the facts is often led to believe in the erroneous theory of spontaneous generation of plants. In fact, we have often heard it asserted that the oaks, hickories, and other species of trees that are known to spring up on what are called the pine lands of New Jersey and Long Island, were spontaneous productions of the soil, and did not spring from either seed or roots; but a close examination will prove this to be an error, for all of these trees are sprouts from old roots or well developed seeds. In most of these forests the oaks and other species of deciduous trees have been cut out from time to time during the past century or longer, and this left the pines more room to grow, spread out, and shade the ground once occupied by the kinds of trees removed, and in this way forests that a century ago were composed of mixed species are now almost exclusively pine. In some parts of the South the same change is observed, and the pine is followed by the oaks indigenous to the region, while in other localities the pines take possession of abandoned plantations and old fields, even where the original forests were composed principally of deciduous species. Almost the same thing usually occurs in New Jersey when fields are abandoned, only it is the common red cedar that has possession of them instead of pines, the seeds of the cedar probably being widely distributed by birds which feed on the berries in autumn.

In regions where the deciduous species make up the bulk of the forests, the kinds that spread most rapidly into uncultivated fields and out on the prairies are those that have winged seeds, like the maples, ash and elms, for these are widely scattered by the wind, and it is quite probable that if the Indians had ceased burning off the grass on the prairies two or three centuries ago, our pioneers in Illinois, Wisconsin and adjoining States would have found great forests, instead of an open and sparsely wooded country. The annual fires kept down the shrubby growth, besides constantly encroaching upon the forests, but, as soon as these fires ceased, the trees again began to advance, and in some instances spread out miles beyond the former boundaries of the forests, before the plow of the husbandman made further progress impossible.

After leaving what may be termed the Mississippi Valley, we reach the plains, where for a thousand miles westward tree culture is a thing to be tested, but with a fair chance of its success only in the more favorable valleys, or where irrigation is practicable. On the foothills and mountains, after crossing the plains, forests again appear, and although miners, lumbermen and the ore smelters have made sad havoc of the forests of the Rocky Mountain regions, they have scarcely been more destructive than the ever recurring forest fires in those regions. When the trees have been cut off by lumbermen or for cord wood, new growths spring up of the same or closely allied species of those that are removed, and we do not now remember to have ever observed that any different species came in to replace those destroyed, except in some instances where the land had been burned over by accident or design. Wherever fires are kept out of these clearings, seedlings spring up in greater or less abundance, and, if not disturbed, new forests will soon be found in the place of the old, composed of the same or similar species of trees. What is most needed in all forest-covered regions, or where forests have been removed, is protection to new growths, and if this is afforded, renewals will go on rapidly and uniformly, even without the aid of man. It is true, however, that foresters can be of great service in increasing the value of forests by a judicious system of thinning out, destroying the less valuable kinds to make room for better. Some of the most worthless trees for either timber or fuel grow very rapidly, and will, if permitted to do so, crowd out and overgrow the very choicest kinds. Protection and proper directions are all that are positively necessary to restore and preserve the forests of this country.—N. Y. Sun.

Danger in Cooking Utensils.

Apart from the danger which, according to doctors, we run of being poisoned by nearly every description of food we eat, there is another risk quite as serious involved by the consumption of cooked food, however wholesome of itself, which has not yet received the attention it deserves. It is to be feared that a thorough overhauling of kitchen utensils, even in well-regulated households, would lead to some alarming revelations from a sanitary point of view as to the condition of these articles. Some remarks bearing on this point which may be of value to those who are anxious to preserve life and health are to be found in the report of the Inland Revenue Laboratory for the past year, just issued. Speaking of samples received at the laboratory for analysis from the Admiralty, the report says that special attention appears to have been directed by that department to the character of the enamel linings of cooking utensils. It is well known that most of the enamels contain considerable quantities of lead and arsenic in a condition easily acted on by vegetable acids, and many of the specimens analyzed consisted of the enamel and glaze of dishes suspected to contain those metals. The results of the analysis showed the necessity of the examination; for many of the enamels contained dangerous quantities of lead and arsenic, and proved that most of the utensils could not be recommended to be used with safety, while a few showed that it was practicable to prepare an enamel and glaze free from hurtful substances. The moral to be drawn from these observations is: Look not only to the food you eat, but also to the vessel in which it is cooked.—St. James' Gazette.

—Some summer boarders from New York, passing the summer on the Shawangunk Mountain, back of Ellenville, N. Y., entered a cave the other day, where snow is always to be found, and ladies and gentlemen both indulged in a snowball carnival.—Albany Journal.

HOME AND FARM.

—Cup Sponge Cake: Beat two eggs in a cup, fill with sweet cream, and add one teacup of sugar, one and one-half of flour.—The Household.

—Bands on fruit trees make good breeding places for the moths if not examined every seven or nine days. By all means do not encourage them by neglecting the bands if they are used.—Exchange.

—Cookery is, above all others, a traditional and practical art, and unless recipes have stood the test of time and experience, and general approval, they are little worthy.—Cincinnati Times.

—Keep a few sheets of fine sandpaper at the barn, and when the handle of hoe, rake, or plow gets roughened by getting wet, it may be made smooth again in a minute's time.

—A nice way to cook fish is to steam till tender, remove the bones and scatter pepper over it. Serve with a sauce made of milk thickened with flour, with one or two hard boiled eggs chipped and mixed with it, and a little parsley for flavoring.—Troy Times.

—A farmer, speaking of growing squashes, melons and cucumbers, says he has had best success in planting them in his potato plot. They were planted in separate hills, of course, and as they ran and needed more room, the potatoes were dug, making clean, fresh soil for the vines to extend over.—Chicago Times.

—Spiced gingernuts: one cupful of molasses, half a cupful of brown sugar, one cupful of butter, half a cupful of sour milk, one teaspoonful of ginger, one teaspoonful each of cinnamon, clove and nutmeg, two teaspoonfuls of soda, flour to roll. Cut out with a small cutter. The molasses is improved by boiling.—Boston Budget.

—Ginger drops, which children can be allowed to make for themselves, afford more pleasure than the occasion seems to warrant. Take half a pound of sugar, sift a tablespoonful, or more if you wish a strong flavor, of ginger, add a little water; let this come to a boil, then drop on paper, and let them stand in a cool oven till they are dry. Only enough water should be added to moisten the sugar.—N. Y. Post.

—The inefficiency of the common practice of spading small circles about trees standing in grass is not well understood. The roots run as far on each side as the height of the tree (usually farther), and a ten-year-old tree, fifteen feet high, stands in a circle of its own roots thirty feet in diameter. A three-feet circle, as often seen, occupies therefore only a hundredth part of the roots.—Albany Journal.

—Live-forever is a weed that requires thorough treatment to subdue it. The best remedy is to plow the land in the dryest time in the summer, rather shallow, and let the surface ground be thoroughly dried, by which the plants will be killed. To cultivate the ground only spreads this pest, as broken leaves of it will root and make plants. But when it is merely turned and then baked in the hot sun it has no chance. The land might be replowed crosswise late in the fall, which would again turn over any roots that had escaped the previous plowing.

Various Mourning Dresses.

Severe effects given by straight lines and long folds are used for mourning dresses, instead of the curved bouffant draperies in vogue for colored costumes. Flounces laid in narrow plaits have given place to smooth bias folds, or else tucks done in the skirt. Broad flat panels are arranged on side breadths, or three very wide box plaits that look like panels trim the front and sides, and there are narrower kilt plaits in the back. These lengthwise plaits and panels are liked for short women, while those who are tall use crosswise folds or tucks. Sometimes the folds or tucks are only at the foot of the skirt and up the whole of the left side, which is disclosed by an opening of the long over-skirt. The folds, whether of dress goods or of English crape, must be cut exactly bias, and are from three to four inches wide. Those of crape are usually double, and have the upper edge turned in at the top; those of woollen stuffs are single, but are lined with crinoline lawn to stiffen them slightly; they are sewed in to lap over the seam that holds the fold next below it in place. Wider folds, that require but five or seven to cover the dress skirt, are very difficult to arrange neatly, and should not be attempted by the amateur dressmaker. Wide tucks from an inch and a half to three inches broad are easier to make, and are quite effective, especially for simple woolens, such as Cheviot, tamise cloth, or flannel, and are also liked for nice veiling dresses. An appropriate skirt of this kind has two wide double box pleats made of a width and a half of the material, forming the entire back of the dress; these back pleats look well when tucked in four or five rows across the foot. When two single widths are arranged in high back drapery they may also have tucks for a finish. In the front breadths are more tucks, falling in a narrow pleating at the foot, and there is a side pointed apron for drapery. When crape trimmings are used, folds of crape made lapping are placed across the front breadths of the skirt, or else three or five lengthwise pleats of crape trim it from belt to foot in front and on the sides. The skirt in wide kilt pleats, so much liked by young women, may first have two or three bias bands of crape laid upon it before pleating. Square plastrons or vests are made of the crape placed smooth and straight, or else gathered full in Fedora style, while that for the collar and cuffs is usually a double fold, which must be perfectly bias or it will not be smooth. Some new effects are given by folds of grenadine or of Henrietta cloth lined with crape, and the crape lining turned upward half its depth on one side of the skirt front, and the material of the dress on the other half showing only a piping of the crape. The sleeves of mourning dresses are closely fitted, covering the arm smoothly to the wrist, and being plainly finished there, only following current modes in being more or less high and full at the armholes. The neck of such dresses is cut very high, and has a broad collar standing close against the throat. Small, round, flat button-molds covered with the dress goods or with crape fasten the waist, and are not used otherwise.

Simple styles and a fine fit are the distinguishing features of first mourning dresses, and to obtain these the tailor fashions now in vogue are adopted, especially for Cheviots, tamise, and flannel dresses. A few dresses well made and of good material are preferred to a greater variety when wearing mourning, and women, of experience say three dresses—good, better, and best—will furnish something suitable for most occasions, and are all that are needed when mourning is first put on. As we have said, lighter and more comfortable mourning dresses are now used, and the tendency is toward wearing it a much shorter time than was formerly done; each family, however, has its own customs about these matters, and there are no rules that apply to all.—Harper's Bazar.

—They are printing cottons for dresses with woodland and garden scenes, the colors being very bright and gay. This will enable milliners to make these startling combinations sometimes seen upon the stage when the hurried shifters join a forest with a street perspective.—Current.

—Hereafter divers on English ships will be supplied with the telephones. "A voice from the deep" will be an established fact then.—Brooklyn Times.

BAFFLED!

One of the Most Unaccountable and Dangerous of Recent Deceits Discovered and Exposed.

There is some mysterious trouble that is attacking nearly everyone in the land with more or less violence. It seems to steal into the body like a thief in the night. Doctors can not diagnose it. Scientists are puzzled by its symptoms. It is, indeed, a modern mystery. Like those severe and vague maladies that attack horses and prostrate nearly all the animals in the land, this subtle trouble seems to menace mankind. Many of its victims have pains about the chest and sides, and sometimes in the back. They feel dull and sleepy; the mouth has a bad taste, especially in the morning. A strange sticky slime collects about the teeth. The appetite is poor. There is a feeling like a heavy load upon the stomach; sometimes a faint all-gone sensation is felt at the pit of the stomach, which food does not satisfy. The eyes grow sunken, the hands and feet feel clammy at one time and burn intensely at others. After a while a cough sets in, at first dry, but after a few months it is attended with a greyish colored expectoration. The afflicted one feels tired all the while, and sleep does not seem to afford any rest. He becomes nervous, irritable, and gloomy, and has evil forebodings. There is a giddiness, a peculiar whirling sensation in the head when rising up suddenly. The bowels become costive, and then, again, outflux intensely; the skin is dry and hot at times; the blood grows thick and stagnant; the whites of the eyes become tinged with yellow; the urine is scanty and high-colored, depositing a sediment after standing. There is frequently a spitting up of the food, sometimes with a sour taste, and sometimes with a sweetish taste; this is often attended with palpitation of the heart. The vision becomes impaired with spots before the eyes; there is a feeling of prostration and great weakness. Most of these symptoms are in turn present. It is thought that nearly one-third of our population have this disorder in some of its varied forms, while medical men have almost wholly mistaken its nature. Some have treated it for one complaint; some for another, but nearly all have failed to reach the seat of the disorder. Indeed, many physicians are afflicted with it themselves. The experience of Dr. A. G. Richards, residing at No. 468 Tremont street, Boston, is thus described by himself:

"I had all those peculiar and painful symptoms which I have found afflicting so many of my patients, and which had so often baffled me. I knew all the commonly established remedies would be unavailing for I had tried them often in the past. I therefore determined to strike out in a new path. To my intense satisfaction I found that I was improving. The dull, stupid feeling departed and I began to enjoy life once more. My appetite returned. My sleep was refreshing. The color of my face which had been a sickly yellow gradually assumed the pink tinge of health. In the course of three weeks I felt like a new man and know that it was wholly owing to the wonderful efficiency of Warner's Tippecanoe The Best, which was all the medicine I took."

Doctors and scientists often exhaust their skill and the patient dies. They try everything that has been used by, or is known to, the profession, and then fail. Even if they save the life it is often after great and prolonged agony. Where all this can be avoided by precaution and care, how insane a thing it is to endure such suffering! With a pure and palatable preparation within reach, to neglect its use is simply inexcusable.

Giving a Hint to Nature.

Again, in "Murphy's Master," I got rid of a great number of disagreeable characters on an island in the Indian Seas by the simple though startling device of submerging the island itself; the few respectable persons who inhabited it (including the hero and heroine) being most properly and providentially saved in a fishing boat. Some critics thought it audacious; but nature was so favorably impressed by my little plan that she used it herself two years afterward, and in a more comprehensive way than I should have dared to invent; an island in the Bay of Bengal, with the Kinshra Lighthouse upon it, with seven scientific assistants, being submerged in a precisely similar manner. I do not wish to be hard upon nature, and, without giving details, which could not but wound her amour propre, will merely remark that she committed a similar act of piracy in the case of my novel, "Found Dead."—James Payn in Cornhill Magazine.

For the Cook.

Restaurant proprietors are not always bad masters. "Here!" called a man, making an impatient gesture which quickly brought the negro waiter "This is the worst piece of beefsteak I ever saw."

"What's de matter wid it, boss? Ain't It healthy?"

"Healthy! why, it was fed on the Banting system—all muscle and no fat. Can't you bring me a better piece?"

"No, sah, dat's de bes' we's got."

"I saw a boy go through here just now with the finest kind of a steak."

"Yes, sah, but dat was fur de cook."

"For the cook!"

"Yas, sah. We's sorter behind wid de cook's wages, sah, and we haster feed him well ter keep him frum leabin' us in de lurch Come 'roun' some time when we'se squar' wid de gennerman an' we'll feed yer in great shape, sah."—Arkansaw Traveler.

—A school teacher, having occasion, a few days since, to punish one of his pupils for some misdemeanor, placed him on the platform to wait until he had heard some classes recite; but the culprit took advantage of the teacher's engagement and escaped from the schoolhouse. The teacher, being somewhat vexed, promised another scholar a reward of twenty-five cents if he would bring the runaway back to the schoolhouse. Before this could be accomplished, however, the boy who had escaped heard of the offered reward, and sent word to the teacher that he would "return and take the licking for ten cents—cash down."—New York Ledger.

—The project of an American exposition in London in 1886 attracts more attention in the press of England than in that of this country.

THE MARKETS.

CINCINNATI, September 9, 1884.

LIVE STOCK—Cattle—Common	$2 00	@ 2 85
Choice butchers	4 00	@ 4 75
HOGS—Common	4 00	@ 5 60
Good packers	5 40	@ 5 85
SHEEP—Good to choice	3 50	@ 4 00
FLOUR—Family	4 25	@ 4 65
GRAIN—Wheat—Longberry red		@ 81
No. 2 red		@ 80
Corn—No. 2 mixed		@ 54½
Oats—No. 2 mixed		@ 27½
Rye—No. 2		@ 55½
HAY—Timothy No. 1	11 00	@ 11 50
HEMP—Double dressed	8 75	@ 9 00
PROVISIONS—Pork—Mess	17 00	@ 17 25
Lard—Prime steam		@ 7 85
BUTTER—Fancy Dairy	18	@ 20
Prime Creamery	25	@ 28
FRUIT AND VEGETABLES—
Potatoes, per barrel	1 75	@ 2 00
Apples, prime, per barrel	1 50	@ 2 50
NEW YORK.
FLOUR—State and Western	$2 40	@ 2 90
Good to choice	3 55	@ 5 75
GRAIN—Wheat—No. 2 Chicago		@ 88
No. 2 red	86¼	@ 88⅜
Corn—No. 2 mixed	68	@ 70
Oats—mixed	34	@ 35
PORK—Mess	18 00	@ 18 25
LARD—Western steam		@ 7 82½
CHICAGO.
FLOUR—State and Western	$3 50	@ 5 00
GRAIN—Wheat—No. 2 red		@ 79
No. 2 Chicago Spring	76	@ 76⅞
Corn—No. 2	56	@ 56½
Oats—No. 2		@ 25½
Rye		@ 54
PORK—Mess	18 50	@ 19 00
LARD—Steam	7 82½	@ 7 87½
BALTIMORE.
FLOUR—Family	$4 00	@ 5 00
GRAIN—Wheat—No. 2	86½	@ 86¾
Corn—mixed	60½	@ 61
Oats—mixed	30	@ 33
PROVISIONS—Pork—Mess		@ 19 25
Lard—Refined		@ 9¼
INDIANAPOLIS.
WHEAT—No. 2 red		@ 77
CORN—mixed		@ 48
OATS—mixed		@ 25
LOUISVILLE.
FLOUR—A No. 1	$4 15	@ 4 25
GRAIN—Wheat—No. 2 red	75	@ 80
Corn—mixed		@ 58
Oats—mixed		@ 29
PORK—mess		@ 18 50
LARD—steam		@ 9¼

—Gen. Davis, of the British army, who was a famous insect collector, once picked up a wheelbug in West India islands, and received a blow that paralized his arm for some time. As he shook the insect off he noticed where it had stood on his hand six red marks, the impression of its feet. Kirby and Spence also refer to this peculiarity of the insect, and other naturalists have received shocks from certain luminous beetles. Capt. Blakeney took up an unknown caterpillar and immediately received such a shock that his entire right side became paralyzed, and for a long time he was dangerously ill.

A PRETTY girl up town says the cholera is like a traveling man, because it never goes anywhere without its grip.—Merchant Traveler.

"Rough on Corns." 15c. Ask for it. Complete cure, hard or soft corns, warts, bunions.

BURNT offerings—Cigar stumps.—Merchant Traveler.

"Mother Swan's Worm Syrup," for feverishness, worms, constipation, tasteless. 25c

A RARE specimen — Restaurant beefsteak.—Boston Post.

J. C. GRAY, of Dadeville, Ala., writes us: "I have been using DR. WM. HALL'S BALSAM FOR THE LUNGS; it is far superior to any other lung preparation. My mother was confined to her bed four weeks with a cough; when I got one bottle of DR. WM. HALL'S BALSAM, she began to mend right away. I can say in truth that IT WAS THE MEANS OF SAVING HER LIFE."

THE woman who powders her face and bangs her hair should wear a shot silk dress.—N. Y. Journal.

Skinny Men. "Wells' Health Renewer" restores health and vigor, cures Dyspepsia, $1.

WHO of us ever untied a knot in a cord of wood?—Lumberman's Record.

IT is truly wonderful to see how the name of Mrs. Pinkham is a household word among the wives and mothers of our land. Alike in the luxurious homes of our great cities and in the humble cabins of the remote frontier one woman's deeds have borne their kindly fruit in health for others.

IF carbolic acid doesn't suit you as a disinfectant, then bi-chloride of mercury.—St. Louis Critic.

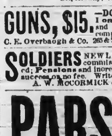
"Buchu-paiba." Quick, complete cure, all annoying Kidney and Urinary Diseases, $1.

THE policeman is a rrestive sort of a character.—Marathon Independent.

IF you want a fine looking Face,
And a Skin rosy and clear,
Use "BEESON'S" Sulphur Soap; all Trace
Of disease will disappear.
☞Sold by druggists, etc., everywhere.

"I HAVE just returned from a tour through Cork," as the corkscrew said to the stopper.

Glenn's Sulphur Soap.
No specific for skin ailments can cope with it. Hill's Hair and Whisker Dye, 50c.



MEN and horses differ. The latter is worthless unless he is broke, and the former is worthless if he is ditto.

"Rough on Coughs," 15c., at Druggists. Complete cure Coughs, Hoarseness, Sore Throat.

AN old-fashioned knight-cap—A helmet.—N. Y. Mail and Express.

PISO'S CURE for Consumption does not dry up a cough; it removes the cause.

St. Jacobs Oil
THE GREAT GERMAN REMEDY
For Pain!
Relieves and cures
RHEUMATISM, Neuralgia, SCIATICA, LUMBAGO, BACKACHE, Headache, Toothache, SORE THROAT, QUINSY, SWELLINGS, SPRAINS, Soreness, Cuts, Bruises, FROSTBITES, BURNS, SCALDS,
And all other bodily aches and pains.
FIFTY CENTS A BOTTLE.
Sold by all Druggists and Dealers. Directions in 11 languages.
The Charles A. Vogeler Co. (Successors to A. VOGELER & CO.) Baltimore, Md., U.S.A.

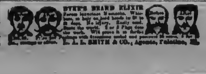
CATARRH

HAY-FEVER
HAY-FEVER. I have been a Hay-Fever sufferer three years; have often heard Ely's Cream Balm spoken of in the highest terms, did not take much stock in it because of the many quack medicines. A friend persuaded me to try the Balm, and with the most wonderful success.—T. S. GEER, Syracuse, N. Y.
Ely's Cream Balm is a remedy based upon a correct diagnosis of this disease and can be depended upon. 50 cts. at druggists; 60 cts. by mail. Sample bottle by mail 10 cts. ELY BROS., Druggists, Owego, N. Y.

25 CTS PISO'S CURE FOR CONSUMPTION 25 CTS
CURES WHERE ALL ELSE FAILS. Best Cough Syrup. Tastes good. Use in time. Sold by druggists.

SUPERFLUOUS HAIR, Moles, Warts, Freckles, Moth Patches, Eruptions, Scars, and all Disfigurements and Imperfections of the Face, Hands and Feet, and their treatment. by Dr. John H. Woodbury, 37 N. Pearl St., Albany, N. Y. Send 10c. for book.

GUNS, $15. —DOUBLE Barrel Breech Loaders, Rebounding Locks and Pistol Grip, with outfit complete. Send for price list. C. E. Overbaugh & Co. 265 & 267 Broadway, New York.



SOLDIERS NEW LAWS; Officers' pay from commissions; Deserters relieved; Pensions and increase; experience 19 years; success or no fee. Write for circulars and laws. A. W. McCORMICK & SON, Cincinnati, Ohio.

PARSONS' PURGATIVE PILLS MAKE NEW RICH BLOOD,
Positively cure SICK-HEADACHE, Biliousness, and all LIVER and BOWEL Complaints, MALARIA, BLOOD POISON, and Skin Diseases (ONE PILL A DOSE). For Female Complaints these Pills have no equal. "I find them a valuable Cathartic and Liver Pill.—Dr. T. M. Palmer, Monticello, Fla." "In my practice I use no other.—J. Dennison, M.D., DeWitt, Iowa." Sold everywhere, or sent by mail for 25 cts. in stamps. Valuable information FREE. I. S. JOHNSON & CO., BOSTON, MASS.

CUT THIS OUT AND SEND WITH YOUR ORDER.

NATIONAL LIVE STOCK REMEDY CO., 175 DEARBORN STREET, CHICAGO.

NOW IS THE TIME.
To prevent and cure all "Skin Diseases," and to secure a white, soft and beautiful Complexion, use
=BEESON'S=
Aromatic Alum Sulphur Soap.
Sold by Druggists. One cake will be sent on receipt of 25 cents to any address.
WM. DREYDOPPEL, Manufacturer, 208 North Front Street, Philadelphia, Pa.
BEST and most economical Laundry Soap for Washing, especially Merino, Woolens and Undergarments (cleans perfect and easy; makes clothes white and sweet) is DREYDOPPEL'S Borax Soap.
Sold by all wholesale grocers and first-class retailers.

DYER'S BEARD ELIXIR

"I Have Suffered!"

With every disease imaginable for the last three years. Our Druggist, T. J. Anderson, recommending "Hop Bitters" to me,
I used two bottles!
Am entirely cured, and heartily recommend Hop Bitters to every one. J. D. Walker, Buckner, Mo.

I write this as a
Token of the great appreciation I have of your Hop
* * * Bitters. I was afflicted
With inflammatory rheumatism!!!
For nearly
Seven years, and no medicine seemed to do me any Good!!
Until I tried two bottles of your Hop Bitters, and to my surprise I am as well to-day as ever I was. I hope "You may have abundant success"
"In this great and"
Valuable medicine:
Anyone! * * wishing to know more about my cure?
Can learn by addressing me, E. M. Williams, 1103 16th street, Washington, D. C.

——I consider your
Remedy the best remedy in existence
For Indigestion, kidney —Complaint
"And nervous debility. I have just"
Returned
"From the south in a fruitless search for health, and find that your Bitters are doing me more
Good!
Than anything else;
A month ago I was extremely
"Emaciated!!!"
And scarcely able to walk. Now I am
Gaining strength! and
"Flesh!"
And hardly a day passes but what I am * * * * complimented on my improved appearance, and it is all due to Hop Bitters! J. Wickliffe Jackson.
—Wilmington, Del.

☞None genuine without a bunch of green Hops on the white label. Shun all the vile, poisonous stuff with "Hop" or "Hops" in their name.

KIDNEY-WORT
THE SURE CURE FOR KIDNEY DISEASES, LIVER COMPLAINTS, CONSTIPATION, PILES, AND BLOOD DISEASES.
PHYSICIANS ENDORSE IT HEARTILY.
"Kidney-Wort is the most successful remedy I ever used." Dr. P. C. Ballou, Monkton, Vt.
"Kidney-Wort is always reliable." Dr. R. N. Clark, So. Hero, Vt.
"Kidney-Wort has cured my wife after two years suffering." Dr. C. M. Summerlin, Sun Hill, Ga.
IN THOUSANDS OF CASES
it has cured where all else had failed. It is mild, but efficient, CERTAIN IN ITS ACTION, but harmless in all cases.
☞It cleanses the Blood and Strengthens and gives New Life to all the important organs of the body. The natural action of the Kidneys is restored. The Liver is cleansed of all disease, and the Bowels move freely and healthfully. In this way the worst diseases are eradicated from the system.
PRICE, $1.00 LIQUID OR DRY, SOLD BY DRUGGISTS. Dry can be sent by mail.
WELLS, RICHARDSON & CO. Burlington Vt.
KIDNEY-WORT

FEARFULLY COMMON.

Kidney Complaint Among both Sexes and Ages—A Brilliant Recovery.

Dr. David Kennedy, of Rondout, N. Y., is often congratulated on the exceptional success of his medicine called "Favorite Remedy" in correcting and radically curing those most painful and dangerous disorders. Proofs of this, like the following, are constantly brought to his attention, and are published by him for the sake of thousands of other sufferers whom he desires to reach and benefit. The letter, therefore, may be of vital importance to you or to some one whom you know. It is from one of the best known and popular druggists in the one and growing city from which he writes—and doubtless where those may find Mr. Crawford at his place of business on the corner of Main and Union streets:

SPRINGFIELD, Mass., March 22, 1884.

Dr. David Kennedy, Rondout, N. Y.:

DEAR SIR—For ten years I had been afflicted with Kidney disease in its most acute form. What I suffered must be left to the imagination—for no one can appreciate it except who have gone through it. I resorted to many physicians and to many different kinds of treatment, and spent a great deal of money, only to find myself older and worse than ever. I may say that I used 25 bottles of a preparation widely advertised as a specific for this precise sort of troubles, and found it entirely useless—at least in my case.

Your "FAVORITE REMEDY" I say it with a perfect recollection of all that was done for me besides—is the only thing that did me the slightest good; and I am happy to admit that it gave me permanent relief. I have recommended "FAVORITE REMEDY" to many people for kidney disease, and they all agree with me in saying that DR. DAVID KENNEDY'S FAVORITE REMEDY has no its equal in the whole world for this distressing and often fatal complaint.

Use this letter as you deem best for the benefit of others. Yours, etc., LYMAN CRAWFORD.

$1,000
WILL be paid to any one who will find a particle of Mercury, Potash, Iodine, Arsenic, or any poisonous substance in

SWIFT'S SPECIFICS

"I have cured Blood Taint by the use of Swift's Specific after I had most signally failed with the Mercury and Potash treatment." F. A. TOOMER, M. D., Perry, Ga.
"Swift's Specific has cured me of Scrofula of 12 years standing. Had sores as large as my hand, and every one thought I was doomed. Swift's Specific cured me after physicians and all other medicine had failed." R. L. HIGH, Lonoke, Ark.
Our Treatise on Blood and Skin Diseases mailed free to applicants.
THE SWIFT SPECIFIC CO., Drawer 3, Atlanta, Ga.
N. Y. Office, 159 W. 23d St., bet. 6th and 7th Aves. Philadelphia office, 1205 Chestnut St.

"THE BEST IS THE CHEAPEST." SAW MILLS, ENGINES, THRESHERS, Horse Powers, (For all sections and purposes.) Write for Free Pamphlet and Prices to The Aultman & Taylor Co., Mansfield, Ohio.

CANCER INSTITUTE. Established, 1872. Incorporated, 1880. For the Cure of Cancers, Tumors, Ulcers, Scrofula and SKIN DISEASES, without the use of knife or LOSS OF BLOOD, and little pain. For INFORMATION, CIRCULARS AND REFERENCES, address DR. F. L. POND, Aurora, Kane Co., Ill.

EDUCATIONAL.

SPECIAL Inducements to learn Telegraphy, or Short-Hand and Type Writing. Terms free. Com. & R.R. Teleg'h College, Ann Arbor, Mich.

LEARN TELEGRAPHY, or SHORT-HAND and TYPE-WRITING HERE. Situations furnished. Address VALENTINE Bros., Janesville, Wis.

WHEN WRITING TO ADVERTISERS please say you saw the advertisement in this paper.

BOONE COUNTY RECORDER.

VOLUME IX. BURLINGTON, KY., WEDNESDAY, SEPTEMBER 17, 1884. NUMBER 46.

TOPICS OF THE DAY.

As late as 1840 there were but seven vocations into which New England women had entered; in 1884 the number was 317.

The Dominion of Canada might largely increase its public revenues by levying a heavy import duty on American bank presidents and cashiers.

A Newburg (N. Y.) man has two hundred different sorts of apples grafted upon one tree. One hundred and thirty-seven of them were in bearing last year.

The monasteries of the Franciscans and Dominicans, two of the most powerful religious corporations in France, are about to revert back to the Government.

Paper is made in France from the hop vine, and it is claimed that the fibre secured is the best substitute for rags yet obtained, as it possesses great length, strength, flexibility and delicacy.

A movement is on foot to raise by dime subscription throughout the country a fund to add to the $500 left by Mrs. Brown for a monument to the memory of her son, "Artemas Ward."

The cholera has taken hold of Naples in earnest. It finds the conditions rank and ready for its rapid development. No city in Italy is better provided with food for the pestilence.

A raft of walnut logs, 680 feet long and 200 wide, passed down the river to New Orleans a few days since. The logs are to be sawed there, and the lumber, which will then be worth $100,000, shipped to New York.

Dr. Pratt, of London, states in a lecture that in 1,000 married men between the ages of twenty-five and thirty, there are six deaths; in the same number of bachelors there are ten deaths; the widowers number twenty-two.

There is not much of a peace party in China just now, and at mere mention of the word Frenchman, the coolie's pigtail will stick straight up in the air with indignation. It is pretty certain that the Chinese are madder than the French.

The wealthiest man in the world is the Chinese banker Han-Qua, of Canton. He pays taxes upon an estate of $450,000,000, and is estimated to be worth a million taels, which, in our money, would be about fourteen hundred million dollars.

The first experiment in sub-marine telephoning will be made between Halifax, Nova Scotia, and Gloucester, Mass., a distance of eight hundred and fifty miles. If these prove successful, attempts will be made to telephone across the Atlantic Ocean.

Explorers have discovered petroleum in Formosa, about twenty miles to the south of Ke-Lung. At the latter place are the richest mines of bituminous coal in the Chinese Empire. Thus far the Government has refused permits for the sinking of wells.

One of the Long Branch young men buys a new cane every morning. He never carries the same one two days. The sensation of a fresh and different cane-end to handle and nibble daily might not be exciting to a rude, coarse organism, but to the gentle dude it is quite satisfactory.

In Geneva the late Secretary Folger was very popular. For fourteen years he was foreman of an engine company, and was known in his younger days as "Charlie." Over six feet in height, his presence was robust and commanding. He was ordinarily grave and dignified, but in conversation was animated.

In a summing up of the general facts of the Southern trade situation of the past year, gathered from annual reviews of the Southern press, the Baltimore Sun finds that, while business was somewhat disappointing, it was not discouraging, and was certainly exempt from large disasters. In some localities and in some particular branches of business there was, on the contrary, a very gratifying degree of progress attained.

English crop prices are the lowest within a century, and the British farmer is despondent over a big crop. The European crops of hay, rye and oats are very short. Throughout Europe, and especially in England, fine estates offered for sale obtain no purchasers. Land appears to be becoming a drug in the market. For a Lincolnshire estate the highest bid now made is $100,000. A dozen years ago the owner of it refused to consider an offer of $300,000 for the same property.

From a large range of correspondents a New York commission dealer in apples deduces the following: The crop in New York State will be a large one; in New Hampshire, one-half; in Maine, more than an average; in the Lake Champlain district, one-half; in Virginia, light; in Western Kansas, three-quarters; in Tennessee, good; in Michigan, fair; in Southern Illinois, poor; in Northern Illinois, good, and in Canada, from one-quarter to one-half an average yield.

A human relic of Pompeii has been discovered among the ruins in an exceptionally well preserved state. It is the full-length fossil of a man who was probably struck while in flight at the time of the destruction of the city, upwards of eighteen centuries since. The features are well defined, the mouth being slightly open, showing the teeth in either jaw, the hands are perfect, and one is supposed to have held two keys, which were found close to it, while the legs are spread out and slightly raised.

STARTLING INCIDENTS

In Connection with the Terrible Plague in Italy.

The Attack of the Cholera in Italy Far Severer Than That on France—The Rapidity with Which Its Victims Are Carried Off.

London, September, 14—The attack of the cholera in Italy is admitted to be far severer than that on France. Almost incredible stories are told of the rapidity with which it has carried off victims. In some families four or five members have been swept off together. An old woman and a boy falling together in a street in Naples were both taken up dead; a lady seized with vomiting while at mass died on reaching home. In fact, death in many cases has occurred within ten minutes of the first symptoms. Many persons have died within three or four hours, and the fatal cases have rarely lasted more than five or six hours. The plague has led, according to all accounts, to a revival of religious feeling so strong that the Archbishop himself has had to discourage religious processions as tending to increase the disease. One day fifty-two mothers rushed to a school and took away fifty-one children, and everybody played these numbers in the Government lottery and all won. On another day the numbers 3, 4 and 22 corresponded to current events in the streets, and were played extensively, and all three came out. The result was a loss of 2,000,000 francs by the Government, a general debauch by the lucky inhabitants and a violent increase of cholera. The King is the reigning hero of Europe, and George Augustus Sala the celebrated journalist, gives as one of his virtues that he wears in public in Rome a low-crowned hat. From midnight Friday till Sunday afternoon there have been 1,290 cholera cases and 687 deaths at Naples. Since the beginning of the outbreak, 3,297 deaths.

Fearful Floods in China.

San Francisco, September 14.—The steamship San Pablo, arrived this evening from Hong Kong, with dates of August 14, and Yokohama of the 30th. Information had reached Canton of a frightful inundation in Kiang Sai Province. The news was dated from King Teh, the chief center of pottery manufacture, and one of the four great markets of the Empire. The floods lasted four days, and the entire country was submerged to a depth of sixty feet. Whole towns were swept away. It is believed fully seventy thousand persons perished. It is feared pestilence would follow. Cholera has broken out in the army. The number of deaths are not given. It is stated the price paid for the fleet of twenty-six vessels sold as announced by the China Merchants' Navigation Company to an American company was 5,250,000 taels, equal to $6,500,000. This will not return par value to the proprietors.

Brutal Burglars.

Mansfield, O., September 14.—Last night two masked men entered the residence of Miss Mary Gillfillen, four and one-half miles southwest of this city, on the Middle Belleville road, for the purpose of robbery. They went to the bedside of the woman, bound her and tied a handkerchief over her mouth and told her she must disclose where she had her money. She told them all the money she had was $1.50, with which they were not satisfied. Taking a burning lamp they burnt her feet and put the poor woman in agony. She still told them it was all the money she had, after which they made a search of the house, without finding anything. After telling her that if she would make an alarm before six o'clock the next morning they would kill her, they departed.

Gresham and the Secretaryship.

Washington, September 14.—General Gresham, who has returned from New York, says in regard to the report that he has accepted the Secretaryship of the Treasury, that as he understands the matter the question is not yet settled, but probably will be in a day or two. Naturally the question of a new Secretary was talked over by the President in New York, but as it was a matter of Cabinet discussion, General Gresham regarded it as altogether improper for him to talk about. The impression, however, is general here that the President will appoint General Gresham during the coming week, and that Mr. Hatton will be made Postmaster General.

Cholera Ravages in Italy.

Rome September 13.—The bulletin of the ravages of the cholera in Italy during the past twenty-four hours, is as follows: Naples (city), fresh cases, 873; deaths, 395. Naples (province), fresh cases, 32; deaths, 10. Berganeo, fresh cases, 21; deaths 6. Caszerie, fresh cases, 6; deaths, 4. Turin, fresh cases, 4; deaths, 2. Genoa, fresh cases, 51; Galerno, fresh cases, 4; Catsere, fresh cases, 2; Cuneo, fresh cases, 6; Cremona, fresh cases, 2. Single cases are reported from various other towns. Spezia is still the center of the epidemic in the province of Genoa. Fifty-one cases were reported in that province, and thirty-five in Spezia.

British Scientists Astonished.

Toronto, September 13.—The members of the British Association who took part in the excursion to the Rocky Mountains, arrived safely at the summit Thursday night. An address of welcome was presented to the visitors at Calgary, in replying to which Sir Richard Temple expressed the astonishment of the party at the splendid resources of the country, and the wonderful progress of its development.

A Fenian's Funeral.

London, September 14.—Fifteen thousand persons attended the funeral of the Fenian, Duggan, at Dublin, this afternoon. Among the throng were O'Brien and Davitt.

Fatal Explosion on a Steam Tug.

Richmond, Va., September 14.—The steam tug Frank Somers exploded her boiler in the James River, near City Point, this morning. At the time of the accident she was towing a schooner up the river to this city. The crew of the tug consisted of Captain Cavenaugh and four men. As soon as the explosion occurred all the men jumped overboard. Cavenaugh and a boy of eighteen were drowned. The remaining four members of the crew of the sunken boat were saved by men on the schooner.

Chinaman Murdered.

Chicago, September 14.—Sang Foo was found dead in his laundry this morning with two bullet holes through his body and eight hundred dollars belonging to him missing. The deceased recently quarreled with his partner.

Schooner Sunk.

Detroit, September 13.—The schooner J. T. Mott, of Oswego, N. Y., was struck by an unknown craft on Lake Erie, four miles southeast of Colchester, and sunk in forty-two feet of water. The crew reached Colchester this morning in a yawl.

CRUELTY TO CONVICTS.

Two Men Beaten to Death at Lexington, Kentucky.

Lexington, Ky., September 13.—At the Coroner's inquest to-day on the two convicts who were beaten to death by guards, Green C. Sparks, a liberated convict, testified as follows: He saw O'Brien handcuffed, whipped, knocked down and kicked; he yelled for mercy; didn't know anything about the nigger; he worked two months at the water works; left there yesterday morning about 9 o'clock; his term expired; he saw them whipping the man to death; they hit and knocked him down and kicked him; that was O'Brien, the white man; witness heard him hallooing, and saw them taking a pair of handcuffs to put on him; Comer sent another convict for the handcuffs; he hallooed for mercy. The man was broken down working out in the sun and couldn't work any longer; that was why he was whipped, witness guessed. They beat him to death in the shanty. A trusty named W. R. Jones, a cook, went for the handcuffs. Witness had heard other convicts say he took a pick-handle and knocked him down. Comer kicked O'Brien in the left side while O'Brien was sitting and threw him down. Witness was about thirty steps off; there were several there; Jones was one. They whipped him before they dragged him in. Witness didn't hear anything Comer said at the whipping, nor after, and stated he would have been killed if found around. A number of other witnesses examined testified that O'Brien and Smith were too ill to work. They complained of sickness to the guards but they would not listen to them, and ordered them to work. Smith, the negro, went staggering to his work, and was knocked down by Quinn with a club, who left him lying in the sun until some convicts carried him to the prison. Quinn kicked him in the side and back while he was down. He died in a few hours. During the recital of the testimony a number of witnesses told horrible stories of their own ill treatment, and attested the fact by showing terrible half-healed and festering sores inflicted by the strap. Much indignation is expressed. Coroner's jury verdict was that Comer and Quinn were responsible for the deaths. Comer is in jail under charge of murder, but Quinn left the country.

TWO SLAVES.

Are United Again in Wedlock After Thirty-five Years.

St. Louis, September 13.—A special from Leavenworth, Kans., to the Globe-Democrat says: "The Probate Court records to-day show a marriage license issued to James and Eliza Kelley. There is nothing remarkable about the issuing of the license were it not from the fact that the old couple were not fully convinced that they had ever been married, although they had lived together many years. It is one of the old stories of how a young couple as slaves were made man and wife after the custom prevailing in the sunny South at that date. Children were born to them, but the slave-dealer came that way and their master, being pushed for money, disposed of their children. The times grew harder, and it was not long ere the husband and mother were separated, one going to Louisiana and the other to Tennessee. Then came the war and the exodus of slaves to Kansas and other States, and unbeknown to each other, they both came to Leavenworth. While attending church in this city one Sunday, the old man became convinced that he saw his long lost Liza in the congregation, and at the close of the services approached her, calling her by name, and in a moment the two people, who had been separated for over thirty-five years, were locked in each other's embrace. He had saved some little money during their separation and purchased a farm about six miles west of the city, and as they passed along together the question as to whether they were ever legally married was frequently discussed, and for fear there might be some mistake they concluded that the better way would be to secure a license and have the matter definitely settled. This they did, and there were no happier couple in all the world than James and Eliza when the ceremony was performed yesterday. The record shows that he is ninety-four and she sixty-six."

Reduced Rates to Voters.

Washington, September 13.—On application of the Ohio State Association, the Trunk Line Commission decided to grant round trip tickets at the highest unlimited rate to all points in Ohio, for voters and members of their immediate families, to the State and National elections this fall. These tickets will be placed on sale at the offices of the Pennsylvania Railroad on Monday, September 15, and the sale of the same will be continued until the November election. Tickets will be good for thirty days from the date of issue, and to be used for continuous passage in both directions.

Balloon Experiments.

Paris, September 13.—The Figaro gives an account of a second experiment with the newly-invented balloon steering apparatus. Captain Rinard ascended at Meudon, expecting to go to the Champs Elysees. He was able for some seconds to sail against a strong breeze, but was unable to return to his starting point. The propeller ceased to revolve after ten minutes. He descended at Versailles.

Shot Dead by a Discharged Clerk.

New York, September 13.—Thomas Bund, a drug clerk, formerly employed by Adolph J. Nockin, druggist, No. 2128 Third Avenue, called at the store at 5 o'clock this afternoon and deliberately shot Nockin dead. Bund was arrested.

Stabbed by a Demented Wife.

New York, September 13.—Deputy United States Marshal Bernhardt was stabbed in the back this morning by his demented wife, who then ran away, and has not yet been found. The wound is not fatal.

Heavy Suit.

Montreal, September 13.—President Stephens, of the Canadian Pacific Railroad, has entered action for $1,528,390 against Bradley Barlow, ex-President of the South eastern, to recover an advance made by the Canadian Pacific to the Southeastern.

Stabbed Twenty-Eight Times.

Cairo, Ill., September 14.—Mike Sullivan was stabbed twenty-eight times last night at Hodge's Park and will probably die. The name of the assailant is not known.

Death of Robert Hoe.

New York, September 13.—Robert Hoe, of the Hoe printing press manufacturing firm, died at his residence in Tarrytown to-day, aged seventy.

Imports of Specie.

New York, September 13.—The imports of specie at the port of New York for the week ended to-day was $604,906, making a total since January 1 of $13,703,913, against $10,732,955 for the same time last year.

Glass Bottle Factories Resume.

Pittsburg, September 13.—The green glass bottle houses of D. O. Cunningham and Ihmsen & Co. have fired their furnaces, after a suspension of nearly three months. Trade is reported unprecedently dull.

DISASTROUS EXPLOSION

Four Persons Killed and a Number Seriously Wounded.

By the Blowing Up of a Compress in Alabama—Loss, $170,000.

Eufaula, Ala., September 15.—An explosion occurred this afternoon at the new compress of the Central Railroad and Banking Company, setting fire to the building, and in half an hour the works were in ruins. It was built at an expense of $80,000, and had been in operation one month. The list of the victims so far given is: Killed—John Winship, colored, fireman; Wm. Brooks, a colored youth; Geo. Williams, a colored laborer. Wounded—T. F. Allday, Will Holliman, Silas Winship, colored; George Adams, Bayler Clark, Jacob Bishop, John F. Lake, Tom McKlary—the last four also colored. Missing—Mike Pickett, white, superintendent of the compress. The compress is situated in the heart of the city, and cinders fell in all directions and at a great distance, setting fire to several stores and dwellings in the vicinity, and the rattle of bricks heard at a distance on tin sounded like the beating of hail. For a while consternation prevailed, as it was feared that a portion of the city west of the compress would be destroyed by fire from it and from falling cinders, but the prompt application of water saved it. The boiler was shattered to pieces, flying in all directions, the smoke-stack being blown a third of a mile, and falling in such close proximity to a house as to barely graze a window in which a little girl was sitting, and but for the fact that she fell inside instead of outside another victim would have been added to the disaster. Some three hundred bales of cotton in the warehouse were destroyed, fully covered by insurance. Nine box-cars of the Central Road, standing on the track east of the compress, were totally destroyed. The entire loss is estimated at $170,000.

Caceres Defeated.

Panama, September 15.—The most important news from Peru is the complete defeat of General Caceres, the revolutionary leader, which occurred at Lima on the 27th ult. On the morning of that date Caceres entered the capitol of Peru at the head of a savage mob of Monteneros, who rushed through the streets, yelling and firing off guns. On the preceding evening, Government troops had been concentrated in their barracks, and the entry of Caceres almost amounted to a surprise. His party obtained possession of the barracks of Espiritu Santo, and of the churches of Merced and St. Augustine. They also attacked the Guadalupe station of the English railroad company. There were some 150 killed in Mercaderes and Bodegots streets, near the St. Augustine Church, and in the Palace square, where the firing was hottest. All the telegraph wires were cut four miles from town, and no train ran. In the St. Augustine Church the fighting proceeded with closed doors.

An Engineer's Carelessness.

Peoria, Ill., September 15.—The steam flouring-mill and cider factory belonging to Voicell Kossie Rudiker, at Morton, Tazewell County, was totally destroyed this afternoon by the explosion of the boilers and fire. The accident resulted in the instant death of the engineer, Jacob Slage, a boy named Briscler and two or three others, who are supposed to be in the ruins. Christian Ackerman has his skull badly fractured, several ribs broken, and is frightfully scalded. There are no hopes of his recovery. Henry Roesse has his shoulder and arm broken, two ribs fractured, an eye out and is badly scalded. He will die. Geo. Lowman is scalded beyond all hope of recovery. In addition to this several are very seriously scalded and bruised. The cause of the explosion is supposed to be due to the carelessness of the engineer. He allowed the waters in his boilers to run very low, and, having no hot water in his reservoir, pumped in cold water. The loss on the building will be about $10,000.

Cholera Bulletin.

Rome, September 15.—Bulletin showing the ravages of cholera in Italy during the past twenty-four hours: Naples (city), 643 fresh cases, 231 deaths; Naples (province) 30 fresh cases, 10 deaths; Caserta, 14 fresh cases, 4 deaths; Cuneo, 21 fresh cases, 13 deaths; Genoa, 25 fresh cases, 12 deaths; ten other provinces (names not given), 17 fresh cases, 10 deaths.

Memorial Subscriptions.

Albany, September 15.—The Garfield Memorial Committee for the State of New York, appointed in 1882 by Governor Cornell, has reported to Governor Cleveland that the total amount collected in the various counties of the State is $9,629 22, which amount will be forwarded to the National Committee.

Japanese Neutrality.

Yokohama September 15.—The Japanese Government has proclaimed neutrality in the Franco-Chinese war. It is expected the revision of the treaty between Japan and the Foreign Powers will be concluded in October, when new and important privileges will be granted to foreigners.

Chloroform Did It.

Decatur, Ill., September 15.—Abraham Parks, aged eighteen, was found dead in his bed in a farm house near Decatur, on Sunday. An empty bottle that contained chloroform found on the floor told the story. Cause, sickness.

Terrible Theater Accident.

Paris, September 15.—During a ball in the theater at Cohors to-night, the floor of the foyer collapsed, and twenty-five actors and actresses were injured.

—Judgment in favor of plaintiff was recently given in the Justices' Court in the case of Mary McMillan against F. J. Schwartzschild, a Howard street dentist, to recover $299. Plaintiff went to Schwartzschild to have her teeth filled, the price agreed upon for the work being $17.50. After filling her teeth the dentist asked her $22.50 for his services, and upon her refusing to grant his demand, he held her by threats and took the filling out of her molars again. The court gave redress in the sum of $217.50 and costs of the suit.—San Francisco Post.

—The New London (Conn.) Day says: "Mrs. Gavitt, of this place, owns a large black-and-tan terrier, perfect throughout its organism with the exception of the forelegs, which nature failed to provide. This canine phenomenon walks and runs in an erect position, and should a rat or belligerent cat appear on the scene Fannie will bound upon him like a kangaroo and 'settle his hash' in short order."

—It seems curious that there is not a wax-match manufactory in the United States, but so it is. All those that are used are imported from England, France or Italy.—Chicago Journal.

THE COMMONWEALTH.

Louisville Leaf Tobacco Market.

The offerings have consisted chiefly of Burley tobacco. Dark and heavy styles on offer have been mainly Green-river fillers, while export styles have scarcely made an appearance. Green river styles have been extremely brisk and strong, short fat leaf selling at the highest price of the year. Export styles have been so scarce as to be practically featureless, though generally very firm. Burley tobaccos have had a good general demand. The supply on offer has been comparatively liberal, but has not overstocked the market, and prices, except on very inferior kinds, have been well supported. The principal irregularity, and perhaps the only disappointment in selling Burleys, has been in a series of breaks of Brown County (Ohio) tobaccos at one warehouse. They were seated, several of the principal buyers refused to bid, and the sale dragged badly. Otherwise the sales have been in the main satisfactory. We quote full-weight packages new-crop sound tobacco as follows:

	Dark and Heavy.	Burley.
Trash	$6 00@ 8 75	$6 00@ 7 50
Common lugs	7 00@ 7 25	7 50@ 8 00
Medium lugs	7 50@ 7 75	8 50@ 9 00
Good lugs	8 00@ 8 50	9 50@10 00
Common leaf	8 75@ 9 00	10 00@11 00
Medium leaf	9 50@ 9 75	12 00@13 50
Good leaf	10 50@12 00	14 50@16 50
Fine and fancy leaf	13 00@16 00	18 00@20 00

Miscellaneous Items.

The new Opera-house is all the talk in Carlisle.

Mike Rafferty's tobacco warehouse, near Blue Lick Springs, was destroyed by fire. The loss will reach nearly $8,000. Insurance $2,500.

Governor Knott has prepared a lengthy address to the people of Kentucky on the subject of convict labor in the coal mines. He says it is impossible to grant the petition of the free miners, and explains why convicts must be worked outside of the Penitentiary.

The two men charged with brutally beating the late Hon. Evans Allnutt at the Anchorage Asylum, were dismissed from the institution, and have skipped out.

In Owen County a young man named Perry, while cutting bands for a threshing machine near Greenup, a few days since, made a mislick with the knife, which penetrated his abdomen, inflicting a [illegible] which proved fatal in a short time.

It is reported that Triff Treadway, a young man, recently died in California unmarried, leaving an estate estimated to be worth $3,000,000. He was a son of Griff Treadway, who moved from near Mt. Sterling about forty-five years ago. The heirs are seven in number, five of whom live in the vicinity of Mt. Sterling.

At Hickman in the case of the Commonwealth against Cooper the horse doctor, who was charged with the murder of Hillmen King and wife, the examining Court heard the testimony of a large number of witnesses and has just decided that there was not sufficient evidence against Cooper to bind him over to the Circuit Court. He was discharged and the murder of King and his wife, which was one of the most cold-blooded ever perpetrated in any community, is as much a mystery as ever.

At Louisville, the other night, a fire in the building No. 145 Third avenue occupied jointly by John Colters, dealer in whiskies, and Henry Maschendorf, a feed commission merchant, caused a loss of $15,000.

The Kentucky Court of Appeals has overruled a petition for rehearing in the case of William E. Middleton, who was convicted in the Jefferson Circuit Court of the murder of Levi Miller, and sentenced to twenty-one years' imprisonment.

There are now in the Kentucky Penitentiary ninety-eight convicts under sentence for life. Of this number sixty are white males, thirty-three are colored males and five are colored females.

The Warren County Fair made more than $2,000 over all expenses.

The Owen County Fair begins October 7, and continues four days.

The survivors of the Tenth Kentucky Volunteer Infantry and a part of the Fifth Cavalry (Federal) held their third annual reunion in the woods near Lebanon, a few days ago. A general invitation to ex-soldiers, Federal and Confederate, was extended, and several hundred people were present.

Chief of Police Taylor, of Louisville, in his annual report, says that during the last year there were less murders and crimes of the higher order than for twenty years previously.

Harry Bell, colored, died from a pistol wound in the head, near Shepardstown, a few days ago. He was working with a circus and it is supposed he was shot on the train on the Louisville & Nashville Road and thrown off.

At Grayson, Joe Bowling got drunk and began a quarrel with James Kennedy, and made at him with a knife, when Kennedy shot and killed him. Two shots were fired, both of which took effect, and Bowling died two hours after being shot. Kennedy, it is said, acted purely in self-defense. Bowling was very quarrelsome when drunk, and in a drunken spree several years ago killed Mildred Kennedy. Kennedy is a quiet and peaceable man. After the killing he gave himself up.

James Best, a young man living on the farm of John A. Thompson, near Mt. Sterling, aged 27, and regarded as an upright, industrious man and esteemed in his community, killed himself by blowing out his brains the other morning at a neighbor's, where he had remained all night. Nothing in his appearance betokened any mental aberration or determination to commit the rash act, nor is there any cause assigned therefor. He went up stairs stating that he desired to brush his hair. There was a revolver lying on the bureau, and with it he committed the act. His parents live in Ripley, Ohio. He leaves no family, being unmarried.

At Nicholasville, Judge W. H. Phillips has appointed Mr. N. L. Bronaugh, attorney-at-law, as County Attorney, to fill the vacancy caused by the death of W. S. Holloway. The appointment is for eleven months, when an election will be ordered to fill the unexpired term.

At South Frankfort, the other morning, Miss Henrietta Whitehead, aged eighteen, was found dead in bed at the residence of Mrs. L. B. Castleman, having died from epileptic convulsions.

Joe Barker, a young man living near Boaz Station, in Graves County, in mounting his horse, the other night, accidentally discharged a pistol in his pocket, and the ball entered the body of the horse. He rode on for about two miles, when the animal fell dead, the wound proving fatal in that time.

A stable and six horses were burned in Louisville the other night.

A cigarmaker from Paducah, named McGregor, fell overboard from the wharfboat at Cairo and was drowned.

James Whitfield, near Raywick, was badly wounded by a falling tree that he was chopping down, the other day, and died the next morning. He was in the Mexican War, also in the War of the Rebellion.

The corn in Mason County is looking well.

Andrew Musselman, Deputy Sheriff of Jefferson County, has resigned his position. He is reported $5,000 short in his accounts; said to have lost it at gambling.

Every faro and keno bank in Louisville, it is said, is to be indicted.

The Handicap.

Handicap, or hand in the cap, is the etymology of the word, and its original signification was the drawing of lots from a cap for a choice of position in a race or athletic contest. From this it came to mean a system of arbitration by which the inequalities of contestants should be removed. The word is now used in various games and sports to denote the placing of competitors, good, bad and indifferent, on such a footing that all shall have, as nearly as possible, an equal chance of winning. Thus in horse racing, when one horse is found to be greatly superior to his contestant he is made to carry extra weight enough to reduce his speed to that of the other. The beau ideal of a handicap would be such a nice discrimination as to the merits of the contestants, and such an adjustment of these drawbacks, that there would result a "dead heat." But in practice this is impossible; but the official handicapper becomes very acute in his discrimination, and his decisions are regarded as law. In horse racing, according to an English authority, no jockey with his saddle, etc., must weigh less than five stone and seven pounds, but the maximum is left in the hands of the handicapper, who apportions to each horse a weight corresponding to its public performance, age or sex. No appeal is allowed from his decision. He has arbitrary power, and must be a person of sound judgment, unquestioned integrity and thorough experience. When the handicaps have been announced no change can be made. Each jockey is weighed with his saddle before starting, and the extra weight to be carried is made up of lead strips let into the saddle flaps. The weights range from three pounds up to fifty and sixty pounds.

The principle of handicapping is applied to many other sports than horse racing, though the adjustment is made in different ways. In pigeon shooting the more skillful the marksman, the farther he must stand from the mark in comparison with the less skilled. In chess, certain "men" are given to equalize the players. In billiards, "points" are given. In yachting, pedestrianism, etc., a "start" is allowed. When a yacht of large tonnage is handicapped with a lesser one, extra time is allowed for the performance of the race. For instance, if a fifty and a thirty ton yacht start for a race, the former allows the latter say, five minutes. They start together, and the heavier yacht reaches home, say, three minutes in advance of the other. In that case the lighter yacht's handicap of five minutes gives her the race by two minutes, though she was the last to reach home. Whatever the method of adjustment used, the principle is the same, to equalize by certain drawbacks, the good, bad and indifferent in the race.

In the bicycle races in England the system mentioned above as applied to yachting is sometimes used. But such races are uninteresting to spectators, as they can not readily follow and time the races. What the crowd likes to see is a grand struggle on the home run, and in an accurately-adjusted handicap race, so arranged, the struggle is very exciting. This is affected in the system most in vogue in this country, the "distance handicap" and the "time handicap." In the distance handicap, ten yards to a second are allowed between contestants of different records. For instance, A, with a record of 3m, is matched with B, with a record of 3:10. A is placed at the scratch and B at 100 yards in advance, and both start at the same instant. The disadvantage of this is that B does not run a full mile.

In the time handicap, which is adopted by the Springfield Bicycle Club for its races, the contestants all start from the scratch, but not together. The man with the slowest record is started first, and he with the best record last. Thus A, with a record of three minutes, will wait at the scratch ten seconds after B with his 3:10 record has started. This method of handicapping is perfectly fair, and has the advantage of being easily understood by the spectators. Every contestant is obliged to run his full mile, and the difference in time is much more accurate handicap than a difference in distance. Thus at the finish the contestants, if they are equal to their records, are well bunched together, and the spectators know that the first man under the line wins.—Wheelman's Gazette.

The Humming Bird.

Cosily sitting in the very tiniest little nest, so soft and elastic that even the delicate plumage is unruffled by contact with its moss covered sides, we find our humming bird. High on the gnarled and twisted branch of a dogwood she has built this fairy home, and therein, with the overhanging leaves for a canopy, the little sylph is brooding. How shall I describe the cunning little structure? A few weeks ago the building it was commenced, but on such a small scale that the foundation was laid ere the site was discovered by us. Soft puffs from the blossoms of oak and chestnut, bits of the softest brown fungus, and scraps of gray mosses that grow in secret places known only to these little fairies, were worked into the walls, and gradually the little cup-like house approached completion. Little flakes of lichen and bark, veritable diminutive clapboards, were next added, and the task was finished. There it rests, its mossy covering harmonizing so well with the tree bark as to conceal it from all but the closest observer, and often, though knowing its location so well, I have missed it for an instant, so cunningly is it placed. A dead twig projects from the branch a few inches to one side, and here the little wood sprites frequently perch. There is the male now, his ruby throat all ablaze as a sunbeam covers him for an instant with gold. See him edge up to his little darling! And now as he snuggles close beside her he is evidently telling her where her breakfast is waiting in the trumpet flower he tapped for her last night, and which is half filled with nectar this morning, accumulated drop by drop during the cool hours of darkness. Like a flash she is off, and he takes her place, to keep the chill from the tiny eggs. These frail little creatures have gradually become accustomed to my presence. At first they were nervous, and would cease work, while one or the other would dart down to within five or six feet of me, and there, poised on its whirring wings, closely inspect the intruder, uttering the while sundry peeps and curious little cries. Now that they are convinced that no harm is intended they do not even leave the nest at my approach. What a dream life is theirs. Gliding in zigzag lines over the flower beds, now suspended almost motionless over a lily bloom, now racing with the bumble bees for a honeyed prize, or dashing at the sparrows and robins, and speedily putting them to flight with the fury of their onset. What they do or where they go when it storms I do not know, but at the first returning gleam of sunshine they are back again, with the rapidity of thought, sipping the rain drops from the flowers. And when bed time comes what wonderful stories of the sunlight the little things must tell each other, as cuddling close up there in the dark they listen to the croon! croon! croon! croon! of the insects, and watch the fireflies guiding the moths among the trees by the light of their torches.—Forest and Stream.

Wheat Harvest in California.

California, having, like the tropical countries, only two seasons, is peculiarly adapted to the culture of wheat in its interior valleys. The valley of the San Joaquin with the Sacramento furnishes some of the largest wheat fields in the United States, being rivaled only by those of the Red Valley. The soil is what is called "adobe," which when wet becomes very sticky, and on drying becomes like stone. Roads almost impassable in the wet season become in summer as hard and smooth as the finest macadamized roads. Crops other than wheat can not be raised except by irrigation. As the wheat is fully grown by the time the dry season commences, it is very nice to have the grain ripened sufficiently dry for threshing at the time it is cut. Combined machines for cutting and threshing wheat at the same time are increasing in number very fast.

On reaching a grain fields one's attention is drawn to an object which has an appearance similar to a house of small size moving by its own power through the field, which stretches as far as one can see in all directions. On its near approach it is found that instead of moving by its own force it is propelled by twenty very large mules, which were hidden behind its huge proportions. The mules are fastened in two lines, ten abreast, to long whiffletrees attached to a heavy timber, at the back end of which is the wheel which steers the machine. As one sits on top of the machine and looks behind he sees the ears and backs of the mules, and it seems much like putting the cart before the horse, a habit the people have here. The pilot sits in front of the wheel steering, and the sensation to a passenger is as if at sea, except as the crack of the whip warns some laggard mule to move faster.

Close to the knives stands a man who raises or lowers them according as the grain is tall or not, as all that is wanted is to cut just below the heads. Passing by an endless belt the heads are carried to the cylinder or picker; the grain is threshed, and through a set of sieves is cleaned and sent along by a set of scoops to the sack-sewer, who fills the sacks. Then sewing them, they are ready for market, and sliding down an inclined plane lie ready for the wagon, on which they are carried to a pile of other sacks all ready to be hauled to market. As the price at present is very low, only $1.35 per cental, many farmers will leave the grain in the fields for many weeks, knowing that there is no danger of rain. This immunity from wet makes the farmers (or, as they are called here, ranchers) careless, and many show the improvident way of the country by leaving a machine which cost $2,000 without cover through the winter. As these machines weigh three or four tons each, their use is only possible in a country where the soil bakes hard like a pavement. To give a minute description of one of these machines would trespass too much on your columns, but this may give a general idea. Stockton (Cal.) Cor. Hartford Courant.

Professional Stranglers.

Thugs are known to have existed during the seventeenth century, when they used female decoys for the unwary traveler, as they did within the present century, though they are of a much older date than that period. The fraternity is not composed of men of one caste, but of people of different castes and religions, and living in different districts, having secret signs and a peculiar dialect known to all those who are initiated into the fraternity. Strange to say, however, the majority of them are nominally not Hindoos, but Mohammedans, and their tradition is that they originally sprang from seven tribes, all of that religion, living in the neighborhood of Delhi, from which they were dislodged in the seventeenth Century. The Hindoos, however, say that the caste was in existence long before Mohammed's time. But they all agree in worshiping the Hindoo god Kali, observe the Hindoo feasts in her honor, present offerings at temples, and, especially after any murder, present to her a piece of silver and some sugar. They may be said to be a Hindoo sect. Those who are initiated into the body are taught the secret signs, but only those who apply the noose receive the sacred wafer of Thuggee, which is believed to change a man's whole nature. From boyhood to manhood they are taught to look upon the strangulation of unoffending victims as their calling in life, into which they are gradually initiated. First, the neophyte is employed as a scout, or sotah, only, his duty being to give warning of the approach of a traveler. Sometimes women and children, as less apt to be suspected, are employed in this work; then he is allowed to see the corpse after it has been strangled, and to assist at the interment; lastly, after a solemn initiation by means of the sacred sugar, he is elevated to the rank of a bhuttote or strangler, and allowed to use the noose or roomal, by which the victims are dispatched. The whole gang is governed by a jamadar, sirdar or chief, and has attached to it a guru or teacher. Nothing about their unholy calling is, however, in the Thug's eyes unholy; on the contrary, everything is sacred. The lughaees or grave diggers constitute one of the highest grades in the order. The pickaxe with which the grave is dug is solemnly forged and consecrated. It is considered as a gift from Kali and looked upon accordingly with great veneration. Every seventh day it is brought out and worshiped, and no matter how pressing the necessity, the grave can be dug by no other instrument. All the Thugs follow some ostensible trade, but travel about from place to place under various disguises, straggling into villages in twos and threes and meeting as strangers. Secrecy is one of the essentials of their work; never will they knowingly strangle a victim in the presence of any one not belonging to their order.—The Peoples of the World.

—Bed furniture in dull colors grows in favor almost daily, and faded rose and blue and olive pillow shams and curtain linings make a bed look something quite different from the snowy couch of poetry, or from the later vision of the upholsterers, the bed with scarlet counterpane covered with lace. The new fashion is pretty and luxurious looking, and who can say that it is not fitting in the days of Louis XV. chairs and costumes.—Chicago Journal.

SCIENCE AND INDUSTRY.

—Glass pulleys for cable railways are superior to iron.—Chicago Herald.

—Doors are now made of paper. They are more durable than wood and cost about the same. They are not liable to shrink, swell, crack, or warp. They are also very handsome.—Scientific American.

—There are nine establishments in the United States producing 3,650 watches a day, one establishment turning out a watch a minute or ten hours each day.—Chicago Journal.

—A Californian is reported to have discovered a process of devulcanizing rubber, by which means old rubber can be worked over indefinitely. The discovery is a great desideratum.

—Communications have recently been sent by telegraph from London to Calcutta, a distance of 7,000 miles, through a single wire. The speed was from twelve to fourteen words a minute.

—The hippophile is earnestly at work. Horse-shoes of sheep's horn are now made in Lyons, France. They are for use, particularly, on street pavements, as they prevent slipping on smooth stones and tram rails.—Current.

—A very simple plan for a street railroad has been devised by Dr. H. G. Davis, of Newton, Mass., by which a track and pavement can be put down at about one-half the present cost, and yet be more durable; it will also save a large percentage in repairs.—Boston Post.

—The latest telephone dispenses with electricity altogether. Its diaphragm is of willow or other wood closely woven, dried and varnished. The drying contracts the fibers and produces a very high tension. In the center of the diaphragm is a strong copper plate, to which the wire is attached. For distances less than two miles the new telephone conveys sound better and more distinctly than the Bell. The difficulty in "switching" the wires, however, limits its use.—Philadelphia Record.

—It has always been a problem in large lumber-producing districts what to do with the sawdust. In some places they throw it into the stream, but this may be stopped by a complaint from people down the river, who use the water for various purposes in which cleanliness is a requisite. In others there have been arranged boiler-furnaces in which the dust can be used as fuel. Various processes have been introduced for solidifying the dust, so that it can be molded into picture frames, ornaments for furniture, and other articles where stucco work is practicable, to dispose of some of the refuse. The latest idea is to make gas from it, and this, it is said, is carried out at a village in Ontario with excellent results.—Chicago Times.

PITH AND POINT.

—Men who live crooked careers are, nevertheless, very often in straightened circumstances.—Philadelphia Call.

—The happiest man on earth is the man who has sense enough to appreciate his mother-in-law. This is not funny, but it is true.—Chicago Herald.

—"There is but one good wife in this town," said a clergyman in the course of his sermon—the congregation looked expectant—"and every married man thinks he's got her," added the minister.—Troy Times.

—Wearing natural fruits in the bonnet is said to be becoming. A bachelor advises women not to attempt to trim a four-inch square bonnet with more than four watermelons and two pumpkins. It might give them the headache.—N. Y. Graphic.

—Mistress of the House (to new nursery maid, whom she finds deeply absorbed in a dime novel): "Why, Annie, you can't read and mind the baby at the same time!" "Begging your pardon, mum, the child doesn't disturb me a bit."—N. Y. Independent.

—They now fill teeth with electricity. A woman with a tooth full of electricity and an eye full of fire will be a balmy object for a man to meet on the top landing when he comes home from balancing his books at two a. m.—Pittsburgh Chronicle.

—"What's all this I hear about the Mother Hubbards? What are they, any way?" "Oh, they're dresses that are not pleasing to the fastidious Westerners. They seem to be afraid of them." "Women wear them in the East, too, don't they?" "Oh, yes, they're worn all over." "Have you seen anything in them to be afraid of?" "Yes, my wife."—Rochester Post-Express.

—The moon beat silently upon the waves, and the waves beat noisily upon the sand, and they strolled quietly along the beach, and as he looked down into her eyes lovingly, he asked pleadingly: "Mildred, will you return my love?" "Yes, George," she answered, hesitatingly, "on one condition." "Only tell me that condition," he pleaded breathlessly. "It is," she replied solemnly, "that you do not again ask me to accept it," and the waves and his heart continued to beat as they walked home sorrowfully and silently.—Boston Post.

Hygienic Soups.

Before leaving the subject of peas, I must here repeat a practical suggestion that I published in the Birmingham Journal about twenty years ago, viz., that the water in which green peas are boiled should not be thrown away. It contains much of the saline constituents of the peas, some soluble casein, and has a fine flavor, the very essence of the peas. If to this, as it comes from the saucepan, be added a little stock or some Liebig's extract, a delicious soup is at once produced, requiring nothing more than ordinary seasoning. With care, it may form a clear soup such as just now is in fashion among the fastidious; but, prepared however roughly, it is a very economical, wholesome and appetizing soup, and costs a minimum of trouble.

I must here add a few words in advocacy of the further adoption in this country of the French practice of using, as potage, the water in which vegetables generally (excepting potatoes) have been boiled. When we boil cabbages, turnips, carrots, etc., we dissolve out of them a very large proportion of their saline constituents salts which are absolutely necessary for the maintenance of health; salts, without which we become victims of gout, rheumatism, lumbago, neuralgia, gravel, and all the ills that human flesh, with a lithic-acid diathesis, is heir to, i. e., about the most painful series of all its inheritances. The potash of these salts existing therein, in combination with organic acids, is separated from these acids by organic combustion, and is then and there presented to the baneful lithic acid of the blood and tissues, the stony torture-particles of which it converts into soluble lithate of potash, and thus enables them to be carried out of the system.—W. Mattieu Williams, in Popular Science Monthly.

1884. FIRST AUTUMN ANNOUNCEMENT. 1884.

HEYN & BROTHER, RISING SUN, Indiana,

DEALERS IN CLOTHING, DRY GOODS, NOTIONS, CARPETS, &c., &c.

FOR THE PUBLIC.

We have now completed our Stock of all that is desirable to the Public for the Coming Season. We have ever held the Fort and mean to hold it here after, as regards superiority of GOODS and LOW PRICES, surpassing in both points any other firm of this city or neighboring town.

READY MADE CLOTHING.

We have opened the Grandest Assortment of Ready Made Clothing ever laid in. Stylish and well made; and all sizes, for Men, Youth's, Boy's and Children.

HEYN & BRO., Rising Sun, Ind.

Suits!

We have replenished our Stock of First Class Tailoring Goods, to be made up to measure in first class style, and on short Notice.

Heyn & Bro.

OUR CLOAK ROOM.

The crowning point of everything that is New, Brilliant and Attractive will be Our Cloak Room. We will open in a few days a full line of ladies' children's New Markets, Circulars, Jackets, Paletots, Sealskins, &c. and an assortment of Plain and Beaded Jerseys. Many of these goods are direct importations from Europe. No lady should fail to examine and price these goods. All are invited to call and we will make it profitable to you to buy OUR GOODS in preference to worthless and shelve worn goods as are now offered and sold in so many stores. This has been the great bane of the Dry Goods trade, and the only way to remedy this evil is by only patronizing stores where such goods are not kept and offered for sale, and we can proudly say

SUCH a STORE is OURS.

Suits!

We have replenished our Stock of First Class Tailoring Goods, to be made up to measure in First Class Style and on short Notice.

Heyn & Bro.

JEANS, FLANNELS, BLANKETS, &C

You will also find a complete line of Jeans, Flannels, Blankets and Yarns from the renowned manufactory of J. SCHOFIELD & SON, of Madison, Indiana.

SILKS, CASHMERES, ETC.

Our shelves and counters are just groaning under the weight of Ladies' Dress Goods, Silks, Cashmeres, etc., in all colors and grades. Domestics and Goods of all descriptions too numerous to mention, and at lower prices than they can be bought elsewhere.

HEYN & BRO., Rising Sun, Ind.

HEYN & BROTHER. RISING SUN. IND.

THE RECORDER.

WEDNESDAY, SEPT. 17. 1884.

RIDDELL & HALL, Proprietors.

ADVERTISING RATES.

1 Column	1 year	$80
½ "	1 "	40
¼ "	1 "	20
1 "	½ "	20
½ "	½ "	10
¼ "	½ "	6

For announcing candidates, $5. Obituary poetry, 5 cents per line. Obituary notices 20 lines free: over that number (excepting the announcement of the death) 3 cents per line. Tributes of respect from lodges, &c., $1 50

We are authorized to announce DR. JAMES S. BROWN, of Warsaw, as a candidate for the State Senate, from this, the 23d Senatorial District, subject to the action of the Democratic party.

We are authorized to announce J. H. McDANELL, of Warsaw, as a candidate for the State Senate, from this, the 23rd Senatorial District, subject to the action of the Democratic party.

THE Ohio river is very low, but it will get up again.

ANOTHER batch of the "My Dear Mr. Fisher" letters have been given to the public.

MR. BLAINE is moving slowly westward. He is expected to strike Ohio about the 22nd inst.

BUT little more if any hot weather will be experienced in this latitude this season, say the repated weather wise.

THE short crops in this locality will not affect the people, because there is always at least a year's provision in advance here.

THE Southern Exposition is being attended by large crowds the size of which increase daily. Special attractions are being added every week.

HON. JNO. G. CARLISLE has a very extensive field of labor before him in this presidential campaign. He has numerous appointments in West Virginia, Ohio, Iowa and Florida.

POLITICS are at high tide in this country now, and a political gale is prevailing in the north and northwest, while the pressure (on the pocket-book) in the east is increasing.

TAMMANY thinks the Chicago convention nominated the wrong man, but its party fealty prompts it to remain steadfast to its party, and render it all the strength possible in the State of New York.

A LOUISVILLE base ball audience became so incensed at the decisions of an umpire last week, that it was with difficulty that the police restrained the crowd and prevented the umpire's being mobbed.

THE recent election in Maine shows that about two-thirds of the voters of that State are prohibitionists. The ladies attended many of the voting places, and worked hard all day in the interest of prohibition.

CULBERTSON, the Republican representative in Congress who attempted self destruction a few weeks since, was a candidate for renomination but was defeated. He didn't get drunk and kill himself again, though.

A CANDIDATE for Congress making a political speech to a crowd in a beer saloon on Sunday is a spectacle not often witnessed in this country, but the Enquirer charges that Ben Butterworth is guilty of that highly moral act.

THE Nation is the name of a Republican paper recently started at Lexington, this State. It is Republican to the core, and those who like to read Republican editorials which are so hot that they seiz ought to subscribe for the Nation at once.

GOV. KNOTT has issued his address to the people of the State on the convict labor question, and in it he shows that leasing the convicts, besides being required by law, is the best that can be done with them while the State has so many on hand and but one penitentiary.

YESTERDAY the Congressional convention at Falmouth renominated Hon. John G. Carlisle for Congress. It is seldom that a man meets with as little opposition in his party as Mr. Carlisle has. Nobody ever thinks of opposing him in the convention.

OF course Hon John G. Carlisle was renominated for Congress at the district convention in Falmouth yesterday. He has made such an acceptable representative that the district thinks of none other in that connection, and nobody can oppose either his nomination or election with a shadow of a chance of reducing his vote.

THERE is no undertaking so hazardous but what some lunatic can be found who will make the attempt, and another fool has appeared who is willing to try going over the Niagara Falls. The crazy Jane proposes to start on the trip in a rubber ball fifteen feet in diameter, and for $1,000. It would be cheaper to send him to an insane asylum.

OUR Florence correspondent gives a full report of the Fair meeting at that place last Saturday. The enterprise is now fairly on foot, and it will soon be seen how anxious the public is to have the Fair revived. The place chosen for the grounds, it is said, can be made second to none in the State, while its geographical location is certainly very favorable.

NEXT Saturday the Rabbit Hash and Gunpowder Turnpike Company will hold a meeting at which time the fate of that road will be decided. It is to be hoped that the road will be pushed to a completion, for that is too thrifty a portion of the county to be behind in the matter of good roads any longer. If the road is built it will be a joy forever to the people of that end of the county.

IT seems that the negro, Bush, who murdered Miss Vanmeter at Lexington several years ago is about to come to the end of his rope. He has had more trials and been convicted and sentenced to be hung oftener than any criminal Kentucky ever handled, and at last the Court of Appeals turns a deaf ear to his prayer for another trial, which apparently settles the matter. The Governor will fix the date for his execution.

WHILE in Cincinnati last week John Sherman made a speech before the Board of Trade, in which he advocated this country's turning her attention to the production of those articles of consumption which are so extensively imported, and can be successfully produced in the United States. He made a clear and forcible presentation of how easily this country can produce her own sugar, which would reduce the present price of that article materially.

MAN'S inhumanity to man has a damnable illustration in the acts of some of the men guarding the penitentiary convicts who are engaged in building the Lexington reservoir. Two of the convicts died from the results of cruel treatment at the hands of the guards, while many others are badly lacerated by the lash which was unmercifully administered by the heartless guards. One of the murderers is in jail and is in danger of being lynched. The people of Lexington and vicinity are greatly excited over the matter.

WE are satisfied that the Republican Executive Committee of this county will meet Uncle Billy Garn[illegible] with his war paint on directly after he receives the RECORDER. His name appears among the list of Republican delegates from this county to the Republican Congressional Convention which meets in Covington on the 25th inst. This is the second time that that party has invaded the Democratic fold for a delegate, and for its protection we suggest that said committee prepare itself with a list of the members of its party in this county for future reference when making up a list of delegates. That Democratic brother wont "jine in with the boys."

THE Democratic convention in the second Congressional district elected permanent officers on the 740th ballot, after which ten ballots were taken between Clay and Laffoon, the contestants who were tied when the convention adjourned sine die, neither faction being willing to yield. The district is largely Democratic, but unless the party relieves itself of one of the present candidates, the Republicans will probably walk off with the prize. It will be characteristic of the bull-headed Democrats to allow both candidates remain on the track, and give the opposition the office.

THE death of Hon. Evans L. Allnut in the Anchorage Asylum is about to bring the management of that institution into disrepute again. He died under circumstances that created talk derogatory to the management, and the superintendent, Dr. Pasey, had the coroner of Jefferson county hold a post mortem, hoping to vindicate himself and the attendants. The investigation developed that Allnatt had six broken ribs, three on either side, and that they had been broken for several weeks. This revelation was unexpected to the superintendent, who is endeavoring to excuse himself by shoving the responsibility on to a couple of brutal attendants who are now discharged. It seems that Anchorage is a very difficult institution to get under proper management.

A CARD.

MR. EDITORS:—Permit me through your columns to make a denial of the report made current recent to and on the day of the election: That I was a Republican—an Indiana Radical, &c. Thinking the report would find little credence among the people, I was content to make the correction to a few of my friends. But I find that the report answered the purpose for which it was given, and being frequently asked as to my position and desirous of correcting a great injustice to myself and friends, I write this card.

Having been a resident of the county but six years, and during that time engaged in the profession of teaching, I have had little opportunity and no inclination to mix in politics. Being in the mean time a mere student of our political history and the issues of the day, seeking truth from whatever source and from whatever party. Consistent with this, I refused to be duped and bound by primaries and conventions to support the nominee whoever he may be, remembering that even the Democratic party—the party of my own native State, Missouri, and of my adopted State, Kentucky, is not infallible; but sometimes falls into the hands of ringsters, nominating men who are unworthy the support of sober men, and for whom I could not consistently vote, even though it is the party to which I have looked for reform for many years, and whose national declaration of principles I heartily indorse and can call my own. Yet, when the party erred in the selection of men, I have claimed the independence and freedom of citizenship to withhold my support, and even voted for the opposition. But, in so doing, did not think it made me a Republican, as some has so inconsistently reported, or radical, or alienated me from the doctrines of Clay, whose statesmanship presents me with the most glorious model. In short, Mr. E[illegible]. I emphatically deny being a [illegible]ublican, and challenge any sober, reputable person to produce any evidence or declaration of mine to that effect. Let him show proof or forever hold his peace. This in justice to myself and friends.

Yours thankfully,
I. J. DAUGHTERS.

THE Hoosier editors who visited the Great Southern Exposition at Louisville were delighted with the unbounded hospitality extended them, while not a few of them were surprised to find the Kentuckians without horns and their eyes located on top of their heads.

JOHN SHERMAN visited Cincinnati last week, hence the cool weather.

STATE NEWS.

Many deaths are occurring in Gallatin county.

The Gallatin Circuit Court commenced Monday.

Wheat is quoted at 60 cents a bushel in Hopskinville.

Several post offices in the State have been burglarized lately.

Indiana has a very attractive exhibit at the Louisville Exposition.

The work on the branch penitentiary will require 12 or 18 months.

Flux is prevailing to an alarming extent in portions of Rockcastle co.

Estill county is raising the largest and finest watermelons in the State.

Kentucky had a good wheat crop, if she does hang fire on other crops.

The Louisville papers are having a small war over the labor question.

A man in Harrison county has raised a cabbage weighing fourteen pounds.

Phil Thompson thinks Kentucky will return a solid Democratic delegation to Congress.

The Democrat is making a strong effort in favor of having a better school house in Carrollton.

OUT of forty teachers examined in Bracken county only nine were given certificates to teach.

It is thought that there will not be over one-third of a yield of corn and tobacco in Owen county.

The value of Kentucky products for 1884 has been set down at one hundred million dollars.

The Sun estimates that the tobacco crop this year in Clark county will reach 6,000,000 pounds.

John Saxon, convicted of murder, is to be hanged at Barboursville, Knox county, November 23.

John T. Briggs, an employe of the Louisville and Nashville railroad is defaulter to the extent of $3,000.

Corn in Clark county in the field is selling at $2 per barrel and there is no disposition to pay any more at this time.

The late rains have greatly benefitted the grass, and live stock in all this section will fare well for this month.—Yeoman.

In Powell county the women have organized a temperance league, the object of which is to burn every distillery in the county.

The Court of Appeals has refused John Bush a new trial who has so often been sentenced to hang, and John's days are now but few.

An Owen hen laid an egg that is fashioned very much like a spinning top or a pear, and on the small end there is a protuberance like a stem.

Owing to the cheapness of wheat we prophesy that there will be a smaller area sown in Clark than usual this year and a correspondingly larger crop of corn next.

In the Kentucky exhibit at the Southern Exposition, is an ancient bedspread, embroidered by Mary M. Merriwether in Farquar county, Va. in 1772. It was placed in the Exposition by her grandaughter, Mattie Kenick.

The finest crops of corn to be seen in the State are in the Foxtown neighborhood, in Madison county. There crops were pitched quite early and had matured in a measure before the drouth set in. Several fields will make from 10 to 15 barrels per acre.

A real live alligator has frequently been seen recently in a mill pond near Tanner's store. It is something less than six feet long and parties who have been in Florida say it is exactly like those found there. This is no snake story but can be substantiated by many of the best citizens in that community. It was first seen by boys fishing last spring. Steps are being taken to capture it before cold weather sets in. Where it could have come from seems to be a mystery.—Clark Co., Democrat.

THE Scientific American figures the cost of a barrel of flour as follows: The cost of the barrel itself is 32 to 40 cents. It ordinarily requires from 30 to 40 pounds of coal to drive the machinery to make a barrel of flour. Four bushels and 40 pounds of wheat, or 275 pounds in all, are required to produce a barrel, or 196 pounds of good flour; bran and screenings, 69 pounds; less not accounted for, 10 pounds.

MANY of the public schools are now in progress and the remainder will be in a few days. Has it ever occurred to the parents that they slight the schools and neglect their duty by not visiting the schools often? Visiting a school prompts the teacher to increase his efforts to advance the pupils, while they are thus inspired to exert themselves in their studies. The frequent appearance of patrons in the school room stimulates both the teacher and the scholars. If the schools were visited more by the patrons there would be less dissatisfaction with teachers, the worthy being retained, while the unworthy would be released and told to go.

THERE is a slight abatement of cholera in Naples.

Col. J. Stoddard Johnston is in the East giving his opinion as to what will be the final out-come of the presidential campaign.

Subscribe for the RECORDER.

A PRIZE. Send six cents for postage, and receive free, a costly box of goods which will help you to more money right away than anything else in this world. All of either sex, succeed from the first hour. The broad road to fortune opens before the workers, absolutely sure. At once address, TRUE & Co., Augusta, Maine.

AGENTS wanted for The Lives of all the Presidents of the U.S. The largest handsomest, best book ever sold for more than twice our price. The best selling book in America. Immense profits to agents. All intelligent people want it. Any one can become a successful agent. Terms free. HALLET BOOK CO., Portland, Maine.

A. L. Brown,

THE HATTER,

Cor. Pike and Washington Streets,
COVINGTON, - - KY.

Has always on hand a large variety of Men's, Boys' and Children's Hats, and prices GUARANTEED to be as low as the lowest.

Gents' Furnishing Goods a Specialty.

TIME CARD OF THE

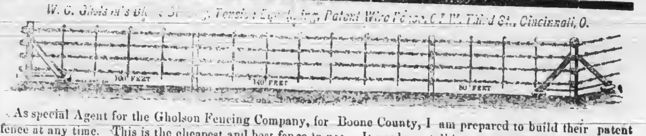
MAYFLOWER.

LEAVES PETERSBURG
For Lawrenceburg at 6½ A. M.; 9½ A. M. and 11½ A. M.; at 2 P. M., and at 4½ P. M.

LEAVES LAWRENCEBURG
For Petersburg and Aurora at 8 A. M., 10 A. M. and 12 M.; at 2½ P. M. and 5 P. M.

LEAVES PETERSBURG
For Aurora at 8½ A. M., 10½ A. M.; at 1 P. M., and 3 P. M.

LEAVES AURORA
For Petersburg and Lawrenceburg at 9 A. M., 11 A. M.; 1½ P. M. and 4 P. M.



ELIHU ALDEN, Master.

W. J. RICE,
CARPENTER & BUILDER,
BULLITSVILLE, KY.

Is prepared Raise or Move EITHER LOG or FRAME BUILDINGS On Short Notice,
And at the Lowest Possible Figures.
38-tf Your orders respectfully solicited.

THE LEADING CAMPAIGN BOOK! History of Growth, Development and Resources of the Republic. Review of past Administrations. Biographies of Candidates, 1884. 200 Pages Fine Illustrations. Send 50 cts. for full outfit and begin work. Circular free. Address
J. C. McCURDY, Cincinnati, O.

OPIUM and WHISKY HABITS cured at home without pain. Book of particulars sent Free. B. M. WOOLLEY, M. D., Atlanta, Ga.

W. C. Gholson's [illegible] Tension Equalizing Patent Wire Fence, [illegible] Third St., Cincinnati, O.

As special Agent for the Gholson Fencing Company, for Boone County, I am prepared to build their patent fence at any time. This is the cheapest and best fence in use. It needs no talking up, as it is fast selling itself wherever it is introduced. Any number of wires can be used.

28-1y-84.

G. C. GRADDY, Bullittsville, Ky.

John Q. Davis,

—DEALER IN—

BOOTS & SHOES, HATS AND CAPS

Of the very best Eastern and Cincinnati manufactures. I claim to be the best posted man in my line in this section. Goods sold absolutely on there merits, and ample willing reclamation made where goods do not come up to the "SCRATCH."

YOU CAN AS SAFELY SEND YOUR CHILDREN AS TO COME YOURSELVES.

Thankful for the very liberal patronge in the past, and hoping with increaesd facilities to still do the BOOT and SHOE business of this section,

Respectfully,

J. Q. DAVIS,

SIGN BIG RED BOOT, MAIN, Street, Rising Sun, Indiana.

SOUTHERN EXPOSITION

LOUISVILLE,

Opens August 16th. Closes October 25th, 1884.

15 ACRES UNDER ONE ROOF.

TWO CONCERTS EACH DAY

By Cappa's and Gilmore's, the most famous bands of the world.

Largest and Finest Display of Machinery in MOTION ever witnessed anywhere.

LOWEST RAILWAY RATES EVER GIVEN IN THE STATE.

ART BUILDINGS,

CONTAINING THE CHOICEST PICTURES IN AMERICA.

Ten works of Kentucky's great sculptor, Joel Hart, the best possible collection.

One hundred counties in Kentucky will make exhibits, displaying products which will demonstrate this State's tremendous capacities and future greatness. An occasion for Kentucky pride and glory—KENTUCKY TRIUMPHANT.

AN IMMENSE LIVE STOCK EXHIBITION

Presenting at one time in line over $1,000,000 worth of horses, comprising all the sires that have made Kentucky famous. The exhibit will surpass in extent the Royal Stock Show in London, and present to the visitor the grandest, completest, and most magnificent Stock exhibit the world has ever witnessed, and a sight that can not be duplicated in the world.

BENNETT H. YOUNG, President. J. M. WRIGHT, General Manager.

Now is the time To subscribe for The Recorder Only $1 50 a Year.

A. M. ACRA,

—DEALER IN—

HARNESS

SADDLES.

Fine and Cheap Buggy Harness.
BURLINGTON, KY.

I also have a full stock of BUGGY WHIPS, LAP DUSTERS, ANKLE BOOTS and TROTTING BALLS and everything else usually kept in a first-class harness shop.

REPAIRING A SPECIALTY.
Give Me A Call.

KENTUCKY UNIVERSITY, LEXINGTON, KY.
Three Colleges [illegible] Commercial. College of Arts [illegible] Classical and Scientific with twelve prof[illegible] fees, $[illegible] per session of nine months. College of the Bible, no tuition fees. Students of the College of the Bible have access without charge to the classes of the College of Arts, and those of the College of Arts to the classes of the College of the Bible. Session opens the Second Monday in September. For catalogues, address CHAS. LOUIS LOOS, President of the University, or ROBT. GRAHAM, President of the College of the Bible.

LAW SCHOOL OF WASHINGTON AND LEE UNIVERSITY.
GEN. G. W. C. LEE, President.
Instruction by text-books and printed lectures, with courses of lectures on special subjects by eminent jurists. Tuition and fees, $80 for session of nine months; beginning Sept. 18. For catalogue and full information address CHAS. A. GRAVES, Prof. of Law, Lexington, Va.

For A Business Education Attend the
Commercial College
Of Kentucky University, Lexington, Ky.
Students can begin any week-day in the year. No vacation. Time to complete the Full Diploma Business Course about 10 weeks. Average Total Cost, including Tuition, Set of Books and Board in a family, $90. Telegraphy a specialty. Literary Course free. Ladies received. 5,800 successful graduates. Over 500 pupils last year from 15 to 45 years of age from 22 States. Instruction is practically and individually imparted by 10 teachers. Special course for Teachers and Business Men. University Diploma presented to its graduates. This beautiful city is noted for its health, fitness and society, and is on leading Railroads. [illegible] For circulars and full particulars, address its President, WILBUR R. SMITH, Lexington, Ky.

NO NEW THING.
STRONG'S SANATIVE PILLS
Used throughout the country
FOR OVER 40 YEARS,
And thus proved
The Best Liver Medicine in the World.
No Griping, Poisonous Drugs, but purely Vegetable, safe and reliable. Prescribed even by Physicians. A speedy cure for Liver Complaint, Regulating the Bowels, Purifying the Blood, Cleansing from Malarial Taint. A perfect cure for Sick Headache, Constipation and all Bilious Disorders. Sold by Druggists. For Pamphlets, etc., address C. E. HULL & CO., 18 Cedar St., N.Y. City.

FOUND AT LAST.
THE ANIMAL SAFE GUARD.
Patent applied for. Absolute cure for all breachy stock. Simple and safe appliance; always at hand. No Rope, no Yoke, no pole used to injure stock. No animal will jump a fence when this is used. Send One Dollar for Farm-right and full instruction. Address
C. F. GROSEKE, Justice of the Peace, Falmouth, Ky.

MARRIAGE AND HEALTH GUIDE. 200 pgs. Illustrated. [illegible] CINCINNATI, OHIO. [illegible] Marriage, Consultation and Pamphlet free.

[illegible] Best Cough Syrup. Tastes good. Use in time. Sold by druggists. CONSUMPTION

THE COMPLETE HOME. Agents wanted for this beautiful book. New edition.—New bindings.—New illustrations from new designs. Superbly gotten up. Same low price. Adapted to all classes. Sells at sight. Agents doing big work. EXCELLENT TERMS. The handsomest prospectus ever issued. Apply now.
WM. GARRETSON & CO., Lexington, Kentucky. Also other grand new books and Bibles.

Local News.

It was too dry to frost.

Watermelons and fire Sunday.

Dry and dusty and news scarce.

Talbott's Patent Flour is the best.

Talbott's Patent Flour is the best.

Three schools now in progress in Burlington.

Watermelons have disappeared from the market.

The flux and whooping cough are in the county.

Some persons finished cutting tobacco last week.

Hogs and gardens can't both thrive in Burlington.

As a general thing Fairs have been successful this season.

On account of the dry weather some cows have failed in butter.

S. A. Palmer has entertained the chills and fever several days.

Farmers along railroads are having considerable trouble with fire.

For Sale—20 graded ewes.
W. J. Rice.

Whisky or no whisky, that is the question in this district now.

Attorneys Stephens and Tolin attended court at Florence last Saturday.

Wanted—Boarders by the day or week.
Mrs. Cy Riddell.

Dudley Rouse has put in a new fire and burglar proof safe, Hall's patent.

It now has very much the appearance of being too dry for plowing this fall.

The chicken and vegetable thieves have surely had plenty to eat this season.

The association at Dry Creek last week was well attended especially by ministers.

Miss Mary Thompson commenced teaching a select school at her house last Monday.

T. B. Rouse sold his big black horse to a man in Cincinnati last week, for a handsome price.

Mr. and Mrs. A. W. Smith's infant child which died last week was interred in Florence cemetery.

Covington has just half a dozen candidates for jailer, and the entries will not close before January 1, 1886.

The total taxable property for this county as revised is as follows: White, list, $5,123,863; Colored, $19,991.

The public school in this district commenced last Monday under the supervision of Mr. Mack of Rising Sun.

James Monroe was discharged from jail Monday morning. His actions of late have been rather "crankish."

The very warm and dry weather reduced the attendance at the association last week, from this part of the country.

W. T. German found in the road the other day, near Jas. D. Conner's, a shot gun, all except the stock, barrel and ram-rod.

Sunday morning human gore was to be seen in several places on the street, but no person came up missing or badly lacerated.

At Falmouth last week, B. F. Norman, of Sugar Tit, took eight premiums on cake, two on butter and one on light bread.

Another cool wave struck this section last week, but some other locality got the benefit of the rain that reduced the temperature.

A dwelling house in Bucktown caught fire one day last week, but was extinguished after burning a small hole in the roof.

The report has reached here that a fine stallion, the property of Mr. Dolph of East Bend, was stolen from his stable one night last week.

Our advice to the farmers, if they will permit us to advise them, is to build cisterns and wells instead of tobacco barns for the next year.

We understand that an effort is being made to have a theological discussion at Bullittsville between an Old Baptist and a Christian.

Chas. Scothorn and family did not leave for Kansas on the day appointed, owing to the serious illness of one of their children at that time.

Samuel Pope and Geo. E. Rouse went to Tennessee last week to look at the country. We understand that Jno. M. Hoshal accompanied them.

We hear that a Kentuckian was pretty badly used up pugilisticly, in Rising Sun, last Saturday, and then had to pay about seventeen dollars for the fun.

Early Monday morning we met our friend Crisler with a howitzer in his arms, and on the war-path, in search of the hogs that destroyed his truck patch Sunday night.

Saturday there were 24 applicants for certificates to teach the common school in this county, before the board of examiners. But few first-class certificates are being granted.

Attention, everybody! Put on your thinking caps and guess who it is. We understand there is to be a wedding in Burlington, this month. We wont tell you, so don't ask.

James Conner is buying hogs which he is shipping to Butler Mo., where Wm. Walton takes charge of them to feed. Corn can be bought there for about 20 cents a bushel.

Noah Clore, who resides near this place, has a spring on his farm that operates like a fountain sending the water forth perpendicularly in the air. He has had it boxed in.

If those horses that promenade the sidewalks every night wore rubber shoes, they would not interfere with the repose of people; and fewer cuss words would be the result.

A fresh supply of Dr. Salmon's hog and chicken powders, for cholera, at W. F. McKim's.

At the Falmouth Fair A. M. Acra, our local harness maker took a premium on each article he exhibited, viz:—one saddle, set of single harness, set of double harness and a pair of check lines.

One day last week a defective flue came near causing the destruction of Miss Mary A. Thompson's house which is occupied by a colored family. The blaze was discovered and subdued while yet incipient.

While housing tobacco Monday morning, Henry Clore, who lives on the headwaters of Middle creek, fell off of a tier pole and broke three of his ribs. He fell but a short distance.

It seems that the impression is abroad that A. W. Smith's child died from the effects of a stroke on the head. Mr. Smith requests us to say that it is erroneous, and that the child died from flux or some kindred disease.

N. B. Stephens, of Union, had a fine young iron gray horse stolen from his stable last Wednesday night. Mr. Stephens had had the animal trained some, and it was a promising stepper on which he had a fancy price.

Mr. John Stephens, of Bullittsville, will leave for Republic county, Kansas, this week, where he will invest in a large lot of cattle and hogs, which he will place under the control of his son E. K. now out there, and who has a tremendous corn crop.

F. P. Walton and S. A. Palmer, school trustees in this district, are entitled to credit for the condition in which they have put the public school building. Never before was it as comfortable as it will be this fall and winter, besides it is somewhat presentable.

Our friend, Abe Graves, returned, a few days since, from a visit to Kansas, and he straight way advertises his desirable farm for sale. See his advertisement in this issue. The Kansas fever is becoming epidemic in this county, and is taking away good citizens.

The day has come when to leave the grave of the departed one unmarked by a neat stone, is not suffered by even those in the most ordinary walks of life, [illegible] pleased in both design and price by Huschart & Co., of Lawrenceburg, Ind. John Beall, of Hebron, is their agent.

G. S. Lozier, agent for the Light running New Home Sewing machine was over here last week and sold machines to the following persons: O. P. Conner, Geo. Blythe, R. S. Cowen, R. S. Crisler, R. C. Rice, W. C. Tanner, John Olsner and Mrs. Virginia Huey. Besides he took several orders for pianos and organs.

B. P. Rice's sale on the 15th was well attended, and reasonably good prices prevailed. Perry has rented a livery stable in Covington, to which place he is moving. His stable is on the corner of Fourth and Madison streets, where he will be glad to see his Boone county friends. Read his advertisement in this paper.

Friend Hugh M. Fraizer, of Clay Center, Kansas, sends us a complimentary ticket to the Second Annual Fair of the Clay County Fair Association, commencing on the 23d inst., and continuing four days. We will drive out the day of the negro baby show, and see the $5 silver cup awarded to the "best developed colored baby under one year old."

The town hogs have been engaged in riotous proceedings for several days and several gardens have been laid waste. Of course many of the citizens are very indignant, and threaten to wage a war of extermination on the destructive element of Burlington stock. About a dozen gardens look like a cyclone had visited them, and the probability is the Governor will be petitioned to send a company of the State Guards here to suppress the nightly destruction of private property. The Court-house and jail are in tact yet.

At a mass meeting of the Boone Co. Republican Executive Committee, held at the office of S. G. Botts, in Petersburg, Ky., to select four delegates and alternates to the District Convention to be held in Covington, Ky, Sept. 25, at 12 o'clock m., to nominate a candidate for Congress, D. Riggs, chairman, appointed the following gentlemen to represent the county: G. G. Hughes and T. Westbay, Burlington; Geo. W. Baker and W. W. Garnett, Hamilton; J. A. Corey and J. J. Rucker, Florence; J. M. Thomasson and S. G. Botts, Petersburg. All are requested to attend.

J. M. Thomasson, Secty.

The shooting match under the management of Dr. Rice at the Florence picnic last Saturday was well attended, and was pretty sport for the contestants The match was for a fine silver cup, and was won by a Mr. McGraw when the tie in the following score was shot off:

McGraw	0	1	1	0	1	1	0	0	1	0	—5
Leathers	1	1	0	0	1	1	1	1	0	1	—7
Reed	0	0	1	1	0	0	0	0	1	1	—4
Blythe	0	0	1	1	1	1	1	1	1	1	—8
Conner	0	0	1	0	0	1	0	0	0	1	—3
Carpenter	1	1	1	0	1	1	1	1	0	1	—8
Wilson	1	0	1	1	0	1	0	0	1	1	—6
Allen	0	1	0	1	1	0	1	1	0	1	—6
Howard	1	0	0	0	1	1	0	0	1	0	—4
Whitlock	1	1	1	1	0	1	0	1	1	1	—8

McGraw scored, in shooting off the tie, 9 out of 10 balls.

We call the attention of the readers to the advertisement of Messrs. Heyn & Bro. of Rising Sun, Indiana, From personal observation and experience we are convinced that this firm carries the most complete stock of goods in Southeastern Indiana, besides selling away below city prices. Unlike many other firms they do not advertise onething and mean another, but they can be relied upon as acting upon their word. The country would be much better off if all our business houses would act upon [illegible] principle. In [illegible] we will say that such a store is and should be patronized by the public. We will mention but one solid fact in regard to their ready-made clothing. There are too many would-be clothiers in this country, but those are "few and far between" that can furnish a garment fit to be worn by a gentleman wishing to dress modern and respectably. A word to the wise is sufficient.

The mass meeting called for last Saturday to appoint delegates to attend the district convention at Falmouth yesterday, was attended by about a dozen Democrats. L. H. Dills was chosen chairman and J. G. Furnish, secretary.

On motion of Cy Riddell L. C. Norman, F. Riddell and M. T. Garnett were appointed to select delegates. The committee reported the following persons as delegates: L. H. Dills, N. S. Walton, D. M. Snyder, J. A. Wilson, Saml. Adams, J. C. Hughes, R. L. Finnell, T. F. Curley, S. S. Scott, B. W. Adams, W. C. Watts, Ben Stephens, J. Frank Grant and Reuben Conner.

The delegates were instructed for Hon John G. Carlisle for Congress and Volney Dickerson for member of the State Board of Equalization.

On motion and second any and all Democrats in good standing who may attend the convention from this county were appointed delegates and instructed to cast the vote of the county in the convention, as above indicated.

The meeting then adjourned sine die.

Personal Mentions.

[If you have friends from a distance visiting you or expect to be away from home on business or pleasure, let us have the item for this column.]

Talbott's Patent Flour is the best.

'Squire Hind, of Walton, was in town Monday.

W. T. Snyder, of Petersburg, was in the hub yesterday.

Walter Whitaker made Burlington a brief call Monday.

J. H. Wilson and wife, of Constance, were in town yesterday.

James Westbay and wife are sojourning in Cincinnati this week.

Thos Sparks is visiting his son-in-law, Dr. Murat, of Constance.

R. C. Rice now occupies a portion of Mrs. Virginia Huey's residence.

W. T. German and Frank Mullins attended the Falmouth Fair last week.

Lewis Aylor and William Tanner, of Gunpowder, were in town yesterday.

Miss Mattie Winston left, the first of the week to visit her sister at Paris, Illinois.

'Squire A. C. McConnell and Chas. Wilson, of Rabbit Hash, were in town Monday.

Miss Nettie Gardner will commence teaching a five months school next Monday.

Miss Maud Kirk has returned after a very pleasant visit with relatives in Covington.

Rev. C. C. Conner and wife have been spending several days with relatives in this county.

Chas. Bradford and Miss Osa Yager of Florence, made Burlington a flying visit Sunday.

Mrs. W. L. Riddell left this morning on a two weeks' visit to her brothers in Indianapolis.

Esq. Whitlock, of Taylorsport, was among the numerous visitors at the capital Tuesday.

Uncle Gus Weaver was in town last Friday and looked better than we expected to see him.

Judge Hawes holds several of the younger heads a pretty stiff game of chess, in fact he is six to their half a dozen.

Ben Stephens, of Florence, accompanied by T. B. Sanders and Ben Lee Cleek, was in town on business last Thursday.

A. W. Smith and family and his mother left, Tuesday morning, for Florida, where we trust they may be well contented and prosperous.

Wanted—Boarders by the day or meal.
J. F. Blythe.

NEIGHBORHOOD NEWS.

Union.

Mr. Wash Huey is convalescing.

Ed Stephens had a very valuable horse stolen last week.

Miss Minnie Stephens, of Florence, is the guest of Nannie Burkett.

No trustees, no school-house, no school, aren't we progressing?

Miss May Duffley, of Covington, is the guest of Sallie Bannister.

Mrs. M. C. Weaver, of Junction City, is visiting her father, H. Bannister.

Miss Nellie Platt, of Rabbit Hash, is visiting her cousin, Lizzie Rodgers.

Geo. Gaines, of Bullittsville, visited Mrs. Amanda Huey last Sunday.

Union sent twelve delegates to the Baptist Association at Mayslick last week.

Mrs. Bartell and Miss Durham, of Shelby City, are visiting friends in this county.

Misses Emma Wilson and Lou Platt, of Rising Sun, were the guests of Mrs. Thornton last Saturday.

The young gentlemen gave a very nice pic nic last Saturday afternoon, followed by a party at the hall in the evening.

Rabbit Hash.

The river is very near the lowest water mark at this point.

Miss Pauline Gregory is visiting acquaintances in this neighborhood.

News is like our potatoes, You may go from hill to hill and find nothing.

W. H. Nelson and family, of Rising Sun, were visiting [illegible] Carlton, Friday.

Several from here attended the Enterprise Fair, last Friday. They report a good attendance.

A good many of the farmers three miles back, are hauling water from the river for house use and stock.

Prof. George Cartwright will commence a five months school in the Maple Hill school house, September 22nd.

Dr. Cawen is still attending on Dr. Gillespie's patients, of Rising Sun. He thinks the doctor will be able to ride in a few days.

Harry Blythe, of your burg, was in town Friday with several head of cattle which he delivered to Alex Birdsal, of Rising Sun.

Solon Stephens delivered his crop of wheat, about 1,300 bushels, to J. W. Talbott, of Rising Sun, last week, at 75 cents per bushel.

Cutting and housing tobacco is the order of the day. Some crops are badly damaged by the intense heat, while other patches look well.

Tom Marshall says he is building a cyclone house. If you were to see the foundation you would think it would stand a jimmie as he calls them.

Mrs. Jennie Merrick and her nephew, Eddie Kerney, who have been visiting Prof. Bell and family, returned to their home in Evansville last Wednesday. I think our neighborhood was highly honored by a visit from such an estimable lady as she. We hope her visit may be frequent and lengthy.

Florence.

The Misses Herndon, of Covington, are at present the guests of the family of L. C. Yager.

On motion a temporary board of 15 was selected to transact business with Reuben Conner, Pres., Joseph Cleveland, V-Pres., Conner Yager, Sect'y.; the board to meet in two weeks and report progress.

On motion it was ordered that a permanent organization be had, to be known as The Agricultural Society of Northern Kentucky, that the capital stock be $25,000 or 1,000 shares of $25 each that the books be opened for taking same and as soon as $16,000 is taken in stock, the subscription is due and collectable.

to personate the different phases of female beauties that honored the occasion with their presence, but, as dancing was one of the attractive features of the evening it was noticeable that Miss Lucy Swetnam, Miss Adelia Grogin, Miss Eella Herndon, Miss Alice Corey, Miss Ola Yager and Miss Kate Bradford were among the most prominent in the cotillion and waltz.

The most quiet and business like marriage that has come under our notice for some time, was that of Mr. Jeff Stephens and Miss Lena Baker, daughter of Hon. Harry Baker. This pleasant affair was consummated at the residence of Dr. Slater in Florence, on the 9th inst. Elder W. S. Keene officiating. No general invitation was given only the immediate families and a few particular friends. Joy be with them.

The Odd-Fellows' picnic for the benefit of the Widows and Orphans' Fund, on Saturday we presume was a success as the weather was fine and the attendance good. We think the best way to relieve the widows is to take the tariff off of matrimony and let them marry. We have two dozen here. For the want of space we are not permitted

As per order of adjournment from the meeting held at Florence, Sept. 6th, in the interest of an Agricultural Society of Northern Kentucky, quite an augmented assemblage from different parts of the counties of Boone and Kenton, with a good representation from the city of Covington, convened at the Southern Hotel, Saturday, the 13th, with Hon. Reuben Conner as Chairman and L. Conner Yager, Secretary. The committee of five appointed to make a critical survey of the lands between Florence and Erlanger, contiguous to the C. S. R. R. and the Covington & Lexington pike, and ascertain the most practicable site for locating the grounds of said Society, taking into consideration the race track of 1 mile, the suitableness for all the necessary buildings, with amphitheater, halls, &c, costs of land and all the conveniences of ingress and egress, reported as follows: "Having made a careful examination of all the lands as directed by the meeting, and taking all things into consideration, we are of the opinion (one dissenting) that the farm known as the Rankin farm is the best adapted to the wants of such Society, and that it contains 145 acres and can be purchased for $11,000." They further recommend that the grounds be located upon said farm, and as soon as sufficient stock is taken that the same be purchased, or enough thereof for the purpose of said Society. After the report of the committee a little damper was thrown upon the meeting by a proposition from some gentleman in the neighborhood of Richwood to locate the Fair in that part of the country. Quite a spirited debate ensued and it seemed as if a little division would be the result when, by a well timed speech, of Dr. J. J. Dulaney, of Covington, oil was poured on the troubled waters and the report of the committee was unanimously adopted.

Gas Ometer.

The mystery connected with the appearance of that pair of brogans at the door of the "Bachelors' Retreat," the other morning, has been cleared up without the assistance of any of Pinkerton's force, but there is yet some theorizing as to how they got into the wrong buggy at a moonlight picnic. No doubt the owner thereof also has his theory as to how he lost his shoes.

Live Stock Market.

Cincinnati, Sept. 15, 1884.

CATTLE.
Receipts to day about 1,500 head, shipments 282.
Best Shippers	6 to 6 60
Good Shippers	5½ to 6 00
Extra Oxen	4½ to 5½
Fair to good Oxen	4 to 4½
Extra Butchers	4 to 4½
Common to Fair	5 @ 6
Roughs and Scalawags	2 @ 2½
COWS.
Extra	4½ @ 4¾
Common to Fair	2¼ @ 3½
Fair to Good	3½ @ 4
BULLS.
Extra	3¾ @ 3¾
Fair to good	3 @ 3½
Heavy feeding steers	3¾ @ 4¼
Good stockers	4 @ 4½
COWS and CALVES.
Common	15 @ $25
Fair to good	30 @ $40
Choice	45 @ $55
Extra	$65
Jerseys	50 @ $90
VEAL CALVES.
Best	6½ @ 8
Common	4 @ 4½
HOGS.
Select butchers, heavy shippers	5 85 @ 6 00
Good lights, 180 to 250	5 30 @ 5 90
" " 150 to 175	4 50 @ 5 85
Common	4 52 @ 5 25
Cull	3 00 @ 4 00
SHEEP.
Best weathers	4 @ 4½
Fair to good	3¼ @ 3¾
Ewes and wethers mixed	3¼ @ 4
Stock wethers	2½ @ 3½
Common	2 @ 3 00
LAMBS.
Best shippers	4½ @ 5 00
Extra	5½
Common to good	4 @ 4 50
Common and culls	3 @ 3 35
Fair to good	3¾ @ 4½
Lights	3 @ 3½

W. M. Conner,

B. P. RICE,

Successor to [illegible] Covington.

LIVERY AND BOARDING STABLE,

Cor. Fourth & Madison Sts. Covington, Ky.

Horses kept by the Day, Week or Month.

Horses, Barouches and Buggies for Hire.

The Best of care taken with Horses entrusted to my keeping.

OFFICE OPEN DAY AND NIGHT.

Farm for Sale!

Containing 125 acres, Brick house of 8 rooms, 2 attics and cellar of 2 rooms, barn 36x48, wash house and all necessary out buildings, 2 wells, 2 cisterns, one pond and never failing water. Also orchard and about 6 acres of woods from which 15,000 feet of lumber can be cut, locust groves, &c. Farm in state of good cultivation, all in grass except 15 acres. Situated 1½ miles from the Covington & Bullittsville turnpike, same distance from churches and schools. A bargain if sold soon.—Terms reasonable. Call on or address,

Abe Graves, Bullittsville, Ky.

TAX NOTICE.

The law requires me to collect and pay over 94 per cent. of the county revenue by the 1st day of October. All persons not paying their taxes when called on are requested to meet me or my deputy in their voting precincts at the following time and places:

Petersburg, Monday, November 17
Bellevue, Wednesday, November 19,
Florence, Friday, November 21.
Carlton, Saturday, November 22.
Union, Monday, November, 24.
Beaver, Tuesday, November 25.
Hamilton, Wednesday, November 26.
Hebron, Thursday, November 27.
Walton, Friday, November 28.
Verona, Saturday, November 29.
Burlington, Monday, December 1.

Any riding done to collect taxes after the above dates will be done at the cost of the parties owing the same.

J. R. Clutterbuck, S. B. C.

FLOUR!

We have TALBOTT'S Flour for sale, by wholesale or retail—Very Cheap.

A. Corbin & Son,

GRANT, KY.

L. KUPPERSCHMID,

12 Walnut Street,

Lawrenceburg. - - Ind.

Always keeps on hand a large assortment of Watches, Clocks, Jewelry, &c. Repairing Watches and Clocks a specialty. Also, agent for the

Rockford Watch Company.

Which manufactures the finest movements made, and they are used by all railroad men.

—Give Me a Call.—

NOTICE.

All those indebted to Conner & Northcutt and Jno. L. Conner, are hereby notified that they must come forward and settle the same immediately. Those having claims against the same must present them to the undersigned properly proven at once.

J. T. Curley, Assignee.

NOTICE.

All those indebted to the estate of Isaac Clore, deceased, are hereby notified that they must come forward and settle the same immediately. Those having claims against the estate of said deceased must present them to the undersigned properly proven, at once.

John W. Crigler,
Administrator.

LUMBER.

Geo. M. Bedinger & Co.,

Erlanger, - - Ky.

We keep constantly on hand all kinds of Lumber, Laths and Shingles. Also Builder's supplies of all kinds.

—Come and see Us.—

Flour! Flour!

TALBOTT'S

CELEBRATED BRAND OF FLOUR is for sale at the following places in Boone County, Ky.

A. Corbin & Son, Grant.
Dudley Rouse, Saml Cowen, W. E. Piper and W. F. McKim, Burlington.
Rouse Bros., Florence X-Roads.
W. W. Garnett, Hamilton.
Wilson & Riddell, Rabbit Hash.
E. L. Clements, Clements' Store.
Omer Kirtley, Kirtley's Landing.

TALBOTT'S FLOUR

—Is the Best, take no other.—

It is Cheap for the Quality.

$66 a week at home. $5 outfit free. Pay absolutely sure. No risk. Capital not required. If you want business at which persons of either sex, young or old, can make great pay all the time they work, with absolute certainty, write for particulars to H. Hallet & Co., Portland, Maine.

GOLD for the working class. Send 10c for postage, and we will mail you free, a royal, valuable box of sample goods that will put you in the way of making more money in a few days than you ever thought possible at any business. Capital not required. We will start you. You can work all the time or in spare time only. The work is universally adapted to both sexes, young and old. You can easily earn from 50 cents to $5 every evening. That all who want work may test the business, we make this unparalleled offer; to all who are not well satisfied we will send $1 to pay for the trouble of writing us. Full particulars, directions, etc., sent free. Fortunes will be made by those who give their whole time to the work. Great success absolutely sure. Don't delay. Start now. Address Stinson & Co., Portland, Maine.

County Directory.

OFFICERS.

Assessor—O. M. Riley.
County Surveyor—W. E. Vest.
School Commissioner—D. M. Snyder.
Coroner.—Dr. A. A. Murat, Constance.

COURTS.

CIRCUIT COURT meets the 2d Monday in April and first Monday in October, P. U. Major, Judge; W. L. Riddell, Clerk A. G. DeJarnette, Commonwealths Attorney; W. L. Riddell, Trustee Jury Fund.

COUNTY COURT meets the first Monday in every month. L. [illegible] Dills, Judge; S. W. Tolin, County Attorney; M. T. Garnett, Clerk; J. R. Clutterbuck, Sheriff, T. W. Finch and W. T. German, Deputy Sheriffs.

QUARTERLY COURT meets the first Monday in March, June, September and December. The officers of the County Court preside.

COURT OF CLAIMS meets the first Monday in November.

MAGISTRATES' COURTS are held in March, June, September and December, as follows:

Bellevue—M. B. Green, first Saturday, and T. H. Sutton, third Monday. J. M. Moody, Constable.

Burlington—E. H. Baker, Thursday after first Monday, and Oscar Gaines, fourth Monday. R. H. Sandford, Constable.

Carlton A. G. McConnell, Wednesday after second Monday, and B. H. Ryle, Saturday after third Monday. Walter Ryle, Constable.

Petersburg—Jos. Hensley, Wednesday after first Monday, and L. A. Loder fourth Saturday. Geo. Comer, Constable.

Beaver—W. M. Rouse, Friday after the third Monday, and

Union—M. C. Norman, Thursday after third Monday, and H. Bannister, Thursday after second Monday. A. D. Riley, Constable.

Hamilton—F. M. Howlett, Tuesday after second Monday; W. W. Garnett, Wednesday after third Monday. R. L. Roberts Constable.

Walton—T. F. Curley, second Friday, S. T. Johnson, Tuesday after second Friday. W. C. Moxley, Constable.

H. C. CHAMBERS,

AUCTIONEER

FLORENCE, - - KENTUCKY.

CONNER YAGER

Attorney and Counselor at Law,

FLORENCE, - KENTUCKY

ROBERT B. REED

Attorney at Law.

OFFICE AT - - UNION, KY

F. RIDDELL. H. J. STEPHENS.

RIDDELL and STEPHENS,

ATTORNEYS at LAW

BURLINGTON, KY.

Office over Dudley Rouse's Store.

W. E. VEST,

COUNTY SURVEYOR

WALTON, KY.

Is prepared to do all kinds of surveying. All orders sent him through the mail to Walton, will receive his prompt attention.

E. E. IGOE,

Resident Dentist,

Rising Sun, Ind.

WITH

J. P. Ulrey.

Monday and Tuesday at Rising Sun, Ind. Wednesday and Saturday at Aurora, Ind.; Thursday and Friday at Lawrenceburg.

DR. A. B. HARRYMAN,

Resident Dentist.

Office over Post-Office.

AURORA. INDIANA.

J. J. Landram. G. G. Hughes.

LANDRAM & HUGHES,

ATTORNEYS at LAW.

Will practice in the Boone Circuit Court and the Court of Appeals. Prompt attention given to Collections, on application to G. G. Hughes, Burlington, Ky.

S. W. TOLIN,

ATTORNEY AT LAW

BURLINGTON, - - KY

Office in Court-house on 2d floor.

Will manage litigation in any of the Courts of the State, contracts and other legal instruments drawn up at reasonable rates. A prompt an studious attention given to business intrusted to my care. A trial solicited. 12-1y

AURORA MARBLE AND GRANITE WORKS, Aurora, Ind

Will have constantly on hand

Marble and Granite Monuments, Italian & American Headstones, &c.

I am ready to do all kinds of Stone Work on short notice and at low prices Hoping to receive the patronage of Boone County, I am respectfully,

F. W. Kassebaum.

INSURE AT HOME

The Farmers' Mutual Fire

INSURANCE COMPANY

Of Boone County

Is now completely organized and receiving applications for insurance.

Its Rates are Lower

Than those of any other Company, and it gives the farmers of Boone County a

HITHERTO UNKNOWN ADVANTAGE

In keeping their property insured.

EVERY FARMER IN THE COUNTY

should take a policy at once.

J. A. Gaines, President, Burlington, Ky.
J. H. Walton, Secretary, Constance, Ky.
R. Randall, Treasurer.

DIRECTORS.

Legran Gaines, A. J. Utz.
Jno. Stephens.

Oscar Gaines, Agent. C. L. Crisler, Assessor.

LADIES' JERSEYS JUST RECEIVED AT

COLTER'S,

Rising Sun, Ind.

At 90c, $1 50, $2, and up to $3 and $4. Our all-Wool Braided Jerseys at $2 is selling fast. As Jerseys have proven to be the most elegant, neat and economical garments, they are becoming very popular and will be worn extensively for the next five years.

The demand is so great that we have been getting in two or three lots a week from our New York Buyer. Having just received 165 Children's Cloaks from the Wolf & Conn failure; also over 200 Cloaks,

New Markets, Russian Circulars and

DOLMANS.

We offer a Black all-Wool Diagonal Russian Circular, with large Fur Collar, two Fur Ornaments on Back, at $5,88, that is worth $11; and and other garments of all kinds at $5 to $26.

NEW FALL MILLINERY

Just received. Over One thousand Men's and Boys' Suits of Good Clothing just received from the failure of Hayes & Thall.

Big Bargains in solid

BOOTS & SHOES.

Give me your money, you shall have its value. You all know that our Motto is "Buy Goods right and thay will sell themselves." We have over worth of Goods in the above lines, that would cost one-third more if bought in the old foggy style. We neither buy nor sell on time. Best of Goods at Bottom Prices is our aim. In case we get fire or railroad wreck goods, or goods soiled in any way, we are particular in showing our customers the defects. The most of our goods now come from the financially wrecked merchants and manufacturers. WM. COLTER, Rising Sun, Ind.

Twenty-Thousand Dollars

We have just received word that we are to get Four Hundred Good Overcoats at Half Price.

R. S. CRISLER,

Burlington, Ky,

WAGON MAKER AND

—MANUFACTURER OF—

ROAD WAGONS, SPRING WAGONS, HARROWS, PLOWS, WHEEL BARROWS

AND ALL KINDS OF WOOD WORK.

Also the Manufacturer of W. M. Conner's Patent Right Hay Conveyor

Saws Filed & Sharpened.

Please call and examine my prices before calling elsewhere.

Stott Brothers,

PETERSBURG, KY.

ARE STILL IN THE RING!

And wish to announce to the the people of Peterasburg and vicinity that they have moved in thier New Building and added to their stock of

Dry Goods, Notions, Boots & Shoes,

HATS and CAPS, QUEENSWARE a full line of

STAPLE & FANCY GROCRIES,

Which they will be pleased to show the people, and give them prices before purchasing elsewhere. Our motto is

GOOD GOODS, SMALL PROFITS

and a square deal to all, both large and small. We also keep a good stock

Of Salt and Coal,

Which we guarantee to be as good as the best. Thanking the people for past favors, and solicit a continuance of the same. Remember, STOTT BROS., Petersburg, Ky., keep the best of Shaker Yarns, Jeans & Flannels.

JAMES S. WAYNE, President. JNO. L. SANDFORD, Cashier

CAPITAL $300,000.

FARMERS AND TRADERS

NATIONAL BANK.

Covington, Kentucky.

DIRECTORS.

James S. Wayne, J. S. Matson, M. C. Motch, J. H. Mersman, Sam Hind, J. L. Sandford, L. C. Stephens, E. J. Hickey, L. H. Dills, E. J. Green, F. P. Helm

The general operations of banking transacted upon the most favorable terms, collections made on all points in the United States.

The Business and Accounts of Farmers are Especially Solicited by this Bank.
dec. 20-6m

UNDERTAKING.

We keep Constantly on Hand all sizes of

Burial Cases and Caskets.

And having just received a beautiful

NEW HEARSE,

Which can be had at a reasonable price when desired.

PRICES GUARANTEED LESS THAN CITY PRICES

DAVIS BROS., HEBRON, KY.

City [illegible]uring Mills

[illegible] SUN, INDIANA.

FLOUR E[illegible]CHANGED FOR WHEAT OR CASH. THE HIGHEST MARKET PRICE PAID FOR GOOD WHEAT.

mar7-tf23

J. W. Talbott.

THE RECORDER.

RIDDELL & HALL, Publishers.

BURLINGTON, : : KENTUCKY.

THE LITTLE QUAKER SINNER.

A little Quaker maiden, with dimpled cheek and chin,
Before an ancient mirror stood, and viewed her form within.
She wore a gown of sober gray, a cape demure and prim,
With only simple fold and hem, yet dainty, neat and trim.
Her bonnet, too, was gray and stiff; its only line of grace
Was in the lace, so soft and white, shirred round her rosy face.

Quoth she: "Oh, how I hate this hat! I hate this gown and cape!
I do wish all my clothes were not of such outlandish shape!
The children passing by to school have ribbons on their hair;
The little girl next door wears blue; oh, dear, if I could dare,
I know what I should like to do!"—The words were whispered low,
Lest such tremendous heresy should reach her aunts below!

Calmly reading in the parlor sat the good aunts, Faith and Peace,
Little dreaming how rebellious throbbed the heart of their young niece.
All their prudent, humble teaching wilfully she cast aside,
And, her mind now fully conquered by vanity and pride,
She, with trembling heart and fingers, on a hassock sat her down,
And this little Quaker sinner sewed a tuck into her gown!

"Little Patience, art thou ready? Fifth day-meeting time has come, Mercy Jones and Goodman Elder with his wife have left their home."
'Twas Aunt Faith's sweet voice that called her, and the naughty little maid—
Gliding down the dark old stairway—hoped their notice to evade,
Keeping shyly in their shadow as they went out at the door,
Ah, never little Quakeress a guiltier conscience bore!

Dear Aunt Faith walked looking upward; all her thoughts were pure and holy;
And Aunt Peace walked gazing downward, with a humble mind and lowly.
But "tuck—tuck," chirped the sparrows, at the little maiden's side;
And, in passing Farmer Watson's, where the barn-door opened wide,
Every sound that issued from it, every grunt and every cluck,
Seemed to her affrighted fancy like "a tuck!" "a tuck!" "a tuck!"

In meeting Goodman Elder spoke of pride and vanity,
While all the Friends seemed looking round that dreadful tuck to see.
How it swelled in its proportions, till it seemed to fill the air,
And the heart of little Patience grew heavier with her care.
Oh, the glad relief to her, when, prayers and exhortations ended,
Behind her two good aunties her homeward way she wended!

The pomps and vanities of life she'd seized with eager arms,
And deeply she had tasted of the world's alluring charms.
Yes, to the dregs had drained them, and only this to find:
All was vanity of spirit and vexation of the mind.
So, repentant, saddened, humbled, on her hassock she sat down,
And this little Quaker sinner ripped the tuck out of her gown!

—Lucy Lincoln Montgomery, in St. Nicholas

A GREEN-ROOM ROMANCE.

IN THREE SCENES—SCENE 1.

Mr. Percy Montmorency was seated in front of a looking-glass in his dressing-room at the Pantheon Theater, habited in the costume of Charles Surface, with the perruquier in attendance. The name of "Montmorency" was merely a nom de theater assumed by Harry Stanley when he adopted the somewhat singular resolution of "fretting and strutting his hour" on the boards of a metropolitan theater; for Mr. Stanley was the only child of his father, Colonel Stanley, and consequently heir to that gallant officer's estates in Yorkshire and elsewhere. For the rest, he was three-and-twenty, undeniably good-looking, and endowed with considerable abilities. Having completed the arrangement of the powdered wig, the perruquier withdrew a pace and contemplated the effect with well-simulated admiration. "Mr. Charles Mathews never looked the part better, sir."

The actor seemed to coincide in the opinion of his flattering attendant, for he rose and surveyed himself in the glass with admiration, which he made no attempt to conceal.

"A good house, Jackson?"

"Capital, sir. But a little cold. They'll warm up when you go on, sir."

"Tell the call boy I want him, Jackson."

Jackson withdrew, and Montmorency surrendered himself to a mental soliloquy which assumed somewhat of this form: "I wonder what my father wishes to see me about? The same old story, I suppose—the folly and wickedness of the step I have taken. Well, of one thing I am certain: "I am much better off in my present position than wedded to that Barbadoes girl, Miss Anstruther, in spite of her money bags, and whom I have never seen."

These reflections were put an end to by the entrance of the call boy.

"If a gentleman giving the name of Colonel Stanley should call, show him in here."

"He is outside, sir," replied the boy.

"Show him in at once," whereupon there entered a small wizen-faced old gentleman, with snow-white hair, and supporting himself on a stick. Montmorency advanced, shook hands with a great show of cordiality, and placed a chair, on which Colonel Stanley slowly seated himself, gazing round the small apartment with an unfeigned expression of curiosity. "So this is a theatrical dressing-room. You are pretty snug."

The room certainly deserved the encomium of the old Colonel. Paintings in oil and water colors nearly covered the walls; fancy pipes and cigar boxes and scent bottles littered the tables; a case of champagne reposed in one corner, while in the other was a small pile of seltzer water.

The Colonel, after indulging in a sigh, proceeded: "I have called, Harry, before I return to Yorkshire, to make one more appeal to you to give up your present mode of life, settle down as a landed proprietor in your native country, and marry Miss Anstruther."

It was now the turn of the young man to sigh as he replied: "Impossible, my dear sir. I am already wedded to the stage."

"That may be; but unions can easily be dissolved by a divorce, especially in these days."

"Not where the contracting parties are so attached to each other as I am to my profession. No, sir. If a man could take take a wife on lease, for seven or fourteen or twenty-one years the case would be different. But the feeling that my lot in life was fixed—cut and dried, so to speak—the matter won't bear a thought." The young man felt strongly inclined to indulge in a stage walk, but the limited area of the apartment forbade such a physical relief. If the reader should consider the remarks of the actor somewhat flippant, it must be borne in mind that no one whose character did not fall under that definition would have acted as Harry Stanley had done.

The old man scowled as he resumed: "I wonder you can respect yourself, dizened out and painted like a mummer at a pantomime."

"I am of the same calling as the glory of England, Shakspeare, the —"

"And poet—you forget that, sir—poet, sir," sharply retorted the Colonel.

"I can assure you, sir, we have men of good family playing very small parts to-night. Trip took honors at Oxford and Backbite is a Cambridge man."

"Pray, sir," replied the Colonel, "if that be the case, why do you all sail under false colors? Why resign the honored name of Stanley for the Frenchified one of Montmorency?"

The young man bowed as he responded: "Out of deference to the shallow scruples of society."

"Of which I constitute a member, eh?"

It was in a more conciliatory tone that his son took up the argument. "Pray, sir, let me ask you question. Do poets and novelists ever adopt a nom de plume? Did not Miss Evans style herself 'George Eliot;' the late Governor General of India, 'Owen Meredith;' Mademoiselle de la Ramee, 'Ouida;' Dickens, 'Boz.'—"

"That'll do," interrupted the Colonel. "Then one fine day you will be falling in love, as you call it, with one of these artful and painted sirens, and I shall find myself grandfather to a clown or a pantaloon! For, of course, you will bring up your offspring to the profession, as you call it, as if there were no other profession in the world."

His son and heir drew himself proudly up as he replied: "No, sir. I trust I shall never forget that I own the honored name of Stanley."

The Colonel remained silent for several moments ere he observed: "I shall never understand why you declined to see Mrs. Anstruther."

"Because the very fact that the lady was labeled my future wife," replied his son, "would have caused me to detest her at first sight."

The old Colonel rose from his seat: "I can see very plainly that I am wasting both your time and my own—I suppose you will have to do a little 'tumbling' presently."

"I do not make my entrance till the third act. If you will go in front you can have my box." Montmorency rang the bell as he spoke, and when the call boy appeared directed him to show his visitor into box A.

The actor was indulging in a sigh of relief, when a head appeared at the half-closed door and a voice exclaimed: "May I come in?"

Montmorency bounded from his chair as he seized hold of the extended hand and drew the owner into the room. The new-comer was a young man of about the same age as the actor, and was habited in modern evening dress. Montmorency wrung the hand of his friend Vallance and forced him into a seat. "Delighted to see you, Jack! Have a weed and a seltzer?"

In a few seconds the two young men were similarly occupied and immersed in the consumption of a couple of choice Partagas.

The actor opened the ball: "You must have met an elderly party in the passage. That was the Governor. He is very irate because I wont fall in love by word of command and marry Miss Anstruther, whom I have never seen. By-the-by, you have seen her. What is she like?"

"A lovely girl," replied Vallance. "I met her at a ball at Scarborough soon after her arrival from the West Indies. Faith, Harry, you might do worse."

"And might do better; eh, Jack? But your ideas of beauty are so opposite to mine, as I remember of old. Now, if you wish to see a perfect vision of loveliness, go in front and see Fonblanque, the Lady Teazle of to-night."

"You mean Miss Fonblanque, I presume."

"Exactly. The prefix 'Miss' is frequently omitted in theatrical parlance. She is bewitching!"

Vallance shakes his head. "Have a care, Harry. It would be a pity if you allied yourself with some unknown adventuress after refusing the rich Miss Anstruther."

"Well, to be candid, Jack, I am afraid of myself. If I did not constantly call to my mind the fact that I am a Stanley I should speedily succumb to the charms of the divine Fonblanque, so there is some benefit arising from birth after all."

"And how long do you mean to pursue this mad freak of yours?" inquired Vallance.

"Till I hear on good authority that the troublesome Miss Anstruther is engaged or married."

"And then?"

"Why, then I quit the mimic stage suddenly as I entered upon it."

"Meanwhile!" ejaculated Vallance, with an incredulous smile.

"Meanwhile," replied Montmorency loftily. "I contribute to the 'gayety of nations,' as Johnson said of Garrick, and therefore consider myself a far better member of society than a successful General, who has killed so many hundreds of his fellow-mortals; or a lawyer, who has set whole families by the ears in order to fill his pockets; or a doctor, who, as Tobin says, spends the greater part of his time in writing death warrants in Latin."

Vallance examined his finger nails for few seconds, and, after an embarrassing pause, said: "Harry, I am about to make a confession."

"I can not promise you absolution, Jack."

Vallance proceeded: "On the memorable night when I first beheld Miss Anstruther at the ball at Scarborough, I fell over head and ears in love with her."

"You fell in love with her, did you?" repeated Montmorency, in a tone of some annoyance. "You mean with her banking account. Remember, you are in the confession box."

"On my honor, no," replied Vallance. "As you are aware, I could not afford to marry a penniless girl; but if I were as rich as Rothschild and Miss Anstruther a pauper I would marry her to-morrow, if she would have me. You do not seem to like the idea."

"Humanity is a strange compound, Jack. It grates upon my sense of propriety that any one else should step into my shoes and wed the woman intended for my wife, yet whom I have vowed never to marry."

"Why, what a dog in the manger you are!"

"I would not so much mind if a stranger were to win the heiress, but to know her as your wife, Jack, for the remainder of my existence, to repeat probably of my obstinacy. You are not in earnest, Jack?"

"Ah, but I am!" replied Vallance, inwardly murmuring: "May I be forgiven the lie."

After a brief mental struggle, Montmorency continued: "Well, success attend you. You are a lucky fellow to walk off with such a prize, while I shall remain an humble stage player."

"Remember the peerless Fonblanque, Harry."

"Ah! you are right. There is beauty, talent, wit, elegance, refinement, all enshrined in the admirable Lady Teazle of to-night. I shall no longer hold back. To-night I shall know my fate. You have applied the touchstone."

The shrill voice of the call boy now uttered the words "Charles Surface."

"There is my call. So adieu for the present. Go in front, and call for me at the end of the show, and we will have a steak at the Albion together and drink to the speedy nuptials of my bete noire, Miss Anstruther."

"With whom?"

"Any one! I care not—no offense, Jack—so I am free."

Vallance proceeded straight to Box A, and having tapped at the door found himself face to face with Colonel Stanley, who eagerly exclaimed, "Well, Vallance, has my plan succeeded?"

"I fear not, sir."

"Give him a second dose the first opportunity. I never knew it to fail. If you want to make a man fall in love with a particular woman, tell him she is half engaged and she will instantly go up twenty per cent. in his estimation. That is how I came to marry his mother. Directly my father told me Fred Spencer was mad after her, and that she was half inclined to marry him, I rushed to the attack, stormed the fortress, and carried off the prize! I wasn't going to let that puppy Spencer march off with her. A fellow with not a tithe of my personal recommendations." Here the Colonel paused as he beheld the countenance of his auditor completely engrossed with the scene; for in the lovely Lady Teazle of the play Jack Vallance had recognized the West Indian heiress, Emily Anstruther!

SCENE II.

Along one of the tortuous passages leading to the dressing-rooms a gentleman is conducting a lady, preceded by the dresser. They have evidently come from the audience part of the theater, as they are both in modern evening dress. Presently the dresser pauses at a door, and, after tapping, enters and returns to invite the lady to invade the sacred precincts of the dressing-room of Miss Fonblanque, the representative of Lady Teazle. After a few whispered words to her escort the lady is clasped in the embrace of the actress. "My dear Julia!"

"My darling Emily!"

Certainly, Lady Teazle fully deserved the rapturous praises of Montmorency. Her lovely dark eyes shone all the brighter from the contrast of the powdered wig, while her splendid figure was displayed to the utmost advantage by the means of her handsome brocaded dress.

"And so you recognize me under these tinsel robes, Julia?"

"Your voice is unmistakable; I should have known it anywhere, Emily. When do you intend to return to your own sphere?"

"First tell me, Julia, how you managed to penetrate these sacred precincts?"

"Oh, my husband, who knows everybody, said he could at once accomplish it, directly I told him you were my old schoolfellow at Barbadoes. Now, answer me my question, there's a dear."

"I have found my proper sphere; I am free, popular and admired. Instead of one admirer, I have hundreds, and the number is increasing nightly. What can woman wish for more?"

"I'll tell you, Emily. A nice husband and domestic bliss."

The actress indulged in a scarcely audible sigh. "That might have been my lot. I mean the domestic bliss part of the affair, if I had not had it dinned into my ears from morning till night that there was only one road to happiness—a union with Mr. Stanley, whom I have never seen."

"You might have liked him very much."

"Impossible, my dear Julia. The very fact of a man being ticketed like a prize animal at a show, and then his being introduced to you as your certain and future husband, would be quite sufficient to make me detest him. No, Julia, when I marry I will myself make the selection, and he must be one who is ignorant that his intended is a rich heiress."

"That will not be a very easy matter to accomplish, Emily."

"Listen, Julia, and I'll tell you a secret. There is a young man acting in this company—a Mr. Percy Montmorency. He is all I could wish—handsome, clever, accomplished and vastly agreeable."

"Then you have made your selection?"

"Not so, Julia. His profession renders our union impossible. He may be heir to a peerage; he may be a lawyer's clerk. There is the most delightful mystery as to our antecedents, we play actors! For instance, who would suppose that I was the rich West Indian heiress who utilized her amateur theatrical talents and adopted her present profession! And all in order to escape being pestered into an unwelcome and distasteful marriage. Heigh-ho! I wish I had never seen this captivating fellow."

Mrs. Sydney sighed as she rejoined: "Ah, Emily, there is the danger of your present mode of life. Before you know where you are, finding yourself over head and ears in love with some handsome fellow, even of whose very name you are ignorant. As to the position in society of his progenitors, that is a point which would require the research of the Society of Antiquaries."

The actress looked solemnly in the face of her friend, and taking both her hands within her own, replied: "Julia, there is a fascination in the life of a successful actress of which you can form no conception. There is the delight of selecting the costume you are to wear on the eventful evening. No trifle to a woman, as you will admit. Then there is the actual pleasure of wearing it, not for the sake of some half dozen friends, whose envy in consequence is a poor reward, but the object of admiration of hundreds of spectators nightly. Then, instead of monotonous domesticity, executing crewel work to the accompaniment of the snoring in the arm-chair of a bored husband, we have the nightly welcome from a thousand pair of hands and the final call before the curtain amid an avalanche of flowers. Your name on every tongue, your photo in every print shop in London, and your acts and deeds the subject of conversation at every dinner table in the metropolis."

Mrs. Sydney shook her head with a melancholy smile as the actress finished her oration. "I am still unconverted, Emily."

"Quite right, Julia. If we were all actresses there would be no audiences."

The inexorable call boy here put a compulsory finish to the interview between the two friends, with the words "Lady Teazle."

SCENE III.

Montmorency was seated in the greenroom at the conclusion of the play, engaged in that absent train of thought known as a brown study. The more he saw of the fascinating Fonblanque, the more he was captivated. Every hour spent in her society but served to rivet more closely the chain which bound him to her. Should he condescend and make her an offer of his hand she would naturally be influenced by a profound sense of gratitude, when she discovered that she had married a man of fortune and a Stanley! Whereas, if he had married the rich Miss Anstruther, he would have had her money bags perpetually thrown in his face. A silver tongued utterance fell on his ears. Looking up, he beheld the subject of his cogitations.

"Allow me to congratulate you, Mr. Montmorency, on your Charles Surface this evening. A double call before the curtain and well deserved."

"You are pleased to flatter me. The plaudits of the house to-night render any praise on my part of your Lady Teazle unnecessary. I regret that I am fated to lose so charming a compatriot."

Was it fancy that Montmorency imagined that he detected a paler tint on the cheek of the actress as she replied: "You are not going to leave us?"

"I fear so."

"Wherefore?"

"You are the last person to whom I can confide the cause of my sudden departure."

Lady Teazle cast down her lovely eyes for a brief space, and then, in a voice in which the smallest possible tremolo was perceptible, whispered: "Are you not happy here?"

"I fear too much so," sighed Montmorency. "I have been living in a fool's paradise lately."

"How? In what way, Mr. Montmorency?"

"I am in love. You start. You do not believe in an actor, who is always simulating affection, ever falling under the influence of a real and veritable passion."

"You wrong me; indeed you do. The artistic nature is and must be more acutely sensitive than that possessed by ordinary mortals. Do I know the lady?"

"You see her every day when you contemplate those charming features in the glass. Yes; it is you, Miss Fonblanque, whom I love, whom I adore!"

How can we describe the flood of sensations which agitated the bosom of the heiress as she listened to the avowal of affection from the lips of the only man she had ever loved. In low and trembling tones she managed to reply: "Mr. Montmorency, you are not rehearsing a scene in some new comedy?"

"I was never more serious in my life."

By this time the pride of the Anstruthers had come to the assistance of the heiress. "I grieve very much that I can not accept your offer. It is impossible."

"Impossible? Why?"

"That I can not explain."

"We are both members of the same profession, and so far equal."

"Pardon me," said Lady Teazle. "You know nothing of my antecedents, and—"

"And you know nothing of mine, you would say. Charming equality! Say, Miss Fonblanque, may I hope?"

It was now the turn of the actress to sigh. "It would be cruel to raise hopes which can never be realized."

Montmorency let fall the hand which in his ardor he had seized, and drew himself proudly up. "That is your fixed answer?"

"It is."

Montmorency once more took possession of her taper fingers and raising them to his lips uttered the word "farewell!" and hastily left the greenroom.

The dark melting eyes of the heiress gazed after his retreating figure, and large drops of moisture gathered in them. "I have half a mind to call him back," she mentally whispered. "No! I must remember I am an Anstruther."

Sinking on a couch, Lady Teazle felt her brain spinning round; then presently raising her eyes, she beheld—Mr. Vallance.

"Have I not the honor of speaking to Miss Anstruther?"

"Since you recognize me it would be affectation to deny my identity. Mr. Vallance, may I ask you to preserve my secret?"

"From all, save one individual—Mr. Montmorency. Surely you know that in the Charles Surface of this evening you beheld your rejected lover, Mr. Stanley?"

A film came slowly over the eyes of Miss Anstruther. "You are not joking, Mr. Vallance?"

"The matter is too serious for jesting. But I will break a confidence. He loves you. He told me so half an hour ago."

The heiress could scarcely forbear a smile as she reflected that her ears had drunk in the soft confession only five minutes ago. "Mr. Vallance, will you do me a favor? Will you ask Mr. Stanley to step here for a few minutes? But remember, you must on no account reveal my identity."

"You may rely upon me, Miss Anstruther. I do not know what steps you mean to adopt, but there is no time to lose, for old Colonel Stanley is in front, and will, if he has recognized you at once inform his son."

"That is my fear; so haste."

Almost before the heiress could mature her plans the rejected one appeared before her. He was very grave, and bowed with an air of deep humility as the actress thus addressed him: "Mr. Vallance and I are old acquaintances, so I commissioned him to ask you to return for a short time. I feel very anxious about our scenes in The Hunchback to-morrow. Would you mind running through the Modus and Helen scenes. I mean the second one."

Montmorency bowed. "With pleasure."

It would have been a lesson for half the actresses on the stage could they could have beheld the manner in which the saucy coquette of the play coaxed her lover, lured him on, fascinated him, and enveloped him in such a spell of witcheries that no Modus that ever breathed could have been proof against her seductive wiles. The scene came to an unexpected termination, for Montmorency suddenly caught her in his arms, and as he held her clasped tight to his breast exclaimed, in rapid and excited tones: "This is not acting! If it be, you are the greatest actress that ever trod the boards. You love me! I see it in your sparkling eye; I read it in your blushing cheek! Say, am I not right?"

Emily Anstruther remained perfectly passive in the arms of Harry Stanley as she murmured 'Yes!'

The enraptured couple were so completely absorbed in reading love in each other's eyes that they had not observed the entrance of two gentlemen, Colonel Stanley and Mr. Vallance.

The old Colonel was the first to speak. "Speak, sir. Is is the scene from the play?"

By this time the heiress had left the sweet anchorage of her lover's arms, and advancing to the old man, said: "Do you not recognize your godchild, Emily Anstruther?"

But surprise has taken away the power of speech from the Colonel.

His son interrupted. "I trust Miss Anstruther will acquit me of any guilty knowledge of this fact—will believe that I believed she was merely Miss Fonblanque, the actress."

Emily Anstruther here cast down her eyes, while a deep blush mantled over her face and neck. "I am afraid I am not equally innocent, for Mr. Vallance informed me that I had refused my hated lover. But I have enough confidence in his love for me to hope for his belief in my unselfish love for him."

"So you see, dad," exclaimed the younger Stanley, "love not only rules the court, the camp, the grove, as the poet says, but does not disdain to flutter his wings in the green-room."—Chambers' Journal.

—In former times it was the custom in Zurich, when a married pair applied for a divorce on the ground of incompatibility of temper, for the magistrate to shut them up for a fortnight in a tower on the lake. The couple were given but one room, one bed, one chair, one fork and one knife. If, at the expiration of the fortnight, they persisted in their resolution, the tribunal ordered a serious examination of the case, and, if possible, the divorce. But it was rare that the intervention of the tribunal was necessary, the quarrelsome pair being usually reconciled before the end of the fortnight.

—Those Western towns that grow up at race-horse speed will have to yield the palm to Glade City, a new oil town in Pennsylvania. Two weeks ago it was a barren piece of land, surrounded by woodlands and farms, shunned alike by the farmer and the oil operator. Now it has, among other evidences of growth and prosperity, three hotels and thirty restaurants. It took but two or three days to put up seventy buildings. It requires six stage lines to carry the travel between the new "city" and the nearest town, two miles distant.

—The Art of Blushing. The blush must be an indication of genuine feeling of one sort or another, and can not be summoned at will by the artful belle who has every other charming and bewildering device at her command. Yet the acquiring of the blush is not entirely hopeless. The blush is produced by genuine emotions, and until one can experience sensations of self-distrust, shyness and retiring modesty, one can never hope to obtain the blush as an accomplishment and "bid the cheek be ready with a blush modest as morning."—London Courier.

HOME AND FARM.

—Air-slaked lime in fine powder is a good preventive of damage from many kinds of insects. It kills them by closing the apertures in their bodies through which they breathe.—Detroit Post.

—Brown Bread: Two cups of Indian meal, one cup of flour, two cups of sweet milk, one cup of sour, two thirds cup of molasses, two teaspoonfuls of soda, one teaspoonful of salt, steam three hours, or steam all day is better. —Toledo Blade.

—Every farmer could find use for a large quantity of potatoes for stock feed every winter, and should plant accordingly. Potatoes are grown with little labor, and yield as much if not more per acre than any other crop. Farmers should, therefore, plant liberally of this crop.—Chicago Times.

—There is some complaint among farmers about alsike clover, that it makes no second growth. It is generally left to ripen its seed, in which case, of course, a second crop ought not to be expected; but if cut earlier there will be feed later in the season.—Boston Journal.

—It is a great mistake to leave barley until dead ripe before cutting. If the stem is green not only will the barley be plumper but less liable to injury from rains. A heavy dew will often stain barley so as to injure its sale if the crop is uncut until after it is fully ripe.—N. Y. Times.

—In laying out grounds one is apt to think only of the appearance which they are going to make at present. A landscape gardener plans his grounds so that they will look well a dozen or twenty years hence when the trees have attained good size and the general features have been all brought into perfect harmony.—Troy Times.

—A large udder is commonly regarded as a sign of a good milker, but excessive size indicates a deposit of flesh which is of no advantage, but rather a burden for the overweighted animal to carry. If the milk veins are well developed the cow will be a good milker and the udder will be as large as is of any advantage.—Albany Journal.

—Cod fish Ball: Wash and cut in small pieces about a pint of cod-fish, removing every bone; put on to boil with twice the quantity of pared potatoes; when the potatoes are done mash well, adding a large lump of butter, half a teaspoonful of pepper and one or two eggs well beaten. Drop from the spoon in boiling lard and fry like doughnuts.—The Household.

—Almond jumbles: Almond jumbles, which are very delicate, are made of one pound of sugar, half a pound of butter, one pound of almonds, blanched and chopped fine, two eggs, flour enough to mix stiff. Roll them out thin, cut in fancy shapes; put them in tins, and just before setting them in the oven rub the tops with the white of an egg and sprinkle granulated sugar over them.—N. Y. Post.

—Apple sauce:—When you wish to serve apple sauce with meat prepare it in this way: Cook the apples until they are very tender, then stir them thoroughly so there will be no lumps at all; add the sugar and a little gelatine dissolved in warm water, a tablespoonful in a pint of sauce; pour the sauce into bowls, and when cold it will be stiff like jelly, and can be turned out on a plate. Cranberry sauce can be treated in the same way.—Exchange.

Plant Feeding.

For years and years past we have been trying to find out how best to feed animals. Men have been feeding animals from remote ages and yet it is only within a few years past that the scrutinizing eye of science has detected that there has been great waste, because the various articles fed to animals have not been properly proportioned among themselves. Experience has shown that it was best to give a mixed ration of concentrated food (grain) and that which is decidedly less so (fodder). Using the terms in a general sense, corn and fodder have been the accepted ration for animals. But corn (all grains) and fodder (the various kinds of long forage) vary very much in composition, and in the absence of chemical analysis and very careful experiment it had not been discovered what was a typical ration—one that came nearest to meeting the necessity of the animal. Now, however, since typical rations have been ascertained, the way is well laid out for the farmer to mix and prepare different kinds of food so as to effect the greatest saving and produce the largest results with least expenditure. The history of plant feeding runs a very nearly parallel course to that of animal feeding. In a general way it was quite early ascertained that the excrement and urine of animals, and ashes, would make plants grow; later, it was discovered that certain mineral substances, such as plaster, marl, phosphates, etc., had a similar effect. But most of these were very compound substances and differed widely among themselves in composition. Just what elements, or combination of elements, in them constituted good plant-food rations was a matter little understood until very recent times. During the last twenty or thirty years considerable progress in this direction has been made but perfection has not been reached by a good deal. The similarity in general composition of the numberless commercial fertilizers now sold shows that men are beginning to have some ideas of plant-food rations. How they reached their conclusions is a matter of interest—partly, doubtless, from the teachings of agricultural chemists and partly from field tests. It could not be expected that in the beginning they had all the light necessary to make faultless manures, but now that the matter has been taken up at the various agricultural stations of the country and properly qualified men are working earnestly upon the problem, it may reasonably be hoped that in a few years typical plant rations will be quite as fully perfected as those of animals. There is a decided drift in favor of using less ammonia for many crops, for the successful growing of which it has formerly been deemed essential to use large quantities. This is particularly true in regard to corn. It is now pretty definitely determined how and what to feed to best accomplish certain results with animals, and the time is rapidly approaching, in the light of science, when exactly the amount of feed and the particular kind for any green crop will be known. When this is more perfectly known and the tiller of the soil is able to tell what his soils and the ingredients necessary to produce a certain crop, the agriculturist will, to a certain extent, be a complete master of the situation at least in no event will there be any excuse for any one going contrary to the laws of nature and plant growth. The amount of grain and the kind best suited for the horse, the cow, the sheep and the hog is now within the knowledge of all, and plant food, soil, etc., will ere long be as familiar to the farm student as are the requisites in regard to feeding stock to the average husbandman of the times. When such is the case it will be expected that no grievous mistakes will be made and that the general crop will be greatly augmented and the soil kept in far better producing condition, for all will know what to feed both the land and the plant.—San Francisco Chronicle.

—The Dutch have not controlled the nutmeg trade for many years. They tried to confine the growth of the nutmeg to the Banda Islands, which they owned, but the nutmeg pigeons carried the nuts into all the surrounding countries, and the trees grew and flourished in spite of the would be monopolists.—N. Y. Herald.

Fibre of the Willow Herb.

Several Russian savants claim that the "Willow herb" (Epilobium) yields a most excellent fibre, and specimens have been tested by being spun and woven successfully. A society in St. Petersburg has petitioned the Czar for assistance by setting aside some State lands upon which to cultivate the plants for experimental purposes. It is thought that the fibre from the willow herb may be utilized in the place of cotton, and as the larger proportion of the different species are indigenous to cold climates, the discovery may be of considerable importance to such countries as Russia. The most common European species of Epilobium have already become naturalized in our Atlantic States, and are now abundant in many localities. The great willow herb (E. angustifolium), which grows five to seven feet high, bearing handsome and showy flowers of a purplish color, is common in low moist soils all about this city and northward, and is probably the same plant now referred to as likely to be a valuable fibre-yielding species in Russia.—N. Y. Sun.

A Fragment.

Scene I.—Tailor shop. Two gentlemen looking at patterns.

Mr. Brooks—Well, Mr. Grandige, we will both of us order a suit. But we made a little bet, and the loser will pay for both suits when the bet is decided. Do you agree?

Grandige (rubbing his hands)—Certainly, sir; as your please, sir.

Scene II.—(Lapse of ten years, during which Grandige has sent bills and awaited payment for the long wornout suits. Scene—Same shop and dramatis personæ.

Grandige—I beg your pardon, Mr. Brooks, but that little matter of the suits of clothes which you and Mr. Muffin ordered ten years ago has not been settled yet.

Mr. Brooks—Of course not; the bet has not yet been decided.

Grandige—But would you mind telling me, sir, what was the bet?

Mr. B.—Certainly not. I wonder that you have not asked before. You see, Mr. Muffin wagered that when Bunker Hill Monument was blow over it would fall to the north, and I bet that it would fall to the south!—Life.

Delightful.

When Mrs. Pluth visited Mrs. Mackle, the other day, Mrs. Pluth, during the course of the intellectual conversation, said:

"I am so sorry, Mrs. Mackle, to hear that your husband has made an assignment. It must be dreadfully trying on you."

"Oh, dear! no; its just the thing. Before the assignment was made William sent up such lovely lace, and so many silk dresses, and no end of those cunning little things that a woman needs. Oh! I think that an assignment is delightful."

"I did not think of that," sighed Mrs. Pluth. "George's trade is so good that everything I want is sold before I can get it. I wish he would make an assignment. It must be pleasant."

"Oh! it is lovely. Any time you can't find a dress pattern to suit you, come over, and I will accommodate you at a trifling cost. Oh, It's exquisite."—Drake's Magazine.

The French Herring Fisheries.

The French herring fishery has grown to great proportions, 800 vessels and 9,000 men being supplied by the channel ports of Dunkirk and Etretal; while the North Sea port of Boulogne sends out 144 vessels representing 7,900 tons and a valuation of about 3,000,000 francs. The stiff, redish-brown little fish as it appears when preserved, with its yellow patches, suggestive of gold braid, is called a gendarme by the imaginative Frenchman, and L'Illustration says that the great enemy of the herring in European waters is not the fisherman, but other fish and birds of prey, and that there is no danger of the increased demand causing a failure of the supply.—Brooklyn Union.

—"Did you ever see the name a lobster is born with?" asked an Eastport (Me.) fish dealer of a reporter. "Well, I'll show you one." He turned a lobster on its back, so that its short brown legs flopped backward, and disclosed a yellowish streak half an inch long and an eighth of an inch wide on the inside of the thigh. In this yellow streak, like a mosaic, were short lines, as though some one had painted with indelible brown ink, in back hand, the characters "Joe." "Some lobsters are named Jim," said the dealer, "some others John, and I once clearly made out the name Julia."—Boston Budget.

—About noon yesterday the leading lady of a certain Boston theater passed the Old South on her way up Washington street. Between that point and Summer street, an observer who was just behind her counted nineteen young and old men, who, on meeting the actress, turned to their companions and said: "That's —— ——." Thus do we show our fondness for giving information, and testify that we are all greater or smaller chips chopped off from the great block of humanity.—Boston Herald.

—"Dullness," says Professor Seelye in an interview on Goethe in the Contemporary Review, "is, after all, a relative term; it expresses only a want of correspondence between the mind of the writer and that of the reader."

—The Boston Herald gives the following prescription: "Nature knows what seasonable food is. Take kindly to her hint, as given in the profusion of ripe, fresh fruit and vegetables, and 'throw physic to the dogs.'"

THE MARKETS.

CINCINNATI, September 15, 1884.

LIVE STOCK—Cattle—Common	$2 00	@ 3 75
Choice butchers	4 00	@ 4 75
HOGS—Common	4 25	@ 5 15
Good packers	5 40	@ 5 75
SHEEP—Good to choice	3 25	@ 3 75
FLOUR—Family	3 40	@ 3 75
GRAIN—Wheat—Longberry red	80	@ 82
No. 2 red	79½	@ 80
Corn—No. 2 mixed		@ 56
Oats—No. 2 mixed		@ 27½
Rye—No. 2		@ 57
HAY—Timothy No. 1	10 50	@11 00
HEMP—Double dressed	8 75	@ 9 00
PROVISIONS—Pork—Mess	17 00	@17 50
Lard—Prime steam	7 00	@ 7 25
BUTTER—Fancy Dairy	18	@ 20
Prime Creamery	17	@ 23
FRUIT AND VEGETABLES—
Potatoes, per [illegible]	1 50	@ 1 75
Apples, prime, per barrel	1 25	@ 2 00
NEW YORK.
FLOUR—State and Western	$2 40	@ 2 80
Good to choice	3 55	@ 5 75
GRAIN—Wheat—No. 2 Chicago		@ 83½
No. 2 red	85	@ 86½
Corn—No. 2 mixed	58	@ 63
Oats—mixed	27	@ 39
PORK—Mess	17 25	@17 50
LARD—Western steam		@ 7 50
CHICAGO.
FLOUR—State and Western	$3 50	@ 5 00
GRAIN—Wheat—No. 2 red	73½	@ 73¾
No. 2 Chicago Spring		@ 76
Corn—No. 2	53½	@ 54
Oats—No. 2		@ 24¾
Rye		@ 53¾
PORK—Mess		@16 50
LARD—Steam	7 25	@ 7 30
BALTIMORE.
FLOUR—Family	$4 00	@ 5 00
GRAIN—Wheat—No 2	82¼	@ 82½
Corn—mixed	31	@ 63
Oats—mixed	31	@ 33
PROVISIONS—Pork—Mess		@18 50
Lard—Refined		@ 9¼
INDIANAPOLIS.
WHEAT—No. 2 red	$	@ 75
CORN—mixed		@ 53
OATS—mixed		@ 26
LOUISVILLE.
FLOUR—A No. 1	$4 15	@ 4 35
GRAIN—Wheat—No. 2 red	75	@ 78
Corn—mixed		@ 55
Oats—mixed		@ 28½
PORK—mess		@18 00
LARD—steam		@ 9½

—In cosmopolitanism New York takes the lead. In clubs, club-rooms and club houses the following countries are represented: Japan, China, Cochin China, Turkey, Russia, Norway, Sweden, Malacca, Hungary, England, Ireland, Wales, Scotland, Prussia, Austria, France, Spain, Portugal, Italy, Switzerland, Greece, Holland, Belgium, Brasil, Mexico, Poland and Cuba. No other metropolis approaches this record.—Chicago Herald.

Columbia River Cannery.

Mr. George Home, one of the largest canners of fish, on Columbia River, Oregon, says that he suffered with rheumatism for seven years, having spent six months at Arkansas Hot Springs, and at Paso Robles Springs, Cal., four months in every year, without benefit. Finally he tried St. Jacobs Oil, the great pain-cure, and in a short time all stiffness and soreness of the joints disappeared.

THE microbe of cholera is said to resemble a comma. Is that why it so soon brings a man to a full stop?

THE short, hacking cough, which leads to Consumption, is cured by Piso's Cure.

SHOULD the name be spelled Pekin or or Peking?—Inquirer. Pekin the cyclopedia and see.—Exchange.

NO WOMAN can live without some share of physical suffering; but many accept as inevitable a great amount of pain which can be avoided. Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound was invented by one who understood its need, and had the rare skill to provide a simple, yet admirably effective remedy.

THE young lady who made 700 words out of "conservatory" last autumn has run away from home. Her mother wanted her mother wanted her to make three loaves of bread out of "flour."—Chicago Tribune.

J. W. GRAHAM, Wholesale Druggist, of Austin, Tex., writes: "I have been handling DR. WM. HALL'S BALSAM FOR THE LUNGS, and have found it one of the most salable medicines I have ever had for Coughs, Colds and Consumption."

SHAKESPEARE must have fooled with stocks, too. You remember that he speaks of the "short and the long of it."—Exchange.

☞It is a Well Known Fact! In the Diamond Dyes more coloring is given than in any known Dyes, and they give faster and more brilliant colors. 10c. at all druggists. They are a great success. Wells, Richardson & Co., Burlington, Vt.

"WOMAN has twice the nerve of man!" shouts a female orator. We don't know about that. Women seldom marry women.

Glenn's Sulphur Soap

Purifies the skin. Use instead of unwholesome cosmetics. Hill's Hair and Whisker Dye, 50c.

FAT people keep away from the mountains in the summer. They do not like the climb it.—N. O. Picayune.

IF afflicted with Sore Eyes, use Dr. Isaac Thompson's Eye Water. Druggists sell it. 25c.

FAC-SIMILE QUARTER SIZE.

Guaranteed to give Satisfaction.

Largest in the Market. Sold by Druggists.

CATARRH — ELY'S CREAM BALM

Causes no Pain. Relieves at Once. Thorough Treatment will Cure. Not a Liquid or Snuff. Apply into nostrils. Give it a Trial. 50 cents at Druggists. 60 cents by mail registered. Sample bottle by mail 10 cents. ELY BROTHERS, Druggists, Owego, N. Y.

HAY-FEVER

YOU ARE A LIAR if you do not buy the best. $60 5 TON WAGON SCALES. JONES OF BINGHAMTON, BINGHAMTON, N. Y.

$250 A MONTH. Agents Wanted. 90 best selling articles in the world. 1 sample FREE. Address JAY BRONSON, DETROIT, MICH.

It is a well-known fact that most of the Horse and Cattle Powder sold in this country is worthless; that Sheridan's Condition Powder is absolutely pure and very valuable. Nothing on Earth will make hens lay like Sheridan's Condition Powder. MAKE HENS LAY. CHICKEN CHOLERA. I. S. JOHNSON & CO., Boston, Mass.

CUT THIS OUT AND SEND WITH YOUR ORDER.

FOR SALE BY DRUGGISTS, General Stores and Horseshoers.

THEY ARE THE STANDARD. OUR REMEDIES NEVER FAIL.

NATIONAL LIVE STOCK REMEDY CO., 175 DEARBORN STREET, CHICAGO.

NOW IS THE TIME. BEESON'S Aromatic Alum Sulphur Soap. Sold by Druggists. DREYDOPPEL'S BORAX SOAP.

HAIR

GAIN Health and Happiness.

How? DO AS OTHERS HAVE DONE.

Are your Kidneys disordered? "Kidney Wort brought me from my grave, as it were, after I had been given up by 13 best doctors in Detroit." M. W. Deveraux, Mechanic, Ionia, Mich.

Are your nerves weak? "Kidney Wort cured me from nervous weakness &c., after I was not expected to live."—Mrs. M. M. B. Goodwin, Ed. Christian Monitor, Cleveland, O.

Have you Bright's Disease? "Kidney Wort cured me when my water was just like chalk and then like blood." Frank Wilson, Peabody, Mass.

Suffering from Diabetes? "Kidney-Wort is the most successful remedy I have ever used. Gives almost immediate relief." Dr. Phillip C. Ballou, Monkton, Vt.

Have you Liver Complaint? "Kidney-Wort cured me of chronic Liver Diseases after I prayed to die." Henry Ward, late Col. 69th Nat. Guard, N. Y.

Is your Back lame and aching? "Kidney-Wort, (1 bottle) cured me when I was so lame I had to roll out of bed." C. M. Tallmage, Milwaukee, Wis.

Have you Kidney Disease? "Kidney-Wort made me sound in liver and kidneys after years of unsuccessful doctoring. Its worth $10 a box."—Sam'l Hodges, Williamstown, West Va.

Are you Constipated? "Kidney-Wort causes easy evacuations and cured me after 16 years use of other medicines." Nelson Fairchild, St. Albans, Vt.

Have you Malaria? "Kidney-Wort has done better than any other remedy I have ever used in my practice." Dr. R. K. Clark, South Hero, Vt.

Are you Bilious? "Kidney-Wort has done me more good than any other remedy I have ever taken." Mrs. J. T. Galloway, Elk Flat, Oregon.

Are you tormented with Piles? "Kidney-Wort permanently cured me of bleeding piles. Dr. W. C. Kline recommended it to me." Geo. H. Horst, Cashier M. Bank, Myerstown, Pa.

Are you Rheumatism racked? "Kidney-Wort cured me, after I was given up to die by physicians and I had suffered thirty years." Elbridge Malcolm, West Bath, Maine.

Ladies, are you suffering? "Kidney-Wort cured me of peculiar troubles of several years standing. Many friends use and praise it." Mrs. H. Lamoreaux, Isle La Motte, Vt.

If you would Banish Disease and gain Health, Take

KIDNEY-WORT
THE BLOOD CLEANSER.

DO THE RIGHT THING.

Common Sense Talk to Bilious People. Clear Testimony of a Witness.

ALBANY, N. Y.

Dr. David Kennedy, Rondout, N. Y.:

DEAR SIR: About eight years ago I began to suffer from a liver difficulty. During the attacks I experienced severe pain, accompanied by what I can not describe better than by calling it a drawing sensation. The agony of it was almost beyond endurance. None of the usual medicines employed in such cases had any effect upon me. From time to time I was laid up and unable to attend to any business. This covered a period of a year.

Finally, Mr. Lloyd, a druggist of this city, suggested your FAVORITE REMEDY as an excellent thing for the Liver. I had not taken the whole of the first bottle before I found most decided relief; the pain passed away, and to my delight I regained the power to enjoy and digest my food without the former distress. Nature seemed to be set going again. I can not better express my appreciation of Dr. David Kennedy's FAVORITE REMEDY than by telling you that since my personal knowledge of its virtues I have recommended it to a great many of my friends and acquaintances. Yours truly,

S. PEPSON.

222 Alexander Avenue.

Mr. Pepson is one of Albany's old and respected residents, and consents to the publication of the above letter.

Dr. David Kennedy, Physician and Surgeon, Rondout, N. Y.

20 Years!

A CANCER FOR TWENTY YEARS.

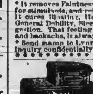
"For twenty years I suffered from a Cancer on my neck. 'Potent Potash and Mercury Mixtures' fed instead of curing the Cancer. I lost the use of my arms and the upper part of my body. My general health was broken down, and my life was despaired of. S. S. S. cured me sound and well. This new lease of life is gave to me can not be measured by any monetary value. I owe my life and the support of my family to Swift's Specific." W. R. ROBISON, Davisboro, Ga.

HOPES TO BE CURED.

"Mr. Brooks, near Albany, was hopelessly afflicted with Cancer. It had eaten through his nose into his mouth and throat. The time of his death was only a question of a very short time. He prayed for death, his suffering was so great. S. S. S. has had a wonderful effect on him. His improvement is so great that we all feel sure of his being perfectly cured in time. W. H. GILBERT, Albany, Ga.

Our Treatise on Blood and Skin Diseases mailed free to applicants.

SWIFT SPECIFIC CO., Drawer 3, Atlanta, Ga. N. Y. Office, 159 W. 23d St.; Philadelphia Office, 1205 Chestnut St.



LYDIA E. PINKHAM'S VEGETABLE COMPOUND IS A POSITIVE CURE FOR All those painful Complaints and Weaknesses so common to our best FEMALE POPULATION.

Price $1 in liquid, pill or lozenge form.

Its purpose is solely for the legitimate healing of disease and the relief of pain, and that it does all it claims to do, thousands of ladies can gladly testify.

It will cure entirely all Ovarian troubles, Inflammation and Ulceration, Falling and Displacements, and consequent Spinal Weakness, and is particularly adapted to the Change of Life.

It removes Faintness, Flatulency, destroys all craving for stimulants, and relieves Weakness of the Stomach. It cures Bloating, Headaches, Nervous Prostration, General Debility, Sleeplessness, Depression and Indigestion. That feeling of bearing down, causing pain, and backache, is always permanently cured by its use. Send stamp to Lynn, Mass., for pamphlet.

A $65 SEWING MACHINE For $18.00. CHICAGO SCALE CO., CHICAGO.

PILES. ITCHING PILES. SKIN DISEASES.

GUNS. Shot Guns. Revolvers. Rifles. Great Western Gun Works, Pittsburgh, Pa.

PISO'S CURE FOR CONSUMPTION.

EDUCATIONAL.

$40 PAYS for a Life Scholarship in the Business College.

Young Men wanted to learn Telegraphy.

A. N. K.—B. 995

WHEN WRITING TO ADVERTISERS, please say you saw the advertisement in this paper.

BOONE COUNTY RECORDER.

VOLUME IX. | BURLINGTON, KY., WEDNESDAY, SEPTEMBER 24, 1884. | NUMBER 47.

TOPICS OF THE DAY.

THE little daughter of a poor farmer in Kansas has just been notified that an aunt lately deceased in England left her a fortune of $5,000,000.

MASSACHUSETTS organized the first labor bureau in 1869, Pennsylvania followed in 1872 and Ohio in 1877. Thirteen States now have them.

THERE is said not to be a single instance on record where railway servants have stolen tickets from their respective companies and escaped arrest.

NEW YORK CITY has 100 principals, over 3,000 teachers, and 140,000 children in the public schools, aside from those in the city and Normal Colleges.

THERE are many bank presidents and cashiers in this country, and not one in a thousand have violated their trust. Things are not near so bad as they might seem.

THE starving crew that murdered a boy and ate him say that they killed him because he was unmarried. Here is material for at least one argument in favor of early marriages.

IT appears that there is one railway line seven miles long in China, connecting the Taeping mines with Tientsin, and latterly 1,000 Chinamen have been put to work extending it.

IN Eastern Connecticut there are local horse trots for prizes consisting of so many bushels of oats. Perhaps the nature of the stakes may have a very stimulating effect on the trotters.

A SAN FRANCISCO microscopist has discovered parasites on old copper cents. As bacteria form the chief agency in the propagation of diseases, more than ever is there need of the warning against filthy lucre.

SEVERAL of Wolseley's sailors have already been drowned, and the ascent of the Nile is scarcely begun. They have yet to encounter the overpowering heat, the burning sands and the deadly disease of the desert country.

A GEORGIA man, acting under what he thought to be a divine inspiration, has been burning several buildings in his vicinity. Since the neighbors filled him full of bird shot, however, he begins to doubt the divinity of his mission.

FOUR hundred girls in a New Haven factory struck, a few days ago, because they were not permitted to hoist the windows on a hot day. In a few hours the proprietors surrendered, and the windows were opened to their utmost capacity.

OSTROFFSKI, the Russian Minister of the Interior, has begun a policy of saving the forests by persuading the railways to use coal instead of wood for their engine fuel. There is plenty of coal in Russia, but a great lack of miners.

THE young man with a red necktie who appeared in a dream to a Georgia girl and pointed out to her the spot where lay a box of gold, was no doubt the restless ghost of a bank cashier who had departed this life in one of the North American provinces of Great Britain, and had returned to this country for a tour in the South.

THE Army and Navy Gazette says the British Government has not a single vessel it can send through the Suez Canal fit to cope with the weakest French iron-clad under command of Admiral Courbet; and if it had a ship ready it could not man it. It also asserts that England is in a condition of such utter naval collapse as will take years to remedy.

SINCE the opening of the peach season hundreds of children have spent their time collecting peach pits on the streets of Jersey City. They take the kernels from the pits and string them together, putting a hundred on a string. They are paid five cents a string by druggists, who use the kernels in compounding medicines. One boy living on Henderson street has sold over 5,000 kernels this season.

EXPERIMENTS with the galvanometer upon the tracks of the New York Central Railroad show that electric currents flow through the rails continuously. The movement is generally toward centers of electric disturbance, and is perceptibly affected by the passage of cars; fast passenger trains being much more effective than freight or coal trains. It is said that one steel rail at Rochester has become so much affected by these currents as to become a permanent magnet.

THE daughter of a wealthy Italian, in New York City, who eloped with her father's coachman the other day, succeeded in marrying him before the detectives or police could find them. As the coachman is thirty-one and the girl twenty-four, it would have been difficult to break up the match, and the old gentleman need not be so distressed about it either, since he was once a poor boy himself and no higher up in the social scale than his good-looking coachman is at the present time.

A MAN who was camping on an island above Fulton, Mo., tells a curious fish story. He had several night lines set, and one morning lately while taking off his "catch," came to a large catfish hooked in a singular manner. A two-pound eel had taken the bait and was hooked. The catfish attempted to swallow the eel, but that slippery animal was too cunning and made a lunge and came out of one of the catfish's gills thus securing an eighteen pound catfish and a two pound eel with one bait on one and the same hook.

CLEVELAND FIRE BUGS.

Two More Fires in the Lumber Yards on the Flats.

Loss $230,000.—Undoubtedly of Incendiary Origin—The Former Disaster of the Same Nature Now Considered as the Result of Arson.

CLEVELAND, O., September 21.—The flats along the Cuyahoga River in this city, which have been the scene of so many disastrous fires in the past, and which were swept clean of a million and a half worth of property two weeks ago to-night, were again visited by a disastrous fire, and, what is worse, the work of an incendiary, to-day. The entire Fire Department was called to the lumber-yards of Monroe Brothers & Co., about half a mile above the scene of the fire of two weeks ago. The only water available at this point was from a small pipe in Jefferson street and from the river, but as the wind carried the flames directly across the dock, it was with considerable difficulty that engines were set up on the river side. Monroe Brothers & Co. had a stock of hard and soft wood lumber, valued at nearly $200,000, and at first it seemed impossible that any of this could be saved. At the end of three hours' hard work, however, the flames were got under control. Two or three streams were kept on the ruins until 8 o'clock, when flames were seen to issue from the lumber-yard of Brown, Strong & Co., about a quarter of a mile further down the river. The second fire gained rapid headway, and before the firemen could get to work on it, the flames were beyond control. It being evident that the Cleveland Department could not successfully cope with the fire, telegrams asking for aid were sent to all the surrounding towns. These had the effect of bringing to the city engines from Akron, Plainville, Elyria, Sandusky and Ashtabula, which, together with the Cleveland steamers, succeeded at 9 o'clock this evening in getting the fire under control. Monroe Bros. & Co.'s loss will reach $63,000. They have a total insurance of $160,000. Brown, Strong & Co.'s loss is about $170,000, which is also covered by insurance. There is no doubt but that the fire was of incendiary origin. It was not possible for the second blaze to start where it did without assistance, and there were many suspicious circumstances connected with the origin of the fire. A man who was heard to remark that there would be another fire after the first started, has been placed under arrest, and held on suspicion. He is a worthless character, a Workhouse bird, named Chris. Schweitzer. That a gang were at work is shown by the fact that a fire was discovered this evening in the yards of Bell, Cartwright & Co., a mile from the other fires. The watchman who extinguished it says the lumber was saturated with petroleum.

DIABOLISM.

A New York Saloon-Keeper Fires His House, Filled With Sleeping Inmates.

NEW YORK, September 20.—An elaborate and well planned attempt at arson in a house full of people was brought to light to-day. The diabolical crime, however, miscarried. Its only result was the killing of a woman, the wife of the man, whom the police arrested, charged with setting fire to the house. The woman was Mrs. Gusty, wife of Leo. Gusty, a saloon-keeper. The fire was discovered in his house. He lived on the second floor with his wife and child. Seven lodgers occupied the third. Early this morning a police officer saw flames in the house and gave the alarm. He and another officer went into an adjoining room and roused the inmates. Then ascending to the roof, they went to the rescue of the occupants of the burning building. They, however, at the first alarm, had fled to the street—all but two, Mrs. Gusty and her nine-year-old boy. They were found on the roof, the boy nearly choked with smoke and the woman dying from horrible burns. After the fire was extinguished coal oil was found everywhere, and all the gas burners turned on. The fire was started in these places.

European News.

LONDON, September 21.—Though not reported, cholera is still ravaging villages in Southern France. A marked decrease is reported from Italy, 462 new cases and 193 deaths in all, 303 cases and 101 deaths occurring in Naples. Agram, Croatia, is in a minor state of siege, owing to election riots. The German Colonial Union has passed resolutions of approval of the German action in West Africa. Nilsson has embarked for the United States. At a Nationalist meeting at Castle Wellan disturbances occurred. Police interfering were mobbed, and later the police barracks wrecked. England is described as being in a panicky condition, with her power diminishing, both on land and sea. Harrington, M. P., makes public a terrible official conspiracy in the Maamtrasna murder case, for which Miles Joyce, an innocent man, was hanged. As a result, the Irish members of Parliament will support the Tories, and the Ministry will be seriously endangered.

The Drouth in Northern Ohio.

TOLEDO, O., September 21.—Interviews with farmers of this section show that the drouth has been so extensive that almost everywhere the operations connected with seeding winter wheat had to be suspended. Where wheat had been sown it has generally perished after sprouting. It is now getting so late that unless there is rain within a very few days the efforts to put in the crop will be abandoned. Corn cutting is well under way, and a bountiful crop is being harvested, the effects of the drouth on that staple being much less injurious than in the central and southern parts of the State.

Fated to Die Violently.

KALAMAZOO, MICH., September 21.—W. H. Clermont shot himself this morning, saying to his wife that he was tired of life. He died this afternoon in great agony. He was the last of the three brothers, all of whom came to tragic ends. One, Lew Clermont, was the leader of the most successful bank robberies of the last half century, dying in a Philadelphia prison from the effects of wounds received in an attempt to rob a bank two days before.

A Philanthropist Dead.

CINCINNATI, September 21.—Charles W. West, the bachelor philanthropist and millionaire, died at the Burnett House this afternoon at 4 o'clock, aged seventy-three years. The magnificent bequest of $300,000 to the Cincinnati Art Museum which Mr. West made three years ago, is known wherever his name is known. The fortune he leaves is variously estimated at from $3,000,000 to $4,000,000.

A Yachting Party Wrecked.

BOSTON, September 21.—The yacht Estella went ashore on Black Rock, Mass., and was wrecked. The four occupants spent the night on the rock and were rescued in the morning.

THE SOUDAN.

Making Great Slaughter and Raising the Siege of Khartoum.

CAIRO, September 20.—Conflicting rumors reach here of the progress of events in Soudan. According to the latest, which was brought to Dongola this morning by a messenger, General Gordon has, within the past few days, gained two victories, and the siege of Khartoum has been raised. The Mudir of Dongola telegraphs the authorities here that the messengers from General Gordon brought eighteen dispatches. Two of them were for the Sheikh of the Kababish tribe, which were delivered. Two other dispatches were directed to the son-in-law of the Sheikh, who, however, had been previously publicly executed by order of the Mahdi's Ameer, in order to overawe the people, and compel them to join the Mahdi. The Ameer, with many chiefs, was afterward killed in battle. The messenger who brought the dispatches reports that, on the 24th of July, General Gordon's troops slaughtered the rebel army which had been sent against him from Kordofan. Another battle was fought on the 30th of August, which resulted in General Gordon's forcing the rebels to raise the siege of Khartoum, and during which Sheikh Sidi, his son, and their followers were killed. The above reports are confirmed by Khatem Emoos Bey, who is holding Halfiyeh with Egyptian soldiers. The Shaggiah and other tribes have come in and tendered their submission. Sennaar is now in perfect security. The population of Berber has recovered from its fright over the anticipated descent by General Gordon. The whole Shaggiah country is now tranquil. Chiefs are imploring for mercy and have made a compact upon the Koran to abandon the Mahdi. The compact has thus far been observed.

SUAKIM, September 20.—The rebels killed four Amamar hostages.

FATAL ACCIDENT.

The Boiler of a Mill Explodes, Killing the Engineer and Seriously Damaging the Building.

VINCENNES, IND, September 20.—The boiler in Emison & Callender's large merchant flouring-mills exploded at 1:20 to-day, and the engine-room and one end of the main building were blown to fragments. About a dozen men were in the building at the moment, but no one was seriously hurt except Thomas Childers, the engineer. He was horribly scalded, and, in addition, sustained a fracture of the skull and of both legs below the knee. His cries immediately after the explosion were heard by Judson Manning, who was in the third story, and was cut in the head by a flying board. Childers was carried to his home, near by, and physicians, who had been quickly summoned, did all they could to alleviate his sufferings. His nude form presented a sickening spectacle. Scalded from head to toe, the cuticle was hanging in shreds all over him, and every touch removed pieces of it, and intensified his agony. Within an hour he relapsed into unconsciousness, and died this evening. The explosion drove the boiler clear through the packing-house adjoining the engine-room, the barreled flour stored there being scattered to the winds. The furnace was sent flying through the mill stables on the other side, and this set fire to them, and they were burned before the fire department could interfere. A house half a square distant was penetrated by a part of the furnace that passed through the stables, and the occupants, who were at dinner, were frightened well nigh out of their lives. The boiler was known to be defective, and it had been decided to shut down on Monday.

Platform of the New Party.

BOSTON, September 20.—The following is the platform adopted by the American Political Alliance, which has nominated Captain W. T. Ellsworth, of Pennsylvania, and Charles H. Waterman, of New York, for President and Vice President of the United States. "We demand the repeal of all present naturalization laws, and the passage of an act by the Congress of the United States making a residence of twenty-one years necessary to enable foreigners to vote, or hold official positions in this country, except when such foreign born citizens have served in the army or navy of the United States; the passage of an act by Congress prohibiting the formation of political organizations composed of foreigners exclusively; the rights of suffrage to American-born females, the same as males; opposition to the importation and attempted colonization of foreigners and paupers from foreign countries, and absolute suppression of Chinese emigration; opportunity to vote direct for President and Vice-President of the United States through and by an amendment to the constitution of the United States; the native born citizens, white and colored, to rule and make the laws of this country; no appropriation of public funds for sectarian purposes; the rights of all American citizens, as provided by the Constitution, to be maintained and protected; a free ballot and free count."

A Million Dollar Suit.

WASHINGTON, September 21.—The Chesapeake and Ohio Canal Company and the Great Falls Manufacturing Company have sued the United States for $1,000,000 damages, expected to be caused by the proposed extension of the Washington aqueduct.

Keely's Motor.

PHILADELPHIA, September 21.—Keely, of "motor" fame, has an invention for propelling cannon balls, which is regarded favorably by army men. A satisfactory trial was given the motor at Washington on Saturday.

Another Comet Discovered.

BOSTON, September 21.—The discovery of a new comet by Dr. Wolfe, of Zurich, was cabled to the Harvard College Observatory. Observation at Harvard Observatory to-night shows that the comet discovered by Dr. Wolfe is circular, two minutes in diameter, and well defined, with a nucleus of the ninth magnitude. Its position is as follows: September 21, 14 h. 36 min. 30 sec., Greenwich time; night ascension, 21 h. 15 min. 53.11 sec.; declination, 21 deg. 52 min. 41.7 sec.

Wife Murder and Suicide.

DUBUQUE IA., September 20.—John Lange shot his wife through the head this morning, and then shot himself through the head. He is dead. She may recover. Lange was a laborer, about fifty-eight, and a native of Darmstadt, Germany. He was the woman's second husband, and she his second wife. This morning the couple had a quarrel, which culminated in the shooting.

White Man Outruns an Indian.

TORONTO, ONT., September 20.—A twenty-five mile foot-race between D. Bennett, of Toronto, and the Indian runner White Eagle, for $200 a side, was won by Bennett, in — h. 4 min. 55 seconds.

FOREIGN AFFAIRS.

Crowds Singing the Marseillaise in Belgian Towns.

Great Excitement, but no Serious Disorders Yet—Raising the Siege of Khartoum Officially Confirmed.

BRUSSELS September 22.—The excitement in Belgium is increasing, instead of diminishing. Crowds collect at every corner, singing the "Marseillaise," and noisily denouncing the Ministry. What is still more serious, the King and the royal family, hitherto considered to be beyond the sphere of political discussion, are no longer spared. The Queen is particularly unpopular and is now, like the unfortunate Maria Antoinette, become "l'Autrichienne." The mob to-day cries loudly in the streets, "A bas l'etrangere," and "A la porte l'Autrichienne." Large posters, with the inscription, "A mort le roi de carton," have been torn down by the police, and even on the Royal Palace itself placards have been posted with the words, "Maison a louer." The garrison of Brussels is being rapidly reinforced to meet all emergencies. King Leopold is reported to have said yesterday: "I am resolved to be true and loyal to the constitution under which my father was elected to the throne. I take part with neither Liberals nor Clericals. All that I shall maintain is that the constitutional and representative system under which the Belgians live shall not be infringed upon by any political party whatever."

BRUSSELS, September 22.—The Burgomaster of this city has issued a proclamation pointing out the duty of obeying the school law, recently passed by Parliament and signed by the King. He says it can be legally combated at communal elections. He forbids the holding of meetings in the streets, and appeals to citizens to maintain order.

CAIRO, September 22.—A dispatch from the French Consul at Khartoum has been received, confirming the previous reports that the seige of that city has been raised. The dispatch further states that the country in the neighborhood of Khartoum is freed from rebels, and the obtaining of food supplies comparatively easy.

LONDON, September 22.—A Shanghai dispatch in the Times says: A new complication has arisen in the French-Chinese difficulty. The blocking of the bar at the mouth of Woosung River has been ordered by the Chinese authorities, although a passage for the ships of neutrals is to be left. This action is due to Chinese disbelief in the promises of the French. A veritable panic prevails at Shanghai, and merchants of neutral Powers have asked the naval commanders of the Powers to take some action.

Immense Purchase of Land.

MONTEREY, MEXICO, September 22.—La Rivista chronicles the consummation of probably the largest sale of lands ever made to private purchasers on this continent. The lands in question are situated in Northern Mexico, and were purchased by a syndicate of English and Scotch gentlemen, named McPherson and John Dalezell. Although the price paid was only $1,000,000 cash down, yet the area of country sold was larger than some of the New England States. The possessions are situated in the States of Chihuahua and Durango. The title to the lands was perhaps the most ancient of any upon the American Continent. This was the first transfer that had been made in 200 years. Longer ago than that the King of Spain conveyed this tract of country to the ancestry of Don Antonio Ausunsula.

The Telephone Case.

NEW YORK, September 22.—Final arguments were had to-day before Judge Wallace, in the U. S. Circuit Court, in the suit between the American Bell Telephone Company and People's Telephone Company. The question to be determined is whether Prof. A. G. Bell or Daniel Drawbaugh was the first inventor of the speaking telephone. Among the counsel representing the People's Company is Senator Geo. C. Edmunds, of Vermont. Ex-Senator Conkling is also one of the counsel in this case.

Harry Clay Dead.

LOUISVILLE, September 22.—Hon. Harry Clay, who was shot yesterday morning by Councilman Andy Wepler, died this morning. Clay was a grandson of the great Henry Clay. Clay was a very promising and popular young man. Since his death much indignation prevails, and there is now talk of lynching Wepler, who is confined in jail.

A Precocious Child.

BOSTON, September 22.—Sadie Robinson, a twelve-year-old girl of Framingham, on Friday packed a valise with diamonds and negotiable bonds to the amount of $60,000 belonging to her mother, a wealthy lady, and started for Boston to meet a young man to elope with him. She was arrested Saturday, the valuables recovered, and the girl taken home.

Death of a Cavalry Officer.

WASHINGTON, September 22.—Captain W. P. Clark, of the Second Cavalry and an attache of Lieutenant General Sheridan's staff, died here this morning. He was distinguished for his services in fighting Indians and was regarded as one of the best authorities in the army on Indian sign language.

Queer Case of Insanity.

WASHINGTON, September 22.—William B. Hazleton, a gentleman who has at times occupied considerable space in the newspapers, was sent to the Government Insane Asylum to-day. His malady is of a peculiar character, he imagining that he is a man of enormous wealth and a great statesman.

Fatal Railroad Accident.

ST. LOUIS, September 22.—Two freight trains collided on the Hannibal Road near New Cambria, Mo., this morning. Three men were killed and two others injured.

Michigan Fire.

BRONSON, MICH., September 22.—Eighteen business houses and two dwellings were consumed by fire to-day, supposed to be incendiary.

Death of a Centenarian

MANCHESTER, VT., September 22.—Marenus Hollister, one of the oldest men in New England, died here this morning aged 100 years.

—A man who lives near Mt. Hamilton, Nev., saw a cow running and bellowing with all her might the other day, and riding up to the animal found a large rattlesnake hanging to her nose, its tail dragging on the ground. The cow was so wild with terror that he could not approach her, and after pawing the ground and bellowing for half an hour, trying in vain to detach her shining assailant, she lay down exhausted. The man then killed the snake, which had thirteen rattles. In a few minutes the cow was dead.—Denver Tribune.

—A drunken man with the look and bearing of a citizen from Wayback drove a sorry-looking nag up to a roadhouse at New Haven, the other day, challenged the owner of a stylish flyer to a speeding match for large stakes, was laughed at for his pains, but finally made the match, and won it, when he turned out to be a noted jockey, and his horse an animal with a pedigree and a record. "Old trick?" Of course—old as the Roman circus. The only wonder is that anybody at this day and date should allow himself to be gulled by it.—Buffalo Express.

THE COMMONWEALTH.

Louisville Leaf Tobacco Market.

Common grades and low mediums have varied but slightly. Manufacturers and jobbers report a better movement in goods, but trade is on a reduced basis of prices, and a special demand is thus created for the cheaper grades of leaf and lugs. Dark and heavy styles have been steady to firm. Shipping grades have almost wholly disappeared from the breaks, and Green River types have been offered in moderate quantities, selling at very satisfactory prices. The very hot weather has been accompanied with dewy nights, and it is not believed that the crop has suffered. Ripening has progressed rapidly, and the crop is being harvested freely in many sections. Advices from all sections indicate the largest crops ever produced, though, of course, the old types of Kentucky tobacco will not equal the yield in good years preceding the Burley era. We quote full-weight packages new crop sound tobacco as follows:

	Dark and Heavy.	Burley.
Trash	$6 00@ 6 75	$6 00@ 7 50
Common lugs	7 00@ 7 25	7 50@ 8 00
Medium lugs	7 50@ 7 75	8 50@ 9 00
Good lugs	8 00@ 8 50	9 50@10 00
Common leaf	8 75@ 9 00	10 00@11 00
Medium leaf	9 50@ 9 75	12 00@13 50
Good leaf	10 50@12 00	14 50@16 50
Fine and fancy leaf	13 00@16 00	18 00@20 00

Miscellaneous Items.

A POSSE of five men attempted to arrest William Searcy, charged with the murder of two men in Nelson County. Searcy was heavily armed and refused to surrender and was shot and instantly killed by the posse.

WHILE blasting rock on the falls at Louisville Dennis McCue was struck by a stone and instantly killed.

WM. HARDWICK was shot and killed by Wm. Davis, at the Hecla mines, Earlington. Both were miners.

EX-SENATOR MCCREARY, the successor of Phil Thompson in Congress, was among the last of those Senators who habitually wore dress coats in the Senate.

MARTIN MCFERRAN, who lived on his farm near Danville, got on his horse with the intention of riding over his farm and looking after his cattle and crops. About an hour later his horse returned to the house without a rider. A search was made for Mr. McFerran and about midnight his body was found in a field. He died evidently of heart disease.

MISS ALLIE TODD, daughter of Mr. James M. Todd, of Frankfort, is dead of malarial. She was twenty-four years old and in person and character exceptionally beautiful.

BARRY SOUTH, recently removed as Warden of the Kentucky State Penitentiary, refuses to give up the residence attached to the position. The Commissioners of the Penitentiary will be compelled to sue out a writ of ejectment.

MORGAN BRAWNER, aged sixteen, son of Colonel A. G. Brawner, Street Commissioner, at Frankfort, shot and perhaps fatally wounded John Simmons, of color. The negro had whipped and badly treated the boy. Brawner went home, armed himself with a double barreled shotgun and as soon as he met Simmons he fired one load, which took effect in his groin. Brawner was placed in the custody of an officer.

THE docket of the Madison Circuit Court contains 515 cases, 328 of which are criminal.

PARTIES are contemplating the organization of a street railroad company at Frankfort.

IN Nicholas County this year the county and State tax is $1 58 on the $100 valuation.

A STRANGE animal, supposed by many to be a catamount, is roaming the Robertson hills and valleys.

THE death is announced at Paducah of the Rev. George Edward Flower, a prominent young pastor of the Christian Church.

DR. COOPER WRIGHT and family, of Bowling Green, were poisoned by eating canned cherries. Relief was obtained by administering emetics. The cans had been opened for some time, and the action of the air and acid combined on the tins, produced the poisonous substance.

GEO. JACKSON, colored, from Bourbon County, was arrested at Dayton, O., for numerous alleged thefts. Jackson is said to have a mania for stealing pork, and had gone through nearly all the smoke-houses in Bourbon County.

THE hickory-nut crop is said to be good.

COLONEL Ambrose W. Dudley, an old and highly respected citizen of Frankfort, died at the residence of his son, Mr. William T. Dudley, the other day, in the eighty-seventh year of his age. For a number of years he was Adjutant and Quarter-master General of Kentucky, and had filled numerous other positions of honor and trust.

CROPS in Southern Kentucky are pronounced good.

A MAN, supposed to be Wm. Foor, of Owensburg, was struck by a train on the Big Four Railroad, at Cincinnati, the other day, and instantly killed.

BARRY SOUTH has been removed as Warden of the Kentucky Penitentiary by the Commissioners, and Edmund H. Taylor, of Louisville, elected to fill the vacancy. The action of the Commissioners has created much comment, and South's friends say it was based on insufficient testimony, and that only one side of the case was heard. It will create a considerable stir all over the State.

SQUIRRELS are said to be very numerous in some of the counties in the eastern part of the State, and are depredating upon the corn-fields. Their ravages are said to be serious.

IN Fayette County, Harry Scott and wife, colored, while on the road in a wagon, quarreled. Scott hit his wife over the head with a club and threw her out of the wagon, leaving her for dead. Scott escaped. It is thought the woman will die.

AT Louisville, General Thomas Taylor, Chief of Police and his son, Blanton Taylor, were tried in the City Court for an unprovoked assault on Joseph Eakins, city editor of the Times, and fined $20 and $25 respectively. The son was sentenced to ten days in jail.

MR. JOHN STOUTMAN, an employe of Harper's rolling-mill, Newport, met with an accident the other day which will injure him for life. He, in company with several other workmen, was engaged in hoisting a casting which weighed 4,000 pounds. By some chance a portion of the derrick broke, and the casting fell on him and broke both legs below the knees. The legs were completely mashed, and it is feared that one of them will have to be amputated.

THOS. THURMAN, son of a minister at Bardstown, has fatally beaten two men within two weeks—one of them being a fellow prisoner in jail.

J. SELL MILLER has been appointed Master Commissioner of the Louisville Chancery Court.

THE body of General Helm, a Brigadier general of the First Kentucky Brigade, who fell at Chicamauga, has been disinterred with military honors and removed to Kentucky, and buried near Elizabethtown.

MR. ALFRED M. OFFUTT, of Scott County, thinks his growing tobacco crop will yield 2,300 pounds to the acre. It is now over five feet high.

W. G. Holland has been commissioned Postmaster at Arabi, and Monroe Greenwell at Balltown, Nelson County, this State.

Sights in Tunis.

The railroad station is a modern building, with the arms of England over the entrance—the railroad having been built in 1872 by an English company; and its sale in 1880 to the Italians who out-trade the French, paying about $800,000 for ten miles of railroad, was one of the factors which brought about the present French protectorate. At the first station from Gole ta we were obliged to vacate our compartments to accommodate the successor to the present Bey. He was a man about forty years old, with a weak face and watery eyes; he was dressed in European costume with the exception of the fez, and his breast was covered with decorations. He was accompanied by his suite, among whom was the pipe bearer carrying the long jewelled pipe.

The train then made a short stop at the ruins of Carthage. There is little of interest here: the guide points out one heap of ruins as the temple of Esculapius, and another in a rather better state of preservation as the palace of Dido. There are also some large reservoirs in a good state of preservation, said to have been built by the Carthaginians. The railroad then passes along the shore of the salt lake. Here one sees numerous pelicans and flamingoes, and many small birds. This lake is about seven miles in length and several miles in width. Small sailboats pass to and from Goletta and Tunis. It was into this lake that pirates were accustomed to retreat when pursued. In its centre is an island, on which are the ruins of an old Spanish fort. It is said that the French are to enlarge its opening and increase the depth of a portion of the lake, thus making one of the finest harbors in the world from it.

Our hotel was situated in the principal square of the city, facing one of the old gates and adjoining the British consulate. From this square the principal street, running down toward the railroad station, has quite the appearance of a French boulevard, with its cafes and large buildings, the majority of which have been erected during the three years of French occupation. From this square diverge in all directions numerous other small streets without names and the houses without numbers. The streets are dirty, narrow and winding, some terminating abruptly in walls, and others being covered with arches. The pavements are wretched and the streets are often almost entirely blocked with donkeys and goats. The houses are nearly all of but one story, are built of irregular whitewashed stone, and are very poorly lighted and ventilated.

The costumes that one sees in the street are very picturesque—Bedouins, with the long white cloak and hood called the bornous. Moors and Arabs, with short, embroidered jackets and wide trousers, and white or yellow turbans, the descendants of the Prophet being distinguished by their red, and the Mecca pilgrims by their green turbans. The Jews wear the Moorish costume, but of darker colors, selecting as a rule black turbans, according to the old law, though they are now permitted to wear white or yellow. The few Arab women are closely veiled, but there are many Jewish women in the street wearing their peculiar costume.

The population of the city of Tunis is about 120,000, divided as follows: Moors about 60,000, Jews, 30,000; native races, 11,000, others claiming allegiance to various European States, 20,000.—Cor. Boston Transcript.

Lion Taming.

It is often supposed that lions are drugged or surfeited with food prior to going through their performances, though both suggestions are wide of the mark. Drugs are unknown, and food, from ten to fourteen pounds, is given once a day. In menageries they are fed in the evening, because then visitors come in greater numbers, and an extra charge of sixpence is made for admission during feeding time. The Aquarium lions are fed between nine and ten in the morning, so that they have plenty of time to digest their food before the afternoon and evening performances. Among other erroneous ideas concerning the details of lion taming is that red-hot irons are kept in readiness in case of accident to the tamer. The origin of the story was that when Manders had his menagerie paraffine lamps of the old form were used to light the entrance. The round burners used to get red hot sometimes, and one night some spectator, thinking that the red-heated burner was the end of an iron support asked whether it was not the hot iron for the lions. Manders, showman like, was equal to the occasion, and, with the object of investing the performance with additional excitement, explained that irons were kept to assist the tamer in case of need. Contrary to the general belief, too, a lion tamer does not care about beginning with lions too young. As cubs, they are of course easier to handle, but as they grow up their temper may grow worse, and may eventually be spoiled by training. The fraternity say that a lion seldom alters for the worse after he is two or three years old, and that when he reaches that age, a competent trainer can pretty well tell whether it will be safe to perform with him or not. "It would be suicide," said a celebrated tamer the other day, "to go in to some lions; and I think I can tell in a very few minutes whether a strange lion is or is not safe." Moreover, lions vary in their temperament as much as man. Some lions are quiet enough so long as they are not struck or pulled about; they will jump, sit up, and do other feats, but must not be beaten. Others, again, will never make good performers, but will stand a good deal of flogging without turning on the performer. Livingston, Selous and Anderson have left it on record that, in their opinion, lions are afraid of man, and will not attack him unless molested. This is doubtless well known to lion tamers, and is a trait of which they take as much advantage as possible in their care not to upset a stranger by any violent treatment. Lion-tamers, as a rule, prefer lions to lionesses, and dislike a troop of both sexes mixed. In such cases the danger of entering the den is quadrupled, and mischief is pretty sure to result sooner or later.—London Field.

Owls.

Owls were never an epicurean feast, but Southey once had an owl roasted for dinner, for himself and Mr. and Mrs. Wordsworth; I give the sequel in his own words:

"We agreed there could be no pretext for making owls game and killing them as delicacies; but if ever you eat one, by all means try it boiled, with onion sauce."

An omelet made of owl's eggs is said to be a cure for drunkenness.

At one time the workmen on the Washington Monument were a good deal annoyed to find that a plumb line that reached from the top to the bottom of the shaft was frequently meddled with. At last it was found that an owl had taken up its abode in a part of the shaft that afforded a shelter, and in passing in and out it had disturbed the line.

An owl was once beguiled into a Georgia conference meeting, intent on securing a rat that had run into the room to escape from so persistent an enemy. Dazed by the light he sailed around a few times and alighted upon the bald head of an old man directly in front of the speaker. It is hardly necessary to say what was the next move, but the presence of the owl may have called to the preacher's mind the presence of Isaiah, who, when he foretold the desolation of Babylon, declared that the house should be full of doleful creatures, and that owls should dwell there.

An owl once seriously disturbed the mourners at a funeral at Beechwood, Ontario. With tender care they had placed the remains in a tomb, and were turning away sorrowing, when they heard a moan that seemed to come from the coffin. Hurriedly they broke the casket open, only to find all quiet within, and then it was discovered that the noise they had heard came from owls at the far end of the vault.

Lodsey thought it worth his while to write an ode on the death of an owl, and Broomfield made the bird the subject of his muse. Many persons believe that an owl will keep his eyes so intently fixed on a person walking around him as to wring his own neck off, and it was not until some quick-eyed observer discovered that when the owl had turned his head half round, he whisked it back through the whole circle with the rapidity of lightning, and faced again the person who was experimenting on him.—Providence Journal.

A Rain Machine.

After great battles, violent rainstorms are of very general occurrence. This is due, it is now known, to the agitation produced in the air by the violent explosions of cannon and musketry. The detonations attract clouds, and at length comes the grateful rain to dissipate the smoke of the battle, soothe the agony of the wounded and dying. Acting upon this hint, inventors have been at work at the task of making machines which would break up seasons of drought. Great fires and explosions of gunpowder have been suggested, but the cost would be too great for the small area benefited by the shower that would follow. In Australia, a new rain-producing machine is about to be tested. It is simply a balloon which carries up into the air a heavy charge of dynamite. At a sufficient distance above the earth the dynamite is exploded by an electric current that passes through the wire communicating with the earth. This machine will not be expensive, and should it succeed in breaking up droughts, the human race will be vastly benefited. It will be the first step enabling us to control the amount of moisture we get from the heavens. Should we succeed in ridding any portion of our planet of dry spells hurtful to vegetation, we would soon find means of dissipating clouds which were dispensing too much rain. The fertility of the earth would be quadrupled if man could at will produce rainy and dry weather, and who will say in view of the marvels of modern control over nature that man will not in time have as complete command of the atmosphere that surrounds the globe as he has of the earth which he inhabits?—Demorest's Monthly.

Wealth of the Ocean.

Sailing in the John Williams northeast of Lord Howe's Island, at dawn of December 19th ult., the ocean swarmed with small fish resembling sprats. Sea birds hovered above, gorging to their hearts' content. Shortly afterward shoals of bonito (Thynnus pelamys) came along in hot pursuit. With half a dozen pearl oyster-hooks, and no bait whatever, in less than an hour we caught one hundred and sixteen bonito, the greater part of which was salted down. Throughout the day we were slowly sailing through a countless multitude of bonito. After Captain Turpie had desired the fishers to cease their occupation (as our salt was done), one or two furtively and cruelly amused themselves by catching these fine fish and throwing them back alive into the ocean. We might easily have caught a couple of thousand before sunset. Throughout the following night the sea was illuminated; for as the bonito rushed through the water near the surface they became phosphorescent—a sight never to be forgotten by those who witnessed it. Toward daybreak, however, a strong breeze sprang up, and we saw no more of those moving masses of fire. The bonito belongs to the mackerel family. It is usually thirty inches in length and twenty inches round; and of a steel-blue color, with four stripes along each side. The flesh is of a dark color, and proved an acceptable change of diet to all on board.—W. Wyatt Gill.

What a Woman Can Do.

She can say "No," and stick to it for all time. She can also say "No" in such a low, soft voice that it means "Yes." She can sharpen a lead pencil if you give her plenty of pencils. She can dance all night in a pair of shoes two sizes too small for her and enjoy every minute of the time. She can pass a display window of a draper's without stopping—if she is running to catch a train. She can walk half the night with a noisy baby in her arms without once expressing the desire to murder the infant.

She can appreciate a kiss from her husband seventy-five years after the marriage ceremony has taken place. She can suffer abuse and neglect for years, which one touch of kindness or consideration will drive from her recollection. She can go to church and afterward tell you what every woman in the congregation had on, and in some rare instances can give a faint idea of what the text was. She can look her husband square in the eye when he tells her some cock-and-bull story about being "detained at the office," without betraying in the least that she knows him to be a collosal liar.

She can—but what's the use? A woman can do anything or everything, and do it well. She can do more in a minute than a man can in an hour, and do it better. She can make the alleged lords bow down to her own sweet will and they will never know it. Yes, a woman can do everything with but one exception; she can not climb a tree.—Indianapolis Times.

—This is a fast age. It is related that not long ago a car load of twine was manufactured in Ohio on Monday, and before Sunday night it was encircling the bundles of wheat in Dakota.—Chicago Herald.

PITH AND POINT.

—A contemporary says that forty years ago butter was made from cream; sugar from cane, cigars of tobacco; shoes from leather; but times have changed.

—The young woman who bites her finger nails and kisses her pug dog on the nose, would fall in a stony fit at seeing her father nip a piece off the butter lump with his own knife.—Detroit Post.

—A seventeen-year-old boy was recently sent to the Penitentiary for a year in New York for stealing four receiving blanks of a telegraph company of the value of one cent. The majesty of the law is vindicated at last.—N. Y. Graphic.

—When Mrs. Homespun read in the paper that Slappandash had "failed for $200,000" she said he was a lucky fellow. She thought—the innocent creature—that he got that much money for failing? What ridiculous ideas the women do have about business!—Boston Post.

—A St. Louis man twenty-five years old is the victim of queer mania. He firmly believes that he is seventy years old. There are some equally queer cases in Philadelphia, the victims being women who are seventy years old, yet firmly believe they are twenty-five.—Philadelphia Call.

—"Let's play we was married," said little Annie to little Dick, "and you put your arms around me and kiss me and tell me you love me. Won't that be nice?" "Yes, but don't let's be married. You be a nurse and I'll be some other little girl's husband. That's the way papa does."—N. Y. Tribune.

—A writer avers that a woman's hand is the personification of gentleness and soothing tenderness. This statement will scarcely bear a close scrutiny. It is not difficult for any of us to recall our boyhood days when at times we thought woman's hand as vindictive and enterprising as a pile-driver.—Detroit Free Press.

—"Ain't you almost boiled?" inquired a kid of a gentleman calling on her father and mother. "No, little one, I can't say that I am. On the contrary, I feel quite comfortable." "That's funny. I should think you would be." "Why so, Daisy?" "Oh, because I heard mamma say your wife kept you in hot water all the time."—Merchant Traveler.

—She—Papa is very particular, and I doubt very much whether he will give his consent. He—Why? She—He is opposed to my marrying a man who has not established himself in business, and, George, you know you have not. How could you, dear, when all your afternoons are spent at base ball games? He—But, my love, I have hidden the truth from you until now. I wanted to give you a glorious surprise I do not go to base ball games merely to look on. She—You are not a—. He—Yes, I am the—. She—The pitcher! Oh George! This is indeed joy. I thought from the size and color of your hands that you worked in tanyard.—St. Louis Critic.

SCIENCE AND INDUSTRY.

—A harp made entirely of wood has been invented by two Frenchmen, strong strips of American fir being used for strings. The tone is said to be of remarkable purity.

—In Northern Dakota, lately, a traction engine drew eight plows, turning a sod four inches thick as evenly and well as could be done by horse power, and at a rate of over twenty-five acres a day.

—A Connecticut inventor has perfected a machine for making barrels out of paper or straw pulp, which will turn out six hundred flour barrels a day at a cost of twenty-three cents a piece. They now cost fifty-five cents.—Hartford Post.

—A shoemaker in Utica, N. Y., has spent several years making a puppet show of about two hundred figures working at different trades. The whole are in two boxes, each six feet square, and it takes a steam engine to run them.—Utica Herald.

—Captain Renard, of France, the inventor of an alleged navigable balloon, claims that the problem of aerial navigation is completely solved, and that it is now only a question of time and money. He says that a balloon postal system is as easy as a railroad system.

—Another industry is now open to women. In an establishment on Center street, New York, they are employed as gold beaters. The proprietor asserts that while not equal to men in physical strength they are superior in carefulness and delicacy of workmanship.—N. Y. Sun.

—From a careful study of a series of designs of the planet Venus, executed at Grignan during the present year, M. P. Lamay infers that a perfectly circular protuberance in the southern hemisphere, presumably a volcano, has an elevation of probably not less than seventy miles. He argues in a paper read before the Academy of Sciences, Paris, that this enormous height is in no way incompatible with the volcanic nature of the planet.

—An analysis of the fragments of a meteorite reported to have fallen in February, 1880, at Veramin, in the district of Zerind, sixty miles west of Teheran, Persia, has just been submitted by Dr. Tholozan to M. Daubree. It reveals the presence of bronzite, peshamite, peridote, nickel and granulated iron, thus showing the same constitution as that of the remarkable meteorites of Logrono (1842), Estherville (1879), Hainholtz (1856) and Newton County, Ark. (1860).

The Rewards of Health.

To re-create the body three things are necessary—to sweat, to pant, to feel the heart leap. Let no langnid women or effeminate men deceive themselves. If they seek firm flesh, clear eyes and skin, a lion's heart and the carriage of an Arab, they must discommode themselves. The rewards of health are not for sluggards. When athletes, who now number among them most men and some women, dry their pores, they know that the wet and the heat are signs that they are burning and washing waste matter from their bodies. When they exhale their deep breaths, they know that the same process is going on, and that, too, their blood is being renewed. And when their leaping pulses prove that the rich fluid is taking new life to their remotest toe and finger tips, they know the victory is theirs. The blouse and short skirt are not fairly matched against drapery trailed upon piazzas and Prince Alberts displayed in club windows. The prizes of life which can be won go to the physically fit. Whether it is a question of fun or work, or flirtation, dawdlers, dudes and aesthetes, male or female, are not in it with those who are masters of their powers. We have no quarrel with those of a different mind. To them the game seems worth the candle.—N. Y. Times.

1884. FIRST AUTUMN ANNOUNCEMENT. 1884.

HEYN & BROTHER, RISING SUN, Indiana,

DEALERS IN CLOTHING, DRY GOODS, NOTIONS, CARPETS, &c., &c

FOR THE PUBLIC.

